"My attention has been called to certain statements and comments in the weekly religious Press, touching myself and my conduct and utterances. Without reflecting upon anyone, let me most explicitly state that, in some way, there has arisen a singular and complete misapprehension, both of my words and spirit, which further silence on my part might seem to sanction. These misunderstandings, whether traceable to a want of caution on my part, or to a combination of circumstances, which, though accidental, give colour to accusation, are likely to hinder the Lord's work and cause alienation between brethren. I therefore wish to make the following statements:—

"My recent baptism at Croydon Chapel had reference simply and solely to one thing: my individual compliance with a duty never until very lately made entirely clear, as needful on my part in order to fulfil all righteousness. It is true that, for some years, my mind has inclined to believers' baptism, and I have desired to take this step; and on more than one occasion I consulted with Dr. A. J. Gordon and others about it. But there were some reasons why even Dr. Gordon advised me to defer it until God had made my way clearer, and I intended, on arriving in Britain, to ask the venerable George Müller to baptize me. But, finding that I had no meetings in Bristol before the last of March, and was to be in Croydon early in February, I took the first convenient opportunity to be baptized. The baptism was not private, being in presence of a goodly number of church officers and friends; and no publicity was avoided, save such as might serve only to gratify a sensational and irreverent curiosity. Whatever 'witness' was borne, was expected and desired to be 'before all men.' Indeed, privacy was manifestly impossible.

"The reception at Croydon was at the suggestion of Dr. and Mrs. Spurgeon, and unknown to me, until the arrangements had been made. I had no voice in it. It was intended simply to give me an opportunity to meet personal friends, living in Croydon, London, and the vicinity, whom otherwise I could not meet, as my stay in and about the city was too short to allow for even a few brief visits to those who, on previous occasions, had acted as my hosts. And this reception had absolutely no reference to any other or ulterior design, its purpose began and ended with the occasion itself.

"The address, which has been so criticised, was wholly informal and unstudied. It was made to a company of friends, gathered from various quarters. The proximity of the place of my baptism to the Tabernacle, and of the time of it to the reception, was, so far as I am concerned, accidental or incidental, having not the remotest significance in my own intention; and such proximity would have been avoided had any such interpretation as has been put upon it been foreseen or even suspected.

"Some sentences in that address are, as I frankly concede, open to misapprehension, and should have been more guarded. An unsuspecting man may often give occasion to others for ascribing to him a purpose and meaning which he does not for a moment intend. But truth compels me to say that certain words, attributed to me, I have no recollection of using. I meant to say nothing which any minister of Christ might not naturally say to those whom he had before served and learned to love, to whom, like Paul, he yearned, if possible, to impart some further spiritual gift,

"Let me explicitly add, as to that grievously misunderstood sentence, in which I am represented as implying that the pastor and officers of the Tabernacle are destitute of the Holy Spirit, that I would be as quick to resent such an implication, on their behalf, as any other of their friends. The whole connection of words must be considered, in forming a just judgment. I had been exhorting members of the Tabernacle present loyally to uphold their pastor in the stupendous work he has undertaken, and had spoken strongly of the help or hindrance any church member might be to such work. And I suggested that if, by earnest prayer to God, a new anointing of the Spirit were bestowed upon pastor, officers, and members, untold blessing would follow in all departments of God's work. Nothing was further from my mind than to impugn the spirituality of any of the parties referred to. I was inciting disciples to appreciate the power of united prayer to bring down over-increasing blessing.

"I may further add that I have not the least intention or thought of again taking any pastoral charge. The impression grows upon me that God is calling me to a different and, in a sense, wider work that would rather be hindered by such limitations.

"These candid words of explanation are made with unreserved frankness and absolute sincerity, in the hope that they may remove all misunderstanding. I cannot but add my sincere regret for whatever controversy I may innocently or imprudently have occasioned.

MEETINGS IN IRELAND.

Dr. Pierson commenced a month's mission in Ireland on Sunday, February 23, at Dublin. The meetings were held in the Metropolitan Hall. They seemed to grow in interest. On the last day Dr. Pierson spoke on what he said might be called the right and left arms of all missionary effort—praying and giving. It was urged that united prayer and systematic giving were the duties of all Christians who could not themselves be in active service in the mission field.

From Dublin Dr. Pierson went to Waterford, where crowded services were held in the Protestant Hall, and great blessing attended the meetings. After a series of meetings at Cork, Dr. Pierson returns again to Dublin to speak in the suburbs of that city. He will then travel to the North of Ireland, addressing gatherings at Belfast, Newry, and Londonderry.

The Weather.

"WHAT trying weather!" we exclaim,
As if the weather were to blame;
A test, when rightly understood,
Is surely but a means of good;
Its varied aspects let us view,
And face the subject, then, anew.

Some men are hardened by the wind,
Some e'en from mist relief will find;
And most both heat and rain have blist,
While frost invigorates the rest.

Dread ills we oft anticipate
The glorious storm doth dissipate;
Or warns the feeble ones in time
To seek a calmer summer clime.

How oft the weakly and the old
Hath varied weather gently told
That very soon the call may come
To quit their transient earthly home.

"Distress and suffering abound!
Temptation sore is lurking round;
With grief too keen for thee to share,
And burdens which thou couldst not bear!
Then shrink not from my uncouth touch,
It is because I love thee much;
I urge thee on to that calm shore
Where earth's dark tempests rage no more!"

Great benefactor! pardon those Who count thee but among their foes;
To all who timely counsel heed,
Thy friendship is a boon indeed.
Such blessed teaching is not lost:
"He sendeth forth his rain," "his frost,"
And oft the thoughtful mind hath heard
"The storm and wind fulfil his word."
Oh! help me, then, one soul to tell
Thy Maker "hath done all things well!"

Progress in Assam.

WITH the exception of the Welsh Mission in the Khasia Hills, and a Christian brother working amongst the Singphos, the American Baptist Missionary Union are at present the sole missionary occupants of Assam proper. The need of more workers for the great province was pressed upon the hearts of those attending the Triennial Missionary Conference held at Sibugor, December 15 to 22, when it was resolved to ask the executive committee of the A.B.M.U. for twenty-two more workers. Thirty-two missionaries of the society, excluding native brethren, assembled with three visiting brethren. By bullock-carts, elephants, ponies, rail, and steamer, they came together and returned.

On Monday, the 16th, the Conference considered an application for one of the visiting brethren, Mr. W. Pettigrew, who has been working for two years in the State of Manipur, which is under the Assam jurisdiction, under the directorship of Rev. H. de G. Dalmas, supported by Mr. Arthington, of Leeds. The A.B.M.U. are desirous of joining hands with their brethren in the Burmah field, and as Manipur is a part of the western boundary of Upper Burmah, it was considered by the Conference as a satisfactory place to commence new work, and after due deliberation this brother was unanimously accepted. From Tuesday to Saturday reports from the various stations were read and discussed. Some spoke of difficulties, trials, discouragements, others of blessing and conversions, but the Lord was magnified through it all. There was one subject much discussed upon particularly, viz., self-support. It was gratifying to find that the Garo Hill Christians were doing well in this direction, and the missionaries at Gowhati (Kamrup district) are going along boldly in this line, teaching their churches the principle, and finding great encouragement through it. Another important fact came out in the reading of the Garo Hill report. Of late the question of sending their own people, at the expense of local churches, to evangelise other tribes in Assam, has occupied their attention, and there seems every possibility that soon this interesting departure will commence. When the missionary spirit is seen in a body of native Christians, it is a conclusive proof that the Spirit of the Lord is working mightily amongst them.

Statistics given by each station show progress all along the line, although the Assamese, like the Bengali, are very slow in accepting the truth, their caste prejudices preventing them. However, there was much cause for rejoicing, and a fuller determination to go on sowing and reaping, allowing God to give the increase. One would like to give more details as to the results of the past three years, but it would be best for those whom the Lord may give interest in this work to procure a printed report of the conference from the executive committee at Boston, or from Rev. P. H. Moore, Mowgong, Assam.

Work at Gosport.

HAVING returned from a visit to Gosport, I have had an opportunity of seeing Mrs. Cook's great but quiet work. At the Bethel, a good number of men and boys were gathered together for Bible-reading and other instruction. In the infant-school a large number of the poorest children are educated free, under a kind, loving Christian teacher. There is also a mothers' meeting, which is attended by some of the very poorest.

I accompanied the missionary to the Warner Light vessel and the forts in the Channel. He took with him a large quantity of Gospel books and Testaments, and it did one good to see the faces of these lonely men light up with joy as we approached the vessel—they seldom get a visit from anyone but the missionary. We held a short meeting on board. If the missionary had a steam launch the work could be greatly extended. On the forts we were received in the same manner, and had many personal talks with the soldiers. I visited with the missionary all the merchant vessels in the harbour, and left books and Testaments and a word by the way. It was really astonishing to see the eagerness of the crews to receive the books, etc. The missionary also visits H.M.'s ships lying in the harbour.

There are Sunday and week night Gospel services held in the Bethel, and a large Sunday-school and a young men's Bible-class.

A Secret Society at Cambridge.

THE time has come for inviting public attention to the character and aims of a secret society at work amongst the undergraduates, and at one period also amongst the younger townsmen, of Cambridge. A simple statement of facts, so far as we have been able to gather them, may perhaps suffice to set parents as well as undergraduates upon their guard. Whatever may be the ultimate object in the minds of those who have originated and pushed this organisation, we do not think there will be any doubt as to the wisdom of making its existence and its character known.

1. The ostensible aim of the organisation is to assist men religiously to discharge their duty. But whilst, in a kind of lithographed Lenten Pastoral which is before us, we are told that the organisation "does not profess to be a religious Society," a survey of the documents in our possession suggests that the profession is of little importance in comparison with the facts, for the type of faith recommended to the members appears to be that of extreme High Churchmen. Since another document recommends, as a handbook of "religious teaching," Mr. Staley's "Catholic Religion"; since in the pastoral we have mentioned members are urged to find "a private special adviser, spiritual guide, director"; and since a familiar text is made to run thus: "The blood of Jesus Christ (in Absolution) cleanseth us from all sin," the religious character of the organisation must be deemed distinct.

2. The members of the Society are known as C.S.J. The letters mean Companions of St. John. Members are recruited, as we understand, through social agencies, and are gradually brought up to a point at which they are invited to join the Society. The rules and true nature of the organisation are not disclosed save to members. Thus the novice knows nothing as to the responsibilities he is about to take upon himself. Admission is by an oath of allegiance and secrecy ceremoniously administered. The nature of the act may be gathered from the fact that a member invited to explain the form of admission said he understood that he had committed himself body, soul, and spirit to the head of the Society.

3. An undergraduate who has become a member finds that he belongs to a widespread organisation, said already to number some 1,200 persons, the purpose of which, apart from the inculcation of extreme Anglican teaching, is not apparent. He finds, however, that it is deemed of the utmost importance that he should go to confession; but he finds that he must not inform even his own father of the new organisation for spiritual aid into which he has been brought. Thus an undergraduate who may have been reared in Evangelical surroundings is, without warning and without opportunity of retreat, bound, by an oath of secrecy, to an organisation which presses upon him the theology of Mr. Vernon Staley and the services of a father confessor, upon the understanding that not a syllable must be breathed, even to his own parents, on the subject. Further, such a member seems under the control of others, so that he may be peremptorily summoned away from a C.M.S. meeting, or cut off from such religious influences as some unknown power may choose to ban.

4. The work of this organisation was at one time pushed, we have reason to believe, in the town as well as the University; but its character becoming known an inquiry followed, and its further development in this direction was arrested. So far as the University is concerned, we believe that the master of one college has forbidden its members to join the Society.

We do not feel it necessary to add either inference or conjecture to this statement; but we are bound to say that we regard the existence of such an organisation as a grave peril to undergraduate life at Cambridge. To mitigate that peril by the barest statement of what we believe to be facts is the purpose of this warning.—The Record.

Young People and Missions.

A REPRESENTATIVE meeting of members of The Young Men's and Young Women's Mission Bands, in aid of the L.M.S., was held a few days ago, to confer on ways and means of deepening interest in foreign mission work. During recent years, in consequence of the rise and progress of the Christian Endeavour Societies, the bands have found it necessary, in some degree, to reshape their plans. The Endeavour Societies have their missionary branches, so care is taken not so much to form fresh bands as to unite existing agencies. The Mission Band is constantly losing its best men, owing to their promotion to service abroad, ten former members being now engaged in the mission field, while fifteen are in training with a view to similar service.

Miss MILLEDGE, secretary of the Y.W.M.B., spoke on behalf of that organisation. This band is only a few months old. The objects in view are similar to those of the Young Men's Band. It is sought, by having one or two representatives from each church, to bring the work of the Society more prominently before the young women of our churches. Work is also proposed in the direction of interesting children in day-schools in foreign missionary enterprise. Every member on joining is asked to do some definite work for the Society. There were now seventy-one members, representing twenty-six of the Congregational churches in London. Mr. GEORGE HARDY, of Camberwell Green Y.P.S.C.E., was convinced that for future workers and helpers the missionary societies should look largely to the Endeavour Societies.

Other speakers followed. Among the means suggested whereby help may be rendered, were: Penny a week subscriptions; Sunday-school teachers to inform their children of missionary work; juvenile working parties; sending out magazines and letters to missionaries; local missionary conferences; praying for missionaries, and teaching children missionary geography by means of sand maps.

Rev. J. L. GREEN (Demerara) congratulated the speakers on the practical nature of their suggestions, and referred to the meeting as being one of intense interest. Rev. J. G. HAWKER (Belgaum) compared the L.M.S. to a tree bearing its fruit abroad, but having its roots in the churches at home, whence it drew its strength.

South American Continental Mission.

DR. BREMNER, upon whose heart it has been laid to form a missionary agency, to take part in evangelising the vast and needy continent of South America, sailed with his wife for Buenos Ayres on Thursday last. Before his departure he secured several well-known Christian men as referees, Mr. W. J. Gibbs (48, Gresham-street, London, E.C.) as hon. secretary, and Mr. H. Kellaway (Home-wood, Bromley, Kent) as hon. treasurer.

To differentiate this new departure from the South American Missionary Society, the above title has been adopted. It is intended as a beginning to establish a home in or near Buenos Ayres for the reception of missionary candidates, where the language may be learnt, and from which, as they are found ready, they will be sent out to different stations in the Republics of Uruguay, Paraguay, Argentina, and Bolivia, giving especial heed to the needs of Bolivia. In connection with the Mission Hall, it is proposed to open a small hospital and dispensary. For the immediate need of the mission Dr. Bremner believes that £2000 will be required. Already many young men have offered themselves as candidates, and several contributions have been received. Two or three of the most eligible will shortly follow Dr. Bremner to the south.

Last week a farewell address was given by Dr. Bremner at the central noon prayer-meeting, Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A. He gave some startling statistics as to the needs of the country. Mr. W. C. Morris, of the Boca Mission, Buenos Ayres, in a brief address, spoke of the cruel spiritual bondage of three centuries under which South America has groaned. Now doors are open, and barriers broken down everywhere. Many of the people are really stretching out their hands to God.

Great Assembly Hall.

THE inspiring meetings that were experienced during the Weaver Brothers' Mission in January, in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, London, continued during February, when God again wonderfully blessed the message of the Gospel delivered by Mr. Charles Cook. The sweet singing of Madame Marian McKenzie brought many to the Sunday evening services who otherwise would not have been found under the sound of the Gospel. These services were crammed to overflowing, and some very interesting cases were dealt with after each meeting in the enquiry room.

The gatherings for men only on Sunday afternoons in the smaller hall greatly increased. To-day there are men praising God that they were led to give up their Sunday walk and listen to the straight talks of faithful men. Wives and children are also experiencing the joy of altered home life with a real Father to take an interest in them. Such is the power of God's Gospel on the lives of ungodly men. One man on being visited was found at home waiting upon his wife who had fallen sick. She told the visitor that she had never had such a happy time, and remarked, "Fancy my husband stopping at home to see after me! Such a thing he has never done before." K.

South Africa General Mission.

WRITING from Nkanga, Western Pondoland, Mr. Cyril Green says:—"We are at last settled amongst the heathen. We have a square house with three rooms, built of sod and thatch, which accommodates my brother and ourselves. A hut 30ft. in diameter is being built for church and school, and will be ready about the end of February. The people come to the services in numbers varying from forty to seventy or more every Sunday."

Mr. Spencer Walton writes from Durban, Natal:—"God has been working in the Zulu church, and souls have been saved. The congregations are good. On Sunday, Dec. 29, we had the joy of baptizing nine Zulu converts."

"Special services have been held for several Sundays in the Circus in Cape Town, arranged by Mr. Frank Huskisson. They have been times of real blessing, as many as 2000 to 2500 or more have been present."

Mr. Kidd writes: "Things in Johannesburg are still very unsettled, and money is very scarce, as people are holding it in case of emergency. Expenses will probably be in excess of income (humanly speaking) for some six months or more."

British Central Africa.

THE following is from the London correspondence of The Scotsman:—

"I hear from the north end of Lake Nyassa, in British Central Africa, that there were loud rejoicings all over the country at the extinction of the Arab slave-raiders and the execution of the Senga Arab Mlozi last December. The slaughter of the slaves is reported throughout the land as having been very great. The Scots Livingstonian missionaries gladly suffered the detention of their home mails and supplies, consequent on Sir H. H. Johnston, the Commissioner, having chartered the Domira steamer of the African Lakes Corporation. Locusts were ravaging the native crops right down the Eastern coast districts of Africa from Tanganyika by Natal to King William's Town. Dr. James Stewart's mission farm at Lovedale, from which the Kafir students are fed, was stripped of £400 worth of green crops in a few hours."

Purim is an important season in the Jewish calendar. From year to year the story of the great deliverance wrought by God through the instrumentality of Queen Esther passes from mouth to mouth among the Jews, and what with the attendant fasting and feasting the minds of women and children are specially interested and impressed. Mr. H. Ehrlich, whose work among the Jews of Whitechapel is well known, gives special attention to these classes, and on Thursday last his hall in Old Montague-street was crowded with little ones, who spent a very pleasant evening, singing hymns, reciting poems, and finally, after hearing the story of God's providence in the olden time, received Purim gifts (Esther ix. 22). A number of the mothers were also entertained, efforts being made to introduce a little brightness into their lives, so anxious and weary, owing to the depressing surroundings in which they are passed.

Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society.

WITH a view to stirring a deeper interest in the cause of Medical Missions, and calling forth fresh volunteers and supporters for this important service, the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society has arranged a series of missionary meetings in various English towns. Thus during the past few weeks Dr. Sargood Fry and Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Barclay have visited Bath, Weston-super-Mare, Reading, Bedford, and Colchester, holding most encouraging meetings, and awakening not a little interest.

On Monday last, in Colchester, a drawing-room meeting was held in the afternoon at the residence of Mr. H. Goody, solicitor, followed in the evening by a large and enthusiastic meeting in the Corn Exchange, when Mr. Barclay and Dr. Sargood Fry gave addresses, while Mrs. Barclay sang several solos, and aided in leading the service of song. From the words spoken it appeared that this Society exists to train medical missionaries, to promote in every way the consecration of the healing art to the service of Christ, both at home and abroad.

The Society is inter-denominational, seeking to supply medical missionaries to all Evangelical missions, and having now fully-qualified men labouring in connection with the Church Missionary Society, the London Missionary Society, the various Scottish and English Presbyterian churches, the Baptist Missionary Society, the Moravians, Methodist New Connexion, and the China Inland Mission. Thus it is the helpmeet of all the churches; but in addition, it has responsibilities of its own in supporting medical missions at Agra, Nazareth, and Damascus, besides a large and important work in the Cowgate, Edinburgh, which has been richly blessed to many of the roughest class, while affording the students most valuable experience in practical mission work.

All who are privileged to hear the details given by this deputation of medical missions in Madagascar and in the East, as well as in India, China, and Africa, must feel the importance of such a training society. These brethren have now gone on to Ipswich, Chelmsford, York; hoping subsequently to visit Sheffield, Liverpool, Derby, and other places.

Sorrow in Sicily.

THE mission work of the Waldensian Church is carried on against mighty odds in several parts of the great Italian field; but it would seem that in Sicily peculiar difficulties are at present being encountered. A sad story reaches us from the province of Girgenti, where the population is starving through the closing of the sulphur mines. Pastor G. Banchetti, who labours at Grotte, on the morning of January 31, had fifty-five calls by poor people begging bread. The Government is unable to find work; it has only sent troops to preserve order! As agriculture is so depressed in the island that the labourers perish with hunger, there is no opportunity of occupation upon the land.

From the same place there comes another cry. For thirteen years an encouraging work has been carried on by the Waldensian Church; now the room which has been used is being withdrawn, and there is no other building available. This means a great deal for the faithful few who have left Roman bondage for Gospel liberty. The erection of an Evangelical place of worship has become an imperative necessity. It is hoped by this undertaking to find work for some at least of the host of unemployed. Friends of Gospel work in Italy may make the scheme practicable. All particulars may be had from Sig. Arturo Muston, Waldensian minister, via Esposizione, Casa Civiletti, Palermo, Sicily.

Events in Peru.

ON Jan. 24, 1896, the Government paid us an indemnity for the outrage committed upon us in expelling us from Cuzco. The results of this payment will be far-reaching, but we fear will arouse the priests to determined action against us and the Government. In an interesting document which we signed at the request of the Minister of Foreign Affairs, the following facts are demonstrated:—

First, that the Protestant missionary does have rights in Peru, although Art. 4 of the Constitution says that "the State professes and is bound to protect the Roman Catholic religion, and the public exercise of any other is forbidden." Secondly, that the Government is prepared to do what it can to maintain the missionary in the enjoyment of those rights. Thirdly, that in the face of the favourable disposition of the Government and the guarantees that ought to shelter the missionary, he is liable to be outraged when the clergy are the movers in the agitation. With these facts before us we can go forward in our work hoping for the day when the rights which we enjoy will extend to liberty and publicity of worship.

On the ground that the interior is not ready for our work, and that serious consequences may result from our presence there, the Government has refused us permission to return to Cuzco. However, we have no hesitation in stepping forward. We shall not be going into an unknown place this time, neither shall we be entering in opposition to the desires of all its inhabitants. We have many friends who will welcome us to Cuzco. Very shortly we shall be leaving this for the Inca capital, from which a priest-ruled authority expelled us. We ask the prayers of your readers that grace and wisdom may be given, whereby we may be enabled to live in Cuzco and proclaim liberty to the captives in the name of our Great Redeemer and coming King.

News from other parts of the country tell us that in the north a colporteur had his books seized and burnt, and yesterday a telegram was received from Brother Stark, who, with Brother Backhouse, is on an evangelistic tour, telling us that they were in the midst of great excitement, and some of their books had been burnt.—Yours, in the Gospel,

JOHN L. JARRETT.

Jewish Mission in Montreal.

THE Jewish population in Canada is estimated at between nine and ten thousand, of whom six thousand are in the city of Montreal, a number which is steadily increasing. The majority are from Russia and Central Europe, mainly poor, and of the orthodox type, and hard set against Christianity; while not a few are in an inquiring state of mind. Several hundreds of Jewish children attend the public schools of the city and learn English. They do not generally absent themselves during the hour the Bible is read. One of the Rabbis is employed by the school board to give a daily lesson in Hebrew.

About four years ago Mission work amongst the Jews was begun by Mr. G. A. Newmark, and not without success; but, owing to difficulties, it was discontinued. The Mission has been resumed under the superintendence of Rev. John McCarter, a Presbyterian minister, who has the effective assistance of several converted Jews. A hall has been hired in St. Laurence Main-street, one of the great thoroughfares of the city, in which a meeting is held every Lord's Day. Classes for instruction in English reading and in writing are open four evenings of the week, for the sake of adult Jews desirous of learning English. These several meetings have an encouraging attendance, and the spiritual outlook is very hopeful. The most important agency is family visitation, the families being found friendly.

A female department has been organised by Mrs. McCarter, with several lady assistants, and a weekly meeting commenced to assist Jewish women with sewing, and in Bible instruction. The work is capable of considerable extension were the necessary means at hand. Then, too, there are swarms of bright children, keenly intelligent, and susceptible of teaching, to whom one's heart goes out with yearning over their souls and bodies.

Communications may be addressed to Mr. McCarter, 130, Tupper-street, Montreal.

Mr. Rabinowitch's Work.

THE report for 1895 of the London council in aid of this work opens with a photo-lithograph of Mr. Rabinowitch preaching in the Somerville Hall, Kischineff. It contains a statement by Pastor Faber, of Leipzig, who in May last visited Kischineff, and then a letter from Mr. Rabinowitch himself.

Pastor Faber says, "The great number of Hebrew and Jewish tracts, written by Rabinowitch, are seen sown far away, the hidden germs of which will spring up as a great blessing for Israel. The name of Joseph Rabinowitch is known among the Jews of Russia as far as the Siberian and Persian borders. I myself carried his works to the Karaites, the anti-talmudical Jews of the Crimea, and to the mountain Jews of the Caucasus."

In his letter, Mr. Rabinowitch says:—"Many times during this year the Lord has enabled me to witness publicly of the love of Jehovah to Israel, and to all the world in Jesus Christ. Many Jewish souls have been drawn by the Holy Spirit to come and hear the Word of God preached every Jewish Sabbath, when texts and subjects from the Holy Scriptures have been put into my mouth by the Lord for the instruction, reproof, and correction of my hearers. At our synagogue in Kischineff, the Jewish population, the number of which is about 50,000, is called upon to yield to Jesus Christ solely by the power of the pure Word of God."

The treasurer of the London council in aid of mission is Mr. C. E. Greenwood, "Elim," Copers Cope-road, Beckenham, Kent.

Work in Japan.

I AM printing a little monthly paper in Japanese (Morning Light I call it) for evangelising work. The edition is only 3000 a month, but the little sheet reaches many who would not otherwise receive any Christian instruction. I aim to make it useful to church members, inquirers, and unbelievers, too.

There is a little improvement in the conditions that affect Christian work here, but it is now evident that the evangelising of Japan, and the moral and spiritual development of the Christians, will be a work of considerable time. The Japanese are an intellectually acute and alert people, but moral and spiritual development are more and greater than intellectual, and involve more time. The work of foreign missions will not be finished for many years yet.

J. L. ATKINSON.

Kobé, Japan, Jan. 28.

Littlestone-on-Sea Convalescent Home for poor women and girls, has thirty-one beds, and during the past year has received 194 inmates. The Home having been enlarged, can now accommodate between 600 and 700 patients yearly. To achieve this result at least £800 will be required. A most urgent appeal is therefore made for new subscribers. £1 ls. admits a patient free for two weeks. The benefits conferred by a visit to a sea-side Home, with its refreshing air and bright surroundings, coupled with an ample supply of wholesome food, to which, too often, the recipients are strangers, are enormous; they are boons of greatest value, and among those who are wretchedly poor, in ill-health, and fagged out by the burden of continuous labours, a change of such sort may well be the turning-point of a life. The hon. director is Mr. E. H. Tubbs, Bradley, Lawrie Park-road, Sydenham, S.E.

London Spectacle Mission Society.—The hon. secretary of this interesting work gives a very satisfactory account of the work of the society for 1895. The number of applicants has steadily increased. The work of the Mission is now more widely known, and many contributions have come this year from strangers. The hon. sec. has received many encouraging and appreciative letters, testifying to the good and efficient work done by the society, in supplying poor folks, whose sight has failed them, with such suitable spectacles as will enable them to continue their occupations, or to pass the time in reading or sewing. The number of special cases has again been very considerable, and the hon. sec. has felt justified in supplying more expensive spectacles in certain cases where they have been deemed necessary by doctor's orders. Miss Waring, 197, Sutherland-avenue, London, W., will be glad to supply any further information.

PRAYER AND SOUL-WINNING.

DEAR SIR,—A most startling fact in all church life is the almost entire absence of direct personal service in winning souls. Most Christians seek only personal joy and satisfaction, and seem to forget service altogether, in their efforts to retain salvation. An eminent writer says that four fifths of the nominal membership of the churches add nothing to their real power and effect in the world. They are either a dead weight or a positive hindrance to the advance of the Gospel, as it requires all the vitality and energy their religion possesses to keep and maintain its present position, leaving none to spare for active aggressive work.

During fifteen years of evangelistic work all over the country, I have been struck again and again at the almost entire absence of a systematic, habitual personal seeking of souls amongst members of churches and professing Christians generally. In hundreds of cases I have put the question pointedly, "Do you know that you have been instrumental in leading one soul to Christ since your conversion?" The answers have startled, confounded, and perplexed me. As I have heard their weak excuses, confessions, ignorance, and little interest in such an important question, I have been appalled at the way multitudes of professing Christians are absolutely neglecting the unsaved around them; and grieved to the heart that the question of personal responsibility to Christ, the world around them, and even to their own loved ones was scarcely ever thought of, much less carefully considered and pondered over.

I could furnish instance after instance of definite answer to prayer in the conversion of individuals, and should be thankful if through the influence of this note many will seek to become "soul-winners," and test and try God, to see if He is not still true to his promises.—Yours faithfully,

JOHN Q. COWLEY.

SUNDAY NEWSPAPERS.

SIR,—I recently came across some details of the agencies connected with newspapers, their printing and circulation; and I am impressed with the fact that the increased demand for Sunday newspapers is adding materially to what must be heavy work even for six days. It is important that statistics on this point should be thought over by all classes of society, especially by those who are guided by the Master's orders, "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise" (Luke vi. 31).

It would appear that at least two million copies of Sunday newspapers are now printed for circulation. The papers thus in request are published by some of the wealthy publishers of other papers. The increasing interest in sports of all kinds, with many of which gambling is more or less connected, gives an added interest to the Sunday newspapers. In a recent letter, a newsagent describes his occupation during an ordinary Saturday, showing that work begins at half-past five in the morning, and is continued until one o'clock on the following Sunday morning—nineteen and a-half hours at a stretch. Then comes the Sunday work.

The labour on Sunday papers begins with the printers, who are working up to three a.m., the hour at which the publishing office opens. Then come the men to serve the papers out to the wholesale dealers, who employ a large number of men and boys, with horses and carts, to catch the first trains into the country, and supply all the shops in London, finishing their part of the work about ten a.m. The newsagent and his boys are then in full swing delivering, and it is three p.m. before their work is practically over. Where there is a local wholesale dealer, he supplies the newsagents; otherwise, they have to meet the trains themselves.

Such are some details of a perfectly needless round of labour on the Lord's Day. I find that advocates of the business say that an example is set them by some churches and chapels, where books and periodicals are sold on the Lord's Day. The man or lad who pays 1d. for a localised magazine, may naturally think that another 1d. may go for a newspaper, as he leaves his class or meeting. Cannot some quiet thought prevent such a cause for stumbling, so that subscriptions for books and periodicals could be collected on some week-day.

A LOOKER ON.

WORLDLY AMUSEMENTS.

DEAR SIR,—May I ask for a small space in your paper respecting worldly amusements? As I have never been to a hall or a theatre in my life, my opinion of their pernicious influences is not of value to friends. Would any readers of this paper who have given up these amusements for Christ's sake kindly give me the reasons for doing so, addressed to Handcock's, 7, Bishop's-road, Paddington, W.? A. J. D.

The Month & Its Lessons.—3.

MARCH.—The Windy Month.

This month was first called "March" by Romulus, the founder and first king of Rome, in honour of Mars, their idol-god of war. The Saxons called it Length month, because at this season of the year the days begin to lengthen, and other ancients called it Windy-month, Spring-month, and Budding-month.

LESSONS FROM THE WIND.

1. WIND.—A Messenger obeying God's Word.—Ps. cxlviii. 8.
2. WIND.—A Mystery illustrating Divine grace.—John iii. 8.
3. WIND.—A Quickener showing the Spirit's work.—Ezek. xxxvii. 9.
4. WIND.—A Blessing bringing forth fruit.—S. of S. iv. 16.
5. WIND.—A Servant doing the Lord's will.—Matt. xiv. 24 to 32.
6. WIND.—A Power pointing to God's Spirit.—Acts ii. 2.
7. WIND.—A Punishment driving away the wicked.—Ps. i. 4.

All the seasons of the year, as they pass along, speak to us of the solemnities of life, the shortness of time, the opportunities for service, and the nearness of eternity, and each part of the year has a distinct call and lesson. The Spring says, "Be awake"; the Summer says, "Be active"; the Autumn says, "Be fruitful"; and the Winter says, "Be patient."

The ancient figure of the month of March is a very suggestive one. It is a man with a fierce aspect. In his hand almond blossoms, on his head a helmet, in his other hand a spade, and on his arm a seed-basket. The lessons are very clear: they speak to us of life, labour, love, and hope. It seems to say to us, "Work, work, if you want to be healthy. Work, if you want to be happy. Work, if you want to be helpful. Work, if you want to be holy. Work, if you want to be honoured."

Church history opens, in the second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, with an account of a notable revival—a pentecostal outpouring of the Holy Ghost; and every other revival of the work of God has been by this divine power. In the times of Luther and Huss, in the days of Wycliffe, Wesley, and Whitfield, the Holy Spirit roused, directed, and blessed every effort to the salvation of thousands of souls, and it is the great power now that is needed to sanctify the church and save men's souls.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle.

THE annual church meeting of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, to which some had looked forward with not a little anxiety, has shown that under the care of Pastor Thomas Spurgeon the general work is prospering. The proceedings of the evening were characterised by much enthusiasm, and it must have greatly encouraged the pastor to be thus assured that the heart of the church at the Tabernacle beat as true to him as it did to his beloved father. The statistics for the year show a slight decrease.

The pastor, introducing the most important item for the consideration of the meeting, that is, the question of an assistant minister, detailed the various steps by which, at last, "with the unanimous approval of the deacons, and the hearty approval of the elders," he was able to mention the name of Pastor C. B. Sawday as the brother whom he desired as his helper. A resolution inviting Rev. C. B. Sawday to assist the pastor for twelve months, and praying that his labours of love might be greatly blessed, was moved by Mr. Thomas H. Olney, senior deacon and treasurer, and seconded by Professor McCaig, one of the elders of the church, and, on being put to the meeting, was carried almost unanimously. Here and there a hand appeared in response to the pastor's question, "Any on the contrary?" and probably, out of two thousand or more members present, not a dozen voted in opposition. After all that has occurred during the past four years, it is a subject for devout thanksgiving that the Tabernacle Church has again passed happily through another of the great crises in its history.

Christ Church.—In the Christian Treasury notes for the month, Rev. F. B. Meyer says:—"We have opened our Lads' Institute with good results. We limit the numbers to sixty, as these are almost as many as we can manage. The old factory serves the purposes marvellously well. The combination of talk and drill on Sunday afternoons is so far a capital means of reaching the lads with the Gospel and temperance."

Oxford Notes.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

DEAN FARRAR preached last Sunday evening, to a very large congregation, at the University Church. It was one of a course of sermons to undergraduates arranged by the Vicar of St. Mary's. The Dean's text was itself a trumpet-tone (Ephesians v. 6), and the whole sermon was maintained in the same key. Nothing more trenchant and faithful could well be imagined; sin was unmistakably shown in its reality and effects, and then as clearly was the remedy applied, and the Gospel message effectively delivered. If only the High Church vicar would always get such sermons as the Dean's, what rejoicing there would be in very many hearts.

Last week Rev. Egerton R. Young gave a vivid account of his work in North-West America. He addressed a meeting of the Gleaners' Union, and also the weekly gathering of the University Missionary Union. Fancy a Methodist missionary addressing a meeting of the C.M.S. Gleaners' Union!

The Sunday-evening Bible readings, conducted by Rev. F. J. Chavasse, are being held, with great acceptance to the large number of men who attend. This quiet, steady, and spiritual teaching will bear abundant fruit in many a parish by-and-by.

Scottish Notes.

A sum of £1000 has been given to the endowment fund of the Sailors' Orphan Society of Scotland by the family of the late Mr. Thomas Henderson, of the Anchor line of steamships.

Mr. Charles Steele, the recently-appointed manager of the Highland Railway, has been a well-known figure in York, especially in connection with its religious, temperance, and social life.

Mr. Quarrier, of the Orphan Homes, Bridge of Weir, needs about £500 to pay for the outfits and passages of the 180 boys he is sending soon to Canada, and £1200 for the band of girls whom he hopes to send in May.

At the annual meeting of the Glasgow Free Presbytery's Temperance Society, it was declared that Scotland is ripe for a local veto measure. One speaker said the slow progress of the temperance cause was the mass of indifference outside and of selfishness inside the churches.

The reports submitted at the annual meeting in connection with the Carr Night Refuge, held at Dundee last week, showed that the number of persons admitted during 1895 was 10,781, an increase of 269 over the previous year. There was a deficiency on the year's working of £84, and appeals were made to the public for increased support.

Irish Notes.

THE Sligo riots appear at length to be wearing themselves out. A few days ago Rev. Richard Hallows, of Arklow, and Mr. Geo. Williams conducted a service in Quay-street, and there was hardly any disturbance. Patience and perseverance are sure to win in the end.

The fifth annual report of the Dublin District Colportage Society has been issued, and shows that during the year the colporteur sold over 18,000 copies of various kinds of literature, including 1000 Douay Testaments and portions, the total sales amounting to over £60. For this sort of work there appears to be at present an excellent opening in Ireland.

The Belfast Prison Gate Mission is doing a most necessary and Godlike work in trying to help the discharged prisoners to lead a better and purer life. Last year 347 discharged prisoners came to the Home, and 37 of these were detained as inmates, while the expenditure was only about £500. Undoubtedly this organisation is rendering excellent service to the country as well as to Christianity, and it deserves to be supported.

An important arrangement has been effected between the Belfast Y.M.C.A. and the Queen's College Christian Union of that city. For some time a number of the students have been attending Mr. Black's Sunday-morning Bible-class, which has an average attendance of 400 young men. The result has been in a most friendly spirit arising between the Y.M.C.A. and the Students' Christian Union. The latter have appointed a sub-committee for the purpose of keeping in touch with the arrangements of the Y.M.C.A. As a result a deputation of the students attended and addressed the Bible-class on a recent Sunday.

The Friend who has been sending THE CHRISTIAN to Mr. Arthur Thomas, Y.M.C.A., Long-street, Cape Town, is informed that the whereabouts of the addressee is now unknown.

The Y.M.C.A.

AT Brisbane the general secretary, Mr. E. A. Field, is not discouraged by the many difficulties by reason of the financial crisis.

The annual meeting of the Bournemouth Association was held on Thursday evening, the President, Captain Dawson, occupying the chair. The principal speaker was Rev. W. Cuff.

Meetings for the deepening of spiritual life, promoted by the Harlesden Y.M.C.A., will be held at Baptist Church, Acton-lane, March 18; at Presbyterian Church, Nicoll-road, March 19; and at Christ Church School-room, St. Albans-road, March 20.

At the Croydon Rooms on Sunday afternoon, a lively discussion followed Mr. Morgan's opening on the subject of "Fear." Rev. J. Critchison delivered in the evening a very practical address to men. On Monday at the mission band meeting, the subject for consideration was "The Bible—How to Love It."

Sir John Barron presided over the Leeds annual meeting, which was held last week, and an address was delivered by Mr. W. Hind Smith to a large audience. The report of work, presented by Mr. Thomas Moffett, the general secretary, was excellent in every way. The attendance at the Sunday afternoon Bible-class has risen to 160.

Mr. J. J. Virgo has been visiting the Melbourne Rooms, on his way back to Adelaide, and writes hopefully of the work there. After an interview with some members of the Melbourne board, he says he thinks "they have turned the corner"—that is, they are beginning to recover from the depression which had settled so heavily on them.

A short mission to young men was conducted last week at the Derby Association Rooms by Mr. T. A. Bailey. On the last evening Mr. Bailey told his life's story. There was a capital attendance, and, as on other evenings, several men stayed behind to converse with the missionary. The interest was well maintained, and it is believed that much good will result. Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Bailey will be glad of the prayers of all their friends, as they go forth to undertake Leper Mission and Y.M.C.A. work in India.

The annual meeting of Tavistock Association held on Thursday was well attended. The annual report stated that the reading-room and library had been well used, the weekly Bible-class was a most useful adjunct, and there was reason to hope that good results had attended the Sunday night meetings. Mr. W. H. Roberts urged the necessity of making their meetings bright and cheerful if they would attract the young men. He thought they had done exceedingly well considering the small sum of money which had been expended during the year. Earnest addresses were also given by Messrs. R. Morshead (president), Bennett, and Wonnacott.

On Wednesday, February 19, a successful delegate meeting was held at the West Hartlepool Association. Mr. Frederick Robson, Stockton, representing the north-east district union, gave an interesting address. Delegates representing the associations at Hartlepool, Stockton, Middlesbrough, and Darlington, were present and gave an account of the work, which, in every case, was hopeful, as signs of spiritual quickening in each association had been manifest. Spontaneously, at the close of the meeting several local young men gave testimony as to valuable help and stimulus they had received from the Y.M.C.A., particularly in connection with the Bible class.

North-East London Gospel Missions.—Mr. Richard Spragge has held a fortnight's mission at the Cubitt Town branch of the Mission, to the great encouragement of the workers, and with some remarkable experiences of blessing. Some of the factory girls at Bow Common have given satisfactory evidence of a real change of heart. The largest centre of the work is situated at Balls Pond, Dalston, and here Mr. Thomas Johnson has been labouring with most happy results.

Work in Tunis.—We have seen our way to open our hall by day for sale of Scriptures, and conversation with any who like to enter for the purpose. In the window we have open Bibles, texts, etc., in the different languages of Tunis—Hebrew, Arabic, Maltese, Greek, Italian, French, etc. Most of the Christian workers here are united in this effort, and at present we serve the shop by turns. Many stop to read the open page in the window, and not a few have come in to buy and to converse, perhaps more especially Jews and Arabs, but others also. We have only one room, hall and shop in one. We want a miniature "Strangers' Rest," where, in addition to the shop, we could be holding meetings for or conversations with people of different nationalities at the same time. F. E. BERNARD.

WORK IN INDIA.

FURTHER accounts reach us of new centres of work being opened up in and around Calcutta, and an earnest appeal is made for workers. Active work has been commenced at Hastings, a suburb of Calcutta. There is real need here for a middle-aged woman to take the place of matron to the girls. A Bible-reading is arranged for once a week at Barrackpore. The secretary of the Hindustani work writes that the year has been a very happy one, though not without its discouragements. The members of the "Time and Talent" in England are heartily thanked for the work sent out, and which has been highly appreciated by their Indian sisters.

There are now twenty-five branches, three new ones having been formed during 1895.

It is hoped that recruits may be found among the native Indian women to carry the good tidings of salvation to their countrywomen, who are still "sitting in darkness, and in the shadow of death."

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. J. D. Watters gave a very practical address at the recent meeting of the temperance branch of the Cardiff Institute.

A large muster of members and associates of the Mayfield Y.W.C.A. came together to hear an address given by Mr. Kinnings.

By kind invitation of Miss Champion the members of the Nettlebed branch met recently for their annual social gathering.

The annual "At Home" of the Totnes Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. was held on the 20th inst. Nearly 100 members were present, and a very pleasant evening was spent.

At Newport, on February 25, Miss Fields, an American worker in the interests of the British Women's Temperance Association, addressed a large number of members and friends of the Association.

The Witham Y.W.C.A. held a very successful Industrial Exhibition at the lecture hall of the Congregational church, when prizes were awarded for the best specimens of art and plain needlework.

Evangelistic meetings were held last week in connection with the Rothessay Y.W.C.A. Mr. Pratt conducted services, aided by lime-light views, in the U.P. Church, and Mr. Murray addressed meetings in the Gospel Hall.

At a meeting of the members of the Yeovil Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. Miss Duncan, who has rendered valuable services to both societies, was presented with tokens of esteem and appreciation. Miss Duncan is shortly leaving Yeovil.

The quarterly conference of Y.W.C.A. secretaries and workers in co. Dublin was held on Feb. 20 at the Association rooms, Harcourt-street, Dublin. Most of the speakers expected could not attend, but a good time was spent listening to the messengers that filled their places.

Following upon a course of "First Aid" Lectures, by Dr. Tilstone, in connection with the Clevedon Y.W.C.A., twenty-one students presented themselves for examination by Dr. Griffiths, of Bristol. Dr. Tilstone has kindly consented to repeat the course to a men's class, provided there be a sufficient number forthcoming.

At the annual meeting of the Dorchester Y.W.C.A., an earnest and practical address was given by Miss Thornton. The report states that great interest had been shown in foreign mission work, the Dorchester branch uniting with other branches in supporting a missionary, Miss Owston, who will shortly enter upon her duties abroad.

An afternoon Bible class for members of the Park Mission Branch who cannot attend in the evening has been commenced by Mrs. John Chapman, at 16a, Old Cavendish-street, on Tuesdays, 3 to 4 p.m. to be continued on the first and third Tuesdays in each month. Mrs. Chapman also conducts the Bible class every Wednesday evening at 7.30 p.m.

Mrs. Sara Turnock, Chaplain's House, Rammoor, referring to the McNeill Mission, suggests that the women of Sheffield should form a Y.W.C.A. in that town, which would be used not only for meetings and social gatherings, but also as a home for women engaged in situations, where they could live cheaply and be cared for when away from their own home. The idea, we hope, will soon take practical shape.

On Friday evening, Feb. 21, the Hons. Gertrude and Emily Kinnaird and Miss Ardill entertained the members and friends of the Restaurant branch at Morley Rooms, 14, John-street, Bedford-row. The Hon. G. Kinnaird gave a most interesting lecture on the social life of the Zenana women in India, illustrated with lime-light views. Miss Ballard, hon. sec. Zenana Mission, invited the members to join the Loving Service League. Miss Ardill also spoke.

Christian Endeavour.

SAYS a Welsh missionary veteran, "We have the Christian Endeavour Society in nearly every mission station, and would not now be without one."

In Oldham the Primitive Methodist C.E.S. has sustained an eight days' mission. Every house in the neighbourhood was visited, and invitations given to the services.

A "mission" to young people, carried out by the Archdeacon Lane C.E.S., Leicester, has proved quite a success. Many young people were brought to decision for Christ, and others who were already active members of the society were greatly blessed.

The Glasgow City Mission C.E. Society has endeavoured to increase its membership by means of an open meeting, the members bringing young people who might become members. Rev. J. Dewar gave an address on "The Pledge."

Some members of a Denver Society lately walked two and a-half miles to the Denver Union sunrise prayer meeting, and then walked home again when the meeting was over. The car-fare thus saved went to swell the special C.E. offering that had been preceded by a week of self-denial.

A devoted and successful Methodist minister says:—"The C.E. Society formed here last August has been a very great blessing to us; it has proved a splendid training ground for the young; broken down ecclesiastical prejudices, and kept young people, converted at our special services, together in a way that no other church organisation could."

In Boston the anniversary of the founding of Christian Endeavour has been celebrated with great enthusiasm. It is noted that Bishop B. W. Arnett, D.D., of Wilberforce, O., received a triumphant welcome. The fact that some of the Boston hotels had refused to receive him on account of the colour of his skin gained him a warmer greeting. There is no colour line in Christian Endeavour.

Lichfield Soldiers' Home.

THE annual report states that as each year passes, the importance of having an institution devoted to the welfare of the soldiers at the county headquarters becomes more apparent. Owing to the short service system the country is becoming flooded with men who have served in the army, and the influence of such for good or for evil must be very great. A Soldiers' Home, close to the barracks, through which upwards of hundreds of recruits pass annually cannot fail, if well managed, to have a good influence on the men. It has often been asserted that the first few months of a recruit's career does much to make or to ruin him as a soldier, and the virtues or the vices he may acquire in the army often cling to him for life, long after he has ceased to wear Her Majesty's uniform.

The Lichfield Home, now under the care of an old soldier, Mr. C. W. Harris, has done during the past year valuable work, as shown in letters from soldiers and army reserve men given in the report. Many of the writers testify that the Home has been their spiritual birthplace, and that it was the means of saving them from falling into open sin. Col. A. Raier, on vacating his command of the Lichfield district, bore strong and telling testimony to the value of the work. The hon. supt. is Lieut.-Col. Seton Churchill, White Hall, Lichfield.

Requests for Prayer.—For special services at Purton, Wilts, to be conducted by Mr. John Elliott. —For Gipsy Smith's meetings in America. —For blessing on a mission in Gillford Hall, Sandymount, near Dublin. —For three children of a C.M.S. missionary who are at school in England, that they may become Christ's own whilst yet young. —For a Christian man under very strong temptation, that God would give him grace to "have victory and triumph." For much blessing on a mission to be conducted by J. S. Holden, in Ashton-under-Lyne, March 14 to 22. —For Thursday evening services at the Little Heath Mission Hall, Potter's Bar.

The Missionary Bureau.—The ninth report of this useful agency states that during 1895, six men and four women fared well for stated fields of labour. Eighteen students entered college. Monetary grants were made to eight workers in the field, formerly sent out by the Bureau; and, including missionary pennies, £2464 8s. 9d. was raised for foreign work in connection with various Evangelical societies. During last month, Mr. Geo. J. Wilker, son sailed for Matabeleland, as "our own missionary." Salary to be found, £120 per annum; and Miss S. Page was sent to Jacmel, Hayti, at a cost of £37. During this month three students leave for India and one for the Gold Coast (Basile Mission). Communications may be addressed to Rev. F. B. Meyer, Christ Church, Westminster; or the secretary of the Bureau, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Obituary.

REV. T. H. CARRYER, LEICESTER.

REV. Thomas Haddon Carryer, of Leicester, has departed, at the advanced age of eighty-one. He was one of the oldest ministers in the county, and the son of a friend of the great Robert Hall. As a young man he passed with honours through Rawdon College. After work in Canada, he was for thirteen years minister of Foxton, and subsequently assisted Rev. F. B. Meyer, in his pastorate at Melbourne Hall, Leicester.

MR. OLIVER GERRING, FARINGDON, BERKS.

This standard-bearer for Evangelical truth died at Faringdon at the ripe age of eighty-two years, on Tuesday, February 25. For over fifty years he was deacon of the Congregational Church in that town, a warm friend of village evangelisation in the villages of the Vale of Berks, a devoted Sabbath school superintendent, and an earnest friend of every good cause. One of the largest gatherings ever seen in Faringdon, of men and women of all parties, surrounded his grave. Rev. T. C. Udall, of London, formerly of Faringdon, and Rev. J. Frewings, Congregational minister of Faringdon, conducted the services.

DR. JUSTIN A. SMITH, CHICAGO.

We hear with sorrow of the death of Rev. Justin A. Smith, D.D., for forty-two years editor of the Chicago Standard, the leading Baptist organ of the Western States of America. Born in 1819 at Ticonderoga, N.Y., he passed an excellent preparatory college course, and was a hard worker all his life. In the well-known young people's paper, The Baptist Union, for February 15th, Dr. Ira M. Price says of him: "No one in Chicago was more sought for in counsel nor wiser in his counsels. His life was that of a beloved disciple of Jesus Christ. As a pastor in former days, as a journalistic pastor for forty years, as a church member, Dr. Smith was always conscientious, and careful not simply to do his duty, but to do it to the reach of his opportunity. The pastor, the sick, the sinner, and the stranger were all recipients of his attention and kindnesses. He maintained the truth and the Gospel in the spirit of the Gospel. His death leaves a great void, in the West especially."

REV. HORACE WALLER.

This clergyman, so well known for his efforts to raise and emancipate the millions of Africa from the curse of slavery, died on February 22, at East Liss, Hants, at the age of sixty-two. In his early days Mr. Waller was an engineer, and in 1861 went to the Dark Continent in connection with the Universities Mission, devoting his attention to regions which had just been opened up by Dr. Livingstone and Sir John Kirk. Afterwards, as a clergyman, he used voice and pen to oppose the slave trade. In 1867 he attended the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society's Conference at Paris, and in 1870 he became a member of the committee of the Anti-Slavery Society. When Mr. H. M. Stanley succeeded in discovering Livingstone, the latter's voluminous journals were intrusted to Mr. Waller for publication, and were given to the public in two large volumes. The intimacy between Mr. Waller and the late General Gordon was of a very close and confidential kind. Mr. Waller was rector of Twywell (Northamptonshire) from 1874 till last year, when he resigned his living, and removed to the more temperate climate of South Hants.

REV. BRYAN ROE, LAGOS.

A telegram was received last week, announcing the death of this devoted Wesleyan missionary, after eleven years' mission service. Converted at the age of thirteen, he became an active Christian worker in Sunday-school and mission bands. Entering Harley House in 1881, he spent a year and a half in the institution, and then went out as an evangelist. In 1883 he renewed his offer for the ministry, and two years later sailed for West Africa. He entered on his work with ardour, and very soon had the joy of seeing scores of heathen turning from idols unto God. His ministry throughout has been very fruitful in soul-winning. Both in England and in Africa his services have been followed by many inquirers after salvation. While staying at Little Popo in 1888 he was attacked by a malignant type of African fever, and for a month his life hung on the slenderest thread. Rev. T. F. J. Halligey, his colleague, nursed him day and night. One morning a homeward-bound steamer called to inquire for cargo, and remained just long enough for the invalid to be dressed and conveyed on board and laid unconscious on the deck. In two or three days he began to recover, and in a few months went back to his post of duty. At the end of 1894, after a furlough in England, he returned to his field of service. In one of the last missionary addresses delivered in this country, he concluded with these words, which have a very pathetic significance at this moment: "I am going back to my beloved work. I know the climate is against us, but the labour must proceed. I am going to live and work for God; but if you hear that I am gone you will know that I died as a soldier should."

DR. JOHN STEWART.

This devoted medical missionary, who went out in 1885 to China in connection with the C.I.M., and, after ten years' remarkably valuable work in North China, came home for a rest, and to perfect his knowledge of dentistry, has passed away at Glasgow after an operation—for while a healing helper of others he was himself a frequent sufferer. Mr. Archibald Ewing writes: "He came home only last summer, and but lately was talking of soon going back, and full of plans for opening up a new district in North China. He was essentially a pioneer, and rough work was very congenial to him. He loved to have crowds of Chinese round about him, and his home would be always well filled with men seeking his aid, either to break off their opium habit, or for other medical help. 'In labours abundant,' 'in deaths oft,' would form a true summary of his short life of thirty-six years. For I know of no one in China who met with more serious illnesses, accidents, and dangers of various kinds, mostly encountered in serving others. But this never slackened his zeal to do all for them that he could, and thus by kindness and love win them to his Master. His work was more eloquent than his words; and his place will be difficult to fill."

Evangelistic Notes.

Tipton, Staffs.—Mr. James Eyres has concluded a ten days' mission here, meetings for men only, women only, also for young people, forming a feature. Much blessing was experienced by all who attended, as testified at the farewell meeting.

Thrupp, Woodstock.—On Thursday evening last a Gospel mission was concluded here. It lasted nine days, and the Baptist chapel was filled night after night. The mission was conducted by the pastor, Rev. C. Duxbury, assisted by various friends. Much good has evidently been accomplished.

Cox Green, near Bolton.—The fifteen days' mission conducted by Mr. Henry Collins, of the Evangelisation Society, at Messrs. J. and T. Garrett's mill, was brought to a close on Sunday evening last. Many have declared themselves on the Lord's side, and many have been strengthened in their convictions.

Rockferry, Birkenhead.—Mr. John Greenwood, of the Evangelisation Society, completed on Sunday, 1st inst., a fifteen days' mission at St. Paul's-road Mission House. The interest increased up to the very last, and all were sorry at his departure. Many found their way to the inquiry room, and God's people were much stirred up.

Ireland.—Successful Gospel meetings have been held in Fivemiletown Methodist Church by Rev. Hugh Moore; in Springfield Methodist Church by Rev. James Elliott and others; at Wesley Chapel, Cork, by Rev. James Robertson; at Drumkeerin Methodist Church by Mrs. Brown Anderson; and at Drogheda Methodist Church by Miss Wakefield.

Marden Room, near Hereford.—Mr. Douglas Perry has been preaching during the past fortnight in this room to large congregations. Night after night the Word has been with power. At the after-meetings, anxious souls have been enabled to accept Christ, as their Saviour. It has been a great joy to see many rise at these meetings, saying: "I will accept Christ." Believers have been quickened, backsliders restored, and many sinners converted.

J. ECKLEY.

Brynmaur.—A month's united services have come to a close. The old Town Hall was secured for the Sundays, while the week-night meetings were held in the Assembly Room, the permanent place of meeting for this branch of the Gospel Tent Mission. The effort has been graciously owned of God, both in the quickening into fuller life the Christians, and in sinners brought to Christ. Mr. Gerald Coultas conducted special gatherings on the 24th. The new hall at Barry Dock will be opened (p.v.) March 25.

G. R. C.

Little Waltham.—A successful Gospel mission has been held in the Congregational Chapel during the past eight days by Miss Emily A. Backway. During the week preceding the mission special seasons of prayer were held, seeking the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and during the services many were the evidences of God's gracious presence. As the meetings proceeded the interest and congregations increased until the closing service on Lord's Day evening, when the building was filled to overflowing, some having to go away because there was no room.

Loughborough.—A very successful five days' mission has been conducted, under the auspices of the Loughborough and District Sunday School

Union, by Mr. Newton Jones. Both the children's and adults' gatherings, held in the Town Hall, were largely attended, an increasing interest being manifested throughout. The closing service was most impressive, and the mission has resulted in a large number of the senior scholars and young friends in connection with the schools avowing themselves on the Lord's side. The afternoon Bible-readings and evening services have also been most helpful and inspiring to all Christian workers.

Kilburn.—With reference to the recent visit of the Weaver Brothers, whose three weeks' mission in the Primitive Methodist Chapel we mentioned last week, Rev. G. Shapcott writes: "The mission has exceeded our best hopes. Mr. Frank Weaver (although a good speaker) bears the relation to his brother in the mission that Mr. Sankey does to Mr. Moody. He has a well-trained voice, and his solos were admirably rendered. The discourses of Mr. Bewley Fry Weaver have a rugged eloquence, yet at times are full of the tenderest pathos. We are glad to say that, under God, the mission has been a great blessing, not only to our church, but to many others in the neighbourhood."

Atlanta, Ga., U.S.A.—We are in the midst of a gracious revival in Atlanta. Since I came, nearly one hundred have been converted, men, women, and young people, and some of the most influential coloured people of this city are among the number. It was a joy to see a father, mother, and little daughter all rejoicing together in Christ. The father had been the subject of many prayers. We have had good consecration meetings, when, amongst others, fashionable ladies took their stand to be henceforth whole-hearted Christians, promising to give up every doubtful and questionable thing for Christ. At Lincoln Academy, King's Mountain, N.C., we had thirty-three of the students converted. I go next to the Atlanta University to hold a series of meetings among the students.

JAMES WHARTON.

Personalia.

Mr. and Mrs. Osborn-Howe (says The South African Pioneer) have, with deep regret, felt obliged to relinquish their connection with the South African General Mission. Various circumstances have led them to take this step, one of the chief causes being Mrs. Osborn-Howe's present condition of health.

Mr. Ballington Booth (says the Daily Chronicle) has been unable to resist the appeals of his society auxiliaries, and has addressed a circular to his admirers announcing his intention to head a new and thoroughly American Salvationist movement. Henceforth, he says, his life will be devoted to redeeming Americans exclusively.

Commissioner and Marechale Booth-Clibborn, in a letter to the officers and soldiers of the Salvation Army in France and Switzerland, intimate that, in common with other leaders, they have received orders to change their sphere of labour. They add: "We have given to France and Switzerland the fifteen best years of our lives. It would have been to us an unspeakable joy if Providence had permitted the realisation of the hope of our hearts, that we might have been able to consecrate our entire lives to the salvation of souls in France and Switzerland, and to die at our post; but we know that God does all things well, and our joy will be to do his will whatever it may be."

Christian Cabdrivers.

THE South London Cabdrivers' Gospel Mission arose from a band of Christian drivers working together in seeking the conversion of their comrades. A Christian Cabdrivers' Association has been formed, with branches in the north, south, east, and west of London. The southern branch has met with much success, and has steadily grown into a large association. The members have held no less than 108 successful Gospel meetings in the past year, in various parts of South London, with very cheering results. For a long time they have prayed that God in his love would give them a hall of their own so that they might be able to invite their fellow drivers to the meetings, and provide a spiritual home for those who have decided for Christ. In answer to prayer, a place has now been offered with immediate possession, on very advantageous terms. It is a fine commodious hall in the main thoroughfare, in the centre of the South London cab trade, and in every way suited for the work. On taking possession, a premium must be paid for fittings, musical instruments, etc., which, together with slight alterations, will amount to about £80. The rent, gas, etc., will cost about £90 per annum. Part of this money has been secured, and there will be contributions from members, but the larger portion must be raised from friends. The hon. sec. is Mr. W. Pearson, 72, Camberwell-road, S.E.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE cry for opening museums, etc., on Sundays is once again to the fore, some influential names being among the supporters of the movement. Apart from the question of the sanctity of the Lord's Day, these points are worthy of notice. First, in answer to the specious pretext of "keeping the people out of the public-house," note that the latter is closed between 3 and 6 p.m. when the museums are open, and that most of these institutions close about the very hour the public-houses open!

Second, the classes from which most of the patronage comes are not those that cannot visit such places during the week. Third, in nearly all the provincial towns where the experiment has been tried it has failed for lack of support. The "weary worker," on whose behalf the movement is ostensibly promoted, is not sufficiently interested to give it adequate encouragement.

Mr. B. Moore has been giving his views of the "Local Preacher in Lancashire"—what sort of hearers he has to preach to, and how he ought to preach to them. He thinks that one of the striking features of Lancashire life to-day is the commercialised mind. The same thing seems to us to be true of many other parts of the country, certainly of London. To meet this characteristic, he advises preachers not to talk as if business men could cut off their work as you can turn off the gas in your dining-room. Business men should be encouraged to cultivate the unworldly spirit, for it is not so much the amount of work that men do as the spirit in which they do it that determines whether they are Christian or not. Yet Mr. Moore is not in favour of commercial sermons being preached; he advocates directing the mind from the material things of the week to the higher things of the spirit. Is not the philosophy of the remedy in the words of the Scripture, "Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh"?

It has often seemed to us, as we have gone about the villages of certain quiet districts of England, and compared them with more flourishing places where congregations are larger and money more abundant, that, after all, the quiet places had a purer religious life. There was less excitement and noise about their religious work, but more sweetness and beauty in it. Less money was contributed, but a higher scale of duty had been reached: the proportion of their means consecrated to God was more. A minister who has recently changed his district of work said to a friend that his new congregation earned more money than his old one, but did not give so freely. They spend it upon themselves, and largely in the way of holidays, three holidays, even for wage-earners, being required in a year. This testimony agrees with the testimony of another observer concerning the same district, that higher wages result in every kind of provision for well and ill regulated entertainment. This shows that in the quiet place we may be nourishing the more Christ-like life.

Is it always remembered by the friends of missionary work that the growth, which is a sign of life, must inevitably increase the size and cost and burden of the work? When a mission is founded amid much enthusiasm and with high hope, and God puts honour upon it by making it a converting power, it is obvious that new requirements will spring up. Books, schools, churches, dispensaries, hospitals, native evangelists and pastors have to be provided and maintained. An absence of growth would keep the demands at the original point, but life calls upon us to keep up with it in our own faith, and effort, and gifts, and sacrifices. The origin of a mission indicates a quickened condition in the church, but the development of the mission ought to be attended with a corresponding growth in the church—they should mutually foster each other; but if the parent neglects her ever-increasing family she will be sure to suffer for it. No more certain pledge of the triumph of the Gospel at home could be given than for all the churches to accept to the full the responsibilities which their own labours have been the means of creating. There is no finality to our giving and doing.

The disaster to the Italian arms in Abyssinia has once more disturbed Europe, and may have far-reaching consequences. The eyes of the civilised world are turned in astonishment on the country which has so suddenly proved its ability to cope with the resources of a fully equipped European army on equal terms. As long ago as last January King Menelik offered to submit the points in dispute between Italy and himself to the King of the Belgians, since, as sovereign of the Congo State, the latter is familiar with African questions. Menelik explained that he made these overtures not from fear or of necessity, but

To ensure peace to my people, to avoid longer and criminal effusion of Christian blood, I will make all sacrifices compatible with the dignity of my Empire. Do not neglect any means of making known to our friends in Europe that I am not an ambitious aggressor or greedy of the property of others. If I have taken up arms it is after having exhausted all means of conciliation. I convoked all my people to the war to protect the independence of our country, the keeping of which God had intrusted to my illustrious ancestors, and has delegated to me as a sacred trust. As to us, we remain here firm and confident in the justice of our cause and in the goodness of our Redeemer.

King Menelik has, it seems, for some years had two European advisers, both of whom have formed a very high estimate of his genius and character, and who have given him much help, both in the education of his people and the shaping of his policy. According to one of these advisers, the king, who is described as a devout Christian, combines in his remarkable personality all the qualities of "a national hero, a skilful general, and a pious believer."

A few months ago there were some startling revelations of the spread of Agnosticism among the undergraduates of Oxford. We now hear that gambling is rapidly gaining ground among them. This, we are told, is true not only of the "fast set," which is always found in our fashionable centres of education, but among the rank-and-file of the students. Certain tradesmen, it is said, make by far the largest portion of their profits by bookmaking with the University men. The proctors are accused of being too inactive in the matter. Young men who have disgraced themselves, and got hopelessly into debt, are "sent down" month by month, and these examples are made with a view of having a wholesome influence on the others. But so long as the sources of temptation are ignored the evil is not likely to stop.

This matter is of vital importance. So long as our centres of learning are centres of temptation to the impressionable youths who go there to be prepared for the battle and duties of life, the fountain of well-being in educated society will be fouled, and disastrous consequences must follow. The career of a man is largely determined by the habits he forms at college, and the thoughts among which he lives. Even if he survives the sudden ruin in which the career of so many freshmen ends, the habit of gambling enervates and debauches his whole nature, and makes him unfit to meet the demands of any high career. When we contemplate the higher question of spiritual consequences, it is unspeakably sad to think of the numbers of young souls who are ruined in this way. It is time the evil were faced resolutely and finally by the authorities at our universities. Judicial ignorance of such a state of things is little better than a crime.

The moral of the Armenian question was pointed out with scathing plainness by Lord Rosebery last week. The incapacity of Europe in directing the affairs of the Ottoman Empire and her abdication of the function of defending the oppressed is a terrible commentary on the present state of international morals.

This is what we have come to, after nearly nineteen centuries of Christianity, with a Europe which counts her armies on a footing of war not by thousands, nor by hundreds of thousands, but by millions and by millions, in face of a population not reckoned at above twenty-eight millions. So that, in all probability, it is not too much to say that Europe, every part of which worships the same Christ, and believes in the doctrines of the same New Testament through one way or another, is prepared, on the verge of the twentieth century, to relinquish its suffering fellow-Christians to the cruel mercies of barbarous Kurds, directed or connived at by a still more barbarous Government.

These are solemn words, and put the case only too accurately.

Meanwhile, the meeting at the Queen's Hall in promotion of the principle of arbitration between England and America was a marked success, though the number of people who attended was not so great as might be desired. The feature of the gathering was the splendid and representative letters from distinguished personages in various professions. Philosophers like Herbert Spencer, popular novelists like George Meredith and Hall Caine, poets like William Watson, politicians like Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Balfour, Mr. Bryce, Mr. Asquith, artists like Sir John Millais, and numerous leaders in the Episcopal and other churches, joined with one accord in giving the weight of their influence to the movement. It is a significant fact that the one question of all others which has brought forth this striking unanimity among men, in many other directions so antagonistic, is the burden of the angels' song over the fields of Bethlehem, "Peace on earth, among men of goodwill." Seldom have so many discordant voices joined in such a harmonious and heartfelt echo to that celestial music.

The Herald of Peace calls attention to the bellicose utterances of several of the bishops and archbishops of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States during the time of the excitement caused by President Cleveland's message. One of them said that he was emphatically in favour of the enforcement of the Monroe doctrine at any cost, "even to the extent of going to war with England." It is to be feared that they spoke rather the old feeling of hatred of Protestantism than love for America, and their language affords another powerful reason for establishing as soon as possible a permanent court of arbitration for the settlement of disputes between this country and the United States.

The morals of factory girls, as depicted in one of our monthlies by one of them, are not worse on the average than those of other classes of workers. The factories in the centres of large towns are mostly worked by the more ignorant class of girls; while those on the outskirts of such towns employ girls of a higher type. Early marriages, it is stated, are not so frequent as formerly, and when they do take place the wives generally face the hardships of their lot with patience and endurance. The writer, who has been fifteen years in a factory, speaks strongly of the moral dangers to girls from unworthy overseers, and wonders that ladies who are interested in the girls so seldom warn them of the perils to which they are exposed. She stoutly maintains that she would rather go to the factory than into domestic service, and that it does not unfit a girl for becoming a good wife and managing a house.

The exposure of the World's Marriage Association that resulted last week in the conviction and exemplary punishment of the chief agents, is full of sad reflections. There must be a very large number of people who are morbidly anxious to "better" their condition by means of the marriage tie, and who are willing to enter it rashly and blindly if only this prospect is opened out to them. There is no subject on which young men and women need education more than on this, which lies so close to their whole future welfare. Foolish marriages mean ruined lives, for it is a tie that can only be ended through death or sin. Is there enough being done to warn, and advise, and direct our young people in the responsibilities of this all-important choice? The delicacy of the matter, and the natural sentiment that surrounds it, should not debar preachers, and especially parents, from doing their duty.

The true Marriage Association would be one in which those who desire to enter that state are guided into a wise, earnest, and suitable selection of partners, with the fear of the Lord before their eyes. "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers" is a too often forgotten command.

Merely to state the number of insane persons in England and Wales in 1893 and 1894 is enough to excite a feeling of alarm. They were respectively 89,822 and 92,067, an increase of 2,245 in a year. Of that number London supplied 800, or double what it ought to do in proportion to its population. Our asylums, which have increased from 41 in 1859 to 67 in 1894, are still being added to. Enormous sums of money are spent upon them, and the best that human skill and experience can do for the patients is done; yet insanity spreads wider and faster. What is the cause of it? There seems little reason to doubt that it is alcoholic brain poisoning for one thing and vice for another. Heredity, tainted with these deadly influences, also accounts for a good deal; but the root of this threatening plague is the open sins of our people. Our national supineness in the matter of the drink traffic, which has already done us so much injury, will do us manifold more in the future, unless we mend our ways.

The proceedings of the American National Purity Congress, held at Baltimore, have been published in a noble volume. All the contents, with one exception, have an intensely religious tone, and display that spirit of dependence on God in which this work was born in England, and has been carried on in every land. The subject has been treated from the medical, from the moral, from the educational, from the social, from the spiritual, from the personal, from the national and international point of view.

No one can understand the great colour question in the United States until he takes into account the terrible facts which are laid bare in Martha Schofield Aitken's paper on "Slavery's Legacy of Impurity." They are a solemn warning against national sins. America hugged slavery for generations, and involved herself in moral guilt which even a fierce war has not wiped out. "Thirty years of missionary work in the South," says Mrs. Aitken, "forces the conviction that the blackest shadow lies on the white race." The sad thing is that just as in slave days no minister could preach on slavery and remain in the South, so now "free speech of the truth of impurity is barred and bolted by custom and inheritance, while the messages of the Lord wait for utterance." Rays of light are coming in here and there through the labours of Christian women; but the general apathy, ignorance, and impenitence prevent an onward movement.

Motives in Prayer.

If we have prayed for a long time for something, and our prayer has not been answered, it is often a wise and profitable thing to ask ourselves, "If I had this for which I have prayed would it be for the glory of God? Would it tend to my spiritual help and profit?" And peradventure we might often have to admit that it would not be so, that if we had our desire it might do us harm, it might puff us up, it might not draw us nearer to God, but might lead us further away from Him.

It is, therefore, of the utmost importance that we should bring our prayers to this test, "Do I desire before all things and above all things the glory of God, and my growth in grace in the things for which I pray?"

Nothing that would really be good for them will He withhold from them that fear the Lord and walk uprightly (Ps. xxxiv. 10; lxxiv. 11).

GEORGE MÜLLER.

Free Church Congress.

THIS young but vigorous federation of non-conformist churches is in session this week at Nottingham, and is being largely attended. An opening conversation was held at the Castle Museum, by invitation of the Mayor, on Monday evening.

The Congress proper began with a sermon on Tuesday morning, by Rev. J. H. JOWETT, of Birmingham. Thereafter was delivered the presidential address by Rev. H. PRICE HUGHES. It was a weighty utterance, and one worthy of the inspiring occasion. After referring to the rapid growth of the organisation, and the large support it is receiving, Mr. Hughes said that such a combined movement has been made possible by the fundamental theological agreement now existing between the associated free churches; it is demanded by that "portentous revival in our midst of extreme mediæval clericalism, which our fathers believed had disappeared for ever from England." "Our unanimous determination is, God helping us, that England, the land of civil and religious freedom, the land of gospel light, shall never sink to the degraded level of Spain."

The president went on to say that the Congress is wholly non-political, in any narrow or party sense, and is intended to cope with great national and social questions, such as the temperance, purity, anti-gambling, and peace movements. It is distinctly Christian, and also ecclesiastical in the sense that it is a federation of churches, and not merely of individuals. It will promote fraternal intercourse and mutual charity; it will foster a deeper spiritual life; it will strengthen all aggressive efforts to reach the unevangelised masses. The doctrine of true Scriptural and catholic church unity was ably formulated by the speaker as opposed to that which finds its centre in obedience to a Pope, or in State control. "Oneness in Christ," as the great and only Head, is its watchword.

Near the close of his comprehensive address, Mr. Hughes said:—

In this country there are to-day three gigantic and wide-spread trades in vice. There is an immense trade in drunkenness, an immense trade in gambling, and an immense trade in impurity. And the Nonconformist conscience, without indulging in any inquisitorial practices, without creating hypocrites by coercing men into a profession of virtue they do not possess, will never rest until, by the power of God and in the name of Christ, it has struck down these inhuman trades, and has snatched the resources of civilisation out of hands that seek pecuniary gain in the ruin and misery of mankind. There is one other colossal public evil, a two-sided public evil, which we must attack with all the forces at our command. As the representatives of the Prince of Peace, it is our urgent duty to promote the substitution of arbitration for war, in the settlement both of international disputes and of those industrial wars which are the supreme curse alike of labour and of capital.

The year's report submitted on Wednesday by Rev. Thomas Law, organising secretary, showed a wide and rapid extension of the federation. As one outcome of it, in the direction of purely religious effort, the recent united Gospel Mission in Birmingham was referred to. Social service and civic work had also been entered on, and the interests of the Nonconformist churches had been advanced. A great campaign of district councils is being planned for next autumn and winter.

Southsea Mission.—A correspondent states that this mission, under the care of Mr. John Denning, is in a vigorous and flourishing condition. Open-air and other Gospel meetings are held, and house-to-house visitation carried on with the circulation of Christian literature. There is an interesting and well-attended Sunday-school which is a channel of blessing to many children. New classrooms are needed.

Army and Navy Mission Union.—The fourth annual meeting of this Union was held in the Soldiers' Home, James-street, W., General Hutchinson presiding. The report announced a great advance in the year 1895 in the number of members, and gave a long account of the work in the foreign field as recorded in the reports from the missionaries. The chairman dwelt on the importance of sending out missionaries to the heathen. Rev. Barnes Lawrence, speaking on Abraham's obedience in offering up Isaac at the bidding of God, said there was a threefold gain—God gained a friend, Abraham gained by being one of the first witnesses for God and seeing the day of Jesus Christ, and then the world gained a lesson of self-sacrifice. Colonel Robinson took for his subject the account given of the Apostles waiting for the promise of the endowment with the power of the Holy Ghost.

The Lesson of Suffering.

A MESSAGE FROM A SICK BED.

FROM the midst of active work I have been laid aside with acute suffering. I returned home from visiting the poor folk in a neighbouring village, to go to bed with fast approaching pains that have racked my body, more or less, ever since. So I am writing to my fellow-sufferers in pain of body as one who knows. I have had time to think, and these have been my thoughts.

What is the meaning of all this pain and suffering — of this enforced dropping of legitimate, honest, and much needed work? Then I have pushed the question another stage further back. What is the meaning of life altogether? For what purpose are we placed in the world at all? Is it to get on in life, according to the usual acceptance of that word, "to build ourselves more splendid habitations, and to fill our houses with paintings and with sculptures," and to environ ourselves with all that makes life pleasant and agreeable?

Without presuming to answer this question fully here on my sick bed, this much I do say, that to a man with anguish of neuralgia torturing his body, or with the crushing gnawing pain of rheumatism rendering life a burden, the most beautiful works of art, or the most lovely views from his windows forming the most delightful environment, will not be appreciated so much as one brief hour of quiet restful sleep. But, thank God, we have in the Gospel the unfolding of a purpose for man that meets us on the bed of pain as effectually as in the exchange of the City, or in the field at play.

It is from my bed of anguish that I would direct my fellow-sufferers to this Divine purpose for us all here and now. Is it not this: Life is given us for a time of testing and discipline, whether we are conscious of it or not; whether we are anxiously meditating upon it or otherwise, each one of us is passing through the crucible of inexorable circumstance, with the very best to which we may attain somewhere before us, though removed from our mortal sight, and the very Best ever near to help, invigorate, and inspire us, for the attainment of this high purpose. God, our Father, wishes to make the best He can of us, and his purpose is ever aimed at the enduring character of his children, and not at the passing possessions of a vanishing and fleeting life.

How, then, is character formed? The history of mankind has a very definite answer. By money-getting, by pleasure-seeking, by the continual thought of self? No! But by patient submission to God's appointments to us in the daily providences of life. To bear pain patiently; to meet disappointment and evil fortune with cheerful submission; to sing in the storm, and to quell the murmur of rebellion with a song of trustful obedience; to us who are in the fire just now, this high privilege comes.

Brethren in distress, comrades in pain and imprisonment, let us glorify God in the fire. One like unto the Son of Man is with us in the furnace, and the whole drift of the Scripture teaches us, that if we so engrave our character on our life, here and now, that character is the only thing that will endure the fires of earth, and be found an eternal, a real, and an abiding thing for us when we are removed from the scene upon which we now live out our brief and chequered lives. The first and the last thing for us to remember, while in the anguish of this mortal endurance or conflict, is that God is for us, that Christ is in us, and the Holy Spirit is ever present to sustain, to comfort, and to bless. Let us, each hour of the day and night, summon to our aid, faith, courage, patience and joy. So I send my message from this my bed of pain and disappointment.

"A Holy Thing Unto the Lord."

Lev. xxvii. 23.

THIS is a somewhat remarkable chapter; it comes up rather abruptly, and at first sight appears rather uninteresting. But sometimes gold is found where least expected, and it is so here. Herein lie principles and truths of practical importance. The special form has passed away, but the principle remains.

The chapter relates to extraordinary vows; to things not exactly obligatory, but nevertheless encouraged and provided for, viz., the dedication of persons and property to the Lord. Notice:

1. The thing contemplated or suggested.—It is anticipated that Israelites will at various times, as an expression of gratitude for mercies and special providences, make such vows as those indicated. Observe, it is not prescribed that they shall do it, but it is clearly indicated that such acts will be acceptable. The laws really contain suggestions. Room is left for something over and above prescribed duty; a spirit of devotion is expected and encouraged. And so it is now. There are, indeed, prescribed duties which are of the very essence of Christianity, but they do not cover everything. There is room for Christian affection to work and expand in acts of voluntary service. Love asks, not, What must I do? but, What may I do? Christ does not order the alabaster boxes to be lavished on Him, but if love brings them He will gratefully accept them. Observe:

2. The conditions of acceptance.—In all these Acts an Israelite had to remember that he was dealing with a holy God. He could not do exactly as he liked. There was room for freewill but not for selfwill. If, for instance, someone now wished to make a present to the Queen, he could not act as he would in the case of an ordinary or private friend. He would, in making his presentation, have to conform to certain rules of court etiquette. We need not wonder, therefore, that the King of kings lays down certain conditions to be observed in the making of these special vows. So we find rules as to the estimation of value, the specification of things which might or might not be dedicated, and one express rule forbidding exchanges. There must be no unholy freedom, but the greatest reverence in approaching God with such offerings. They were not to imagine that God was laid under any obligation by their vows: the truth was rather the other way, they were laid under obligation by his acceptance. But the next point is one of much importance, viz.:

3. The seriousness with which God regarded the whole matter.—All the conditions laid down show this, but especially the one forbidding any exchange. Here is a principle touching voluntary service now, and it is one often forgotten. They were free to vow or not to vow, but once they had vowed they were to abide by it. God would have no trifling or mockery; everything must be sober, serious, earnest. Better that they should not vow than vow and not pay. Ananias and Sapphira were free to give or not give their property, but God abhorred their dissimulation in offering as they did. Now how does this touch Christian service at the present time? In this way. You resolve to devote a portion of your time to the service of God as preacher, Sunday-school teacher, tract distributor, district visitor, singer in the choir, or in one of the many forms of voluntary Christian work. How do you regard this purpose? Do you look upon it as "a holy thing unto the Lord?" It is to be feared that very many who take such work upon themselves do so with the idea that, being a perfectly voluntary thing, they can take it up or lay it down at pleasure; they can be present or absent as suits them best; in fact, that they can study their own convenience, and can lay down the work either when they become disinclined for it, or when they take offence at something done by a fellow-worker. Does not this explain many an irregular attendance on the part of Christian workers? Is not the work too often taken up in a dilettante spirit, instead of being done seriously as unto God? Surely all Christian workers should endeavour to write upon all their undertakings, "a holy thing unto the Lord." Then with punctuality, fidelity, and regularity would all the work be done. We like God to keep his word with us; let us then keep our word with Him. Finally, consider:

4. The importance of the Divine estimation.—Note how often this phrase "thy estimation" occurs throughout the chapter. The priest was the representative of God, and his valuation (not the offerer's) settled every thing.

How significant! We are not competent for the estimation; we are not sufficiently disinterested. It would be well for us to remember this in regard to "sinless perfection." It is God's business to estimate, not ours. The divine and the human estimate are often at variance—"that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God." But at the same time, remember, God often puts a high value on that which the offerer esteems but lightly. So Christ put a high estimation on the widow's mite cast into the treasury; and bestowed high praise on Mary, who anointed Him with the spikenard. She, in the love of her heart, anointed Him as a guest. He, in the love of his heart, accepted it as an anointing for his burial. Let us follow her example and copy her spirit.

A Door of Hope.

NEVER poet's sweetest song,
Never minstrel's saddest strain,
Sounded in the listening ear,
All of human joy or pain.

In the deep sea of the soul
Mighty undercurrents flow,
Hidden mysteries of life,
Depths that only God can know—
Wounds that none on earth can heal,
Tenderest chords for ever riven!
Speechless groanings of the night,
Misery's blind appeals to heaven.

From the maddening cares of time,
From the death beyond the grave,
From our sin—the source of woe—
Christ, and Christ alone, can save.

He whose feet have touched the rock
Underneath the deepest sea,
Uttering there earth's bitterest cry—
"Why hast Thou forsaken Me?"

Christ, who heals the broken heart,
Who for us could weep and bleed,
Lord of heaven and Lord of earth,
Let us trust Him in our need!

Letters from South Africa—8.

THERE is a strong feeling among our countrymen in the Colony, in which, so far as I am able to judge, I concur, that the English press, in many instances, has acted prematurely in pronouncing upon the merits or demerits of the recent disturbances, and that the situation may be complicated, and race animosities be aggravated, by judgments expressed upon insufficient data.

The matter is now sub judice, but it may be that if the inquiry be exhaustive, judgments will have to be modified on both sides. As Burns says:—

What's done we partly may compute;
We know not what's resisted.

So we may say as to the present case, what has been done is evident, but what led to it has yet to be made manifest. In the critical state of affairs, here and in Europe, speech may be silver, but silence is golden, while the facts are being sifted.

CAPETOWN TO DURBAN.

On Jan. 24 we left Capetown by the Mexican for Durban, where we arrived on the 31st, after stopping four days at Port Elizabeth, and one day at East London, to put out and take in merchandise. I am staying here with my friends Mr. and Mrs. W. Spencer Walton, of the South Africa General Mission. This is the eastern branch of the Mission, which is superintended in Capetown and Johannesburg by Mr. Frank Huskisson and Mr. Dudley Kidd. They have a good bookstore in Longmarket-street, where they have built premises, including a handsome hall, which has considerably improved the value of adjacent property. They had during January mass meetings on Sunday evenings in a circus holding about 2000 people. Here I met a Mr. Ayres, formerly of Colchester, who said he knew my partner better than me; he had often preached in Mr. Scott's barn at Birchwood, Dedham, Essex. Again and again I have been accosted by friends whom I had no expectation of meeting here. "The world is very small," as a fellow-passenger observed, and we are continually falling in with people we have known at home. A few days ago we were invited to by Rev. Mr. Copeland, a young Evangelical clergyman in the Berea, a part of Durban where the well-to-do people have made their abode. St. Thomas's Church, which adjoins the vicarage, is on the site of the first Zulu Mission, established by that faithful man, Captain Allen Gardiner, whose young daughter lies in the graveyard adjoining. Mr. Spencer Walton and myself had a valuable opportunity of setting forth the Gospel of God to an influential congregation.

On the previous Sunday evening I had heard an English sermon in the morning, and a sermon to Zulus in the afternoon, and I spoke in the evening by interpretation to the same Zulu congregation, in the little Zulu church on the grounds of the S.A.G.M. The subject on each occasion was the locust, which has been and is working ruinous havoc in the fields and gardens. No one can help seeing that, as the locusts devastate the earth, so do the fleshly lusts devastate the soul. In each case it is as the Garden of Eden before them, behind them a desolate wilderness. The more the locust is studied the more abundant and obvious will the parallel be found.

One day, in company with Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Walton, we visited Marianhill, some twenty miles from Durban. The train to Pinetown passes through a most lovely and fruitful country. The colony of Natal is the garden of South Africa, and reminds one of home more than anything else I have seen. In addition to the native races, the Kaffirs, Zulus, Swazies, &c., there is in Natal a large and increasing population of 46,000 coolies from India, who are as slight and nimble as the Zulus are athletic and strong. These latter do the more laborious work, while the Indians are employed on sugar estates, farms, in railway work, in hotels and private houses as waiters, &c. The aim of many is to get a plot of land where they can cultivate fruits and vegetables, with which to supply the markets. Through miles of their gardens we passed yesterday, where pineapples, bananas, oranges, and mangoes were growing luxuriantly, while the wooded and grass-lands were like the park-lands of England. No effort seems as yet to have been made to reach these coolies with the Gospel of Christ.

A TRAPPIST SETTLEMENT,

We were met at the station by a wagonette-and-pair, driven by a Trappist who had been a military officer, but looked very unlike a soldier now. He is a man of culture, and edits the periodical of the community. The Trappists' vow of silence was religiously kept on our journey, and no communication was made to us beyond a movement of hand or head, during our four-mile drive.

There are in the community about 200 brothers and sisters, almost exclusively Germans. The buildings for the latter are about a quarter of a mile from those of the brothers. Before entering the sisters' gate we came to the cemetery in which the dead are buried, in their clothes, without coffins. There had been an epidemic in January of last year, which had cut off eight of the brothers. All the graves were carefully tended, and although their vows prevent the members ever leaving the place, or seeing their relatives any more, there was an evident affection for those whom "Father Sturmius," our guide, spoke of as having been "laid to rest."

The sisters have two great advantages (or disadvantages) over the brothers; for while the latter are strict vegetarians, the weaker vessels are allowed to eat meat; and while the brothers are always silent, the sisters are allowed to converse for fifteen minutes after dinner and after supper. The lady abbess described this as a very lively quarter of an hour. The only persons excepted from the rule (which Father Sturmius described as a very good one) are the abbot and abbess, and the fathers, who may be spoken to about religious matters, and the four stewards who have to do with secularities. When we consider the mischief wrought by the unruly and untameable member, perhaps the unnaturalness of the rule of silence is not altogether without compensation. I must admit, however, that the pleased and cheerful faces we observed belonged to those who were less fettered by the silent rule. Talking on their fingers is not prohibited, and, of course, the teachers must speak to the boys and girls whom they instruct in the schools.

This Roman Catholic community of German Trappists is about twelve years old. It has 100,000 acres of land. There are twelve similar establishments in South Africa. The former Abbot of Marianhill is now at the head of a community in East Griqualand, occupying a farm of 50,000 acres. The extent and character of their influence may be gauged by the fact that around Marianhill they have 1,200 baptized Kaffir members, and 1,500 native children under their instruction. They receive the Government grant, which requires education up to the fourth standard. The girls are taught the use of the sewing-machine and other industries, and the boys learn to be blacksmiths, saddlers, printers, bookbinders, photographers, etc. We were astonished to hear that some beautifully executed frescoes inside the church were the work of Kaffir boys.

A good deal is being said about German influence. At Genadendal and here is a kind of influence which the Christians of England, that claims to be the paramount power in South Africa, would do well to take note of. Comparing the Moravian with the Trappist Settlement, our sympathies must be with the former; but they are both alike in this, that they recognise the natives and their children as fellow-creatures of God, treat them with human sympathy and kindness, and necessarily win their love and confidence.

I am told that in Johannesburg white men do not allow a Kaffir on the sidewalk with themselves, and that in the Orange Free State the Dutch will not permit them to be taught to read, but rule them with the whip, as in the old slavery days. Some One once said, "The first shall be last, and the last first." Is it possible that in the reign of righteousness, when He shall break in pieces the oppressor, Canaan, the servant of servants, may exchange places with Japhet and Shem—the last be first, and the first last?

Lost and Found.

NEARLY a year ago I happened to be staying for a few days at one of Dr. Barnardo's "Ever Open Doors," as the guest of the resident agent and his wife. Amongst the children sheltered in the home there one boy greatly interested me. His mother had that day been sentenced to a term of imprisonment for gross cruelty and neglect. It was the old story of drink and crime. The magistrates, after sentencing the mother to imprisonment, handed the boy of whom I write over to the care of Dr. Barnardo's agent, who happened to be in the court. Leave was given to the boy to see his mother before she was removed to prison, to bid her farewell, but she drove him off with oaths and curses. Poor little lad! He had a nice, quiet, honest, loveable face, and I soon became greatly interested in him. "How long has your mother been like this?" I asked. "Ever since I can remember, sir, it has been nothing but whisky, whisky, whisky." Whisky had killed his father, ruined and impoverished his mother, and left him at twelve years of age worse, far worse, than an orphaned.

In due course the boy was permanently admitted into one of Dr. Barnardo's London Homes, and so far as I was concerned was lost among the crowd of 5000 children. Some few days after, at the Aldersgate-street noon prayer-meeting, I requested prayer for the poor boy, briefly detailing the facts, and followed by asking our Father in heaven to bring the boy to Himself, and to enable him to realise that the Good Shepherd was seeking to bring him into his fold. I had hardly concluded, however, before another voice pleaded with God for the poor unhappy, drink-cursed mother, in her lonely prison cell. That prayer I shall never forget; I could not restrain my tears, and I verily felt thoroughly ashamed of myself, that in my prayer I had not even mentioned the mother, as though she were past praying for. But I thanked God for the other friend's voice, and if his eyes should haply read these lines, he will see how his prayer has been answered.

On the day the mother was liberated from prison, she was met at the prison-gates by some gentle, holy women, and induced to enter a home. In this home she has become completely changed, and is now a humble follower of the Son of God. I was present a few days ago when mother and son met for the first time since those dark sad days of a year ago. How can I describe that meeting—twelve months ago, the child repelled and driven away by his cursing mother; now, they fall on each other's necks, with the sobbed-out words, "My darling boy!" "My mother! my mother!" Surely it is the old story, "Was lost...is found!" "Was dead, and is alive again!"

The boy is very desirous of going to Canada, where some day he hopes to be able to have his mother join him (as hundreds of other young emigrants from the Homes have done in the past). May our Father in Heaven who has helped both mother and son so marvellously hitherto, help them all their journey through.

Going up to Jerusalem.

By REV. R. BALGARNIE.

WE expected to be in Jerusalem on New Year's Day, but the winds were contrary, and to land at Jaffa was impossible; in vain signals were run up for the surf boats to come off. No native craft could live in such a sea, and so within sight of this ancient place we were tossed to and fro until the dawning of the next day; but even then "the sea wrought and was tempestuous." So we had to pull up the anchor and run for shelter under the lee of Mount Carmel—about sixty miles off. Here our thoughts turned to 1 Kings xviii., and to the memorable event on that mount, when the prophets of Baal were discomfited, and all the people exclaimed, "The Lord He is the God." It was just above us there that Elijah cast himself upon the earth, and his prayer was answered by the little cloud like a man's hand, and the abundance of rain that followed.

Next day we were on our way back to Joppa; passing close to Cæsarea, we were reminded of the noble Paul who here was kept in prison two years, who was tried before Felix, Festus and Agrippa, and from which he set out on his disastrous voyage to Rome. We landed at last in Joppa, and were not long in finding out the reputed house of "Simon the tanner, whose house is by the sea-side." In front of it is a stone tank, where it is said the hides were tanned. We went up to the housetop where Peter had his remarkable vision, where he received the messengers from Cornelius, and where he crossed the line from Judaism into the liberty of the Christian faith. It was here, too, he was sent for from Lydda to restore Tabitha to life.

After this we set out for Jerusalem by the train. The neighbourhood is full of orange groves, with cactus hedges dividing them. The first station is Lydda, where Dorcas dwelt; the second is Ramleh, where Joseph of Arimathea was born. We pass through the plains of Sharon, but the roses were not in bloom. We skirted the region of the Philistines, where Samson achieved his fame. To the right is Bethel, high up on the hills, and mentioned in Solomon's Song, "My beloved is like a roe or a young hart upon the mountains of Bethel." Now we are in the hill country of Judæa; the train has a hard pull up the steep gradients. Rocks, stones, boulders are everywhere, and constitute the chief feature. One wonders where pasturage for flocks can be found, and where "the milk and honey" of former days came from. Nearer the city are vineyards among the rocks, and here and there olive trees were visible, but for the most part barrenness prevailed.

After three hours and a-half in the train the Holy City was at last reached. It is about a mile outside the walls; one expected to approach it in solemn meditation, but alas! the cabmen vied with each other which would reach the hotel first, so that the Valley of Hinnom was crossed at full gallop. It was late at night, but the moon was full, and we set out at once to the Mount of Olives. Stillness reigned in the Valley of Kedron, broken only by the barking of the homeless dogs which kennel in the caves and ruins around. We crossed the brook which Jesus often crossed, but it is without water; by Gethsemane we lingered, but it was shut. We ascended the mount which his feet often trod, up to the place where He stood, and beheld the city, and wept over it. Oh, it looked beautiful in the silver light; it stood out in grandeur like a city of marble, with its massive walls, and towers, and minarets. And this is the city more renowned than any in the world's history! The armies of the nations have often encompassed it and laid it low; yet it has risen again. And the Temple stood yonder; and the Ark of the Covenant within it. Thither the tribes went up to worship God, and the sacrifices were there offered, and the prophets taught, and the Son of Man suffered and died. It was deeply affecting to be on that mount; but when we entered the city, what a change! Its narrow streets crowded with traffickers, and camels, and donkeys, its wretched-looking people, its offensive smells, its miserable beggars, clamouring for backsheesh, its starving dogs prowling about—all this seemed to reverse the picture. Still nothing can destroy the holy memories that gather round this sacred city. Sacred because in its neighbourhood Jesus was born; at Bethany, He often sojourned; in the hall of Caiaphas He was tried; in the palace of Pilate He was condemned; and from thence, bearing his cross, He passed along the Via Dolorosa, on his way to Calvary. All these sites we visited.

Where is Calvary? For many ages tradition has associated it with the Church of the Holy Sepulchre: there is the place of scourging—where He was nailed to the cross—where the cross stood, the tomb where He was buried, the spot where the three crosses were afterwards found; here too is the tomb of Adam, and other such superstitious relics. But surely it was not here that the greatest event on earth took place, even the sacrifice of the Son of God! It is incredible. We seek the place outside the city, which during these last years has been identified by eminent authority; that place is near to Golgotha or the Skull. No one can mistake this mark, for it is engraven legibly in the rock, not by human hands, and must have been there for ages. Calvary is on a hill; it is a "green hill," as Mrs. Alexander puts it, and is now used as a Moslem burying-ground. There are three high-roads near it, so that "all passing by" could have seen "the great sight." As Jesus hung on the cross, the city, the Temple, Olivet, were in view; so we lingered there in silent awe to think of Him who had died to redeem us all, when the sun was darkened, and the rocks rent, and the dead awoke.

I thought that had my personal salvation depended on a visit to this spot, as superstition has often taught, then mine was secured indeed; but no cross is there now. No, the eye of faith turns from things seen and temporal to Him "whom having not seen we love," yet believing in Him "we rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." If this be the real Calvary the sepulchre cannot be far off, and recent excavations have uncovered it; of this Canon Tristram and others have no doubt, and they have purchased it, so that henceforth it will be intact for ever. Here there is a garden "nigh to the place;" in the garden is a sepulchre cut out of the rock; it is that of a Jew—of a rich man; in it no one had been laid, for there is but one prepared. Surely this is the actual tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, where Jesus was laid. We entered in as the disciples did. We looked down into it, with silent awe. And here He slept for three days, vanquished death, burst the gates of the tomb, left the grave-clothes, and came forth to live for evermore! The silence of the sepulchre was broken by one requesting me to offer prayer. So we all knelt down around the empty tomb. Perhaps we should have sung "The Lord is risen indeed," and rejoiced with exceeding great joy," but I could only pray in broken words, with strong crying and tears, unto Him "who died for our offences and was raised again for our justification."

We went out to Olivet again. Gethsemane was open, and we were permitted to walk round it. Some old olive trees remain, but the garden is now trimmed, and used for the cultivation of flowers, which a monk gathers for anyone wishing them. The fourteen stations of the cross are marked off along the walks, and outside the entrance the spot is pointed out where Jesus was betrayed; thence up the mount whence He went up to glory. But here, too, alas! superstition has its story. Two churches now claim to have secured the real spot, and on one of them His footprint is left! And yet, again, on Mount Moriah also Mahomet left his footprint when he went away!

"As a Little Child."—I.

[The following touching little story carries its own lesson with it. Perhaps others of our readers can record instances in which children have been the means of similar awakenings of thought in their elders. We shall be pleased to hear of such.—ED.]

"Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise."—Matt. xxi. 16.

HERE is an incident which took place during this last Christmas between two of our infant-class children:—

Bertha: "Chrissy, what should you like to have best this Christmas?"

Chrissy: "A dolly."

Bertha: "So should I. I wonder what we'd better do?"

Chrissy: "My teacher says we ought to ask Jesus for everything we want."

Bertha: "Let's go and ask Him."

Away trotted the little mites upstairs, into their bedroom, and, kneeling down together, asked Jesus to send them a dolly.

On Christmas morning the children came downstairs, full of excitement and wonder; and there, sure enough, lay two dollies. "Oh," said Bertha, "I wonder what we ought to do now?"

Again Chrissy came to the rescue. "Teacher says we ought to thank Jesus when He sends us what we want."

"Come on, then; let's go and thank Him."

And off they ran, with their treasures clasped in their arms; and, kneeling down in the very same place where they had sent up their petition, they thanked Jesus for sending them their dollies.

What a lesson for some of us older children. We may not get "everything we want," but like the ten lepers, how few of us "return" to thank Him for what we do receive.

In our young days almost the first words we were taught to say were "Thank you," and how often, in our excitement over the gifts bestowed upon us, we had to have the gentle reminder put to us, "What do you say for it?" So, too, after the many blessings we receive from our Father, might He not put the same question to us, "What do you say for it?"

If, instead of always looking at our troubles and thinking of our cares and worries, we were to watch his hand, and trace his goodness in all our lives, our mouths would be filled with praise continually.

Elisha's "young man" could see nothing before him but trouble, fear, and death, but as soon as his eyes were opened by God he discovered that the place all round about him was full of God's protecting hosts. And so with us; we only need our eyes opened and we, too, shall see that God's mercies are everywhere, that we are "compassed about with songs of deliverance."

Let us make it our special business to look out for and count up his mercies. It would be a revelation to some of us, and our lives would be full of unceasing praise.

"Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness!"

Female Orphan Home, Hampton.—The committee is anxious, in view of the close of the financial year, to make it known that £100 will meet all liabilities for this outgoing year. Though the amount is comparatively small, we feel strongly desirous that it should not fail, because it is an honourable tradition of the work that it does not incur debt. There are sixty children in the Home; will all think what this means in consolation and relief to many a widow, in addition to the direct benefit to these sixty young lives, spiritually and physically, morally and socially?

"Fortunes in a Hurry."—In the course of a Lenten sermon at St. Botolph's, Aldersgate, Rev. J. W. Horsley, preaching on "Commercial Morality," argued, last week, that the sin of covetousness was at the root of all the vices of competition which afflicted business relations. Only the day before, he said, he had seen an advertisement bearing this inscription, "Fortunes made in a hurry." He for one would be sorry for the man who made a fortune in a hurry. Fortunes were difficult enough to manage when made slowly, but when made in a hurry they were likely to act upon the maker like a hurricane. He had known men who made haste to be rich, and who had sought to make fortunes in a hurry, and he could tell the congregation where to find them. They might be found at Wormwood Scrubs and at Portland.

"I HAVE Poured OUT MY SOUL BEFORE THE LORD."—
1 Sam. i. 15.

HANNAH'S soul was full of complaint and grief, which flowed over into her face and made it sorrowful. But when she had poured her soul out before the Lord, emptying out all its bitterness, the peace of God took the place of her soul-anguish; she went her way, and did eat, and her countenance was no more sad. What a glad exchange! How great the contrast! How much the better for herself, and for her home!

Is your face darkened by the bitterness of your soul? Perhaps the enemy has been vexing you sorely; or there is an unrealized hope, an unfulfilled purpose in your life; or, perchance, the Lord seems to have forgotten you. Poor sufferers, there is nothing for it but to pour out your soul before the Lord. Empty out its contents in confession and prayer. God knows it all, yet tell Him, as if He knew nothing. "Ye people, pour out your hearts before Him. God is a refuge for us." "In everything, by prayer and supplication make your requests known unto God."

As we pour out our bitterness, God pours in his peace. Weeping goes out of one door whilst joy enters at another. We transmit the cup of tears to the Man of Sorrows, and He hands it back to us filled with the blessings of the new covenant.

"HIS MOTHER MADE HIM A LITTLE COAT."—
1 Sam. ii. 19.

What happy work it was! Those nimble fingers flew along the seams, because love inspired them. All her woman's art and wit were put into the garment, her one idea and ambition being to make something which should be not only useful, but becoming. Not mothers only, but fathers, are always making little coats for their children, which they wear long years after a material fabric would have become worn out. How many men and women are wearing to-day the coats which their parents cut out and made for them long years ago?

Habits are the vesture of the soul. The Apostle bade his converts put off the old man, and put on the new, put off anger, wrath and malice, whilst they put on mercy, humility, and meekness. What words could better establish the fact that habits are (as the name indicates) the clothing of the inner life. Where and how are habits formed? Not in the mid-passage of life, but its dawn; not in great crises, but in daily circumstances; not in life's arena, but in the home, amid the surroundings of earliest childhood.

By their behaviour to each other and to their children; by the ordering of the home-life; by their actions, more than by their words; by the way in which they speak, and spend their leisure hours, and pray, men and women are making the little coats which, for better or worse, their children wear ever after, and perhaps pass down to after generations.

"AND THE LORD CAME, AND CALLED AS AT OTHER TIMES, SAMUEL, SAMUEL!"—1 Sam. iii. 10.

See the urgency of God! Four times He came, and stood, and called. Mark how He stands at the door to knock. At first He was content to call the lad once by name, but after three unsuccessful attempts to attract him to Himself, He uttered the name twice, with strong urgency in the appeal, Samuel! Samuel! This has been called God's double knock. There are seven or eight of these double knocks in Scripture: Simon, Simon; Saul, Saul; Abraham, Abraham.

How may we be sure of a Divine call?

We may know God's call when it grows in intensity. If an impression comes into your soul, and you are not quite sure of its origin, pray over it; above all, act on it so far as possible, follow in the direction in which it leads—and as you lift up your soul before God, it will wax or wane. If it wanes at all, abandon it. If it waxes, follow it, though all hell attempt to stay you.

We may test God's call by the assistance of godly friends. The aged Samuel perceived that the Lord had called the child, and gave him good advice as to the manner in which he should respond to it. Our gifts and circumstances will also assuredly concur in one of God's calls.

We may test God's call by its effect on us. Does it lead to self-denial? Does it induce us to leave the comfortable bed and step into the cold? Does it drive us forth to minister to others? Does it make us more unselfish, loving, tender, modest, humble? Whatever is to the humbling of our pride, and the glory of God, may be truly deemed God's call.

"LET US FETCH THE ARK OF THE COVENANT OF THE LORD."—1 Sam. iv. 3.

Israel had been defeated with great loss. Their only hope of being able to hold their own against the Philistines and the people of the land was in the protection and help vouchsafed to them by God. These, however, had been forfeited by their sins. But they thought that He would still be on their side if the ark was in the field. They forgot that it was only the material symbol of a spiritual relationship, that it was useless unless that relationship was in living force, and that the bending forms of the cherubim, emblematic of the Divine protection, would not avail if their fellowship with the God of the cherubim had been ruptured by backsliding.

There is a sense in which we are always sending for the ark. The reliance on outward rites, such as Baptism and the Lord's Supper, on the part of those who are alienated from the life of God; the maintenance of the forms of prayer and Scripture-reading which no longer express the passionate love of the soul; the habit of church-going, which so many practise, not because they love God, but because they think that it will in some way secure his alliance in life's battle—all these are forms in which we still fetch the ark of the covenant, whilst our hearts are wrong with the God of the covenant.

It should never be forgotten that nothing can afford to us protection and succour but vital union with Christ. We must dwell in his secret place if we would abide under his shadow. We must dwell in the most holy place if we would be shadowed by the wings of the Shekinah.

THURSDAY, March 19.

"DAGON WAS FALLEN UPON HIS FACE TO THE EARTH BEFORE THE ARK OF THE LORD."—1 Sam. v. 3.

The idols of the heathen represent demons who are their accepted gods, just as the ark was the symbol of the presence of Jehovah. In the one case there was a material representation of the demon, but in the case of the ark there was only a throne, the Mercy Seat; but there was no form of Jehovah. When placed in the Holy of Holies, the Shekinah shone between the cherubim, the garment of the Divine Spirit who filled the apparently vacant throne. When these two symbols met, it was as though the demon spirit and the Divine Spirit came into contact, with the inevitable result that the inferiority of the one should be represented in the crash of its effigy to the ground.

What a lesson this was to the Philistines! Similar to that given Pharaoh in the plagues of Egypt, leading him to see the superior greatness of Jehovah! How great the encouragement to Israel! To know that God could defend his superiority! And how striking the outlook into the future, when all the Dagon of the world shall be broken before the symbol of Divine Power and Love.

Bring the ark of God into your life! Set it down in your heart. And forthwith the Dagon which have held sway for so long will one after another succumb. "The idols He will utterly abolish." Let Christ in—that is the one need of the soul. He will do his own work. Darkness cannot abide light, nor the defilement of the Augean stable the turning in of the water of the river.

FRIDAY, March 20.

"AND THE KINE WENT ALONG THE HIGHWAY, LOWING AS THEY WENT."—1 Sam. vi. 12.

That two milch kine which had never borne the yoke should move quietly along the high road, turning neither to the right nor to the left, and lowing after their calves, clearly indicated that they were possessed and guided by some mysterious power, which we know to have been God's. And if He was able thus to overpower the instincts of their nature, and to compel them to do his will, may we not infer that all things else, and men, however unwittingly, and against their natural instinct, are subserving the purposes of his will, and bearing on the ark? The fish yields the tribute money, the colt of the ass waits where two ways meet to bear the Redeemer, the man with the waterpot leads to the upper room, the Roman soldiers enable Paul to fulfil the mission of his life, in preaching the Gospel without hindrance in the very heart of Rome.

As we go forth into the world, let us believe that the movement of all things is towards the accomplishment of God's purpose. Herein is a fulfilment of the Psalmist's prediction about man, which can only be perfectly fulfilled in Jesus Christ, the second Adam, that all things are under his feet, all sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field. Everything serves Christ, and those who serve Christ. In a true sense all things are ours, they minister to us, even as Christ to God. Against our natural inclinations let us always regard the claims of God as paramount. Let us go His way, though our heart pines for those we leave behind.

"CEASE NOT TO CRY UNTO THE LORD OUR GOD."—
1 Sam. vii. 8.

Samuel was famous for his prayers. They are repeatedly referred to in the brief record of his life. In the Psalms he is spoken of as the one who called upon God's name. Indeed, he fought and won Israel's battles by his strong intercessions. Many of Scots said that she dreaded the prayers of John Knox more than the battalions of the king of France. The people were accustomed to think that if the prophet's hands were held out in importunate prayer, their foes must be restrained.

In the Life of Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, one who contributes a reminiscence interjects a remark which deserves to be carefully pondered:—"The great secret of the blessing which came from God to the awakening of whole districts, the quickening of Christians, and the salvation of multitudes, was prayer, continued, fervent, believing, expectant. There was never anything striking in the addresses, but through communion with the living Christ, the Word came forth with living and life-giving power. Often would the forenoon be spent in continuous prayer." This may well convict some of us of the cause of our failure. We have expected the Lord to thunder and discomfort our Philistines, and with a great deliverance, but we have ceased to cry unto the Lord. It is mentioned as a rule in the Life of W. P. Lockhart, that his private prayer for Divine help was of equal length with the address he was about to deliver.

Switzerland.—Allow me to ask the prayers of Christian friends for our country, from now till March 22, when the people are called upon to vote on the question of the State regulation of vice, and on the closing of immoral houses. We are taking all possible means to enlighten public opinion on the question, and earnestly pray that the popular voice may decide on the side of morality.

"John Three Sixteen."

"For God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

THIS is perhaps the favourite text in the Bible, one of the first texts which you learn as children, and one whose meaning becomes only the more precious to you as you grow older. For in these simple words the whole Gospel is summed up—the depth of God's love, the greatness of his gift, and the blessing which He freely offers to us, all are made known to us every time that we repeat it.

1. And first of all, they remind us of the love of God? "For God so loved the world."

"But why speak of that?" perhaps you say. "We know it so well already. If there is one thing certain about God it is just this, that He is love." And yet, children, I wonder if you always think of God's love in the right way. Do you never imagine that it was only because Christ lived and died for us that God loves us, instead of remembering that it was because God loved us that Christ came?

God loves the world. Not one people only, or individual persons here and there, but the world, all who are in it, good as well as bad; God loves all, and longs after all to be his true children.

Once, a preacher tells us, when he was addressing a large Sunday-school in England, he asked the assembled children whether God loved them whilst they were wicked. Some answered "no," and some answered "yes." They were evidently not at all sure about it, and most seemed to think that it was only when they were good that God cared for them. But just think, children, if God did not love us when we were wicked, He could never love us. The very wonder and beauty of God's love lie in this, that even when we had sinned and wandered far from Him, He still loved us, and sent his Son to die for us.

2. For, secondly, the greatness of God's love leads to the greatness of his gift—"his only begotten Son."

There is a pretty story told of a little German girl who picked up one day a scrap of paper containing these words in her native tongue:—

"For God so loved the world that He gave—" That was all, and then the paper was torn off. Joyfully the child ran off with it to its mother, crying: "Listen, mother, listen what I have here. 'For God so loved the world that he gave:—'" "Well," was the answer, "What then? what did God give?" "I don't know," replied the child; "it doesn't say; I only know that God gave, and because God gave it must be something very good." God gave the Life and the Death of his "only begotten Son." With no less gift than that could his love be satisfied, the very best that He had He gave for us.

3. And, thirdly, God gave his Son, that "whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

You do not know much just now, children, about sin. But there is not one of you but knows that he has not always done what is right in God's sight, and that he needs God's forgiveness. Well, that forgiveness is offered to you in Jesus. Because He was perfectly pure and holy and good, He can save all who are looking to Him and trusting in Him, from what is dark and sinful.

Let me tell you the story of one to whom this glad news came, and which may help you in remembering all we have been trying to learn. He was a little Irish street boy, who had left home and fallen into bad courses. One wintry night, as he was waiting at a street corner in Dublin for his evil companions, he suddenly felt a hand upon his shoulder, and a kind voice asked him why he was not off home to bed.

"I have no home, no bed," he said.

"My poor boy," continued the gentleman, "that is very sad. But if you go to a certain street and house (which he named) they will give you a bed there; but you mustn't forget the 'pass.' Can you read?" "No, sir."

"Then listen; I'll tell it you: 'John, three, sixteen,' that's the pass. Now, don't forget: 'John, three, sixteen.'"

Away the boy ran, found the house, gave the pass, and was taken in. He had to leave the next day, and while wandering through the streets was run over by a passing cab. In the hospital where he was taken, his sufferings brought on a high fever, and he became quite delirious, talking loudly, not knowing what he was saying. But all through his delirium one thing he repeated again and again, "John Three Sixteen, John Three Sixteen; it was to do me good, and so it has; John Three Sixteen." At length consciousness came back to him, and as he lay with his eyes wide open wondering where he was and what had happened to him, a voice from the next bed said, "Well, John Three Sixteen, and how are you to-day?" "Why," exclaimed the boy, "how do you know my new name?" "Know it," said the man "why, haven't you been shouting it all these days?" The boy was more astonished than ever, and asked the man what he meant.

"Oh!" said he, "don't you know? It's in the Bible." And then from St. John's Gospel he read him our text, the sixteenth verse of the third chapter, "For God so loved the world, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

"That's beautiful," murmured the boy. "It's all about God, and love, and a home for ever." And after he had learned the words carefully for himself he fell asleep repeating them.

Nor did he afterwards forget them. They changed his whole life. He could not be John Three Sixteen and go with bad companions and love evil ways.

And so, children, with you. Do not be content with repeating only the words of our text; but ask God to write them on your hearts. And the more you can remember his love and all that Christ has done for you, the better will you be able to be his children on earth, and afterwards share his home in heaven.

Loving Back.

LITTLE Alice was playing with her doll while her mother was writing. When her mother had finished her writing, she told Alice that she might come and sit on her lap, and Alice said:

"I'm so glad! I wanted to love you so much, mamma."

"Did you, darling?" and she clasped her tenderly. "I am very glad that my little girl loves me so, but I fancy that you were not very lonely while I was writing; you and dolly seemed to be having a happy time together."

"Yes, mamma, we were, but after awhile I got tired of loving her."

"And why?"

"Oh, just because she never loves me back."

"And is that why you love me?"

"That is one why, mamma, but not the first one, nor the best."

"And what is the first and best?"

"Why, mamma, don't you guess?" and the blue eyes grew very bright and earnest. "It's because you loved me when I was too little to love you back; that's why I love you so."

That was a very good reason, and even mamma herself could not have given a better one.—Our Little Ones.

THE ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 10).

(AS GIVEN BY A LITTLE GIRL.)

A.—(1) Acts xviii. 3.

(2) Paul and his companions were shipwrecked on the island of Melita, where they were shown great kindness by the barbarians, who lit a fire for them. But while Paul was putting on some sticks, a viper came out of the fire and fastened on his hand. The people thought that this showed that he was a murderer until they saw him shake it off and receive no harm, when they changed their minds and said he was a god.

B.—(1) Acts. xx. 9

(2) On the first day of the week, the disciples had come to break bread. Paul preached to them for a very long time, so long that a young man, named Eutychus, sitting in a window, went to sleep and fell from the third storey. He was taken up for dead, but Paul worked a miracle on him and said unto the people, "Trouble not, he liveth." And they were comforted.

C.—(1) Acts xix. 35.

(2) A great uproar was made because Demetrius, a silversmith, declared that Paul had taught the people not to serve gods made with hands, and the great goddess Diana was despised by many. Then the town-clerk made a speech, telling the people there was no cause for this uproar; did not all the city worship Diana? To Demetrius he said, "If you have anything against any man, go to the law, it is open." And after saying they were likely to be called to account for the uproar, he dismissed them.

D.—(1) Acts xii. 10.

(2) Herod had imprisoned Peter, intending to kill him as he had done James. But God sent an angel at night, who awoke him, told him to dress and follow him. Peter did so, and all the doors opened to them of their own accord, even the large iron gate leading into the street, where the angel left him. Peter went to Mary's (John's mother's) house where he was admitted after much hesitation.

E.—(1) Acts ix. 25.

(2) The Jews sought to kill Saul because he went about preaching. So they lay wait for him at the city gates day and night. But Saul was let down by the wall by the disciples.

UNCLE TOM.

A Redeemed Malagasy Slave.

SIR,—I desire to thank your readers who so kindly responded to my appeal last March for redemption money to free a Christian female slave in Madagascar. Her desire was to be employed in spiritual work, but she was hindered by being under the bond of slavery. I have received a letter from this redeemed slave, translated and forwarded by Mrs. Peill, wife of Rev. J. Peill, Madagascar. She says:

"I and my two children are free. Please thank the editor of THE CHRISTIAN for writing about it in his paper, and tell him how grateful we are to him. Tell the Christian friends who gave money for redeeming me, that I thank them with all my heart; and not I alone, for all my relations are exceedingly glad, especially my husband, who sends a warm message of gratitude, and my brother, who received a like benefit himself before."

There was enough money subscribed to cover the redemption price from slavery of her husband also, and I believe he, too, will be free by this time, but the negotiations were not fully carried out when I heard.—Yours sincerely,

The Bible League.—A conference on the inspiration of the Bible was held on March 5, at Westbourne Grove Chapel. Dr. Anderson, Revs. Chas. Stirling, G. D. Hooper, J. Tuckwell, and others delivered addresses.

King David and His Psalms.

By REV. J. STORJOHANN, CHRISTIANIA.

THE GRANTING OF THE PRAYER, AND THE THEOPHANY.

[Notes on Psalm xviii., as set out in last week's issue, in strophical form, divided into prologue and epilogue, parts and sections, according to the poetical construction of the Psalm, and in the light of its subject matter.]

TO express the solemn assurance of his heartfelt love for Jehovah, David has recourse to the most tender, most all-comprising names and images of what God Jehovah is to him, and the tenth and last expression is "the Praised One." The whole secret of the victory he at last finds in this, to which also the four previous psalms give us the key: I called upon the Lord as the one to be praised; as such he praises Him in Psalm xxxiii. before the prayer was heard; this was the way by which he was saved from his enemies.

Part I. (1) In the fiercest turmoil of the battle, when the hordes of the Philistine army, like an overflowing stream, threatened to overwhelm the famished Israelites (cxiv. 4), and David with dismay saw himself encompassed by death and destruction, the kingdom of death holding him, one may almost say, within its grasp, he uttered a cry which reached the ear of Jehovah, and which was followed by an immediate answer from the heavenly temple (verse 6 and Ps. xx. 6). This was first remarked through the shaking of the mountains by an earthquake. The wrath of God, kindled against the enemies of the people, was at the same time manifested by a gathering storm, harbingered by lightning and a glow of fire.

(2) On the wings of the storm Jehovah descends, wrapped in the masses of darkness from which proceed hailstones and lightning. During the crashing of the thunder—the voice of the Most High—the enemy is scattered by the lightning which darts among them like arrows and throws them into confusion and panic.

(3) A hurricane rises, a raging storm from the east (Psa. xlviii. 7), by which the "sea of the Philistines," visible from Gezer, is whipped into a whirlpool, so that its bottom could be seen at a great distance. Thus David's salvation is accomplished at the critical moment by the powerful intervening hand of God, which draws him out of the roaring waters of the enemy, saves him from the strength of Goliath, and from the already conquering Philistines who had attacked him in the "day of calamity," that is, the time of famine. He leads him from the midst of the conflict into "a wide place," and by all this shows his pleasure in him.

Part II. (1) From this stormy, breathless description of the Theophany and deliverance, the song now sinks into the quiet depths of spiritual life, from thence to draw the glad reason which accounts for the marvellous granting of his prayer. In Deut. xviii. 13 occur the words, "Thou shalt be perfect with Jehovah thy God." This, after his great fall, David can say of himself by virtue of the forgiveness he had received (v. 23).^{*} He does not describe himself as perfect in himself, but as perfect, whole "with God" (comp. Phil. iii. 12-15). He does not deny that he is a sinner, for he must watch against sin (v. 23; comp. Ps. xix. 12, 13); but he does not wilfully and maliciously commit sin (21). His rescue is a gracious requital of a righteousness of heart and life which does not set aside any of the Lord's commandments (v. 22; comp. Matt. v. 19), or take any sin lightly. David knows well what he is saying; the same words with which he began in v. 20, he concludes with in v. 24). It is the gracious wages of faith which he has received.

^{*} Maclaren says:—"If the author be David, this voice of good conscience must have been uttered before his great fall, after which he could, indeed, sing of forgiveness and restoring grace, but never again of integrity." No, certainly not of the integrity of his whole life; but his very fall it was which necessitated the self-defence which we have in this Psalm, and later in Psa. lxxvi. 18. In both cases David bases the Divine favour shown him upon his integrity. It was of the greatest moment, owing to the fall of David, that a testimony should be brought forward by which the integrity which David had regained could be proved.

(2) From such personal experience David is able frankly to express before the face of Jehovah how the Lord shows himself to us human beings (25-29). His reciprocal relations with the pure who are wholly with him, and who purify themselves, are in terrible contrast with his relations with the froward. This is manifest in God's relations to the oppressed and suffering people, and the Philistines with their bold ambitious plans. It is God Jehovah who let David's lamp shine when his warriors feared it might be quenched if he went into battle; for it is by Jehovah that he broke through the ranks of the enemy and leapt over the wall. Jehovah is powerful in the weak and weary.

Part III. (1) The great word "perfect," which has now become the chief word of the psalm, is again taken up with reference to Deut. xxxii. 4. "The Rock—his work is perfect, for all his ways are right," and is made a starting point for the third section. God, whose way is perfect, makes also David's way perfect by girding him with strength, and teaching him to be a model warrior, quick to attack, invincible in defence; as well versed in the use of his sword as of his bow. But God is not partial, He has no favourites; He does all this because He will be the shield of all those that trust in him. It is on this principle, which everyone must yield to, and can benefit by, that David wishes to be a pattern to his army and his people.

(2) Thus, then, has God acted in this bitter struggle, and David lays the honour of the successful issue of the campaign at his feet, turning to Him with the tenderest address of gratitude:—"Thou, who art the shield of all believers, Thou it is who hast given me the shield of salvation" (Deut. xxxiii. 29). Thy right hand hath holden me up, and thy condescension hath made me great. Thou hast cleared the way before me. Thus I am enabled to pursue and reach mine enemies, and not to stop before I have crushed them. David, who in v. 32 speaks of God girding him with strength for his career, uses the same words in v. 39 about the war. With the strength for the war with which God invests him, David bends and puts to flight his assailants, exterminating the most refractory among the enemy—his maligners.

(3) Finally, we have a graphic description of what straits the Philistines, who are mentioned only at the end of the psalm, are reduced to when their fruitless cry for help was addressed to Jehovah (v. 41). This tragic hypocrisy completes David's victory, and moves God to punish the Philistines, thus saving Israel from further conflict.^{*}

David so completely subjugated the Philistines, even those hitherto unknown to him, that, on his mere threat, they pretended subservience, as was prophesied of the enemies of Israel (Deut. xxxiii. 29), and—what a dramatic conclusion to the war—came forth trembling from their brigand strongholds (Psa. lxxvi. 4, 5).

The epilogue begins in the form of a doxology with the holy words of the oath-formula: "Jehovah lives," calling Him (as in verses 2 and 31) Rock and God of Salvation, who caused the unavoidable war of revenge to be a victory and a complete subjugation of the enemy. In three touches the reason is proclaimed why David will praise Jehovah among the heathen: Because He (1) freed him from his enemies; (2) raised him above his adversaries; (3) saved him from the "violent man," Lahmi Goliath, the strong enemy (v. 17). And for three more additional favours will David praise the name of Jehovah: (1) For the great deliverance of the king; (2) for the favour towards God's anointed; and (3) towards David's seed for ever. As the psalm began with Jehovah's servant David, so it ends with "his anointed" and with David in association with holy seed.

St. Paul, in Romans xv. 19, cites verse 49 as a proof that salvation belongs also to the heathen. "When the anointed of the Lord makes war on the heathen with the sword, it is in the end the blessing of Jehovah's recognition, for which, in this manner, He makes a way" (Delitzsch). In Psalms lxxvi. and ix., is the fulfilment of David's promise to sing praises to the name of Jehovah among the heathen.

^{*} By this victory the heathen were subdued for half a century to come.

Mr. Thomas Langton, THE YORKSHIRE EVANGELIST.

ONE of the glories of the Methodist Communion is the scope it has given for the exercise of preaching talent in those of humble station and slender culture. The office of "local preacher" in many an instance has been the stepping-stone to positions of great usefulness in the Church of Christ. To a far larger extent than some other churches our Methodist friends have recognised and utilised that diversity of gifts and of operations of which the Apostle wrote so explicitly to the early Corinthian believers.

The genus "local preacher" has given to the cause of Christ some remarkable specimens of natural ability combined with Divine equipment. The subject of our sketch to-day is a notable example. For many a long year the name of THOMAS LANGTON has been familiar as a household word in the sequestered dales and vales of Yorkshire. He does not seem to have gone very far afield in the pursuit of his ministry, or to have aimed, like his great exemplar Wesley, at getting the world for a parish; but within his home sphere he has secured the favour alike of God and man. He has certainly not been one of those prophets who are bereft of honour in their own country.

The life story of Thomas Langton, lately written by Mr. Isaac Watson, and published by that gifted son of Methodism, Rev. Thomas Champness, from his Joyful News depot in Rochdale, is one of the most vivid and vivacious personal narratives extant. The reader is borne along on the stream of the story, and is rejoiced to know when he reaches the last page that the subject of this wonderful tale of God's working through a human medium, is still in active service, though he is now on the verge of three-score years.

Thomas Langton's father was a village innkeeper of the good, old-fashioned sort; he would permit no working-man customer at his tavern to drink more than two glasses of beer at one time. If any showed a desire to indulge further he would say:—

Billy, doesn't thee think thy wife could do wi' a new frock? Little Mary looked varry cauld this morning as shoo went to t' school; buy her a pair o' good strong boots, and don't spend the brass in sich foolery as strong ale.

We wish every boniface, whether in town or country, were after this pattern; the drink problem would soon be a good way towards solution. Mr. Langton, sen., was also a farrier and farmer, and some samples given in the book of his homely cuteness in trafficking with sharpers of the horse-dealing persuasion, are highly amusing.

The son, Thomas, when twelve years old, was sent to learn the trade of a tailor and draper. After nine years he changed masters; and it was in his new situation that the great change passed over his spiritual life. We must make room for the story of his conversion:—

Mr. Seymour [his new employer] welcomed him with, "Are you a converted man? I don't wish to have anybody in my house who is not converted, or who is not desirous for good."

"I can't say that I am exactly converted, but I am desirous for all that is good," was the reply.

"All right, my friend. God Himself has given you those desires, and it will be our joy to lead you into light. You'll not be long in the dark here."

The whole arrangements of Mr. Seymour's home were those of a veritable house of prayer. Grounded as Thomas was in the knowledge of those things that make for eternal life, it needed but this personal contact with a Christ-like family to melt him down completely. At a prayer meeting in the large kitchen, ten days after he removed there, he sought and found pardon, to the joy of all the household. He was requested to engage in prayer, very much to his embarrassment, but when he had finished one present said to him:—

"Why, you surely must have been a preacher, Thomas; why have you kept so quiet about it?"

"No, sir," he replied, "I have never prayed in public before, but to-night God has melted my very soul, and opened my mouth, and it was easy to talk to Him."

Thomas was speedily thrust into the work of public exhorting, and during the two years that elapsed before he devoted his life wholly to itinerant evangelism he not only gained rich experience in public speaking, but he had received many seals to his ministry. The call came in a very definite way, and God's leading was humbly, but gladly, responded to. "Since that day," says his biographer, "God has prepared the way for him; and though Mr. Langton has never made a charge for his services, or asked for remuneration, the wants of his parents were always supplied as long as they lived, and his 'barrel of meal' has not wasted, neither has his cruse of oil failed."

It is impossible to follow in detail the Gospel labours of "the Yorkshire evangelist" as they are recorded in these thrilling pages;

we should like to send our readers to the volume itself. The account given of Mr. Langton's methods and preparation may be of service to would-be evangelists. After describing his physical and mental equipment, the writer says:—

Perhaps the manner in which he gets his sermons is as remarkable as anything about him. Being a great visitor, when missioning he devotes much time to this very necessary part of the evangelist's work. He thus comes in contact with many shades of character and unique incidents in real life unknown to the mere student, and these weave themselves into the fabric of his sermon. When he feels that a subject has "hit" him, he rises early in the morning, at four or five o'clock, and with his Bible, his experiences, and his God, he gets his sermon. He writes out the thoughts pretty fully, tracing the argument logically, rewrites again and again, until he feels that it is "fit"; then, and not till then, does he preach it, in the full conviction that God has given it to him.

Almost every chapter contains some striking testimony to the power of the Gospel message thus delivered in releasing men and women from the bondage of sin, and introducing them into the liberty wherewith Christ makes free. We read, for instance, of one place where there was a wonderful visitation of God's saving power following on the sudden and tragic death of a scoffing couple. At the Sunday evening service there were about a hundred and thirty people at the service, of whom nearly sixty had given their hearts to God during the previous week. During the sermon the Holy Spirit so wrought and the influence was so constraining upon every one that not a solitary person left when the prayer-meeting began. The penitent form was filled immediately, and many could not get near. In batches of sixteen they came forward, until every soul in the place, without a single exception, had yielded themselves to God.

A noteworthy and unusual incident recorded is the conversion of the vicar of one parish through a visit by Mr. Langton to the parsonage in response to a special invitation. After conversation the Spirit enabled him to lead the anxious seeker to light and liberty. The servants were called into the room, and in their presence the vicar thanked God for the blessing that had come to him, requesting the evangelist to address the household. He did so, and at the end of the short service one servant confessed Christ, while others were visibly affected. A son and daughter of the clergyman were converted in the course of the same mission, and afterwards devoted themselves to work in the foreign field. Needless to say, the evangelist was ever after a welcome visitor at that vicarage.

So incessant and arduous were Mr. Langton's labours throughout these Yorkshire villages that his health completely broke down, and for the space of two years he had to take compulsory rest. The biographer states that "during a period of sixteen years he had not missed a day a year without holding services of one kind or another, often taking three, four, and five appointments a day." No wonder the tabernacle gave way for a time. Recovery came at length, and he resumed his loved work, finding, as before, that God was with him of a truth, enabling him to point multitudes of stricken souls, in different ranks of life, to the Saviour. The story of a converted thief, told in one of the later chapters of the book, is a truly marvellous illustration of the truth that Christ can save to the uttermost in degree, as well as to the end. Here we must leave our Yorkshire friend, glad to know that "he is still busy preaching here and there, ever welcome where he goes; speaking at missionary meetings, and conducting special services; and, 'best of all, the Lord is with him.'" Would that the number of such God-ordained and God-endowed evangelists were vastly multiplied throughout our land.

Doorstep Mission.—Mrs. R. Brown (2, Mount Pleasant-villas, Crouch Hill, N.), hon. secretary of this humble effort in North London, writes desiring the co-operation of friends, in putting out and placing in situations some doorstep girls.

West Africa.—Rev. Dr. Mojola Agbebi, of Yorubaland, who left England on October 12th last, arrived at Lagos, West Africa, on November 9th and commenced work preparatory to aggressive evangelisation in the interior. Mr. Ricketts, who went with him as missionary of the Congo Institute, has taken a station at Ijebu. The railway is in course of construction from Lagos to the interior of Yorubaland.

East-End Mothers' Home.—This institution, situate at 396, Commercial-road, had a constant succession of in-patients during last year, the aggregate number being 230. Besides that, as many as 259 out-patients were registered. During the same period fourteen midwifery and eighteen monthly nurses were trained, all of them passing their examinations satisfactorily. Many a poor woman in East London thanks God for the Mothers' Home and its ministry received in a trying hour.

The House at the Corner.—I.

CIRCUMSTANCES having caused me to spend a week recently in apartments directly overlooking the bar of a public-house, I could not but be struck with the object lesson thus presented continually to my notice.

Although in all respects, probably, a "well-conducted" house, closing punctually at eleven each evening, and turning out, perhaps, fewer drunkards than many a brilliantly-lighted gin-palace in a more crowded locality, yet, nevertheless, the spectacle was a sad one, and led to melancholy reflections.

Glance with me for a moment at some of the frequenters of this bar. From early in the morning till late at night people are seen to pass in and out of its easily-swinging door almost continuously, in strange contrast to the occasional customer who drops into the "high-class hair-dressing rooms," next door, or the butcher's shop on the opposite side.

The customers are of all ages, both sexes, and of many grades in social life. From the old man who can just totter across the road supported by two sticks, to the little child of tender years, all enter that door with the same purpose. Their object is to obtain strong drink, but how different are the motives which prompt, and how different are the lives, how varied the histories, which lead to its gratification!

The grey-headed man comes, tired, weary of life, no joy left him on earth, no brightness but what he finds in the public-house. He has not learned to look for joy beyond his earthly surroundings, and though he cares but little for the drink, his only pleasure, if such it may be called, is to drop in in the evening to that brightly-lighted room, and meet his old companions over a glass of rum or hot gin-and-water.

Notice this group of women chatting in the street outside. It is 10.30 p.m. and they appear to be in eager consultation. Is it that the husbands of one or all of them are within those doors, and the wife weary of long waiting, has come with the intention of fetching him home, hoping he may yet come sober? Or are they merely come as boon companions to have a drink together and listen to the nightly gossip? We cannot tell. Certain it is they all enter those doors, and their high voices mingle with the loud talking and discordant sounds of music which issue from within.

Across the street come several servant-girls with jugs or bottles to fill perhaps with beer for their master's or mistress's supper. Little harm, thinks the mistress, in this. The girl enters the bar, the jug is filled, and she is soon back across the street at her own door. But even in those few minutes spent inside, what are the sights she sees, the words she hears? Who can measure the effect of their nightly influence on her character; and what mistress, I ask, has a right to expose a young woman in her employ to so dangerous an influence, or place her thus in the midst of temptation?

Sadder still is it to see the little child of eight or nine going to fetch the dinner or supper beer in that black bottle, which she hides under her ragged shawl as if ashamed for passers-by to know her errand. Hurriedly she enters, and soon emerges with a half-frightened look as though some rude word or laugh had chilled her sensitive child-spirit.

A father enters next—after him toddles a little one of three or four. The mother expostulates, tries to draw the child away, but it is of no use. The father entices it within, leaving her sadly to pace the street, meditating, one may conjecture, upon that cherished darling's future with such an example before it. Oh! how long shall we stand by and see the children of our land thus taught to drink from their earliest infancy? Pure, innocent little immortal souls becoming familiar from their very babyhood with the sights and sounds of the public-house, and too often, alas, learning to love the drink from draining father's glass or sipping from mother's jug. What wonder if a race of drunkards is growing up around us when temptations are so thickly strewn in the path of the children? The only wonder is that fathers and mothers who know the evil do not rise with one voice and say, "We will not have these dens of iniquity in our midst, demoralising our children, degrading our women, and dragging down our young men to an early grave, with their fiery liquor and deceitful attractions."

Amongst London Missions.

THE LONDON MEDICAL MISSION.

THE pioneer medical mission of London has for a quarter of a century been carrying on its double ministry of help and healing in the heart of a dense and dark district, now crowded by poverty and pain, but once rejoicing in the epithet of "that verie pleasaunt village of Sanct Giles." At the corner of Endell-street and Short's-gardens, in a house associated in past days with crime and lawlessness, the Mission has established itself and become a centre of far-reaching and fruitful ministry, "as well for the body as for the soul."

To this noble Mission Dr. George Saunders consecrated many years of devoted service. To him, amongst others, have succeeded Drs. Pring and Latchford; and now Dr. Henry Soltan, who has had long experience in Burmah, the Islington Medical Mission, and in India, has undertaken the medical superintendence. Those who recall the good work he did in Islington will anticipate blessed results from his labours in St. Giles'.

The name of the Mission has become a household word in the poorest homes. To its doors resort the sick and suffering from all quarters, sure of welcome and attention, if only they be sick and poor. Last Wednesday, for example, I found the waiting-room crowded by sad, weary women and children, many of them wan and worn with suffering and long nights of pain. Three days a week out-patients are seen. All are expected to attend the short Gospel service, when the message of salvation is put in the plainest terms, as to those who have never heard it before. Then the patients are seen by Dr. Soltan, or a lady doctor, who, while preparing for foreign Mission service, kindly gives her services. It had been questioned how a lady doctor would be received by the poor people, but that has been settled by the warm appreciation accorded her. Some helpful friends—would there were more such!—seize the opportunity to speak personally and faithfully to the patients waiting their turn. Thus, each Monday, Wednesday, and Friday the Mission is a busy scene of real work for afflicted bodies and sin-burdened souls. Here, as they have told me again and again, they delight to come, because they tell us about God and religion."

But there are many too sick and feeble to come to the Mission, and these are visited at home, many hours being spent in this important work—important because of the sickness and suffering relieved, the sorrow and misery alleviated, the despair and darkness dispelled, and the entrance gained for the message of mercy in rooms where otherwise no ray of heavenly light would ever penetrate. Experience has proved that the Mission doctor and nurse find a welcome where few other workers may venture. In this visitation from house to house the missionary nurse, Miss Stansfeld, renders valuable service in the quietest and most effective way. She is full of the sorrows of the poor. Her notebook of cases at present in hand shows—a poor widow dying of consumption in a miserable room. There are two daughters and a little boy. One is out of work, the other earning a trifle. "We found them wanting everything, and had to meet their need." Again, a child was found in a damp, gloomy cellar, suffering agonies with rheumatism. The father does "odd jobs," and is mostly out of work; the mother shells peas in Covent Garden; and the six children are half starved. Then a deserted wife is found—over seventy—very ill, and in grievous want. An aged widow, eighty-three, ill and weak, proves to have one farthing in the house—that is all.

"In a small room near the Dials we attend a poor young married woman, advanced in consumption, lying on her bed of suffering and gasping for breath in a choking fog. She has been told so often of the 'Water of Life' and the Gift of God, the word at last seems to have pierced to the marrow, and the light enters her poor soul. She now witnesses by her lips, face, and life, that the peace and joy of the Lord are her strength; and her countenance beams with happiness, as she knows that she is a new creature in Christ Jesus."

But why enlarge? Such cases are all around these earnest workers. Sorrow and distress abound. They cannot find work for all who seek it, but they do their best, while keeping to their special business of healing the sick and suffering; only it would be heartrending to attend such did not loving friends enable them to relieve the distress and lack of necessities of life.

Out of all this, and apart from the more direct Medical Mission work, varied operations have grown, as the Gospel services, held Sunday and Thursday, and well attended; Bible-classes, a mothers' meeting, a C.S.U. branch, a Sunday-school, and lodging-house services; while the invalid kitchen provides needful nourishments for the sick. Flowers are also sent and distributed, and old clothing for the sick and shivering is in constant and large demand. Other and auxiliary agencies are the Convalescent Home at Folkestone, in which 196 were last year received, and the Holiday Home at Braestead Chart, which had last year 264 happy inmates. The usefulness of these, as associated with such a mission, is obvious. Both these homes have been the means of saving lives, but, better still, in both sinners have been won to the Saviour.

In all departments there is great need for larger funds and fresh helpers. The new report is just out. Let all secure and read it. Those who do will find it a readable record of successful service among the sick and suffering poor. It may be had of Dr. Henry Soltan, Medical Superintendent, London Medical Mission, Short's-gardens, Endell-street, St. Giles, W.C.

PEARL FISHER.

Sandwich Men.—Mr. Keates, and ten of the sandwich men who have been saved from the lowest degradation through the Bessbrook Home, 39, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, visited the men's gathering at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, on Sunday; and gave testimony to Christ's saving power, with marvellous effect. May God use them under similar conditions to many meetings of the same character. The age of miracles is not past, whilst such stories can be told.

Irish Railway Talks.—8.

By GEORGE WILLIAMS.

"THIS thrain won't stop anywhere! This thrain won't stop anywhere!" shouted, with true Hibernian accuracy and vivacity, an unkempt porter as the 5.45 p.m. express was about to leave Westland Row for Kingstown and Bray. In spite, however, of this alarming information, the train quickly filled with professional and business men homeward bound, and, punctually to time, the guard whistled it off.

My compartment was very crowded, nine gentlemen sharing it with me, one of whom was my friend Professor —, of the Royal University. We chatted pleasantly together for some minutes until I produced a packet of tracts and begged each of my companions to accept one. Then indeed, in a moment, everything changed, and it was plain that the offence of the Cross had not ceased. The Professor, in particular, was very angry. He furiously denounced me as a low creature—insensible to every gentlemanly instinct—and proposed to the other men to throw me out of the window. Of course I said nothing, but sorrowfully watched him.

In a few minutes we reached Kingstown, where I was left in possession of the carriage.

Two days later, on reaching Westland Row to catch the 4.45, I found the Princess of Wales was travelling down by the same train. There was, because of this, a large crowd of people, and in the throng I saw the Professor. Scarcely had I seen him when we both were swept by the passengers into the same compartment, and pushed right against the opposite side. He looked very hostile, but I resolved to carry the war, so to say, into the enemy's country.

Boldly addressing him, I said: "You greatly disappointed me the other evening, and wounded me. In the spirit of true friendship I offered you a tract, and you, instead of either accepting it or politely declining it, treated me with gross rudeness. You disgraced yourself both as an Irishman and as a gentleman. We Irishmen are famous all the world over for courtesy, but no one the other evening would have believed you were Irish."

"I treated you as you deserved," he replied. "I am a Catholic, and I consider your offering me a tract was an insult."

"But it could not have insulted you," I answered, "for the tract spoke of how the Lord Jesus loves you and died as a sacrifice for your sins."

"I wouldn't read a word of your tract," he hotly replied. "How do you know that all you have said is true? How do you know that the Bible is true?"

"Because I have proved it."

"How have you proved it?"

"I'll tell you. I was in heart, what you are outwardly—that is, I was really a Roman Catholic, though outwardly a Protestant. I was trying, by good works, by religious duties, by sacraments, and by contrition, to merit salvation and win God's love. I got on very well and peacefully so long as I saw sin in the light of my own conscience. But one day, through God's mercy, I saw sin in the light of his Holy Spirit and I at once felt that no amount of personal merit or righteousness could heal so desperate a disease as I now saw sin to be. I turned, therefore, to the Bible, and I there learned that God refuses to justify a sinner on the ground of merit (Gal. ii. 16), but I further learned that He does engage to declare and constitute righteous the sinner who, renouncing all merit, and turning away from all other saviours, trusts the Lord Jesus alone for salvation (Rom. iii. 26). I cast myself upon that Saviour for mercy and peace, and at once I enjoyed—what I never had before—a sense that He was mine and that I was his. A wonderful peace, light, and love filled all my being. This has never left me; and I am proving every day that the Lord Jesus Christ is a real, living, mighty Saviour, and that the Bible is God's Word."

By this time the Professor had become much softened, and I could see he was interested; but the train having reached his station he rose, warmly said "good-bye," and added, with some emotion, "I never heard anything like that before."

Not long after, on taking up the daily paper, I read that Professor — had died suddenly on the previous day.

How to Pray.

By REV. W. CROSBIE, M.A., LL.B., NOTTINGHAM.

Praying in the Holy Ghost.—Jude 20.

WHAT a conditioning of prayer! And prayer to avail must be prayer "in the Holy Ghost." The language of prayer may be chaste, elegant, conforming to high literary standards; and the thoughts may be elevated, beautiful, and yet the praying may not be "in the Holy Ghost," but an invocation of nothing really, an apostrophe borne on the wings of the "homeless wind" nowhither. Prayer, on the other hand, may be broken, the sentences ungrammatical, offending ears polite; and yet it may be prayer "in the Holy Ghost," entering the ear and moving the arm of the Lord God of Sabaoth, evoking for answer: "Be it unto Thee even as Thou wilt."

There are prayers that are read. Beautiful litanies some of them are. "Forms of prayer" they are called. And there is free prayer. Those who use forms of prayer may pray in the Holy Ghost; they do pray in the Holy Ghost, multitudes of them, getting very near to God through written words consecrated by the piety of ages, and obtaining answers to their requests. But "praying in the Holy Ghost" is at its highest in free prayer.

Prayer is an instinct of the religious soul, part of the original spiritual furniture. It cannot be repressed, therefore, except temporarily. It will assert itself in the supreme moments of life. Loud, boasting atheists have been surprised into prayer; they have been heard calling upon God when confronted unawares by great perils and alarms.

And against answers to prayer there is no valid argument. Science has not found one yet, and never will. The instinct of prayer is provided for in the very make and constitution of the universe. Answers to prayer are not afterthoughts, nor violations of natural law, but were included in the original plan, and arranged at the beginning, among the pre-established harmonies.

The question is sometimes asked: "To whom should prayer be presented? to God the Father, or God the Son, or God the Holy Ghost?" Prayer may be presented to any of the Three; and yet there is an order, a revealed order; and according to it, the proper object of prayer is God the Father. And He is approached through God the Son—the Divine Human Christ; He is the way, the Mediator. No man cometh unto the Father but by Him. Whatsoever we ask the Father in his name He will do it. "We have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous" (1 John ii. 1). "He ever liveth to make intercession" (Heb. vii. 25). And into his intercession He incorporates our prayers, leaving out the unwise petitions and requests, purging our prayers of all that is born of ignorance, short-sightedness, and selfishness.

The moulds of prayer are the promises. In other words, the promises are the Divine directory of prayer. The Covenant, which is all the promises, gloriously grouped, is the inspired and infallible Book of Prayer—infallible, because every promise is a decree of God, or the duplicate of a decree of God; and the strong things of the universe, the strongest, the things that cannot fail or be broken, are the decrees of God.

The Inspirer of prayer is the Holy Ghost. Corresponding with the Intercessor at the right hand of God, there is an Intercessor in the breast, another Jesus really, close to the springs of being, and thought, and feeling, and desire, conditioning all our imperfections and infirmities; and not waiting for us, not passive, but active, taking the initiative, knocking at closed doors, striving with us, repressing the evil and helping the good, furthering us in all upward, Godward, holy directions; and working for recognition and trust and the appeals of conscious helplessness. And when there is realisation of his presence, and willing surrender to Him, and co-operation with Him, a blending of the human agency with the Divine, there is "praying in the Holy Ghost." "The Spirit Himself maketh intercession for us" (Rom. viii. 26). Our prayers are his, indited by Him; and, moving along the line of the promises, clothing themselves in the language of the covenant, answering to the will of God, and having their echo in the intercession of the Mighty Pleader at the Father's side, they avail. There is not a blessing sought that is not obtained. It is impossible that these requests should not be granted. God cannot deny Himself.

How beautiful, this philosophy of prayer! How complete and adapted the arrangements for prayer! The infinite and eternal Father, the Source of blessing, the Giver of all good; and the way to Him ever open; and at his right hand an Intercessor, Jesus Christ the righteous, to present our prayers; and an all-comprehensive and infallible directory of prayer, the covenant, with its manifold precious promises, God's inventory of our need, in our hand; and within us the Holy Ghost, the Paraclete, that other Comforter, to help and guide and teach us when we pray—so identified with us, so one with us, that our prayers are his, and his are ours.

Where, then, are the scientific objections to prayer? Is the only benefit of prayer in its reflex action? Must prayer be relegated to a place among the exploded superstitions of the past? In the light of this revealed method, prayer is not only perfectly rational, but positive answers to prayer are the greatest of all certainties. The praying one so conditioned, stands within a sphere above which stretches the whole, free, infinite heaven of blessing; and let him ask what he will, it shall be done unto him.

And here, it is averred, is the solution of the problem of Agnosticism. The Agnostic affirms that God cannot be known. It is admitted that, as the living, personal Father, he is not discoverable by the methods of science, and the processes of the speculative reason. Science finds intelligence in the universe, because it interprets the universe in the terms of consciousness; but it does not, and cannot find the living, personal Father. Between Him and its last and highest effort there is a gulf fixed. By quite another method is the gulf bridged; and it has its succinct description in the words, "Through Him (through Jesus), we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father" (Eph. ii. 18). Adopting that method—and what humbling it involves! coming through Jesus, penitently, believingly, and relying on the Holy Ghost, we find the Father, and know Him by direct intuition, and mystic, blessed union and communion.

Is it not a fact that many scientists know nothing of this way to God? And what right have they to dogmatise, and declare that He is unknowable? He is knowable, and known and found by all who seek Him in the way of his appointment—the only way for sinful men. The great argument for his existence, and it is absolutely irrefutable, is the argument of spiritual, conscious experience. They know, and are sure, who are truly his; and the knowledge is the privilege of the poorest, most illiterate, and most obscure of his saints.

THE EVANGELIST.

Thrice Shipwrecked.

By WILLIAM LUFF.

"I HAVE been shipwrecked three times," said a German sailor. But being shipwrecked had not washed him from sin: neither troubles nor dangers can do this. "Nothing but the blood of Jesus."

"We were for a day and a-half in an open boat, and we all said: 'If ever we get ashore we will serve the Lord'; but soon as we be saved, and our clothes dried, we went out, and the people offered us drink; then we forgot all about serving the Lord."

Another time this man was saved and taken to a lightship, where he had to stay for some days, but he got no light for his soul.

At last he came to live at the "Welcome Home," Ratcliff-highway, a place where many have found safety in the Lifeboat of Salvation.

"For thirty-eight years I had kept clear of all Christian people," he said, and his first contact did not seem likely to have much effect, for he went off and spent all his money in what he called "a good booze."

"I got full up, above the Plimsoll mark," said he, "and with my last shilling tried to get a tram home. The conductor said, 'I cannot let you go on top, you are drunk.' 'I am not drunk,' I said, 'and if you think I am drunk, you have never seen a drunken man. If you had a high mast on the top of your car, ever so high, I could climb up easy.' I had scarcely said the word, when I fell back into the road, and three policemen picked me up. The inspector said, 'This man is not drunk. Where you live?' I say, 'Welcome Home,' and sober I was then. He said, 'I thought he was not drunk. They do not make sailors drunk at that place.' So he told the policeman to take me to my lodge."

The officer did as he was told, but not without their visiting another public on the way.

For three days his accident kept him in bed, but on the third evening he managed to get up, though it took him an hour to dress.

"When I got out, I felt that bad, I thought a glass of beer would do me good, so I went into the first house and called for it, but it would not stay down. Perhaps it was bad stuff, so I went to a favourite bar and called for a sixpenny whiskey: that would liven me up. But it was like fire in my throat."

How strange that men should go to the disease to find a cure! Yet it was so in Solomon's time.

Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause? who hath redness of eyes?

They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek mixed wine.

They have stricken me, shalt thou say, and I was not sick; they have beaten me, and I felt it not; when shall I awake? I will seek it yet again. (Prov. xxii. 29-35.)

"No more drink," said this sailor, after his bitter experience. The devil had overstepped the mark. "I will go to my home at once." He referred to the "Welcome Home."

"Then I began to seek for Jesus; but I did not know where to find Him. They were holding a meeting, as they do every night, and I came down into that meeting. I hear of Jesus. I see Jesus, just the Saviour I want, so I go on my knees and give myself up to Him, and He saved me." He saw Jesus willing to save him from the drink. He saw Jesus able to save him from the drink. He saw Jesus a Saviour for drunkards. He saw Jesus dying for his sins—all his sins. He saw Jesus there, ready, able, longing, to save him, just as he was—vile, guilty, helpless. The only condition was, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved" (Acts xvi. 31).

"We see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour; that He by the grace of God should taste death for every man." (Heb. ii. 9). If for every man, why not for you?

When the sailor told us his story, he had been saved four years, and, though fifty-four years of age, was looking younger than twenty years before.

"I have got a good home now. If you saw it you would not think it belonged to a sailor. I can send money to my wife, and I have got money in my pocket. I was a wreck when I came to Jesus; but He forgave me, and He is with me now."

"Is that All?"

"IS that all?" said the son of a missionary, as his mother, then on a visit to England for her health, explained to him on a Sunday evening what our Saviour had done for us by his death and sacrifice. "Yes," she replied, and as she spoke his heart entered into peace in believing. He was but a boy, yet was troubled with the sense of sin and sinfulness. He was a well-trained boy, and must have heard a thousand times over what Jesus has done for us—at least one would think so—and yet he did not seem to know how simple is the way of life. Whether the reason is that the way is not simply pointed out, or that no attention is paid to the instruction until a deep sense of sin has been produced, we cannot tell, but the fact remains, that large numbers who ought to be rejoicing in the light of God's love are living in darkness or in twilight. If they could only be brought to see and say, "Is that all?"

The boy has now been accepted for service as a medical missionary. His apprehension of Jesus as his own Saviour turned his thoughts and energies towards Christian service, and soon made him a willing, happy worker for the salvation of others as well as a diligent student with a definite object in view as the end of his studies. We mention the case merely to emphasise the fact that the knowledge of Jesus is the secret of peace and the origin of every holy purpose and endeavour. We may be tempted to think that well-trained youths know all that we have to say to them, and they, too, may imagine that they cannot be told anything new. It is not something new that they need, but to see the meaning and to feel the power of the old and familiar. "Is that all?" "Yes." But there is so much of love and life in that "all," that all the demands of this scene of temptation and trial will not exhaust it, and all the ages of eternity will not find it out to perfection.

The Way of Salvation.—What must I do to be saved? Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved. The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost. This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners. He is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them. Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on Him in whom they have not believed? Acts xvi. 30-31, Luke xix. 10, 1 Tim. i. 15, Heb. vii. 25, Rom. x. 13.

The Gospel of Jesus Christ.—God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life. As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life.

Jesus said, He that believeth on Me shall have everlasting life.

With the heart man believeth.
John iii. 16, 14, 15. John vi. 47. Rom. x. 10.

The Polytechnic.—The Sunday evening evangelistic services at the Princess's Theatre, organised by Mr. Josiah Nix in connection with the Polytechnic, were concluded on Sunday week, having embraced a series of nineteen gatherings. Upon every occasion there has been scarcely a vacant seat. Dissolving views have been an important feature of the services. The direct results have been most encouraging, from fifty to 100 people rising at the close of almost every service to confess their determination to follow Christ. Arrangements are in progress to keep the large band of workers together during the summer months, in open air and other mission work.

The Brixton Orphanage.

ONE of the events of the year in the southwestern suburb of Brixton is the annual meeting of the Girls' Orphanage in the Barrington-road. That institution is deservedly popular in the district, and its friends generally crowd the Brixton Hall at the anniversary. Such was the case on Tuesday evening last week, when Mrs. Montague's young clients filled up the large platform, looking pictures of perfect health.

The report for the year, read by one of the trustees, contained many points of interest. We give some brief extracts:—

At present there are 287 orphans in residence, sixty-eight of whom have been received during the year, twenty-seven girls have been placed in domestic service, thirty-six have been returned to their friends because they were needed at home or on re-marriage of their mothers, and three dear children passed away. The purpose of the Home is not only to train the girls for domestic service and to make them good and useful members of society, but to teach them to learn and love the great lessons of religion and morality; and it is with great joy and thanksgiving that we record the gracious work of the Holy Spirit in the many young hearts that have responded to the Saviour's call. Most of the girls in service are giving satisfaction to their employers. Three have obtained the reward of a gold watch for six years' faithful service, and many others have received a work-box for keeping their situations one year.

There is always a good muster of speakers on these interesting occasions. The chairman of last week's meeting, LORD KINNAIRD, dilated forcibly on the fact that most of the work done in connection with the institution is voluntary. Referring to the large legacies given during the bygone year, his lordship advised Christian donors to be their own executors, and administer their means in their lifetime. He commented on the economical nature of the management, and the fact that no votes are required for admission, and referred very warmly to the Christian character of the education given to the girls.

Rev. J. P. GLEDSTONE spoke of the great development of the work for orphans since Geo. Müller began his work forty years ago. He rejoiced in the growth of interest in local institutions that is so well illustrated in the Brixton Orphanage. He was a strong believer in the Christians of each generation doing the work of their own time. Looking at the Orphanage from the widows' point of view, Mr. Gledstone spoke feelingly of the silent sorrow and suffering that exist on every hand, and of the struggles that those lonely women pass through in their endeavour to bring up their little ones honestly and respectably. Rev. Dr. J. PORTE mentioned a case known to him in which the Orphanage had brought relief to a poor, destitute widow, and made that the text for a touching appeal on behalf of the widow and orphan.

Humour and eloquent advocacy were mingled in the words spoken by Rev. MARCUS RAINSFORD, jun., who pleaded that all should take a share in maintaining such a noble effort. Last of all came that genial and tried friend of the work, Rev. W. R. MOWLL, whose remarks ran as usual into acrostic form. A good collection was taken, and the Orphanage set hopefully agoing for another year.

From California.

Writing from Pasadena, Cal., on February 18, Mr. Sankey says:—

My brother and wife, and Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins, are here with us. We have visited a number of towns and cities already, holding Gospel meetings and services of song in each place. The services are crowded, and always overflow, Mr. Stebbins taking the overflow. We are to lead the singing at Los Angeles, February 27 to March 1, at the Great Southern California Christian Workers' Convention; also the California State Sunday School Convention at Sacramento, April 2 to 4. After this we go to Salt Lake City, Denver, Chicago, Pittsburg, and home by May 1.

The thermometer was 77 here at noon to-day; the papers say it is 10 below zero at New York and Boston. This is a wonderful place for sick people to recover. I meet many English people, and they are delighted with the warm, dry air.

The Opium Traffic.—The Press Association understands that the report of the Indian Government upon the recommendations of the Opium Commission has now been received and laid on the table of Parliament. It will shortly be published in the form of a Blue book. There is reason to believe it will be found to promise some further restrictions in the opium traffic.

Rotherhithe Free Church.

IN the report of the unsectarian work carried on by Pastor Thomas Richardson, in the Rotherhithe Free Church, Lower-road, S.E., we read:—"During the year we have had an average attendance of 500 in the morning and 1000 in the evening. Our membership now numbers 561, an addition of 156 during Mr. Richardson's two years' work. We have flourishing Sunday-schools, with an average attendance of 170 in the morning and 625 in the afternoon. In connection with our work among the young, we have a very successful Christian Band, in which there has been an average attendance of 75. In this band there has been exceptional blessing, and it has been our joy to receive a number of the older ones into fellowship."

The work has many other agencies for young and old, including the Y.W.C.A., which was inaugurated by Lord Kinnaird, and has been a great success; average attendance, seventy. The men's meeting on Sunday afternoons is quite a feature; this branch, like the young women's, will be greatly extended when we are able to get a larger place of meeting. The Gospel Temperance Society has for its object not only the encouragement of the principles of total abstinence, but also the leading of men and women to the still higher platform, as the first part of its title indicates; average attendance, 500.

The lease of the present building expires in two years' time; and the time has come to consider the erection of a permanent structure. Funds for this, involving an outlay of some £3000, cannot be raised locally. The report says:—"What we want is a plain, bright, octagonal building, to accommodate between 2000 and 3000 people. We have the people, but have not got the money. We have the offer of a most imposing site, one of the finest it would be possible to secure, larger, if anything, than the site upon which Mr. Charrington's grand Assembly Hall is built."

Night Cabmen in London.

THE thirty-fourth annual report of the Mission to Night Cabmen in London states that the day and night cabmen number about fifteen thousand, and among them six missionaries are at work. These figures give to each missionary an average of 2500 men, whom they seek in all their haunts, teaching them that Jesus is seeking them also, and would have them to live with Him for ever. The Night Cabmen's Mission requires more annual subscriptions to its funds, which will be thankfully received by Miss E. Hebert, Pembroke House, Redhill, Surrey, who will gladly send a brief report to any applicant.

The missionaries' visits are decidedly valued. It has been frequently said, "This gentleman comes to do us good; if you do not like what is said, you can walk away." "We don't want you to die yet," said another to the missionary; "you are a good friend to us chaps in many ways, and you always give us good advice." The report shows the value of mission-room services; many listen in the open air, who at first avoid the mission-room, but are afterwards found there. Some evince a change of life, and many have signed the total abstinence pledge.

Ladies' Samaritan Society.

THE annual meeting of this Society in connection with the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, was held on Tuesday, March 3, when the report and balance-sheet for 1895 were presented and passed. The receipts for the year amounted to £413 13s. 4d., and about 600 applications for relief had been attended to in various ways.

The society is a valuable adjunct to the hospital, and it is a source of deep regret to the committee that its annual income should have been greatly reduced by death and other causes. It is proposed to hold a sale of work in June, for the purpose of raising funds to make good this loss, and contributions of useful and fancy articles (which should be sent in at the latest by May 31) will be very thankfully received. Letters and parcels should be fully addressed to the Ladies' Samaritan Society, National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, W.C.

Dublin Visiting Mission.

THIS agency, in connection with the Society for Irish Church Missions, consists of six females and fifteen male visitors. The report for last year states that 5320 houses are visited each month, and the inmates engaged in religious conversation. A typical case is thus described:—

"Visiting in C— street, had a splendid time with a Roman Catholic family. After a few minutes, the father introduced the doctrine of Transubstantiation. We went through some of our Lord's miracles, and quoted from Scripture to show that Christ's body is in heaven. A long conversation followed about Purgatory; after which the good man of the house brought up the question of the Reformation, making a violent attack upon Luther and all Protestant clergy who marry. I proceeded to turn to 1 Tim. iv. 1-3; the son and daughter took the Testament and read it for themselves; also 1 Tim. iii., about the wives of bishops. They were simply dumbfounded at finding these passages in their own Bible. The father left the room for some time, and we had a nice talk with the son and daughter. After his return we had a long talk on the intercession of the Blessed Virgin Mary. The crowning point was reached when we came to the Ten Commandments. I asked them to repeat the second; they, of course, repeated in the usual way (the third for the second), as it is in the Maynooth Catechism. I then quoted the second for them several times, and gave them the reference in the Douay Bible. They were much surprised. The tract, which we offered and which was refused when first we entered was at length eagerly accepted, and another along with it. The young people seemed deeply interested, and I trust will not quickly forget what they heard."

In an account of open-air meetings in the city we read:—"When we first opened work in the large space up in the Coombe district known as Newmarket, Satan put it into the heart of a local publican to supply some lewd people of the baser sort with cans of porter; their drinking this in derision gave us an opportunity of delivering a straight message on the result of sin. The next plan of campaign was an amateur band, got up at the instigation of a publican. The opposition died away, and large numbers of people stood Sunday after Sunday to listen to the Gospel message. This did not please the priest; so the rev. father, armed with a blackthorn, tried what he could do to drive away his flock, who had now begun to listen to the Gospel. The majority retired to their houses, only to listen from their windows, whilst others refused to be coerced, and remained. Thus the work has gone on from Sunday to Sunday, our gracious God guiding us."

The workers see fruit of their labour, and are privileged to help converts to pass through the fire of persecution. The number of inquirers is increasing. Copies of the report and other information may be had from Mrs. Smyly, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

The Half-yearly Meetings of Christians in Glasgow are called for Monday, April 6, in City Hall, Candleriggs, at 11, 2.30, and 6 p.m., and Tuesday, April 7, in Lesser City Hall, at 11 and 3.30, and 7 p.m., in Grand Hall, when the meeting will be open for conference and short reports of the Lord's work at home and abroad.

Dr. Pierson in Ireland.—The meetings in Cork were held in the Assembly Rooms, and were well attended. Many testified to the blessing received through the three days' services. Dr. Pierson afterwards returned to Dublin, addressing meetings in Kingstown, in the Metropolitan Hall, Dublin. One outcome of the latter meeting was the determination to form a Woman's Missionary Prayer Union in Dublin.

Sheo-yang Mission.—An Occasional Paper describes the progress of the work of this Mission in Eastern Shan-si. Speaking of recent converts, Mr. T. W. Pigott writes:—"Miao, the inn-keeper, grows brighter, and has earned the name of being a changed man. 'He does not lie or curse now,' is the testimony of his brother, who has just been living here to give up his opium, and who himself now desires to follow Christ. Armies on the march, first against Japan, then west to Kansuh against the Mahometans, have somewhat hindered work; but we have to record the Lord's goodness in keeping us all from any annoyance from them. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson arrived a week since, and have greatly cheered us by their presence." Communications regarding the work should be addressed to Mr. W. B. Pratt, 38, Rendlesham-road, Clapton, N.E.

Mrs. Baeyertz in Hull.

NEWINGTON Presbyterian Church, Hull, has had a visit from Mrs. Baeyertz, the evangelist. She began an eight days' mission on February 23. The church can hold 1200. Even at the week-day meetings many have had to stand. On Sundays the crowds have been extraordinary, large numbers being turned away.

But we have grander things to tell of than great crowds. The Spirit of God has been working in manifest power, and men, women, and young people have been "born from above." A goodly number have professed to receive definite blessing. Old sinners have been conquered by the love of Christ; the spirit of evil has been driven out from souls "possessed," and Jesus has entered, and brought heaven with Him. Some who have been walking in darkness for many a day have seen glorious light. We are praising God for the conquests of the Risen One in the midst of us.

The Bible readings in the afternoon have been specially helpful. They have been used of God to bring certainty, deliverance, rest, and victory to large numbers. This honoured servant of God has the gift of making the truth clear almost beyond anything we have ever heard. The last day of the mission was the greatest, both in respect of numbers and of manifest power. God has indeed set his own seal upon this effort, and has used his servant both among Christians and the unsaved.

ANDREW ALLAN.

Welcome Home, Ratcliff Highway.

MORE than usual interest was evinced at the last meeting of the Christian Lifeboat Crew, which was the first in the tenth year since its formation. There was a large muster of the members and friends, and a very profitable and enjoyable evening was spent in prayer, praise, and testimony.

Miss Child gave as the motto for the month Ps. cvii. 9, "For He satisfieth the longing soul." Col. McGregor commented on the opening verses of Ps. ciii., emphasising verse 3, "Who satisfieth thy mouth with good things." Mr. Fort showed how little is necessary to satisfy us, if we have Christ, by relating how a poor woman living on a miserable pittance delighted in praising God, and was satisfied in Him. Several seamen gave testimony, and the editor of The British Workman spoke some words of sympathy.

H. R. FRANCIS.

The C.M.S. Lay Workers' Union for London is attempting a novelty in missionary meetings, the usual missionary address giving way to twelve answers to questions by twelve members of the Union. The first, devoted to India, proved a great success; the questions—put beforehand in writing—were much to the point, and the answers supplied useful and important information on India itself and on missions in India.

Missionary Bands.—The eleventh half-yearly conference of C.M.S. Missionary Bands for Young Men was recently held at St. George's Church Room, Tufnell Park, N. The conference was attended by friends from all parts of London, representing thirty-eight bands, and numbering in all 156. These missionary bands have been greatly instrumental in extending interest in the work of the Society, and not a few young men have been led to go forth from their ranks into the foreign field.

Letter from Pastor Coillard.

SIR,—The following extract from a letter I have received from Rev. F. Coillard, from the Upper Zambesi, will be read with interest by his many friends in this country. I am sure he will not ask in vain for the sympathy and prayers of those who are interested in his work.—Yours, etc.,

RICHARD H. HUNTER.

27, Jamaica-street, Glasgow, March 5.

[EXTRACT.]

"I am an invalid on sick leave. I have struggled and suffered for more than a year. I could not be brought to see the necessity of yielding; I stuck to my post, but on my return from the Upper Zambesi the disease from which I suffer developed alarmingly. I was laid up for months, racked with pains. We had our conference at Lealui....The brethren unanimously urged my prompt departure from the country in order to seek medical advice, and spare my days for the service of the Mission at home. As Mons. and Madame L. Jalla were soon to leave on furlough, they were requested to start immediately with me. I saw the necessity of yielding; suffering as I did I could do no good, and I risked to be a burden to others.

"I need not tell you how my heart ached in crossing back the Zambesi to go southward. The Lord sustained me. He has not seen fit to grant me the desire of my heart—that of consecrating to his service in the field the rest of my days, but He has graciously given me tokens of his faithfulness. Since 1884, when we crossed the river, what changes in this land! The Lord has done great things indeed, and it is only the beginning. We have five stations manned by European missionaries, and on each there are many who profess to have found Jesus. To me the greatest cause of joy and thankfulness is the foundation of our school of evangelists, which we have entrusted to our brother Ad. Jalla, in every way well qualified for that work. He has opened it with ten pupils, all young Christian men of this country, and Mons. and Mdme. Mercier are on their way to start an industrial school at Sefula.

"The journey is exceedingly trying to me. We have taken nearly a month to make a few days' journey. The rain had transformed those parts into marshes and bogs. We hope to arrive at Buluwayo in a fortnight, and I may find there, by the Lord's own appointment, some medical help. If I am able, I intend to go to Basutoland to meet the brethren in conference at my old station of Leribe, and then proceed to England. You shall ere that hear again from me."

Belgian Missionary Church.

WILL you permit me again, after two years, to appeal to your readers on behalf of the Missionary Church of Belgium? I cannot believe that there is anywhere on the Continent greater need or greater opportunity. Throughout the mining and industrial districts, the people are thirsting for the Gospel. They flock, Roman Catholics and secularists, to the meetings where the Word is preached. There are many conversions, and every convert becomes in time a missionary. The result is a demand which is almost overwhelming for more workers and additional accommodation.

The committee have had to refuse many applications. They maintain more than a hundred churches and mission-halls, at the annual cost of £6000. But this year they are threatened with a deficit of nearly £1000. Pastors and people alike make great sacrifices. I would earnestly entreat old friends and new to come to the assistance of a work so hopeful and already so richly blessed.

C. ANDERSON SCOTT.

Open Air Mission.—The thirty-ninth anniversary of the South London Auxiliary was commemorated at the Pastors' College, Newington, on March 3. Major George Mackinlay presided. The report told of considerable activity during 1895. Meetings had been held in various parts of South London. Many interesting accounts of conversion were cited, and blessing attending work amongst drunkards. Addresses were given by the chairman, Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, and Pastor Thomas Spurgeon.

New Work in an Old Shop.

ON Sunday afternoon I visited the Women's P.S.A., in connection with Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road. The great church itself is the scene of a magnificent gathering of men, so the women's meeting has had to find quarters in the Girls' Home, Oakley-street, until its increased numbers compelled removal to a larger room—the hall behind the Nelson Coffee Tavern, 24, Lower Marsh. Many readers will doubtless remember the "old Penny Gaff," as this once notorious place was formerly called. I could not visit it without observing the changes that have taken place in the neighbourhood, which is now comparatively respectable and orderly, though still much in need of evangelistic work. In the old days scarcely a shop was closed on Sundays; all sorts of things were bought and sold in the streets; thieves and bad characters abounded, and crime was common.

When the old "Gaff" was first used as a mission, with Mr. H. W. Street for its honorary superintendent, it was almost impossible to keep whole windows in front of the house, and the throwing of vegetable refuse in the meetings was quite usual, while the building was in such a condition that I have seen half a dozen umbrellas open during a service indoors, when the rain poured in through the roof. Mr. Street gathered a devoted band of workers about him, and great good was done under the preaching of the superintendent, and such men as Ned Wright, George Murphy, W. R. Bradlaugh, and many others, less known, but not less faithful, whose spiritual children are still in many of the churches and missions round about. Only last Sunday a woman in the P.S.A. thanked God that, many years before, she had found Christ in one of the old "Gaff" meetings. The evident improvement in the neighbourhood is without doubt a result of such work as the "Gaff" mission, the late George Murphy's noble labours, the mission-work of the brothers Young, and many similar efforts—not least, Mr. Wm. Benson's long years of unrelenting service as the evangelist of Christ Church.

On Sunday, Rev. F. B. Meyer came in to the meeting and spoke with his characteristic tenderness, asking every woman present to answer his pleading for their surrender to Christ with a whole-hearted "I will." After he left, the meeting was continued in an earnest evangelistic manner. One of the happiest features of this meeting is that Mr. Benson finds his best helpers among the Christian women, who are banded together to help each other, and bring in their neighbours and friends. The results of such work are far greater than appear.

The Armenian Massacres.

THE Duke of Westminster has received a statement of the outrages in the Kharpoot vilayet of Asiatic Turkey, prepared by a Mohammedan official in the Turkish service, who writes:—"Strong as these statements are, they are not overdrawn. The Armenians on no occasion provoked these attacks. The orders for the massacre were received from Constantinople." For the purposes of these statistics the vilayet is divided up as follows:—Kharpoot and the surrounding villages, Arabgir and the surrounding villages, Egin, Pangan Azun, and the villages and the Kaimakamlik of Kaban, Maden Malati and district, Mutessariflik of Dersim, Palu and villages near Diabekir, and the totals are as under:—Killed by weapons, 29,544; burned to death, 1383; died from hunger, cold, and disease, 5561; died from fear, 793; wounded, 8000; houses burned, 28,562; forcible conversions to Islam, 15,179; churches, religious houses, and schools destroyed, 227; destitute persons existing on charity, 92,960; women forcibly married to Turks, 1532.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs has renewed in presence of Miss Clara Barton, the promises recently given by him and the Grand Vizier to Mr. Terrell, United States Minister, to permit qualified persons to travel in Anatolia for the purpose of distributing relief among the necessitous population. Nevertheless, it is known that the Sultan has given orders staying the execution of the irade authorising Miss Barton to send representatives to the Armenian provinces. Meanwhile large numbers of the inhabitants are suffering from hunger and cold.

Letter to the Editor.

"INDIFFERENTISM."

SIR,—Referring to the article on this subject in THE CHRISTIAN last week, it has often struck me that poor Gallio has had hard measure dealt out to him in being held up as the type of all the careless people in the world who are "indifferent to eternal realities," as the writer of the article expresses it. I have a vivid recollection, when a lad in the country town where I was brought up, of hearing at prayer-meetings the ever-recurring petition for "those who, Gallio-like, care for none of these things."

As far as appears from the short account in Acts xviii., it was not Gallio the private individual, but Gallio the deputy or proconsul of Achaia, who was not minded to be a judge of words and matters of Jewish law, and who, when all the Greeks (or "they all" R.V.) in their blind rage took Sosthenes and beat him before the judgment seat, cared for none of these things that were taking place before him.

Of course, Gallio may have been, and probably was, indifferent to "eternal realities"; but it is in the character of a judge that he comes before us, and, so far, his conduct may be taken as an apt illustration, though I doubt whether he himself was intended to stand for all time as a type of the class of people (alas! so numerous around us) who are utterly careless as to those solemn realities.—Yours faithfully,

LEA.

Among Italian Navvies.

SOME of your readers who purpose visiting the Continent this year may care to hear how they can combine ministry to their fellow-creatures with their own enjoyment. An English lady visiting Lucerne last summer found there a number of Italian navvies, to whom her kind words and interest were most acceptable, and she earnestly desires to meet with other ladies, able to speak a little Italian, to help in the work. Large numbers of Italians are employed wherever any building operations or road-making is carried on in Switzerland. Many thousands are in the country now, and I only know of three or four Christian workers among them.

"Our roads and railways are constructed at the cost of human suffering and human lives. As we rush through the St. Gothard Tunnel, for instance, can we realise that its construction cost six hundred lives? The road over the Malaja Pass was a scene of privation, suffering, and death, such as it would have wrung our hearts to see. It is to help these poor fellows by deed and word that we ask the assistance of men and women, who are filled with loving sympathy, divine daring, and humble perseverance.

"These brave Italian navvies lead a very industrious and frugal life, to earn enough to send to their families. In a strange country, and absent from home for months, they are very lonely, and are peculiarly open to a little kindly interest and teaching. Accidents are of daily occurrence, and it is very touching to see how patient and uncomplaining the sufferers are; and their gratitude for any kindness when ill is sincere and hearty. The great work of the Simplon Railway will shortly be commenced, and we trust this opportunity will not be neglected by English Christians who visit the beautiful Swiss mountains in comfort and safety. We want to be able to send an evangelist to the Simplon, and if possible a Christian doctor. We hear that the one appointed by the State is not sufficient for the many cases of accident and sickness. Perhaps some medical missionary, whose health may not permit him to go to Eastern lands, might be able to help in this way. Then we urgently want a portable tent or wooden barracks, which could be placed on the lines of work, where it is generally impossible to get a room or any place for meetings. To this tent we would ask the men to come on holidays and Sundays, to rest, write a little, etc. We would sometimes have bright Gospel meetings, with plenty of singing, which Italians like so much, and in the long dark evenings of autumn and winter this tent would be most valuable for a night school."

Other ways in which visitors will be able to help include the distribution of portions of Scripture (which are readily received and read with interest), and bringing musical instruments for use in the services. In the spring and summer of last year there were 5000 Italian masons and navvies in and around Lucerne, and it is expected there will be as many this year, as the loop line of the St. Gothard Railway is not finished.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Liverpool Association has on its roll over 3000 members.

In connection with the Leeds Association the mission band is doing grand service.

Mr. Meyer's Saturday afternoon Bible talks at Aldersgate-street are awakening great interest.

The Omagh Association reports over a hundred members, and much success in the Gospel and other aggressive work.

The Berwick Y.M.C.A. has been resuscitated, and a vigorous effort is being made to put the work upon a firm and permanent footing.

The report of the Walsall Association shows that over 100 new members joined last year. The various agencies are in full and fruitful activity.

On Thursday afternoon Alderman S. T. Mander opened a new and comfortable reading-room at the premises of the Wolverhampton Association.

The National Council of Scotland has secured the services of Mr. Charles Shirreffs for a series of evangelistic missions among the Northern Associations.

Mr. Wm. A. Boyd, of the Dublin Association, has held some successful Gospel meetings at Moyallon, co. Down. A Y.M.C.A. is to be started soon as a result of the mission.

Croydon Y.M.C.A. is arranging a cycle tour in Ireland in July next, via Bristol, Cork, Waterford, Killarney, Londonderry, Dublin, returning via Holyhead, &c., and visiting Y.M.C.A.'s en route.

The Auckland, New Zealand, Association has benefited very greatly from a mission held under its auspices by Rev. C. H. Yatman, of New York. The workers have raised during the visit of this evangelist a sum of £2500 in reduction of the debt on the Association building, and are greatly cheered by the revival they are experiencing.

The annual meeting of the Kingston-on-Thames Association was held on Thursday evening in the Albany Hall. The president, Captain Cundy, occupied the chair; and the principal address of the evening was delivered by Mr. H. H. Bemrose, M.P., of Derby. An attractive programme was successfully carried out; and an excellent report was presented by the general secretary, Mr. Arthur Hill.

The monthly meetings of the National Council were held on Friday. In the morning, attention was devoted to furthering the arrangements of the British Conference, which is to be held at Derby, June 16-19; and in the afternoon, in the absence of Sir George Williams, the executive met under the presidency of Mr. M. H. Hodder, for general business. The reports by the travelling secretaries of work in various parts of the country were of exceptional interest, and afforded much encouragement. A series of suggestions to Associations respecting the management of their athletic clubs was adopted after careful revision; and Dr. Wilson, as honorary secretary, presented a statement of the past year's work of the Y.M.C.A. Bible Reading Union, which is developing its work in different countries.

The forty-sixth annual meeting of the Dublin Association was held on Thursday in the Metropolitan Hall, Mr. John R. Wigham presiding. The general secretary, Mr. William A. Boyd, read extracts from the annual report which denoted marked progress. Archdeacon Madden, of Liverpool, said he was persuaded that one great mission of the Y.M.C.A. was to emphasise the brotherhood of Christians, they ought to keep it constantly before the world that in spite of their unhappy divisions there was a great bond of union amongst all those who loved the Lord Jesus Christ. Mr. S. A. McCracken urged the young men to strive to show themselves approved unto God and workmen that need not be ashamed. Rev. George Jackson, B.A., of Edinburgh, spoke on fearless witness-bearing. Revs. Henry Fiske and Wesley Guard also spoke.

Uganda.—Letters have come to hand from Bishop Tucker, who is still in Uganda. He writes in the warmest praise of the material improvement in the country since it has been a British protectorate. Order reigns in the place, and there has been a great increase in cultivation. But it is the spiritual progress in the place which naturally claims most of the bishop's attention. The new church in the capital has been built to hold 4000 people, and in the surrounding neighbourhood there are twenty-three smaller churches, which are all served from the capital, and attract large and attentive congregations. Scattered throughout the country there are now some 200 churches, where service is reverently and orderly conducted, and a church has been lately erected within the King's Compound. Mwanga himself is not yet a Christian, although his attitude towards Christianity has much improved. The native church has caught the missionary spirit, and large numbers of the native Christians go into all the country round as evangelistic agents.

The Y.W.C.A.

LORD OVERTOUN will be one of the speakers at the annual meeting on April 23, at Exeter Hall.

An appeal has been issued by the hon. sec. and president of the Boscombe Y.W.C.A., to raise funds for building a new institute, at an estimated cost of £8000.

The annual gatherings to be held in April will take the form of a members' conference. Full information may be had from Miss C. Probyn, Princess House, 106, Brompton-road, S.W.

Mr. Bell, of Stanwix, recently visited the Cumberland Association, and gave an earnest address to the young people, urging upon them a whole-hearted consecration of their lives to the Master's service.

At the annual meeting of the Dingwall Y.W.C.A. Rev. Mr. Macaskill occupied the chair, and in his introductory remarks referred to the good work done by the Association. The annual report stated that there were fifty-three names on the roll, and that the average attendance was twenty-nine.

The annual meeting of the Liverpool Y.W.C.A. took place on Feb. 28. The committee were able to give a very encouraging account of the work at Sandon House. The missionary interest is well sustained. The Association has 834 members. Unfortunately, there is a deficit of over £100 in the funds.

A meeting was held at Morley Halls, Regent-street, on Thursday, to bid farewell to three Y.W.C.A. workers from the Y.W.C.A. Training Home, Chelsea, who are leaving for India. The Misses Mold and Couch, out-going workers, and Miss Hunt, who is going as the new matron of the Calcutta Home, gave stirring addresses.

In a recent number of Our Outlook, the Highgate-road Chapel magazine, Mrs. Stephens gives an interesting account of an effort, made by the branch of the Y.W.C.A. over which she presides, to increase the interest on behalf of foreign missions. A sum, amounting to £123 16s. 10d., was received from 160 members and their friends.

A successful mission has been held at the Crouch End Institute. Meetings had been arranged for a week, but the presence of the Lord was so realised that Miss Hull, who was conducting the mission, consented to lengthen her visit. Blessing was poured out exceeding abundantly, souls were saved, and lips were opened. Although Miss Hull has left, the meetings are still continued.

The annual meeting of the Fulham branch was held on Thursday, at the Town Hall. Lord Kinnaid took the chair. The report records an increase of membership, the number standing at 186, and the attendance at the Bible-classes has kept up well. Lord Kinnaid urged that the object of such homes and institutes was not only to amuse and entertain, but to train the members in those principles which would bring a blessing to themselves, and lead them to be a blessing to others. Rev. S. Marriott (Wesleyan) gave an address on prayer, while Prebendary Webb-People spoke on self-sacrifice and self-consecration.

A League of Womanly Compassion has been formed by a few earnest ladies to pray daily for the women and children of Africa; to seek by every available means their uplifting and salvation; to give, if possible, at least one penny a day towards the support of a lady missionary, or towards educating and training a native child. Miss Annie Watkins, a nurse trained in St. Thomas's Hospital, has been accepted as the first missionary in connection with the League. Full information may be had from the secretary, Miss Bailey, 1, Gresham-street, London, E.C.

Mission to Mediterranean Garrisons.—Mrs. Todd Osborne in the thirteenth annual report of this work says:—"As I look over the letters of the past year I can only wonder and adore our gracious Lord for the many proofs He has given us of his presence and power. Souls have been saved on land and sea. Our workers have been untiring in their devotion, and there has been unbroken unity and love among them. There have been changes. Miss Iaa Campbell has gone to India with her husband, who is a true follower of the Lord. We pray that they may be used in blessing to many. Mr. Moffat, by the doctor's advice, had to bring home his wife and family, and now works as a missionary in Glasgow. On September 10, Captain Armstrong, for nine years our true yoke-fellow, was called to see his face and serve Him. A life lived wholly for God for twenty-five years had a fitting ending. The friend who gave so liberally for the purchase of our coffee-room, and to whom we owed £100, has kindly forgiven us the debt, for which we are most thankful; but there is still £284 of the debt owing for the Home, which I would gladly wipe out." Communications for Mrs. Todd Osborne should be addressed Rysland, Newton Mearns. N R

Christian Endeavour.

MR. IRA D. SANKEY took part in a recent C.E. convention at San Diego, Cal.

The Presbyterian C.E.S. of Holden, Mo., has now four volunteers for the mission-field.

The New York City Union now has an admirable organ, The Endeavour, a bright sixteen-page monthly.

In Salt Lake City the C.E. Union has a committee that visits the hotels every Saturday, and personally addresses invitation cards to the services on Sunday to all the guests. The back of the card contains a list of the city churches, with the names of the pastors and the time of the services.

The president of one C.E.S. asked each member to pay one penny a week for one year to missions, half for home and half for foreign. Each person who so pledged promised also to endeavour to get at least two outsiders to take the same pledge. By the close of the year over £30 had been raised for missions.

The Michigan Endeavor tells about a society of that State that discontinued "the contribution habit" two years ago, taking up the pledge plan of systematic giving. Now the society "has so much money on hand that it hardly knows what to do with it, and its contribution to the church funds has been largely increased."

The first meeting of the Christian Endeavour Union of Great Britain and Ireland will be held at Bristol on Whit-Monday, when the National Council will be elected from among members previously nominated. To ensure invitation to that meeting the names of representatives and personal members must reach the hon. secretaries of the National Council on or before March 25.

Rhode Island's latest and best convention met at Woonsocket, on February 12. This was the tenth annual gathering of the Christian Endeavour forces of the State. In attendance, interest, and helpfulness the convention excelled any that has gone before. It was a characteristically Christian Endeavour convention, and the spirit of practical evangelism that possesses Christian Endeavourers the world around found utterance in the noon evangelistic meeting, conducted by the delegates.

Scottish Notes.

THE Aberdeen U.P. Presbytery have had an interesting conference and public meeting on foreign missions.

There are thirty-five missionaries at work under the Glasgow City Mission. Special efforts are made on behalf of police, cabmen, tram-car men, telegraph boys, &c.

Mr. C. T. Studd and Mr. Williamson addressed a meeting in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Aberdeen, last week, in connection with the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union.

Rev. A. Robinson, of Kilburn, is to be proceeded against by his presbytery, by way of libel, in connection with the publication of his heretical book, "The Saviour in the Newer Light."

Some friends in Aberdeen came together last week and bade farewell to Rev. W. J. Moir, of the Lovedale Mission, who is returning to his field of service. His wife is unable to return with him owing to ill-health.

An interesting conference on "Religion and Morals" was held at Inverness last week under the auspices of the Free Church. Addresses were given on Sabbath desecration, work among the young, etc., and there was a suggestive discussion.

Two earnest Christian workers are urgently required to help mission work in the Punjab, in connection with the Established Church of Scotland, particularly two friends who could go at their own charges. Further information will be gladly given by the convener, 49, Moray-place, Edinburgh.

The Gospel meetings begun by Mr. David Rea in Glasgow last December were brought to a close on Friday evening. There have been many cases of professed conversion. The meetings in the Olympia were held for seven Sunday evenings. At the closing meeting last Sunday, over 10,000 must have entered the place.

A Home for Motherless Babes was opened on Thursday in connection with the Chiswick Mission. The beginning is a small one, but it is hoped it may grow. At the opening, Mr. R. T. Smith, the head of the Mission, was warmly congratulated upon the success which has attended his efforts. The day nursery branch of the enterprise promises to be successful. Some of the promoters believe that small orphanages of this type, possessing as they do the home element, are likely to have a more beneficial influence in the formation of youthful character than larger institutions. Mr. R. T. Smith's address is 1, Thornton-avenue, Chiswick.

Obituary.

MR. HENRY C. BOWEN.

THE death is recorded of this well-known American man of letters, for many years the editor of the New York Independent. He was trained for a commercial career, and was a dry-goods merchant up to the time of the Civil War. He became one of the proprietors of The Independent when it was established as a progressive and anti-slavery organ in 1848. In 1861 Mr. Bowen left commerce and devoted himself wholly to the interests of the paper, to whose prosperity and influence he has largely contributed. He has been active in religious work through all his public life.

MISS JULIA FOX.

Miss Fox, of Kensington Park-road, Bayswater, who passed away on Thursday week, had attained an advanced age, was a devoted Christian, and an ardent supporter of Christian work. Her name will always be associated with the "Luther Home" for Protestant ladies, of which, in conjunction with the late Miss Julia Corke, she was the founder. Miss Fox took a deep interest in many Evangelical and Protestant societies, and very specially in the operation of the Church Association in endeavouring to stem the tide of Romanism and Ritualism within the borders of the Church of England.

REV. W. B. PHILLIPS, CALCUTTA.

Tidings have been received at the offices of the London Missionary Society announcing the unexpected death of Rev. W. B. Phillips, of Calcutta, one of the most honoured and respected missionaries labouring in the Indian mission field. Trained for the missionary life at Western College, Plymouth, he left England in 1875 in connection with the London Missionary Society, and, together with his wife, laboured with great success among the natives. Mr. Phillips only returned to his work in India from furlough spent in England, last November, and the announcement of his death in the prime of life will be received with great regret.

MADAME THEODORE MONOD.

A sudden and most heavy affliction has befallen Pastor Théodore Monod in the departure of his loved wife, after two days' brief illness. Madame Monod was apparently in good health a few days since. Her husband left for Lyons on March 4 to attend the funeral of his nephew, the son of Pastor Leopold Monod, who had met with a sudden and tragic death by swallowing a glass of deadly poison in mistake for a glass of lemonade when occupied in his dark-room at preparing photographs. M. Théodore Monod had arranged to stay over Sunday at Lyons and preach in his brother's church, when he was called back to Paris, and arrived half an hour after his wife had breathed her last. W. S.

Medical Missions.—In the report in last week of meetings held in various parts of England in connection with the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society the mention of Tunbridge Wells was omitted. One meeting had been planned to be held in the Great Hall; this was so successful that next day, on a few hours' notice, a second meeting was conducted, and drew together a large gathering. Both meetings produced a deep impression. Meetings have also been held in Ipswich, Chelmsford, and other places.

The Salvation Army in America.—A somewhat serious blow was struck at the Salvation Army last week. Mr. William E. Dodge, one of Mr. Ballington Booth's wealthy friends, declined to let the new-comers of the Army enjoy the further use of Cooper Union Hall for their Sunday evening exercises. The hall was hired by Mr. Ballington Booth for Army purposes with Mr. Dodge's money. New York headquarters have also been secured by Mr. Ballington Booth at the Bible House facing the Cooper Union.—Daily Chronicle.

Madagascar.—A special correspondent of the Aberdeen Free Press writes:—"The new French Resident-General, M. Lauroche, has arrived, bringing a staff of forty officials with him. He seems a very superior man, and one that is most anxious to do the right thing by all, and the very best he can for this country and people; but as he and his wife are Protestants, they are being cursed by the Catholics both here and in France. The Catholic bishops blessed the expedition, sung 'Te Deums' over the fall of the capital, and now they have taken to cursing the French Government for sending out a Protestant Resident-General; but it is of little consequence, only that curses are said to have a knack of coming home to roost! The French are making changes here, for they have already set the Malagasy to repair their ways and make the break-neck roads we had here in the capital into something like decent streets."

Personalia.

Mr. S. Pyall Diprose, who has so long laboured in and around Narberth, South Wales, is removing to Henllis House, Cwmbran, Newport, Mon. He asks prayer that fresh labourers may be thrust forth into these isolated and needy districts.

Miss Annie R. Taylor has secured a pass authorising Miss Ferguson to reside with her at Yatong. At date of writing she was expected shortly to reach Darjeeling, whence she would travel on ponies—a seven days' journey—to join Miss Taylor at Yatong, Tibet.

Rev. Thomas Sunderland, minister of the United Free Church, Manor Park, was one of the injured passengers in the sad accident on the Great Northern Railway on Saturday night. Unhappily, two persons were killed by the accident, while several are in a very serious state.

Rev. W. L. Watkinson, the Wesleyan editor, was to leave about the end of this month for America, as British representative to the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which meets in May at Cleveland, Ohio, but a sudden attack of illness has for the time prostrated him, and raised the question as to his physical ability to stand the strain of the official tour.

Mr. Thomas Walker, J.P., who had made a noble offer of £5000 to build a central mission hall in Bolton, has met with a very serious loss, the tannery of his firm, Messrs. Walker and Sons, being totally destroyed by fire on Monday week. The damage is estimated at £150,000, and the loss is only partly covered by insurance. Eight hundred workpeople have been thrown out of employment and one life has been lost.

Mr. Lumsden, who has filled prominent and responsible financial posts in the Salvation Army headquarters, and has had "unique experience of Christian finance," has accepted the post of financial secretary to the West London Mission. Mr. Price Hughes, in the editorial notes of Advance, expresses his conviction that Mr. Lumsden's co-operation will relieve him of an intolerable financial burden, and will add years to his life.

Rabbi Lichtenstein is expected to arrive in England, at the end of this week, on a short visit. He will address meetings in Edinburgh and Glasgow, and remain in Scotland until March 23. On Friday, 27th inst., a meeting will be held in Exeter Hall to bid him welcome. As this aged servant of God has given up all for Christ, many will be glad to see him and hear his words. Information regarding the Rabbi's testimony on the Continent may be had from Rev. David Baron, 23, Grove-road, Highgate-road, N.W.

Rev. Egerton R. Young and family sail for Canada, by Cunard steamer Servia, May 12. Since the Liverpool Students' Convention, in addition to his many other engagements, he has addressed large gatherings of students at Edinburgh, Glasgow, Oxford, Cheshunt, and other places, upon missionary topics. Mr. Young's address until he leaves will be c/o Mr. T. E. Tydeman, 21, Gutter-lane, E.C. He will be glad to be the almoner of any donations that friends may wish to make for the evangelisation of the Red Indians in the Wild North Land.

Mrs. Amanda Smith.—Four years since, through the kindness of some friends, an annuity of £10 was secured to Amanda Smith. Although she has invitations to England and Australia, she is now engaged in providing an orphanage for coloured children in Illinois, her present residence being in Chicago. She can get suitable premises on reasonable terms; 5000dols. will be necessary to make a good beginning and secure the project from failure. When she has received sufficient funds, trustees and managers will be appointed. M. DAVIS.

St. Margaret's, Foxrock, co. Dublin.

Requests for Prayer.—For blessing on a week of prayer, South Shields Tabernacle, commencing March 8th.—For a nine days' mission to be held in the Shacklewell Baptist Chapel, from March 14th to 22.—For blessing on special mission, March 9 to 22, in Theydon Lodge Mission-hall, Theydon Bois, by Mr. John Greenwood.—For Gipsy Smith's large meetings in America.—For blessing on the opening services of the new hall in connection with the Gospel Tent Mission, Barry Dock, to be held by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh.—For special services at Christ Church, Reedham-street, Choumert-road, Peckham, by Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, from March 15 to 23.—For a series of meetings in London on behalf of Ireland, March 18 to 24.—For blessing on Gospel meetings at Hockley, by Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Alexander. Praise.—For answered prayer in blessing to souls in the mission at the Soldiers' Home, Aldershot, for which prayer was asked a fortnight ago.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. D. L. Moody has conducted a twelve days' mission at Nashville, Tennessee. The churches have been greatly stirred, and careless ones have been brought to a knowledge of Jesus Christ.

Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, E.—Much blessing attended the mission here, by Mr. George R. Cairns, of Chicago, during February. He was specially used of God among the boys and youths of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, many of whom have given evidence of real change of heart. S. E. B.

Rochford, Essex.—An eleven days' mission has been conducted at the Wesleyan Chapel here by Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Alexander. The numbers and interest increased, and many made their way to the inquiry-room. The church members have been quickened, and it has been a time of great rejoicing.

Ireland.—Gospel meetings of an encouraging kind have been held in Saintfield Presbyterian churches, by Mr. S. G. Montgomery. Similar meetings have been held in Sligo, by Rev. John Good, Methodist evangelist; at Churchill, by Rev. Wm. Bryan; at Brookborough, by Mr. F. Bovenizer; and at Achnacloy, co. Tyrone, by Rev. H. Ball.

Ballinderry.—Messrs. Peatt and Crozier, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, have finished a most encouraging series of meetings at Ballinderry, near Lisburn. Frequently crowds were to be seen outside their large movable hall, unable to get in. The Lord poured out his Spirit in a remarkable manner, and the whole country seemed moved. Young and old were led to the Saviour.

Hurstpierpoint, Sussex.—A united mission has been held by Mr. John Bennett, of the Evangelisation Society. Meetings were held nightly either in Mission Hall or Methodist Chapel, and three meetings on the Lord's Day. Many came long distances to hear this servant of the Lord deliver his faithful message. It is a great cause of thankfulness that a united mission has been held in this village.

Pau, France.—Lord Radstock writes: "There is much cause for thankfulness here. Five English meetings and five French meetings a week are well attended. At one meeting there were three clergymen (high, low, and broad), two French pastors, the Scotch minister, Darbyites, and several Roman Catholics. Good meetings are held also at Biarritz. Pray for a work of the Holy Spirit."

Leytonstone.—Special Sunday evening services at the Assembly Rooms, held by Messrs. Borton Brothers, are being well attended, and a steady work of conversion is going on, some who have been under conviction for a long period having found peace in believing. A series of week night meetings for the deepening of spiritual life are now being arranged. Will believers pray for blessing?

Poole.—This town has received blessing by means of a fortnight's united mission, conducted by Mr. George Clarke, at the Amity Hall. Many have professed to accept Christ as Saviour and King; the older Christians have been established, and the Lord's work in every evangelical denomination has been quickened and strengthened. The parish church has started a branch of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour, this making the third in the town. A. B.

Forest Gate.—Mr. Henry Thorne has held a mission at Christ Church, February 22 to March 2. Gracious and manifold blessings have been poured out, and each evening we have had cause to praise God for souls won. The mission commenced with a meeting for workers, addressed by Mr. Thorne, the hall being practically filled. At his concluding meeting every part of the building was packed, and numbers unable to gain admission. The attendance at the Bible readings were above our expectation. We render heartfelt thanks to God. C. G. P.

Belfast.—A deeply interesting mission was conducted at Dunmurry, Belfast, by Mr. W. R. Lane. He preached on Sabbath, February 23, morning and evening, and on each evening of the week, save Saturday. Never has it been my good fortune to listen to more Scriptural, earnest, touching, heart-searching, or effective addresses. The whole district was moved by his appeals, and on the last night a number of persons confessed Jesus Christ as their Saviour. One of the most effective parts of Mr. Lane's work here was a talk with young men, whom he asked specially to remain one evening after the others had been dismissed. A.

Appeal.

BOARD SCHOOL CHILDREN.—Mrs. Anna Pennington, hon. secretary of the Free Dinner Fund, 16, Crossfield-road, South Hampstead, N.W., writes:—"We are at the present moment without funds to sustain our work; probably this deficiency is due to the mildness of the winter. Whilst it is true that severe weather greatly aggravates suffering amongst the poor, and increases the number of those who are in poverty; it is also true, that in attendance at Board Schools in poor localities, there are always many children deplorably in need of good food."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE papers read at the Free Church Congress on Temperance and Social Purity brought very clearly into view the fact that our social improvement can never be safely entrusted to the police, who, though appointed and paid to check drunkenness and disorderliness, will never do it unless they are watched and encouraged by voluntary workers. Mr. Joshua Rowntree pointed to the fact that in Lancashire the proportion of convictions for drunkenness, as compared with London, is three times greater, just because the Lancashire police are three times as alert as the Metropolitan police. He pleaded for societies of self-denying men and women to take the work in hand. The same need is greater in regard to disorderly houses, because the difficulty of dealing with them is greater. The Vigilance Association, we notice, reports an increased amount of police activity and efficiency wherever the police are backed up by organised voluntary workers.

The Centenary of the C.M.S. will fall in 1899, and already steps are being taken to make it both a memorable and a useful occasion. The committee intend, in the interval between now and 1899, to review all its work, and to examine its position and methods, in order to find out weak points, to correct errors, to rearrange forces if necessary, and to inaugurate fresh plans. One of the chief objects will be to increase very largely the evangelistic forces of the Society. This purpose and plan are eminently wise. The best of societies need not only constant care in the working of them, but also a thorough overhauling now and again, in order to see where abuses may have crept in, or mistakes have been made. That the C.M.S. should be looking in the direction of the increased employment of native agency in spreading the Gospel is a happy augury. Englishmen, no matter how devoted, cannot save the world; the several nations must, under God, work out their own redemption.

The Westminster Gazette is doing good service to commerce and morality by admitting a correspondence on "Commercial Corruption." The cases adduced as illustrations are sad reading. "An Old Contractor" gives a sketch of some of the things done by a partner of his, which reveal deplorable corruption in professions which innocent folk might have thought were pure. This partner, once a working man and of a kindly nature, stood so well with the engineers of the different companies that he could do anything with them. Out of so-called profits on contracts amounting to £25,000, a good deal had to be paid in bribes. Under such conditions honesty is impossible. The Gospel can never flourish until such sins are confessed and forsaken. Here is one great hindrance at home to the spread of the truth.

Mr. Charles Booth's books on the condition of our London poor ought to give us a higher opinion of the mental and moral qualities which are required for the carrying on of certain forms of trade which we probably ignore or despise. Brains are wanted at a costermonger's barrow as well as in a merchant's office. "Great," says Mr. Booth, "are the virtues demanded," of the costermonger; "good judgment, promptitude, energy, prudence, a knowledge of mankind, a ready wit." Were we to take the trouble to see how much intelligence is spent upon humble work, we should have a greater respect for the workers, and this would greatly aid Christian zeal and Christian effort.

Week by week some step forward is taken with the arbitration movement between England and America. The publication of the Venezuelan Bluebook, in which the British case against that Republic is stated, has favourably impressed the politicians on the other side. On both sides public opinion is strongly pacific, a position urgently advocated by leading thinkers in every department. Art, Letters, Science, Philosophy join hands with Religion in this matter with one accord, as stated in these columns last week. At the same time the greatest watchfulness must be exercised by all who love peace. The atmosphere of the whole world is charged with electric forces, and only the lightning conductor of prayer and humble waiting on God can keep these perilous energies from explosion. Most wars, as a writer in The North American Review says, occur at moments when slumbering passions are suddenly awakened into life by an "accident." Without widespread vigilance there are plenty of such passions stirring in their sleep at present to involve the world in a universal war.

A letter from Dr. Griffith John, in the monthly Chronicle of the L.M.S., describing one of his missionary tours in China, brings two things into clear relief, viz., the value of the colporteur's work, and the injury which is done to Christianity by the diffusion of a debased form of it. Dr. John baptized a man who two years before had bought three books from a colporteur, which he read, and by means of which he was converted. He cast off his idolatry at once, and, though alone in the place, remained true to his convictions until, a native preacher coming that way, he made himself known to him. This is one of many instances which go to prove that when once the Gospel has gained admission into a country its spread cannot be traced or measured. We may be sure that China and India contain more converts than the missionaries or native preachers know of.

On the other side, Christianity has one of its worst obstructions in the evil influence of Roman Catholicism, which misrepresents its spirit and misinterprets its teachings. Yet the people, when once the true follower of Christ has found his way amongst them, soon detect the difference between him and the priest. They can see that the pastor preaches, the priest does not; the pastor throws his doors open, the priest closes his door; the pastor welcomes the people and talks with them, the priest keeps strangers at a distance and will not allow even converts to come near without kneeling; the pastor has a doctrine to preach, the priest has nothing. One could wish that some English people had a greater amount of discernment, and more love for the free and equal spirit of the Gospel of the Son of Man.

Signora Mario writes to The Daily News a letter which throws a vivid but lurid light on the state of Italy. She thinks that the defeats sustained in Africa may prove of great use in teaching the nation to walk in a humbler and quieter way. She is sure that Italy will be a sadder and a wiser nation for a long time to come. In point of fact, however, it is not the people but the rulers who are to blame for the policy which has brought such bitter humiliation. Could Italy only see "in this her day the things that belong to her peace," she would attend to the condition of her own people, and, by strengthening herself within, guard against outside foes and against the worst foe of all, the man at the Vatican, who will seek his chance in her humiliation and weakness.

Writing in the Homiletic Review, Dr. Josiah Strong, of New York, states that, according to experience gained in America in the work of assimilating the foreign immigrants to the native population, the greatest difficulty is not in race or in language, but in religion. Irish, German, and French Protestants easily melt into American life with its thoughts, impulses, hopes, and ambitions; Roman Catholics do not. Jews are always a separate people until they change their faith, when they mix with the Gentile peoples, and lose their distinctiveness. It is argued that the chief portion of the ignorance and vice comes from the foreign people, and the question of Christianising them becomes a matter of supreme national importance, for it has the effect, also, of turning them into good citizens. The American nation, to be safe, must be built up on the faith on which it was originally founded.

Dr. Strong thinks that the young persons of the Churches ought to be employed in the work of distributing Christian literature in every home of the United States for the purpose of advancing this patriotic and sacred end. Besides which, were these foreign populations permeated with the Gospel, they would certainly become missionaries to their own countrymen at home. In 1895 some 1170 Japanese were united with the Methodist Churches of California. If thousands of Chinese, Russians, Bohemians, Spaniards, Mexicans, and Spanish-Americans were converted, they would often take home something better than a fortune to be enjoyed by their relations. We speak of carrying the Gospel to the people, but in this providential arrangement the people are being carried to the Gospel, no doubt for the purpose of a swifter and wider diffusion.

American girls who desire a college education, but lack the means whereby to purchase it, solve the question in a way that would be worth emulating in this country were the conditions favourable. This particular plan of self-help is that which allows them to pay a large part of their expenses by assisting in the domestic department of the college, or by doing the same in the boarding-houses where they live, by working in offices, or by singing in choirs. This combination of physical labour with intellectual study is a method of solving a difficult problem that cannot be too highly commended. One of the difficulties of the higher education of women, in this country at least, is the fact that their mental training often interferes with their practical efficiency in the home. This plan combines the needed twofold training which fits women for their future spheres perfectly. It is capable of being applied in many ways. The article on this subject, by Miss Elizabeth L. Banks, in the Nineteenth Century, should be read by parents for this and other reasons.

The "failure of philanthropy" is the subject of a striking article in Macmillan's Magazine. The writer contends that the present failure is a real one, its object being mainly to get poverty and suffering out of the way, rather than to eradicate their causes. He finds the reason of this in the low range of motives at work among philanthropists. The remedy is Christian godliness—"the continued consciousness of a power making for right, the sense of a love of which all other loves are but broken lights," the love, that is, of the Son of God for men as the lapsed children of God. "The poor man in the street wants not warmth and food: he wants to think, to be good, and to love." "The service of God goes before the service of man." This view is profoundly true. We can only serve our fellow-beings truly by realising their true interests in the light of the Gospel of Christ. First the soul, then the body.

This is also the subject of a scathing exposé of the new conception of Jesus as the demagogue which is finding favour among the revolutionaries of the working classes, from the pen of Rev. Walter Walsh, in the current Contemporary Review. He points out that the "three cheers for the Man of Nazareth," won by Mr. Ben Tillett from a crowd of strikers, were given for the Joshua in Him rather than for the Jesus, for the Liberator rather than the Redeemer. He is represented as an agitator for higher wages rather than for a higher life, as an advocate for shorter hours rather than one who has purchased freedom from the slavery of sin. If this be the case, it would certainly be well for those Christian people who advocate an alliance with the demagogic agitations of the time to realise that in succumbing to this tendency they are false to the fundamental mission of Christ. The amelioration of social conditions is certainly a true corollary to the Gospel, but the salvation of the soul is its primary message.

Self-denial is not self-control. To deny self is to ignore it, to treat it as non-existent, to dethrone it from the sovereign place in the heart, that Christ may assume the sceptre and rule by his own unquestionable right. The man who subdues his lower nature that he may rule it exercises self-control. It demands that we give our higher nature to Him, that He may control that, and through that subdue and eradicate the lower. When this act of absolute self-surrender is completed, it is found that the true self, so far from being impoverished, is really enriched. Then service becomes perfect freedom, and the slave of Christ is raised with Him on the throne from which the whole life is governed in a harmony and a joy that cannot be uttered.

Sabbath Rest or Labour.

THE agitators for the secularisation of the Lord's Day have secured Parliamentary sanction for the Sunday opening of the museums and art galleries of the metropolis, subject, however, to the following restrictions: (1) That they shall not be opened till the afternoon; (2) that no officer or servant of the respective institutions shall work more than six days a week; and (3) that no such servant or officer shall be compelled against his will to undertake Sunday duty.

As concerns the first of these it will be noticed, as we showed last week, that the galleries, etc., will be open mostly during the closed hours of the public-houses. In regard to (2) and (3), these safeguards look well on paper, and may be observed in the case of those at present employed; but in practical working, when it comes to selecting applicants for future service, preference will naturally be given to those who have no conscientious scruples. From that point it will be but one step, easily taken, to have the six day limit evaded or removed altogether.

Then, in the matter of labour involved, it is quite fallacious to estimate it by the number of persons actually engaged upon the premises. If the attendance of visitors is at all large—and if it is not, it shows the innovation is neither demanded by the public nor required—we must further consider the vast army of men employed on railways, buses, cabs, vans, and facilities of locomotion of every class; those, too, who will be led willingly or of necessity to cater for the physical wants of the expected crowds—for it will certainly not be permitted to have the floors of the institutions strewn with the usual leavings of many who "take their lunch with them," such as litter and scraps, and fragmentary tarts of doubtful jam. The shopkeepers in the vicinity will necessarily be faced with the temptation to open for the sake of extra business; and if one does the others must, or suffer loss, because the man who makes money on Sunday can afford to undersell his competitors in the week.

This is no pessimistic idea. We have to judge human nature as we find it, and, a start once made, it is easy to see how the movement will toboggan down the hill with ever increasing speed. For example, take the following from The Yachting World:—

If the owners of British boats now in the Mediterranean consent to race their craft on the day of the week when the most enjoyment can be given to the most people, why should they not also give the British working classes an opportunity of seeing the cracks race in home waters on the same day of the week? Just imagine the opening of the Thames season taking place on a Sunday. What a brilliant scene it would be, and what enjoyment it would give to thousands who have never seen, and probably under present conditions will never have an opportunity of witnessing, a first-class yacht race? A leading club of the cruising description, having its headquarters on the Lower Thames, has just decided to try the experiment, having placed at least a couple of events down on its programme for decision on Sundays.

And so it will go on, in spite of all the promises and reservations made at these earlier stages. First of all, our countrymen abroad become demoralised by the laxity of the Continental Sunday, and then, "If they can enjoy these things, why cannot we?" is the argument which at once finds an echo in the hearts of those who are "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God," and their willing hands soon strive for its fulfilment.

Meantime, on the Continent itself legislation is proceeding on precisely opposite lines, being all in the direction of decreasing facilities for sports and amusements on the Lord's Day, years of experience having taught that it inevitably ends in "seven days' work for six days' pay."

The working classes, who are made the stalking-horse for these innovations, concerts, lectures, and what not, will suffer rather than benefit thereby; while the people who patronise them most are those who have both leisure and means to do so on other days.

Opportunity will yet be found to oppose the vote to be taken in the House of Commons for providing the necessary funds to carry out the project.

A Blind Child's Discovery.

ONCE heard a clergyman tell what struck me as a very significant story regarding our deafness to those who are trying to teach us the beauty of heavenly things.

It was a true incident of which he spoke, and was about a little blind child, who had never known the blessing of sight until some wonderful operation was performed, and, to her mother's joy, she was pronounced cured.

He attracted all our attention and woke all our sympathies in the pathetic way in which he described the poor child's excitement when the bandage was first removed, and she was allowed to take her first look upon God's beautiful world.

One seemed to see the trembling little creature, and hear her gasp in almost painful rapture and amazement as, clinging to her mother's hand, she stared around the country scene in which she had lived all her little life, yet never known until that wonderful moment.

The parent waited, almost as much excited, to hear what the child would say, for had she not been the patient one to try and explain all that upon which the freshly-opened eyes were now gazing? Had she not toiled with all her ability to make the afflicted one to behold fair sights by careful description, by living word-pictures? And yet the little child turned now, and at last, finding her breath, cried out with a great reproach;

"Oh, you never told me the world was like this!"

Then the poor mother burst into tears.

"I did, my darling, I did, but you were deaf because you were blind, and could not understand my words."

It is years since I heard this little story, but I have never forgotten the deep meaning with which it struck upon my heart. How many of us are like that poor blind little child! We hear the beauty of God and his love told into our ears; we hear the entreaty to look up, to realise all that is in store for those who acknowledge Him their King and Master; but our eyes are sealed, and our ears hear, but do not understand.

And how many, too, like the child, when first a glimpse of heaven shines before us, are as startled at the thoughts of the joy (that might have been ours long ago) around and above us, and cry aloud to our teachers:

"You never told us God's love was like this!"

Well might they reply:

"You were deaf; you were blind." But, unlike the child, we are free, if we will, to see; and "he who hath ears, let him hear."—Friendly Greetings.

Thou must be true thyself,

If thou the truth wouldst teach;—

Thy soul must overflow, if thou

Another's soul wouldst reach;

It needs the overflow of heart

To give the lips full speech.

Christ's Lordship over Death.

"Jesus said, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?"—John xxi, 23.

ONLY the spiritually blind can fail to perceive the Divine glory of our Lord streaming through the veil of his humanity as presented to us in the Gospels. Like his sacred person, which in the presence of human sorrow and need "could not be hid," so neither can his deity. Though "the Word" (con- descending to our feeble intelligence) "became flesh," yet "the Word was God." The tabernacle of his flesh could not prevail to conceal the effulgent glory of its Divine tenant.

If He speaks, it is "as one having authority." His sayings involve the possession of omnipotence. He speaks as one whose gaze comprehends in its survey the past, the present, and the future; whose purview embraces at once the triple domain of heaven, and earth, and hell. He apportions eternal destinies. He invites a weary world to come to Him for rest. He claims to be competent to expiate a world's iniquities, and to pronounce judgment on each child of Adam. Life spiritual and physical, resurrection alike of dead souls and bodies, He claims as his prerogative. In short, there is no attribute peculiar to God-head which, directly or tacitly, He does not claim to possess.

The passage before us is one of many witnesses to this fact. Earlier (v. 19) He has "signified by what death" Peter "should glorify God." In this, indeed, He did no more than other prophets had done before Him. But in his reply to Peter's question there is something immeasurably beyond the function of a predictor of future events. Here He claims the supreme control over human existences, with power to protract or terminate them at his pleasure. If Peter departs by "the way of the cross," while John tarries indefinitely in the body, his will determines both events. His will conditions our recall from this earthly scene or our continuance therein. Verily, "our times are in his hand."

To that large class of believers, timid by constitution, beyond others threatened with sickness, and shrinking from the shadow of a death that seems always impending over them, —what solace should this fact afford? He is "the God of my life" (Psa. xlii.); that life of mine, so frail and so cherished, so threatened and beleaguered, subject of such anxious thought and provision. His sovereign will determines the measure of my days, the limits of my sojourn, the process and period of my dissolution. The time, the manner, the scene, and circumstances of our exodus from the body are of his arrangement; nay more, the very exemption from dying of those who shall "tarry till He comes," is the ordination of his will. In all these dispensations, faith assures herself that his love and wisdom have consulted at once God's highest glory and our own best interests.

Blessed Lord! Death encountered Thee in his full panoply of terror. "The curse was in Thy cup." The darkness of desertion, the midnight of wrath, mantled thine expiring spirit. And the unutterable love that wrought in Thee to save us at such a sacrifice and cost, may well be trusted to adjust all the details of our departure. All that was denied to Thee, O dying Lamb of God, in the way of alleviation and relief, will be present to minister to my expiring needs. All the elements of penal suffering and judicial death that invested thy decease with unique terror, shall for this very reason, be assuredly absent from mine.

Blessed it is to know, that when my soul shall slip her earthly moorings, she shall not drift into eternity, like a derelict vessel at the mercy of wind and wave; but will be steered by the Divine Pilot into the haven of eternal rest.

"Small Sins."

By DR. ALEXANDER MACLAREN.*

PROPERLY speaking, the words "great" and "small" should not be applied in reference to things about which "right" and "wrong" are the proper words to employ. The magnitude of a transgression does not depend on the greatness of the act which transgresses—according to human standards—but on the intensity with which the sinful element is working in it. For acts make crimes, but motives make sins. If you take a bit of prussic acid and bruise it down, every little microscopic fragment will have the poisonous principle in it, and it is very irrelevant to ask whether it is as big as a mountain or small as a grain of dust: it is poison all the same. So to talk about magnitude in regard to sins is rather to introduce a foreign consideration. Still, recognising that there is a reality in the distinction that people make between great sins and little sins, though it is a superficial distinction and does not go down to the bottom of things, let us deal with it.

I say, then, that small sins, by reason of their numerousness, have a terrible accumulative power. They are like the green flies on our rose bushes, or the microbes that our medical friends talk so much about nowadays. Like them, their power of mischief does not depend on their magnitude; and, like them, they have a tremendous capacity of reproduction. It would be easier to find a man that had not done any one sin, than to find a man that had only done it once. And it would be easier to find a man who had done no evil, than a man who had not been obliged to make the second edition of his sin an enlarged one. For this is the present Nemesis of all evil—that it requires repetition, partly to still conscience, partly to satisfy excited tastes and desires; so that animal indulgence in drink and the like is a type of what goes on in the inner life of every man, in so far as the second dose has to be stronger than the first, in order to produce an equivalent effect.

Then, remember that all our evil doings, however insignificant they may be, have a strange affinity with one another; so that you will find that to go wrong in one direction almost inevitably tends to a whole series of consequential transgressions of one sort or another. You remember that old story about the soldier who was smuggled into a fortress, concealed in a hay cart, and opened the gates of a virgin citadel to his allies outside. Every evil thing, great or small, that we admit into our lives, still more into our hearts, is charged with the same errand as he had. "He taketh with him seven other spirits worse than himself, and they dwell there." "None of them," says one of the prophets, describing the doleful creatures that haunt the ruins of a deserted city, "shall by any means want its mate"; and the satyrs of the islands and of the woods join together and hold high carnival in the city. So our little transgressions open the door for great ones,

Let me remind you how in these little repeated acts of trivial transgression, which scarcely produce any effect on conscience or on memory, but make up so large a portion of so many of our lives, lies one of the most powerful instruments for making us what we are. If we indulge in slight acts of transgression, be sure of this, that we shall pass from them to greater ones. For one man who leaps or falls all at once into sin which the world calls gross, there are a thousand who slide into it. The storm only blows down the trees whose hearts have been eaten out and their roots loosened. And when you see a man, having a reputation for wisdom and honour, all at once coming crash down and disclosing his baseness, be sure that he began with small deflections from the path of right. The evil works underground, and if we yield to little temptations, when great ones come we shall fall their victims.

I do not desire to preach a Gospel of fear, but I cannot help feeling that, very largely, in this day, the ministration of the Christian Church is defective in that it does not give sufficient, though sad and sympathetic, prominence to the plain teaching of Christ and of the New Testament as to future retribution for present sin. We shall "every one of us give account of himself to God"; and if the account is long enough it would foot up to an enormous sum, though each item may be only halfpence. The weight of a lifetime of little sins will be enough to crush a man down with guilt and responsibility when he stands before that Judge.

Look Up.

LOOK up, O child of grief,
God will thy burdens bear;
And though He rules the universe,
Thy needs shall be his care.
When thou has reached the end
Of all that thou canst do,
That moment He will send his aid,
To help thee safely through.
When not one added drop
Thy cup of grief will hold,
Then will he send the sweet relief,
In tenderness untold.
If none of humankind
Thy willing servants be,
He'll send his heavenly messengers
To minister to thee.
Then do not faint, tried heart,
Or yield unto despair;
"Remember that Omnipotence
Has servants everywhere." BETA.

Theatrical Mission.—We had an excellent meeting at our weekly reunion this (Friday) afternoon, when nearly eighty girls listened most attentively to a simple but earnest address. We have had a splendid series of meetings this season, and we know of much good which they have, by God's grace, effected. Those friends who were unable to attend our bazaar at St. Martin's Hall will be interested to learn that, by the kind invitation of Louisa Lady Ashburton, we are to have a supplementary sale in Kent House, Knightsbridge, on Thursday, March 26, from 3 to 6 p.m. ALFRED B. HARDING, Director.

Macready House, Covent Garden.

Portobello and Westbourne Park Mission.—The opening meetings of this mission, in Tavistock-crescent, were held on Wednesday, March 11, afternoon and evening, Mr. J. A. McIntyre in the chair. Among local ministers who addressed the meeting were Revs. L. Holland, J. Fleming Shearer, B. Scott, H. R. Davis, and G. Wearham. The chairman spoke of the mission as an aggressive work, carried on for the past twenty-five years, and now led to enlarge its sphere. In the evening the hall was overcrowded, many being unable to enter. Mr. Barnard gave a resumé of the mission history, followed with an account by Jas. M. Marshall (superintendent) of the progress of the building of the new hall.

Letters from South Africa—9.

BLACK AND WHITE.

NO. 5 of these Letters, which was on the above subject, appeared in The Cape Times. It elicited in that paper the following reply, my response to which is also given below:—

REPLY TO A NEW-COMER.

To the Editor of "The Cape Times."

SIR,—I read with much interest a letter under the above heading in to-day's paper, and beg your kind indulgence to allow me space whilst I endeavour to point out to the writer that the ostracism of the native population is not merely a prejudice against colour as colour, though I can easily understand his forming that impression, judging by my own feelings on first arriving in this colony. After a residence of more than fourteen years in various parts of the Eastern and Western Provinces, I feel I am justified in forming an opinion that has been of slow growth, and the result of my own personal experience, as well as numerous conversations on the ever-vexing problem with other home and colonial born residents.

Whilst cordially endorsing all the Scriptural arguments contained in the communication, and feeling equally as sure as the writer that "God is no respecter of persons" externally so long as the heart is washed pure and white in the "blood of the Lamb," my reading of God's Word teaches me that the very essence of all Christianity is humility, and it is just this very virtue that is conspicuous by its absence amongst our coloured brethren.

Of course I am aware that even the followers of Christ of our own race are often sadly deficient in imitating their Master's teaching and example on this most exquisite of the Christian graces. Still there are some few lowly-minded ones to be found here and there amongst them, whilst I must confess that after my long residence in this country, my calm and deliberate opinion is compelled to side with those who strenuously object to any association whatever with the natives of the Colony, not because of their colour, but because of the intolerable presumption and self-assertion—the slang definition called "cheek," perhaps more fully describes what I mean—that distinguishes the civilised negroes around us.

Not only is their bearing and manner free, with a freedom that would be deemed impertinent in a white person of the same class, but their independence extends to actions as well. Servants, washerwomen, men and boys required to do odd work, charwomen, carriers, it is all the same, they condescend to work at high prices if they choose; if they don't choose they are stolidly proof against any persuasion, and perfectly indifferent to the inconvenience they may cause a family or individual who has been systematically kind to them. I make bold to say that this is the experience of thousands. Indeed, if you threw open your columns by inviting public opinion, it would completely inundate The Cape Times with correspondence for months to come.

I know many people attribute this state of affairs to missionary efforts at Christianising the native race, maintaining—with a certain amount of truth—that the raw Kafirs up-country are far superior to their mixed brethren down here. Now this is ungrateful, unfair, and unjust. Those who argue thus forget to take into consideration that the missionary is only the pioneer, so to speak, of Christianity among the heathen. The digger who extracts nuggets of gold from the depths of a mine is not expected to produce the wonderfully constructed watch or dainty bracelet of the goldsmith.

So with our coloured friends, they are unfortunately at present in a transition stage; not long enough removed from their low estate to have acquired a true knowledge of their real position, and yet sufficiently advanced to feel an overweening importance at being made so much of by those who have their welfare at heart, and still further spoiled by the inequality of supply and demand as in the case of domestic servants, etc. We must only endeavour to make the best of things whilst this evolution is proceeding. Theoretically, I believe each one ought to help forward the time when a right understanding between both races should exist; but practically I confess the material is a most unsatisfactory one to work with, as the best-intentioned philanthropist would soon find.

If the coloured people know what gratitude is at all, it most certainly is in accordance with Rochefoucauld's definition.—"An expectation of favours to come." The only really independent white people in this country are those who know how to get on without coloured help; when, by letting them see plainly that you can do without them, you have a reasonable chance of securing their services.

On one more point I heartily agree with Mr. Morgan, viz., that "Birds of a feather," etc. I certainly believe there may be, and are some really genuine Christian natives, whose religion lends them—as it so often does—an undoubted refinement of feeling and manner: a truly Christ-like man cannot help being a gentleman. To such, I feel sure, many besides myself would far rather extend the hand of fellowship than to some perhaps of our Johannesburg neighbours of our own race.

Just one word in conclusion, to remind your correspondent that he must indeed be a very new-comer to the Colony, or he would have known that the very slightly-coloured people—octoroons—are by far the most difficult to get on with, as they possess in a much stronger degree the intensely aggravating features that render our coloured brethren so objectionable. I again maintain that it is their behaviour and manner—not skin—that creates the barrier.—I am, etc.,

Kalk Bay.

INA WOOLEY.

[REPLY.]

To the Editor of "The Cape Times."

SIR,—I am glad to acknowledge the candour and courtesy of the reply, in your issue of Jan. 28, over the signature of Ina Wooley, to my letter on the above subject. It is gratifying to know that in several respects we are at one. I will only ask your permission to reply to some passages which seem to me open to question.

1. The letter is headed, "Reply to a New-Comer." But I had shown that in cases of principle, conscience is a safer judge than custom. It would have been better to have disproved this, if possible, than to have seemed to suggest that a new-comer is incapable of a correct judgment.

2. Your correspondent says that "the ostracism of the native population is not merely a prejudice against colour as colour." Let me give an illustration. A Christian gentleman in Cape Colony, connected with the press, told me that there was a coloured lady, "quite a lady," in his neighbourhood, a fine singer and an accomplished musician, by whom her neighbours were well pleased to be entertained. "But," he added, "my wife could not invite her to a social evening on account of her colour." His wife, he said, since coming to the Cape, had quite lost her interest in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," of which she now disapproved. That seems to me an instance of prejudice against colour as colour. If it is only a rare exception, and not the rule, I shall gladly admit that I am wrong.

3. Your correspondent says: "My calm and deliberate opinion...[see above]...civilized negroes around us." On mentioning this remark I was told of a negress who equally reprobated the "cheek" of the Dutch in South African Republics, who sling a coloured man up to a post and flog him. No less might she disapprove of the "cheek" of those of another colour from themselves, who have taken possession of their country, made them (in Mrs. Wooley's words) "servants, washerwomen, men and boys required to do odd work, charwomen, carriers"—hewers of wood and drawers of water—and then say, with her: "If the coloured people know...[see above]...expectation of favours to come." Favours similar to the foregoing?

4. If the civilised negroes are so objectionable—much more so than "the raw Kafir"—let it be remembered that the deterioration has been produced by the civilisation which the white man forced upon them.

5. I agree with the lady that "the very essence of all Christianity is humility." She complains that "this virtue is conspicuous by its absence amongst our coloured brethren." She only claims, however, "some few lowly-minded ones amongst even the followers of Christ of our own race." If humility is so rare a grace even among the white brethren, is it kind, or generous, or just, to "strenuously object to any association whatever with the natives of the colony" because they do not excel in it? And is not the assertion that this objection is "not because of their colour" manifestly inaccurate?

6. Indeed, our friend gives up the whole position when she says, "I certainly believe...[see above]...neighbours of our own race." How does this agree with the "strenuous objection to any association whatever with the natives of the colony"?

I am delighted to think that the writer, during the progress of her letter, arrived at a kindlier and more righteous judgment than she started with. I am more than satisfied that my letter should have elicited the spontaneous assertion that there are among the coloured race some really genuine Christians, whose religion lends them an undoubted refinement of feeling and manner; that a truly Christ-like man, coloured or uncoloured, cannot help being a gentleman, and that the lady who says so would far rather give the hand of fellowship to such than to some of her white neighbours, and believed that many besides herself would do so too. I shall be delighted to know that the writer of these noble sentiments, and the many besides, have the courage of their convictions. Such acknowledgment and such action by uncoloured Christ-like gentlemen and gentlewomen towards coloured Christ-like gentlemen and gentlewomen would tend more than aught else to the improvement and elevation of the coloured people. For those in subjection to us will be very much what we make them. Some lines of Coleridge are apposite here:—

Oh, lady, we receive but what we give,
And in our life alone does nature live;
Ours is her wedding garment, ours her shroud!
And would we aught behold, of higher worth
Than that inanimate, cold world allowed
To the poor, loveless, ever anxious crowd,
Ah! from the soul itself must issue forth
A light, a glory, a fair luminous cloud
Enveloping the earth—
And from the soul itself must there be sent
A sweet and potent voice, of its own birth,
Of all sweet sounds the life and element!

7. I appeal to the more generous instincts of the Paramount People in South Africa; and still more to the "refinement of feeling and manner" which religion lends to white as well as coloured. I appeal to the Christ-like gentlemen and gentlewomen of the stronger race, that they should lift up the hands that hang down and confirm the feeble knees, that they should show the meekness and gentleness of Christ to their less favoured brethren; that they should support the weak, and remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how He said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

With unfeigned pleasure I am able to testify that I have seen this spirit manifested among the real and earnest Christians in Cape Colony; and I believe that with them, more than with any other, lies the rectification of public opinion, and sentiment and feeling, with regard to the civilised or uncivilised coloured people.—I am, etc.,

R. C. MORGAN.

Marseilles.—A brave woman is working amongst the foreign sailors at Marseilles. The Lord is blessing her labours. She teaches the sailors, visits the ships, helps them in their efforts to resist the evil attractions of the harbour, and really endures hardships for their temporal and spiritual good. Much success has attended her labours. She lives at her own expense, but needs contributions to pay rent and necessary outgoings. Any sums sent her will be well disposed of. Address, Mdle. Merry, Le Repos, Marseilles. CHEYNE BRADY.

Villè Honoré, No. 1, Mentone.

The Government of the United States is spending millions of money for battleships and coast defences. True revivals of religion that would turn the hearts of the people to Jesus Christ, and do away with licentiousness, intemperance, hatred of one another, and greed, would be worth them all. The best thing our governors, judges, senators, and representatives could do to save the country would be to take hold with Christ's ministers, and teach the people "out of the book of the law of the Lord." Thank God that so many of them are God-fearing men. Twenty-nine out of our forty-four governors are members of Evangelical churches, and some of them do not hesitate, as opportunity offers, to preach Christ. —Chicago Record of Christian Work.

If you scrutinise somewhat closely the appearance of those entering by this door, you will notice two things. First, that the constant frequenters of the house, those who come again and again, and appear perfectly familiar with its precincts, are always shabbily dressed and slovenly-looking. A certain air of thriftlessness and suspicion clings about them, manifest even in their shuffling footsteps on the pavement, contrasting with the open countenance and manly tread of the free and sober British workman. And what wonder, when these poor victims too often, alas! are held fast as by an iron chain, and could not if they would, humanly speaking, free themselves from it? Many of these are broken down in health, limping with gout, supported by sticks or crutches, pale, haggard, and weary-looking; others, again, florid and fierce in countenance, but none looking healthy or contented, or as if life carried much brightness with it for them.

But as you look, a second thing strikes you. There are some who have been seen to enter that door, just once or twice, in the fulness of health and strength—young men, whistling carelessly, passing in and out with a firm step and a cheery word to the bystanders—young women, light-hearted and innocent, thinking nothing of the danger lurking in the cup as they raise it to their lips. But how long, think you, will the strong and healthy remain thus, how long will the light-hearted keep their joy and their innocence if they continue daily to pass within those doors? Is it not from such as these that the ranks of the drunkards and the harlots are filled up? Were not the men and women who fill our lunatic asylums, work-houses, and prisons many of them just such as these in the days of their youth?

It is a serious matter, and one which all Englishmen ought to consider, how the physical strength of the nation is being lowered and weakened by this same insidious power of strong drink. The "alcohol habit" is impairing the energy and strength of a large proportion of the men and women of our country, its hereditary influence extends to the generations yet unborn, and unless it can be checked while yet there is time, we shall be reduced to the status of a sickly and enfeebled race.

The late Sir Andrew Clark, physician to the Queen, ascertained, on going the round of his hospital wards, that "seven out of every ten there owed their ill-health to alcohol." Lord Shaftesbury, for sixteen years chairman of the Commission in Lunacy, says "sixty out of every 100 come to these asylums directly through drink."

How passing strange that people who value their health—educated people, who know these facts, and have them constantly illustrated before their eyes—should go on imbibing day after day a poisonous drink, which is injuring both the health and the morality of the nation.

There is much talk now of education amongst the great working class of our land. Working men, many of them, are thirsting for more knowledge outside the narrow world which has hitherto been theirs, desiring an expansion of life, wider interests, more leisure for the cultivation of the powers God has given them. Social reformers, men and women, whose hearts beat in sympathy with theirs, are doing their best to forward these hopes and aspirations, to provide for them a better way of life, to share with them some of the good things, feasts of the intellect and pleasures of the senses, which the great Father has bestowed freely for all his human family. But here again the drink-fiend bars the way of progress.

How can a man who constantly spends his earnings in the public-house have time or money, or even inclination, to cultivate his higher nature? How can we expect the brain, sodden with alcohol, or the clouded intellect of the spirit-drinker, to expand or reach out to gather the fruits of knowledge which are only to be plucked by honest effort and concentrated energy? My Bible.

MY plan of reading this precious Book, followed for many years, has been as follows:—

1. I am always reading through the Bible from Genesis to Revelation.

2. At the same time, I have always one book, or the life of one character, under special minute study, just to find out what the actual teaching of that character has to say to me, here and now. This studious reading, with great care and much prayer, has ever been a literary and a spiritual luxury to me. Jesus Christ has been revealed to me thus hundreds of times in overpowering majesty and sweetness.

3. Difficult passages I make a note of, and seek some book, or any true Bible student, to shed light upon it. I think I have found quiet prayer to God, and reference to other passages, most useful in this respect.

4. Then very frequently I study a subject, and look up the teaching from all parts of the Bible bearing upon that. This I find very helpful indeed.

5. Also, I embrace every opportunity to read right through a book, such as an Epistle, at a sitting. In fact, I constantly read through the Epistles in this way.

Then I have long made it a mild rule to let my general reading always be such that it bears upon the Word of God. I have had the face, and character, and will of God my Father revealed to me through Bible study as beautiful and thrilling as ever the sun has revealed the hidden beauties of a landscape to a patient observer; and in this living way I have long since established in my own mind, more than by any other means, that the Book is Divinely inspired, and is God's message to his finite children. In itself it is an inexhaustible and enriching inheritance. It is a Book full of robust, healthful, and ever-quickening life and inspiration to me.

For a country ramble, or a long sit by the sea, it is delightful to go through an Epistle, or a life, until God is felt to be all round about one, and every common bush is on fire with Him. The heart is thrilled to ecstasy, and spiritual health and vigour glows through every pulsation of the brain and heart. My sweet and precious wife, and my Testament, have been my constant and most delightful companions, at all times and places, for the past thirty years, to my inexpressible joy and delight. Now that my wife is so ill, we sit together, and are cheered and sustained by our living and inspiring companion.

The Book has been to me more than human words can tell, the lamp of my study, the light of my life, the joy and sweetness of my quiet hours, my greatest support in weakness, my source of inspiration when depressed, the comfort and solace in my seasons of pain. When I think of the inheritance I have in its promises I am fairly bewildered. I often find myself falling on my knees in sheer wonder and adoration, and thanksgiving at the contemplation of the marvellous love, wisdom, and forbearance and grace of God my Father through Jesus Christ my Lord, as manifested in the truths this Book contains, of which there is no compassing. Oh, it is lovely!

There is no book to come anywhere near it. There is no end of delightful enjoyment in its careful study from end to end. For a clarion call to fearless facing of difficulties, for earnest, whole-hearted, and steadfast pursuing that which conscience and duty show to be the only right path, there is nothing to compare with its inspiring and thrilling exhortations—such, for example, as we find in Deut. xxxi. 6, Josh. i., Psalms xxvii. 1-4, Psalms xli. 7-11, Ephesians vi. 10-18, Heb. xii. 1-2, and countless passages beside. For assurance of help and comfort in affliction, turn where we may in its pages, we have our fill of consolation. The old Books of Moses are full of such helpfulness. The Psalms overflow with them. Isaiah is a veritable storehouse. And the words of our Divine Lord are laden with them. So that the whole Bible is the very book of books for comfort, consolation, and sympathy.

For beautiful, heart-melting tenderness and pathos, so human and so refined, we have examples that are matchless. There are passages in Milton, Shakespeare, Tennyson, Longfellow, and Wordsworth, that invariably bring tears to my eyes when I read them, but there is no real comparison between these and the inspired volume. Take, for example, such passages as Gen. xlii., xlv., xlv., Num. xi. 10-15, 1 Sam. xx. 35-42, 2 Sam. xviii. 83, 2 Chron. xix. 1-8, Acts xx. 17-38.

Then its life-giving and light-illuminating power is something wonderful. I have often begun a study of a passage and felt it dull and uninteresting, as though it would yield me nothing much to aid me in my life-work; but as I meditated upon it, and considered it, there has come a movement in the words, a pulsation, a colour, a warmth, and I have grown enraptured with it. The angel in it has revealed himself, and has looked at me tenderly, strongly, with authority, and I have been unable to get away from his dominating influence. Times without number, as I have meditated on its pages in my beloved study, I have become conscious of its life-giving breath and of Another in the room with me, whose Word it is, whose warm breath, whose holy and sacred pulsations, have thrilled me into unspeakable delight and adoring reverence.

I go on in my life-work, feeling strong and rich in the possession of such an inheritance. Praise ye the Lord!

The Student Volunteer Movement.

THE March part of The Student Volunteer states that Mr. Donald Fraser has visited Paris, Montauban, Neuchatel, Geneva, Lausanne, and Basle, holding meetings, which in every instance have been attended by encouraging results. At a conference in Geneva it was found that more than forty French and Swiss students had joined the new-formed Volunteer Union. Mr. Fraser went on to Germany, Holland, and Scandinavia.

A conference is reported to have been held at Bombay, with others arranged at Agra, Lahore, Lucknow, Calcutta, and Madras. What may not this mean for the evangelisation of India? At Lovedale, South Africa, during the past year forty-one native students have signed the declaration of the Union. Coming to the home colleges, we note that Mr. C. T. Studd, while laid aside from foreign service, is on a six weeks' tour touching a large number of institutions in Britain. Largely-attended meetings have been held at Cambridge, Dublin, Nottingham and Manchester.

There are signs of movement in the women's colleges. Three bands have been started since the Liverpool Conference, and there are individual volunteers in several hitherto unreached colleges. During the past five months seven new Christian Unions have been affiliated to the British Colleges Christian Union, and at least six daily meetings have been commenced, where the S.V. Missionary Union cycle of prayer is used. Miss de Selincourt has visited Edinburgh and Glasgow, other centres being touched by Miss (Dr.) Stuart and Miss Rouse. Copies of The Student Volunteer (price 2d.) may be had from the office of the Union, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

The Story of an Indian Library.—In a neat booklet Miss F. M. Reade, of the South Arcot Highways and Hedges Mission, tells how, out of a holiday stay at Cuddalore, at the end of 1891, a most interesting and useful work has arisen. She was visited by numbers of native inquirers, and in order to supply some channel of instruction after she had gone, Miss Reade was able to found a reading and lending library of Christian books and papers. It has developed to a wonderful degree, through the kind help of friends in England. Any who can help, or who would like more detailed information, should communicate with Miss C. M. S. OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, March 22.

"AND THE THING DISPLEASED SAMUEL . . . AND SAMUEL PRAYED UNTO THE LORD,"—1 Sam. viii. 6.

A LITTLE further down in the chapter we learn that Samuel rehearsed the words of the people unto the Lord. His prayer, to a large extent, was a rehearsal of all the strong and unkind things that the people had said to him; and in this way he passed them off his mind, and found relief.

Things do not always turn out as we had hoped, and we get displeased for our own sakes and God's. We have planned in one direction, but events have issued in another, and the results have threatened to become disastrous. There is but one resource. If we allow vexations to eat into our heart, they will corrode and injure it. We must rehearse them to God, spreading the letter before him as Hezekiah did, making request like Paul, crying like Samuel.

Surely it is the mistake of our life, that we carry our burdens instead of handing them over, that we worry instead of trusting, that we pray so little. The grass grows thick on the pathway to our oratory; the cobwebs hang across the doorway. Let us plead with men and for them. This was the characteristic of the beloved Reginald Radcliffe. He pleaded with men for God, and with God for men. He went to and fro between man and God as Samuel, telling the Lord about men, and men about God. Let us pray more.

MONDAY, March 23.

"BEHOLD THERE IS IN THIS CITY A MAN OF GOD,"—1 Sam. ix. 6.

There is a street in London, near St. Paul's, which I never traverse without very peculiar feelings. It is Godliman Street. Evidently the name is a corruption of godly man. Did some saint of God live here once, whose life was so holy as to give a sweet savour to the very street in which he dwelt? Were the neighbours, who knew him best, the most sure of his godliness? Would that our piety might leave its mark on our neighbourhoods, and the memory linger long after we have passed away!

A generation or two ago, in the Highlands, there were earnest and holy men, who were known by the significant title of the men. No great religious gathering was deemed complete without them. Their prayers and exhortations were accompanied by an especial unction.

In such manner Samuel's godliness was recognised far and wide. The fragrance of his character could not be concealed. And this gave men confidence in him. They said, "He is an honourable man, all that he saith cometh surely to pass." How much credit redounds to godliness when it is combined with trustworthiness and high credit amongst our fellows.

Let us seek to be God's men and women. Let us not only live soberly and righteously, but godly in this present world. Let us remember that God hath set apart the godly for himself. The godly are the godlike. They become so by cultivating the fellowship and friendship of God. Their faces become enlightened with his beauty, their words are weighty with his truth. The atmosphere of eternity is the element of their existence.

"THOU SHALT DO AS OCCASION SERVES THEE,"—1 Sam. x. 7.

This is an example of how God demands of us the use of our sanctified common-sense. Samuel sketches to Saul the course of events during the next few days; showing how clearly our lives lie naked and open to the eyes of God, and how easily He can reveal them when necessary. But whilst the various incidents are told, the prophet does not feel it incumbent to tell this goodly young man how he should behave in any given instance. "When these signs are come upon thee, thou shalt do as occasion serves thee."

We are reminded of a parallel in the life of Peter. The Angel of God unbarred the prison-doors, and led him forth, because nothing short of Divine power would avail. He led the dazed Apostle through one street, because he was too bewildered to realise what had happened. But, as soon as the night-air had brought him to his senses, the angel left him "to consider the matter," to use his own judgment. The result of which was, that he went to the house of Mary.

One of the divinest of our faculties is the judgment, before which the reasons for or against a certain course of action must be adduced, but with which the ultimate decision lies. It is a tendency with some to depreciate the use of this wonderful power, by looking for signs and visions to point their path. This is a profound mistake. God will give these when there are complications in which the exercise of judgment might be at fault; but not where it is sufficient. Where no sign is given, carefully divest yourself of selfish considerations, weigh the pros and cons, ask for guidance, dare to act, and never look back or doubt.

WEDNESDAY, March 25.

"COME, LET US GO TO GILGAL, AND RENEW THE KINGDOM THERE,"—1 Sam. xi. 14.

It is good to have days and occasions for renewing the kingdom. Already Saul had been anointed king. It was a recognised matter that he should inaugurate the days of the kings, as distinguished from those of the judges. But his great victory at Jabesh-Gilead seems to have wrought the enthusiasm of the people to the highest pitch, and to have presented a great opportunity for renewing the kingdom. They went to Gilgal to do this, because there, on the first entrance into Canaan, Israel had rolled away the reproach of uncircumcision, which symbolised their lack of separation.

Jesus is our king. The Father hath anointed Him, and set Him on his holy hill, and we have gladly assented to the appointment, and made Him king. But sometimes our sense of loyalty and devotion wanes. Insensibly we drift from our strenuous endeavour to act always as his devoted subjects and slaves. Therefore we need, from time to time, to renew the kingdom, and reverently make Him king before the Lord. Go over the old solemn form of dedication, turn to the yellow leaves of the diary, bring under his sceptre any new provinces of influence that have been acquired, tell Him how glad and thankful you are to live only for Him. Let this be done at Gilgal, the place of circumcision and separation, with the Jordan of death flowing behind, and the Land of Promise beckoning in front.

THURSDAY, March 26.

"THE LORD WILL NOT FORSAKE HIS PEOPLE FOR HIS GREAT NAMES' SAKE,"—1 Sam. xii. 22.

The certainty of our salvation rests on the character of God. Moses saw that God could not afford to destroy or forsake Israel, lest the Egyptians and others should have some ground for saying that He was not able to carry out his purpose, or that He was fickle and changeable. "What will Thou do for thy great name?" Samuel uses the same argument. It remains for our great comfort also.

God knew what we should be, how weak and frail and changeable, before He arrested us, and brought us to Himself. Speaking after the manner of men, we might say He counted the cost. He computed whether his resources were sufficient to secure us from our foes, to keep us from falling, and present us faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy. He foreknew how much forbearance, pity, consolation, and tenderness we should require. And yet it pleased Him to make us his people. He cannot, therefore, now run back from his purpose; otherwise it would seem that difficulties had arisen which either He had not anticipated, or was not so well able to combat as He had thought. What an absurd suggestion! In the former case there would be a slur on his omniscience; on the other, upon his omnipotence.

"What if God should cast you into hell?" was asked of the old Scotchwoman. "Well," she answered, "if He do, all I can say is, He will lose mair than I will."

FRIDAY, March 27.

"I FORCED MYSELF, THEREFORE, AND OFFERED A BURNT OFFERING,"—1 Sam. xiii. 12.

This was wholly outside Saul's province. Samuel had engaged to come within the seven days; they had nearly come to an end, still there were no signs of the prophet; and Saul, yielding to the promptings of his impatient nature, took the matter into his own hand, and rashly assumed an office to which he had no right. He pretended that it needed a good deal of force to bring him to the act, but, in fact, no pressure had been required in that direction. The difficulty had been not in doing, but in refraining from doing, and before this he had fallen. The promptings of the flesh had prevailed over the strivings of the spirit.

It seemed but a small act, and, to superficial judgment, not enough to warrant the loss of his kingdom; but it was symptomatic of a great moral deficiency. He had not learned to obey the commandment of the Lord; how could he rule? He could not control the hasty suggestions of his own nature, in favour of the deliberate movement of the Divine order; how could he be God's chosen agent? He acted on the showings of expediency, rather than of Faith; how could he be a man after God's own heart?

We must learn to wait for God. He may not come till the allotted time has almost passed, but He will come. Not till our patience has been exercised, but before it has given out. In the meanwhile, be sure that you are safe; He will see to it that the Philistines shall not come down to overwhelm you.

SATURDAY, March 28.

"HE PUT FORTH THE END OF THE ROD THAT WAS IN HIS HAND, AND DIPPED IT IN AN HONEYCOMB, AND PUT HIS HAND TO HIS MOUTH, AND HIS EYES WERE ENLIGHTENED,"—1 Sam. xiv. 27.

The Philistines were in full flight. The Israelites followed hard at their heels, through the wood. It was there that the honey dropped in rich abundance on the ground, and there Jonathan tasted a little, dipping the end of his rod into it. It made all the difference to him, warding off the excessive exhaustion which paralysed the rest of the army.

The Word of God is sweeter than the honeycomb.—Luscious to the sanctified taste; enlightening to the dimming eyes; strength-giving to the weary. It drops in abundance to the ground, as though inviting the hand to take it freely.

Where we cannot take much let us take some.—There was not time for Jonathan to sit down and take his fill. He could only catch up some as he hastily passed through the forest-glade; but that little made all the difference to him. So, in the early morning, or at midday, if we cannot fill our hearts with Scripture, we may catch up a morsel, which will be a real refreshment.

We specially need to do this when flushed with success.—Too often, when we have had success in the battles of the Lord—a good time in preaching or teaching—we are apt to congratulate ourselves, and suppose that we can live on the emotions excited. But we come to discover, ultimately, that nothing can take the place of loving Bible-study. In victory, as in defeat, we must be fed and nourished.

The Rescue and Evangelisation Society of Sheffield reports that in the last four years 258 girls have been rescued and 27 children, and of these 85 per cent. are doing well. The superintendent is Mr. W. Corbridge, 250, Duke-street, Sheffield.

THERE is a picture in a provincial gallery of paintings called "Eve Tempted," by R. Spencer Stanhope. It represents Eve standing by the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, and the serpent, unseen by her, yet visible to those who look at the picture, whispering into her ear bad counsel. The serpent is drawn with a hideous head and face, like that of a very wicked man, and by his evil influence is inspiring her mind with desire for the forbidden fruit. She does not seem to observe anything except the beautiful golden fruit that hangs in rich clusters on the strange tree. She looks very sad and serious; there is evidently going on in her mind a great conflict—she longs for the fruit, but feels she ought not to take it. As one looks at the picture one feels inclined to say, "Now, do come away, why do you listen to the poisonous thought and words the serpent is breathing into your ear and heart?" But there she stands, waiting and debating, hesitating and wavering, and all the while the old serpent, by a coil of his body, is bending down a branch of the fruit-laden tree so close to her open hand that the fruit is almost dropping into it without any effort on her part; a tiny touch and one of those over-ripe apples of gold will fall into the hollow of her hand.

It is as if she were being slowly but surely led away from obedience, and almost unconsciously induced to yield to the tempter in spite of her better nature, her love, and her conscience.

Now, this is just a picture-parable of many temptations and many acts of disobedience, and many falls from honour, purity, truth, and love. There are two kinds of temptation, one from within and another from without, as the picture shows us.

The first kind of temptation is that which comes from within, from evil thoughts and suggestions of our hearts, from desires prompted by the evil one, and from selfish inclinations of our nature. But we can check these; by the power of God's Word and grace we may crush them before they grow great and get the mastery over our wills. For if we give way to them they will soon rule our hearts and lives.

The second kind of temptation is the outward one, the bad example of others. The invitation and urgings of companions to do wrong, and opportunities to gratify our passions and evil tempers, the things that vex us and make us angry, the fears of punishment or misfortune that may tempt us to tell an untruth.

But the worst temptations are those that are like the one of the picture, when inclination is strong and opportunity is present. Often it may be that we feel cross or discontented, but nothing happens to make us angry and say unkind things, or do anything very selfish. Or it may be something occurs and someone tries us, but we have no bitter feeling in our hearts, and we can smile at what might at another time have put us in a passion. But it may be when we feel worst, the opportunity meets us, and that is the time of extreme peril and temptation.

Mr. Spurgeon once said we should be very thankful to God for keeping us out of harm's way, and preserving us from the opportunities of committing great sin, for there is evil enough in our hearts to kill sometimes, only we are prevented from doing so by circumstances, and we should be thankful that sometimes when the opportunity comes there is no inclination to sin.

Some of us are kept from stealing and crime, not because we are good at heart, but simply because our surroundings make such sin impossible. Others, while exposed to many kinds of temptations to do wrong, have no impulse or tendency to fall by these seductions.

Jesus was tempted to do the forbidden things; the evil one whispered wrong desires into his heart, and showed Him the evil things as almost good; tried to implant the suggestion, and offered the opportunity, but Jesus conquered. And because He conquered, being tempted like as we are, He is able to save us when we are most tempted by our besetting sin, and when all the excuses of opportunity are most present.

His grace, if we ask and seek it, will always be sufficient for us to come off more than conquerors, because it can slay the power of sin within, as well as overcome the might of temptations that are without.

Helping Others.

If any little word of mine
May make a life the brighter,
If any little song of mine
May make a heart the lighter,

God help me speak the little word,
And take my bit of singing,
And drop it in some lonely vale
To set the echoes ringing.

If any little love of mine
May make a life the sweeter,
If any little care of mine
May make a friend's the fleetier.

If any lift of mine may ease
The burden of another,
God give me love, and care, and strength,
To help my toiling brother.

Dr. Pierson in Belfast.

Crowded gatherings have been held in the Grosvenor Hall and Ulster Hall in this city. The Churches have been wonderfully aroused. The interest in the series of addresses culminated in an address on Friday, March 13th, in the afternoon, on "Women's Work the World Over" and one in the evening on "Abiding in Christ."

Two extra days were given by special request in Belfast. Dr. Pierson left the city for Londonderry, where three days' services in the Guildhall are to be held. On Thursday and Friday he visits Aberystwyth, addressing both the university and the town.

Jews in Scotland.—The Church of Scotland Mission to the Jews was inaugurated last week by a public meeting in the Christian Institute, Bothwell-street, Glasgow. Dr. Donald Macleod, Rev. R. Pryde, and Herr C. T. Lipschitz (London) took part. The missionary, Mr. Moritz Michaelis has had excellent experience in Gospel work, and it is hoped that he will receive every encouragement in this undertaking. The Mission Hall is situate at 104, Cumberland-street.

By REV. J. STORJOHANN, CHRISTIANIA.

WORDS TO THE ANGELS.

WHEREAS David in Ps. xviii. spoke to Jehovah, in Ps. xxix. he addresses the angels. He refers to the thunderstorm and the torrents of rain which came from heaven, by which the kingdom of Jehovah, the strength of the people, and the peace of the world were secured.

PSALM XXIX.

A Psalm of David.

1. Give to Jehovah, ye sons of God,
Give to Jehovah glory and strength,
2. Give to Jehovah the glory of his name,
Worship Jehovah in holy array!
- 1.
3. The voice of Jehovah is upon the waters;
The God of glory thunders;
Jehovah upon great waters.
4. The voice of Jehovah is with power,
The voice of Jehovah is with majesty.
- 2.
5. The voice of Jehovah breaks the cedars,
Yea, Jehovah breaks in pieces the cedars of Lebanon.
6. He makes them also to skip like a calf,
Lebanon and Sirion like a young wild-ox.
7. The voice of Jehovah hews out flames of fire.
- 3.
8. The voice of Jehovah shakes the wilderness;
Jehovah shakes the wilderness of Kadesh.
9. The voice of Jehovah makes the hinds to calve,
And strips the forests bare.
And in his temple everyone is saying, Glory!
- * * * *
10. Jehovah has seated himself for the flood,
Therefore Jehovah sits as King for ever;
11. Jehovah will give strength unto his people,
Jehovah will bless his people with the peace.

This Psalm is David's exhortation to the sons of God, the angels, to praise Jehovah for the seven-fold thunder of his voice, emanating from his holy temple, and shaking the very foundations of the earth. In Psalm xx. 2 the people craved assistance from the sanctuary on Zion, and David answered that God would hear them from his holy heaven (Psalm xx. 6). From this heavenly temple God also heard David's prayer (Ps. xviii. 6); thence He came down on the wings of the wind, in the darkness of the clouds, shook the earth by a terrible tempest, and scattered the enemy. In this heavenly temple, where everyone speaks of his glory, the sons of God are to do homage to Jehovah, and honour Him who, by mighty thunders, shook the whole earth.

Upon the waters—the great waters—Jehovah's voice of power and majesty has gone forth in the crash of thunder. Jehovah's voice, through the lightning, has cracked the cedars of Lebanon, has shaken Lebanon and Sirion (the Phœnician name for Anti-Libanus and Hermon, cxiv. 4); it has set the sand of the wilderness of Kadesh in a whirlwind, so that the hinds calve from fear, and in the forests the boughs of the trees are broken off. The earthquake and storm have encompassed the whole country from Lebanon to Kadesh-Barnea.

It is a judgment—a deluge—to carry out which Jehovah has seated Himself; as a consequence thereof He now sitteth King for ever (10). Jehovah has therewith given strength to his people, and now blesses them with the peace, with the full realisation of peace (ver. 11). This can be no ordinary earthquake and storm. An earthquake of the usual kind would rather have been looked upon by God's people as something terrible and menacing (see Zech. xiv. 5); and of the Noachian deluge, of which, without the historical premiss, we are constrained to understand the words, "Jehovah sitteth for the flood," it is impossible to say that God really gave his people peace. If, however, such a flood is meant by which God blessed his people with peace, then this corresponds admirably to that Philistine flood, called by Kurtz a "quasi flood" (Psa. xviii. 11 and 15), by which, as we shall read in Psa. xli. 9, God "made the wars to cease unto the ends of the earth."

This Psalm is the boldest thought and highest flight of Davidic poetry, one of the most exalted memorials of old Israelitic lyric. It begins with "Glory to God in the highest," and ends with "On earth peace." The exhortation which David here addressed to the hosts of the heavenly army, they answered when, on the holy birth-night, they took the beginning and end of the Davidic song as the text of their psalm on the advent of the true David, through whom God is enthroned for ever. What an exhortation and—a thousand years later—what an answer!

Bible Training Institute, Glasgow.

LAST Saturday, in fine weather, the memorial stone of the new building of the Bible Training Institute was laid by Lord Overtoun. There was a large gathering, the whole first floor being boarded over and filled with Christian workers. The street opposite was crowded with the general public. Punctually at 3 o'clock the audience sang the Hundredth Psalm, and Dr. Marshall Lang offered prayer. Mr. Bryden, the architect of the new building, presented Lord Overtoun—in name of the various tradesmen—with a handsome silver trowel and beautiful mallet with which to perform the ceremony. The mortar was spread, the stone was lowered, the orthodox three knocks were given, and the stone was pronounced to be "well and truly laid."

After the singing of a hymn by the students, the company gathered in the large hall of the Christian Institute adjoining, where a meeting was held, presided over by Lord Overtoun. The chairman, in his address, sketched the origin of the Bible Training Institute in 1892, through the instrumentality of Mr. D. L. Moody. Three sessions had been held, and students had been trained and sent forth to the home and foreign field, well equipped for their work. He paid a warm tribute to the zeal of the principal, Mr. John Anderson, for the manner in which he had guided the students in their studies, and in the practical aggressive work they had done in and around the city. Referring to finance, he told how his sister—the late Mrs. Somerville—had left a sum of £10,000 to help in any such scheme should it be undertaken, and that a sum of £4000 additional had been subscribed; £16,000 was still required to open the building free from debt. There would be accommodation in the new institute for about 100 young men and fifty young women. The offices of the United Evangelistic Association were to be provided for in the new premises.

Mr. John Anderson spoke of the work done during the past three years. He said it was not the desire of the directors to increase the number of home-paid workers, but to train missionaries for the foreign field and to enable congregations all over the country to select and send up for the two years' course young men who would return to their homes and to their businesses, and who would assist the minister and train workers for the congregation and district. He also mentioned that evening classes would be formed for evangelistic workers, Sabbath-school teachers, and young converts.

Professor A. R. Simpson, from Edinburgh, brought greetings from the metropolis, and referred to the great need for such an institute in Scotland. Other addresses were delivered by Rev. Donald Macleod, D.D., Rev. J. Marshall Lang, D.D., Sir John Neilson Cuthbertson, and Rev. Robert Howie.

The memorial stone of the Y.M.C.A. Club on the west side of the Christian Institute is to be laid by Lady Overtoun on Saturday, March 21.

Albion Hill Home, Brighton, for the reception of unhappy girls seeking to escape from a life of sin, reports a falling-off in subscriptions, and a decrease in receipts from home industry, by reason of a fire on the premises. Sixty-eight new cases were admitted last year, and at the close sixty were in charge of the matrons. The secretary is Rev. R. C. Macdonald, Home Villa, Queen's Park, Brighton.

Scripture Gift Mission.

THE Director of the Scripture Gift Mission, Mr. W. Walters, recently, at the noon prayer meeting, 186, Aldersgate-street, described the interesting work of his Mission. Having displayed around the hall a number of the original drawings from which the portions of Scriptures issued by the Mission have been illustrated, he explained that his effort had been to adorn the pages of Holy Writ in such a way as to make them striking to the mind, and in order that people may see at a glance how the Book comes down to human life and its need. The Bible is essentially Oriental in its cast and form, and the pictures given in these portions are designed to arrest attention, explain the unfamiliar, and show the depth of interest in the Book and its teachings.

Since the work of the Mission began, in 1889, two and a-half million portions of Scripture have been circulated, a great thing for a Christian man to accomplish almost single-handed. Beginning with English Gospels, it has gone forward and issued in several foreign languages, and alike from home workers and missionaries abroad there come appeals for the publication of other parts of the Old and New Testaments. One says "Give us the Psalms;" another says, "Bring out the Epistles." Mr. Walters is, however, compelled to proceed slowly; so that while he has brought out all the Gospels in English, only individual Gospels have been issued in foreign languages. Wherever these have been distributed, most cheering testimonies have been received. It is declared that people begin to read and do not stop until they have finished the books. At the same time, from all the continents, there come appeals for the production of new editions in languages not yet touched by the work. Nearly the whole of Mr. Walters' time is now occupied in printing editions for Roman Catholic countries, where people will read the beautifully printed illustrated Gospels in spite of the threats and penalties of the priests.

A recent enterprise of the Mission is a large edition of the Gospel of John in Modern Greek, a benevolent lady having undertaken to circulate many thousands of copies in the Levant. She earnestly hopes that other Christians may be induced to assist in bringing out other Gospels in the same language. A Portuguese edition of St. John is also ready. An urgent application for copies comes from Brazil and Mexico, as well as the continental peninsula where that tongue prevails. Here again there are also requests that the other Gospels be brought out speedily, as one of them may have the Divine message for such persons as the Fourth does not effectually reach. A thousand copies of one of the Gospels in French, Spanish, or Portuguese, may be had, and sent transit free to any part of the world, for five guineas.

The Mission grows apace. The Epistle to the Romans in English is about to be added to the list. Some very striking pictures, by Messrs. Harper and Clark, find a place here. An edition of the same Epistle in French is also proposed. Then preparation is being made for the Acts of the Apostles. These portions will be of special value for distribution among Roman Catholics, as they exhibit Christian doctrine and life in its primitive purity and simplicity. Those who help forward these efforts will render important assistance to an excellent Mission. Communications to Mr. Walters should be addressed 84, St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C.

Livingstonia Mission.

In a letter from Dr. Kerr-Cross, dated November, he says:—

"The work around Karonga has been growing very much of late. At the schools we have an average attendance of 750 young people. We have now eight schools; two have been opened lately at Kayune's village. We are having admirable meetings. Last Sabbath we had a very delightful day; the school-house was quite full, with some standing, and it is a goodly building. Now is the day of sowing, but the day of harvest will come.

I will soon have completed the translation of the first three Gospels, and then go on to John and the rest of Genesis. My medical work is most cheering. I had ninety-seven people one day lately, and the average is fifty per day. Some weeks ago I had two operations. My patients are all doing well."

The Queen of Madagascar.

AMONG the notable women of high rank who by their example and good works adorn the Church of Christ, Ranavalona Manjaka III., Queen of Madagascar, holds a foremost place. One of the humblest and most consistent Christians, she has been for many years a member of what is known as the Palace Church, at Antananarivo, and has taken her stand as a good, true-hearted woman on all questions of social and moral progress in the country. She takes a sympathetic interest in various phases of mission work and worship, and delights to honour all men and women who, from love to Christ, have gone to her land to carry the Gospel of our Lord and Master. She has been erroneously referred to in some journals as a Methodist, and her sympathies limited somewhat to this body. This is a mistake; there being no Methodist missionaries in the island, and Ranavalona's help is as readily extended to one sect as to another. Although Christianity is now the religion of the Hovas, there is no established church as in the countries of Europe.

There are few authentic details to be gathered concerning her earliest years. Her parents were neither wealthy nor influential, though on her mother's side she is descended from Andrianampoinimerina, the head of the present dynasty. The Princess Razafindrahety, as she was called before her accession, was born on 22nd November, 1860, at Amparibe, and we must believe that she received very little care and attention from those who should have guarded and guided her infant years. She is described as "an untidy, unkempt little girl," whom no one regarded as likely to be called to the throne. She is said to have attended the school of the London Missionary Society at Ambohimanga, and afterwards the Friends' Girls' School. Later she was taken by her aunt, the late Queen, to reside at the palace, and sent with a party of princesses and relatives of the Prime Minister to the Girls' Central School of the London Missionary Society in the capital. Here, under the tuition of Miss Bliss, she proved to be the most industrious and satisfactory of the party who came from the palace.

Though naturally proud and haughty, she evinced both gentleness and docility. Only once did she refuse to obey some command which clashed with her ideas of Malagasy etiquette, but after a short opposition she gave in to what discipline required. Soon after leaving school Princess Razafindrahety married Prince Rakimo, one of the most prominent Hovas. The young couple joined the Church and always bore a very good character. Unhappily the Prince died, after suffering some years from heart-disease.

Upon the death of her aunt in July, 1883, Razafindrahety ascended the throne, under the name Ranavalona III., and soon after married the Prime Minister, who thus retained his position at the head of the Government. The Queen is very popular and has endeared herself to the people by her kindness of disposition and her deep sympathy with the poor and afflicted. The acclamations which always greet her appearance in public are as sincere as they are hearty.

Many unjust and erroneous statements have been made concerning Queen Ranavalona's attitude towards her responsibilities as a monarch. It has been said that she is apathetic in matters of government and prefers retirement and amusements. It is true she does, in her leisure, needlework of various kinds, listens to native songs on the valia (the Malagasy guitar), and is extremely fond of reading and being read to, though the lamentable fewness of native books limits this diversion. She is, however, all a queen should be with respect to keen interest in her people and her government, and on many occasions has materially assisted in avoiding serious complications with foreign powers. In the late war, it was by her insistence that the flag of truce was so speedily displayed in the final conflict at Antananarivo.

Few modern queens have had a more troublous reign than Ranavalona III., yet she has come through the ordeal well. Miss Bliss, who has followed lovingly the career of her pupil, writes:—"I watched her early years as Queen with deep anxiety, and she has never given me cause to be ashamed of her." This is a significant remark when we remember the temptations of such a Court, and the severe testing which an imperfect civilisation and a newly-embraced religion apply to faith and morality.

It is a matter of regret that the Queen has not been able to repress, wholly, the evil-doings of some members of the family to which she belongs; but even so absolute a monarch has limits to her power, and no doubt also natural affection tends to make severity within her own immediate circle an almost insurmountable difficulty.

One thing is evident to all, as years move on—her sincere and earnest piety has deepened and become more active. Her chaplains tell us she is a diligent Bible student and a woman of much prayer. When the new Palace School building was opened three years ago she spoke very earnestly to the pupils, urging, above all, that they should study "the best things" and consecrate their lives to Christ's service. She takes a keen interest in temperance work and is herself a total abstainer, and all charitable organisations have her practical support.

In the recent war her inspiring conduct commanded warm admiration. She spoke frequently in public, and sent many admonitory and encouraging messages to the people, urging her beloved Hovas "to put their trust, not in the army but in the God, for love of whom so many of their forefathers suffered persecution and martyrdom."

The Rebellion in Madagascar.

REUTER'S Agency states that a letter has been received by a recent Madagascar mail giving particulars of the spread of the rebellion in that island. The communication is from the Rev. E. O. Macmahon, whose station at Raminandro, belonging to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, was destroyed by the natives some time ago. Mr. Macmahon, with his family, succeeded in escaping, and had just reached the capital after a long and perilous journey. He says:—

"We have at last reached Antananarivo, after five weeks of wandering. No doubt you have heard of the rebellion in the western part of Imerina, of which Isaha is one division, and the destruction of life and property there. The Friends lost Mr. and Mrs. Johnson and child, and their central station, at Arivonimamo, was wrecked and burnt. We heard of the outbreak at midnight on November 22, and got away just in time to save our lives. We were about ten miles off when Raminandro was in flames, and the church and all we had was wrecked, and the mission-house burnt, as well as the schools and teachers' houses. The native houses of those who refused to join the rebellion were wrecked, and a price was put upon our heads when they failed to find us. . . .

"The churches and teachers' houses and all the property of Europeans were utterly destroyed. Fifteen or sixteen of our country churches—most of them new buildings—besides the church, mission-house, and two large schools, and a teacher's house at Raminandro, were destroyed. The south part of Imerina, through which we travelled with a large escort of native soldiers from Rainijaonary, is more or less in rebellion, and I fear it will be some time before we see the end of these troubles.

"No doubt the present trouble will be put down by many to persecution of Christians and missionaries, which to a certain extent is true; but that was not the primary object of the rebels. They intended to release themselves from the French, and return to their old ways and idols, and the Christians were in the way and missionaries easy prey, so they commenced with us. So far as I am aware, robber chiefs and runaway soldiers are the leaders of the rebellion, though no doubt if they had succeeded many others would have joined them.

"One good result which I am sure will come of the present troubles will be to show what we have so long said—viz., the Malagasy are mostly still heathen, and Christianity only in its infancy here. I hear on good authority that some of those who attacked and murdered Mrs. Johnson were scholars in their upper school, which is very sad. I am glad to say we had no such treachery amongst our own people."—The Times.

Santals and the Gospel.—2.

By SELMA COLLIANDER, LUND, SWEDEN.

MR. BORRESEN gives the following account of the first-fruits of the Scandinavian Santal Mission, and of the gathering of the first congregation of Christians in the Ebenezer or Bengarian district:—"One night we found three young men lying on the ground in deep distress of mind, and full of grief about their sins, crying, 'Lord Jesus, help us.' On March 25, 1869, the three first Santals connected with the Ebenezer Mission were baptized; two of those who had been found lying on the ground, as before described, were among the happy trio. The service was attended by a great number of Santals, and a strong impression was made upon those present. Some few were deeply moved; others were exasperated, particularly the chief, Martrue, who became the worst enemy of the missionaries."

When Martrue noticed that whole villages turned to the Lord, he decreed that all who allowed themselves to be baptized should be expelled from their clans. He swore that he would drive away the missionaries, and all the Christians as well. But, quite unexpectedly, he was arrested by the English Government on account of some crime. After hard labour in prison, he fell hopelessly ill. Mr. Borresen went to him, and asked him whether the heathen physicians had done all in their power for him. He replied "Yes," but that all their efforts were unavailing, and that he "must die." "Have you," said Mr. Borresen, "sacrificed to the gods?" "Yes," said Martrue; "but it brought no help." "Then," said Mr. Borresen, "let me pray for you to the Living God, whom you have blasphemed, and whose worshippers you have persecuted—a God who loves you still?"

answered Martrue; but at length he consented. "I prayed," says Mr. Borresen, "again and again; and at last I saw the tears roll down the old man's cheeks." Mr. Borresen gave him some medicine, and in a week Martrue was able to walk on crutches. He then called his people together, and said to them: "The God of the Christians is the true God. I shall never again persecute them." Some time afterwards he received Christian baptism, and was evermore a friend of missionaries and converts.

The missionaries advanced their hold upon the Santals in another way. They made themselves spokesmen for them during the rebellion that broke out in 1871, through the oppression of the Bengalese agents of the British Government. Mr. Skrefsrud's thorough knowledge of both the Santal and Bengalese languages, and his juridical talent, helped the Santals to gain their rights. His success on their behalf made them jubilant, and they said that the strangers who had proved to be wiser than others in pleading their cause must be well affected towards them, and be wise in religious matters also. They also called meetings and resolved that henceforth there should be full liberty for all to become Christians. On Christmas Day, 1871, there were no fewer than 500 Santals present at Divine worship, and during the sermon some of them exclaimed: "How shall we be converted to God? Teach us how to be so."

To promote the efforts of Mr. Borresen and Mr. Skrefsrud to make and to teach a written language, school-houses were of the utmost importance at the mission station of Ebenezer. The school-houses were utilised for religious services, and until 1872 one of them was used as a mission-church. First a temporary structure was made, capable of holding 600 persons. In 1882, a college for tutors was erected; it was intended to answer the double purpose of a lecture-hall and a church. This building, capable of accommodating 700 persons, was soon filled, and this place also became too small.

Christianity was, under God's blessing, also advanced by two other collateral causes, viz., a disastrous famine, and the commencement of a mission tea-plantation in Assam. When the great Indian famine of 1872 befel the Santals, Messrs. Borresen and Skrefsrud conceived the idea of finding employment for the people, and of saving them from starvation, by making a huge reservoir in the elevated ground of Ebenezer, to serve in any after-time of drought. Thither the people gathered to the number of over 3,000, and were supplied with rice as payment for their work. The missionaries took occasion regularly and earnestly to preach the Gospel of Christ to the multitude; and the hearts of the people were so moved that, by the power of the Holy Ghost, a great religious movement began, during which, from April to November, 1872, 2,100 Santals were spiritually, and, it is hoped savingly converted to living faith in Jesus Christ, were baptized, and became members of the Lutheran Mission Church.

Later on, realising the growth of Christian interest amongst the Santals, by their pressing in ever-increasing numbers to hear the Word of God, Messrs. Borresen and Skrefsrud completed their plans for a large church. A new erection, holding not fewer than 3,000 persons was demanded by the congregation that usually assembled, and this demand was made urgent by the that followed the famine, and subsequent sickness in 1892. On September 19, 1890, the missionaries laid the foundations, Mr. Borresen being architect. In order to find solid ground they were obliged to dig 9 ft. deep. The roof, obtained from Glasgow, cost 17,000 rupees; all the rest of the building, the large tower included, did not cost more than 9000 rupees.

Great has been the work accomplished in God's good providence and grace. Whilst some 10,000 souls have been turned from darkness to light through lively faith in the Son of God, the whole people round about the station of Ebenezer can be said to be convinced of the truth of Christianity, although many of them will not give up their heathen customs and their sins. The rapid strides which Christianity has made at Ebenezer, and the expenditure involved by its marvellous growth there, have rendered it imperative for Mr. Borresen and Mr. Skrefsrud, and others of the mission party, to visit Scandinavia, England, and Scotland, to draw forth Christian sympathy and collect contributions in aid of the work.

Both missionaries have been to Europe more than once, and America has also been visited. During his stay in Denmark Mr. Borresen was ordained by Bishop Martensen in 1877. In 1881 Mr. Skrefsrud was ordained in Norway by Bishop Essendrup. During his stay in Europe he visited Upsala, and his powerful words, in which he described the longing of the heathen for the knowledge of the way of salvation by faith in Christ Jesus, so affected a Mr. Heuman, who had recently taken his degree at the University, and who had obtained spiritual freedom through a living faith in Jesus Christ, that he conceived a strong wish to go out to Ebenezer. In 1886 the way was open for him to join the mission, and at length he assumed the head-mastership of the Mission school. He has ever been careful to guide the development of the characters of the young people under his care. It is hoped that the Santal Assam tea colony, which is rapidly extending, will ultimately be a source of income, and enable the Mission to be self-supporting.

Whilst God has been giving his very marked blessing to the Scandinavian Lutherans, the Church Missionary Society and Free Church of Scotland workers have been pushing forward the standard of the Cross in Santalistan with signal success. As far as statistics can be ascertained, there are now about 4000 Santal converts connected with the C.M.S., of whom about 1000 are communicants; and encouraging results have followed the Scottish Mission. Also there are 10,000 converts in full membership with the Scandinavian Lutheran Society. It is to be borne in mind also that all this progress of Christianity has taken place in about forty years, at the beginning of which period the Santals were scarcely known to Christian missionaries. Such a change has taken place, to which the language of Scripture might well be applied. "The people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up."

Religious Services in Theatres.

THE winter session of the work of the Special Religious Services in Theatres, etc., is now closing. Through the generosity of a friend, the Queen's Theatre, Poplar, has been opened this winter, as it has for some years past. The very poorest people live all round, dockers and such like. Rough as they are outside, we can testify from personal knowledge to the quiet respectful attention they pay to the Gospel message when inside the building.

The following incident will show the influence these theatre services exercise on this class. One of our preachers was in Hyde Park. Seeing a crowd he joined it, to hear what was being said. A Socialist was declaiming against law and order, and after a time began some blasphemous talk against our Lord and Saviour. A little bustle was heard, and a rough, burly man forced his way through the ring, and faced the speaker. "Look ye 'ere, mate, if you say anything against Jesus Christ I'll knock you down." "Oh you're one of the religious sort," sneered the man. "Never you mind what I am. I tell you fair and square, if you say aught against Jesus Christ, I'll knock you down." He evidently meant it. The lecturer seeing that, slunk away amidst the jeers of the crowd.

The preacher went up to the man, put his hand on his shoulder to ask his reasons, when the man, feeling the touch, turned round. "It's what I've heard you and other gentlemen say at the Poplar Theatre that made me shut him up. Look here, mister, if he had said another word, I'd 'a' downed him." Of course, we deprecate the vigorous method with which our friend proposed to deal with his adversary, but the incident shows that our Gospel services win the respect even of this rough type.

In the Pavilion Theatre, Whitechapel-road, we get a number of very poor folks (dossers they call them) from the fourpenny lodging-houses. At the Agricultural Hall, Islington, we get a more respectable class, mostly skilled artisans, the very pith and sinew of our working class. At the Morley Hall, Hackney, we get much the same; these places, unlike the theatres (which are open only during the winter), go on all the year round, attracting hundreds who would otherwise never hear the Gospel. Several other halls are kept open, and God graciously uses them for his glory. We also help the London City Mission in their beneficent work; this year we have given upwards of £400 in aid of poor districts, as the L.C.M. only provide the worker, not the necessary means for keeping open mission-rooms.

In some districts where these devoted men work, the very poor congregate, and many of their rooms would be closed if we did not help towards bearing the expenses. We therefore, without fear, commend this work to the prayerful attention of Christian people. The financial secretary of the work is Rev. T. C. Udall, 3, Bridewell-place, Blackfriars, E.C.

Gray's Yard.—The numerous friends and supporters of the work carried on amongst the "casuals" at Gray's Yard Ragged Church and Schools, James-street, W., will learn with regret that Mr. Philip Gough, who has for more than twenty years been identified with Gray's Yard, has recently been compelled, under orders from his medical advisers, to resign his post and seek for rest. The work will continue to be carried on under the committee, who have secured the help of Colonel H. G. MacGregor, 4, Brechin-place, S.W., as hon. sub-treasurer, to whom all gifts for any branch of the work should be sent in future.

The Duxhurst Farm Homes.

IN one of the loveliest stretches of lovely Surrey stands the Manor House of Duxhurst, surrounded by a fine farm of over 180 acres. Here an experiment is being inaugurated which will be eagerly watched by all who are actively engaged in promoting the temperance cause. One of the hardest puzzles of the temperance reformer is to know what to do with women inebriates. To aid in the solution of that sad problem, Lady Henry Somerset and her sisters of the B.W.T.A. have secured this farm, and it is now almost ready for the full working out of the plans and hopes that are centred in it. One day last week a CHRISTIAN representative visited Duxhurst. A brief account of what he saw will, it is hoped, excite in the reader a sympathetic interest, and a desire to help on a most admirable scheme. The place is still in the hands of the workmen, but very soon now it will be ready for a formal opening, when those specially interested will be able to inspect it in detail.

Entering from the main road to Brighton, via Reigate, the visitor passes the new and neat-looking secretarial office, and presently finds himself at the pretty cottage Homes; six of these have been erected, forming two sides of a large square, with "Lucas House" as the third side. This latter contains one large dining-hall, and an equally spacious sitting-room for the inmates of all the cottages. The walls of the group are of concrete blocks in wooden framework, and the roofs are thatch. The square space enclosed will be filled with shrubs and flowers. Each cottage will have six occupants—working-women who can only afford a small weekly payment. Four of the cottages are now partially or wholly occupied. Every house will be in charge of a nursing sister.

Some distance further on, we pass through the very large and finely-stocked gardens and shrubberies, and come to the Manor House. In this splendidly-appointed mansion rooms are provided for a dozen ladies who can pay for luxurious accommodation. There are all the concomitants of a first-class country house, so that the ladies who seek a retreat within its precincts will have every help that nature, art, sisterly solicitude, and healthful diversion can furnish. The house is managed by the Sister Superintendent, who controls the whole farm colony. Close to the mansion are the ample farmhouses, orchard, large kitchen garden, and new conservatories. A skilled lady gardener is in charge of this department, with capable assistance. It is the purpose of the founders, through these channels, to give interesting, educational, and profitable occupation to the dwellers in the Homes, so that patients may by industry provide for their daily maintenance in whole or in part.

Some cottages on another part of the farm give accommodation for a number of what may be called intermediate residents, whose resources are greater than those of the working-women, but yet far short of those in the Manor House. The design is to afford opportunity for all grades of women who are sincerely anxious to overcome the drink habit, and fit themselves for re-entering on the responsibilities of ordinary social life.

Last, but certainly not least, the farm provides a habitat for a children's holiday home; this has been built near the entrance from the Brighton road, and has been happily designated "The Birds' Nest." It is structurally after the same plan as the new cottages, and stands on the edge of a goodly copse, which will be the children's special domain, where they can roam and romp and generally enjoy themselves the livelong summer days. The "Nest" is presided over by Sister Kathleen, who has been a helper in the West London Mission, but is now devoting herself to the interests of London's slum children, whom she hopes to welcome in fortnightly batches on to the end of the fine weather. Our representative found Sister Kathleen in the throes of house-furnishing, but hoping to be ready by Easter for the first instalment of her little slum friends. She intends as far as possible to take the very worst and poorest that West End slum-don can furnish, and to give them such glimpses and experiences of another and vastly different world as will create a divine discontent, even in youthful and untutored minds, with the sordid and wretched surroundings of their present life. This part of the Farm Homes at Duxhurst is different in scope from those previously noted, but equally Christian, and certainly more fraught with hope. Two charmingly written and beautiful booklets, by Sister Kathleen, give a vivid description of the town life of these children, and of the sylvan life to which she introduced some of them last year. Let the reader by all means send a few stamps to this Sister at the Birds' Nest, Duxhurst, Reigate, Surrey, for copies of these booklets, and we warrant they will not only be charmed, but turned into fast friends of a beautiful effort.

Failing space forbids more than the merest mention of the new chapel, the small hospital, and the laundry, which will form part of the equipment of this new Surrey sanatorium. When it is formally opened we hope to say something further about it and its mission. Meantime those who wish for fuller information than we have given in this brief outline sketch can obtain it from the new London offices of the B.W.T.A., 47, Victoria-street, S.W. All who know the ravages that the demon drink is making among women in all sections of society, must wish the fullest and most abiding success to this well-planned and essentially Christian scheme.

Forced "Conversions" in Armenia.

THE TURKISH officials have recently been busy in giving explicit denials to the statement that there had been any "forced conversions" to the Mohammedan faith; but the following statement, received from reliable correspondents, will prove how contrary this denial is to the facts of the case. The third of the extracts will show the state of mind of one of the many thousands of Christians who have become "converts" to Mohammedanism.

If the Great Powers of Europe desire to protect the Christian populations of Turkey, who have already suffered such untold horrors, from the further outrage of forcing the survivors of the massacres into the Mohammedan faith, it seems to be necessary that they should instruct their ambassadors at Constantinople to investigate these statements before accepting the denial of Turkish officials. The value of such denials may be gauged by reference to an accompanying statement, viz., that perfect tranquility now reigns throughout the empire! Surely the influence of public opinion, as represented in the Press of our own and other civilised nations, should avail to bring even the Sultan of Turkey to see the wisdom of proclaiming his condemnation of the forced conversions, and thus to furnish one of the best proofs of his desire for the good government of the Asiatic provinces of his empire.—Yours faithfully,

A. J. ARNOLD, General Secretary.

EXTRACTS.

Writing on Feb. 20, a correspondent says: "While the Ottoman Government thus denies the facts, early in January some of its petty officials in country districts of the provinces of Harpoot and Diarbekir occupied themselves with visiting the villages recently 'converted,' to instruct the people on no account to admit, in case they were asked, that they had been forced to accept Islamism. The people were informed that death would be the penalty for complaints of the compulsion used to convert them. There are 15,000 of these forced converts in the province of Harpoot alone, and 40,000 in the whole region devastated by the massacres. Any dispatch of Consuls by the Powers would easily verify the facts reported, and also would reveal the piteous pleadings of these people for deliverance from servitude to a hated religion into which they have been forced. If the Powers could induce the Sultan to proclaim his condemnation of compulsory conversion, and to proclaim, in addition, liberty to the victims to return to their own faith, his Majesty would clear himself from the stigma of really approving the compulsory conversions, and would provide the natural remedy for the crime. Information from various points in the provinces of Sivas, Harpoot, Diarbekir, Bitlis, and Van show that the process of forcing the Christians to become Moslems is still in active progress. Week by week the Christians are warned that the massacre which is to destroy all those who have not accepted Mohammedanism is impending."

Another correspondent, writing from Harpoot with regard to the massacres, says, "In this part of the country there has been another element in this crusade, and that is to compel men to accept the Mohammedan faith. In the early Moslem conquests, those who did not wish to accept the religion of Mohammed had their lives spared upon the giving of tribute. The sword was the last alternative. In this crusade, Christians, even before they were plundered, often voluntarily offered all their property on condition that their lives might be spared, but after being despoiled of their goods, they were told that the only condition upon which they would be spared was to accept Mohammedanism. A Turkish official, one of the few Turks who has seemed to appreciate the disgrace to his own people, estimates that there have been more than 15,000 forced conversions to Islam in this district. . . . There are probably from fifty to seventy-five villages in this district where the majority of the surviving Christian population, at least the men, pronounced the formula—'There is no God but God, and Mohammed is the prophet of God,' which is regarded as a distinct profession of Mohammedanism. They were told by the leading Turks in their villages, in most cases, that if they would do this, they would protect them from the Koords, but they might retain their own opinions. After the crisis was over, they were summoned by these same Turks and told that having made the profession of Mohammedanism, they must submit to the rite of circumcision. No subterfuges were allowed; with swords drawn over them, they were told it was submission or death. Multitudes of those who yielded did so, not so much to save their own lives, as to save their families from a fate worse than death."

A letter from an Armenian ecclesiastic of one of the higher orders is addressed to a friend whose name we dare not mention, and the writer says: "With weeping eyes we read the comforting words of your fatherly letter, and were grateful. But at present we have all accepted Islam from fear of death with torture, as also have I, your humble servant, at the age of seventy years. After passing through many narrow escapes from death, and afterwards having no way to escape, against my will, but appearing to be willing, I accepted their faith; but begged that on account of my great age they would excuse me from the rite of circumcision. They would not accept this, so I submitted to the rite to save my head from being cut off; and they did to me as they wished. They threatened to kill me with many and fearful tortures, if, after this rite had been performed, I again returned to the Christian faith, and said that if they did not carry out this threat they would thereby forfeit their faith. As they threatened me, your servant, so they did the people. The greater part of the Christians were circumcised, and the rest are wounded, and do not dare to venture from the places where they are secreted. I wish to tell you that there is no Christianity here, unless help comes from somewhere."

The C.M.S. Centenary.—The committee of the C.M.S. have finally settled a draft manifesto, which they propose to issue forthwith, in connection with the Society's centenary. The document is one of great interest, marking as it does something of a new departure. The committee deprecate the centenary being made an occasion for glorifying the Society, as the Society will not have completed its first century until April 12, 1899, and it has been decided that the intervening three years shall be spent in reviewing in a comprehensive spirit the present operations, methods, and evangelistic forces. Many measures have been resolved upon to provide this advance; and while the results may not be seen for some time yet, it is hoped that just as in the last seven years the Society has actually doubled, so in the next three years a similar advance may be made. An appeal will be issued to the archbishops and bishops of the whole Anglican communion, in the hope that they may be led to take such steps as may tend to arouse the Church to a livelier sense of its obligations to the heathen world. It is proposed to observe Sunday, April 12 next, as a day of prayer in connection with the special efforts to be put forth.

Aggressive Work.—20.

THE other day I entered one of the long saloon carriages on the overhead railway here, and found it packed with over forty people. I spoke aloud, and asked the company how many of us had our souls saved. That I presumed we ought to know, as the Bible made it possible, and if we did not know, it must be largely on account of neglect. I believed more men were lost by neglect than anything else. "How shall ye escape if ye neglect so great salvation?" and so on.

A well-dressed woman in the centre of the carriage spoke up, and said she thought it was neglect in the majority of cases. Then a man near me said he had been saved twenty years. Another said he was saved when quite a boy, having been brought up in the midst of Gospel teaching.

Several respectable-looking seafaring men at the end of the carriage had been conversing together, when one of them, who had just sufficient drink to make him talkative, said to another, "Harry, are you a friend of mine?" Harry was reading a newspaper, and did not answer. Again he called out, "Harry, do you love me?" The train now stopped, and Harry said something about not loving the drink of which his friend had taken too much. His friend then rose, muttering something, and left the carriage along with others.

A soliloquy immediately followed by Harry to this effect: "Horrible thing that drink. When a man goes the way to heaven he goes single-handed, but if he goes to destruction by drink he drags down everybody belonging to him." I thought this sounded well for Harry, so I asked how long he had been saved, and he replied, "Over ten years."

Here were three men and one woman not ashamed to confess the Master in a railway carriage. Often it only requires someone to take the initiative and others are ready to follow. Confessing the Lord is good for us and may become a blessing, and then we have that precious promise in Matthew x. 32, "Whosoever, therefore, shall confess Me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven."

However, it was quite an interesting twenty minutes, and as the company were very attentive to what was going on, I think we may reasonably expect good would result. But what an enemy to the Gospel drink is, and a barrier to all that is good; for, as a rule, a man addicted to drink is, humanly speaking, in a hopeless condition—yet there are exceptions to all rules, and I once met a man who told me he was saved whilst drunk in a public-house. When there another drunken man came in and commenced uttering such dreadful oaths that he was staggered and remarked aloud, "What awful language!" The language was of such a nature that the man appeared to be overwhelmed with the great wickedness of it. That arrested him, and he left the house serious, the result being conviction of sin, and eventually conversion to Christ. Truly the Lord's ways are wonderful!

I lately got into another of the overhead railway carriages and found only two men there. I said, "Well, friends, have we all got our souls saved?" One replied, "I have." "That's good," I said. "How long have you been in the way?" And he answered, "About twenty years." Then looking at me he said, "I heard you preach in Wavertree Park one Sunday, and the address greatly impressed me. I wanted to stay behind and speak to you after the meeting, but I had not the courage to do so. I felt as though I would have done almost anything to become a Christian—yes, I think I would have walked on my hands and knees to Jerusalem; but it was not for eighteen months afterwards that I found peace. I then spoke to a man whom I knew, belonging to the Seamen's Bethel Society, and told him I had heard you preaching and the trouble I had since been in; he talked with me for some time, and I was enabled to see it and so I found rest."

How true it is that "one sows and another reaps." And how frequently it is that the Lord uses several people in leading one into the Kingdom. "Even so, Father, for it seemeth good in thy sight" (Matt. xi. 26).

D. M. DRYSDALE.

THE EVANGELIST.

A Sailor's Mistake.

SOME years ago a sailor, after a long voyage, was paid off at a seaport on the west coast of England, and immediately engaged to join a ship at London, belonging to the same owner. Having received his pay, a considerable sum, he took a third-class ticket for the metropolis, and departed. But, having taken too much drink, he soon fell fast asleep, and neglected to change carriages at the proper station. So he was conveyed right across the country to a seaport on the east coast.

When he reached this town he was still under the influence of liquor, and not knowing how or why he had come thither, he was questioned by the stationmaster, who, seeing that he was incompetent to take care of himself, and ascertaining that he had a sum of money about his person, induced him to surrender it to his keeping, and gave him in charge of a fellow traveller who was willing to look after him. This disinterested friend conducted him to a wayfarer's board and lodging-house, where he slept that night.

Next day, the landlady, a Christian woman, seeing him in tears, asked him why he wept. "Was it for his sins or from some worldly cause?" "Oh," said he, "Missis, I have been concerned about my soul for two years, but have sinned against my conscience. Can you tell me where there is a prayer-meeting to-night?" "No," she replied; "but I can tell you where you will hear a sermon that will do you good." "Well, I'll go," said he. "Glad to hear it," rejoined the good woman, and pointing to a portrait on the wall, said "There is the man that will preach." The sailor looked up, and fastening his eyes on the picture, exclaimed, "Why, that's the very man that I heard preach in Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle two years ago, and that convinced me of my sins." The landlady was astonished.

That evening an elder of the church of which the said preacher was pastor* discovered a sailor, during the sermon, weeping bitterly; and at the close of the service tried to get at him; but he was gone—not however, without being followed by two brethren who had watched his tears, and who followed him to his lodgings, where they took out their Bible, and read suitable passages about the way to salvation. On parting, one of them drew a tract from his pocket, and said, "Read that." It was a paper with several paragraphs, each beginning with the invitation, "Come unto Me." The sailor did not read the paragraphs, but fixed his eye on the invitation, and said he, "Why, that's just what I want; and I will come to Him, I do come to Him." His face was illuminated with joy, the big tears rolled down his cheeks, and he walked up and down the room, rejoicing and speaking of Christ to everyone who came in his way.

"Only think," said he, "that God should carry me, in spite of myself, to the wrong place, which was the right one, in order to save my soul."

*The late Rev. A. A. Rees, Bethesda Chapel, Sunderland.

THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST.

As though God did beseech you by us, we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.

Jesus said: Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.

Him that cometh to Me, I will in no wise cast out.

Look unto Me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else.

Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out.

Bring forth, therefore, fruits worthy of repentance.

The Free Church Congress.

THIS important and representative gathering of Evangelical Nonconformists, held last week in Nottingham, had many interesting matters brought before it. The discussions were earnest and full of promise for the future. A delegate present reports crowded gatherings, earnest devotion, and warm interest, as the characteristics of the meetings.

The sermon by Rev. J. H. Jowett on the opening day was "a plea for more passionate, enthusiastic devotion to Christ," and formed a worthy keynote to all that followed. A discussion on "Churches in Towns" was ably opened by Rev. S. F. Collier, of Manchester. He spoke of the special difficulties that arise from the massing of great populations, and of the need for adjusting organisation and method to the needs of the work. He regarded the outlook as hopeful, and said that an ever-increasing number of the working classes are joining the Church of Christ. He pleaded for a more constant use of church buildings, especially on Saturday nights, when the degrading attractions of the ale-house are most perilous. At the same time there must be a great consecration and a lessened spirit of worldliness among Christian professors. Rev. John Smith, of the Primitive Methodist Missions, set forth the position in the villages, and the hindrances from Ritualism, overlapping, etc.

One of the most interesting discussions was that on "The Church and the Press." A suggestive paper was read by Dr. Robertson Nicoll, who contended for greater support to cheap periodicals advancing Free Church principles. Mr. A. E. Fletcher dealt with the shortcomings of the daily secular Press, especially in its encouragement of gambling and betting, its sensational records of vice and crime, and its feeding of the warlike spirit. The Armenian question was the theme of a strong resolution spoken to by Dr. Berry and Dr. Stephenson. A resolution commending international arbitration was heartily passed.

The Congress sermon was preached by Dr. Joseph Parker on the Tuesday evening, from the text, "Preach the Gospel"; it was an eloquent plea for the maintenance of Evangelical doctrine in the pulpit. Next day Dr. Parker opened a discussion on "Preaching"; he declared that the sole purpose of preaching is to save men, and argued for the fullest individuality in the method of presenting the message. Dr. Monro Gibson thought that the great want of the age was the union of Evangelical fervour with largeness and breadth of view. Dr. Mackennal pleaded for personal verification of the truth on the part of preachers; and Rev. F. W. Bourne dwelt on the importance of tone.

A new constitution was adopted, its definition and object being the following: The name shall be "The National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches." The Churches constituting the local councils entitled to representation on the National Council are the Congregational and Baptist Churches, the Methodist Churches, the Presbyterian Church of England, the Free Episcopal Churches, the Society of Friends, and such other Evangelical Churches as the National Council may at any time admit. The objects of the National Council shall be—(a) To facilitate fraternal intercourse and co-operation among the Evangelical Free Churches; (b) to assist in the organisation of local councils; (c) to encourage devotional fellowship and mutual counsel concerning the spiritual life and religious activities of the Churches; (d) to advocate the New Testament doctrine of the Church, and to defend the rights of the associated Churches; and (e) to promote the application of the law of Christ in every relation of human life.

There was a lively discussion on the question of education, and on Wednesday evening a largely-attended missionary meeting was held. Pressing social questions largely filled up the closing day. The Council of next year is fixed to be held in London, and Dr. Monro Gibson is to be president.

Stratford Conference Hall.

STRATFORD Conference Hall, with its Y.M.C.A., is a centre of manifold Christian effort in a thickly-populated quarter of London. To those who know it, this institution stands for a combination of organisations for young and old, several bands of devoted men and women, and a network of evangelistic operations. There are leaders whose character and earnestness ensure a hearty following; there is a rank-and-file of workers whom it is at once an honour and a joy to encourage and direct. The work is well known to have been the outcome of the mission held in 1884 by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and of that memorable time it is a worthy monument. That it is not merely a monument is clear from the record of the past ten years, and the determination of the council, as expressed in the latest report to "forget those things which are behind, and reach forward to those things which are before," in view of the fact that in the advance of God's kingdom "there remaineth yet much land to be possessed."

The annual meeting of the work, held on Thursday evening last, was largely attended, and Lord Kinnaird, who presided, was supported by ministers of various denominations, and other influential friends. No gathering in connection with the place is complete without the genial presence of Mr. C. Boardman, who is treasurer and much besides; and such is the devotion of Mr. E. Fox Butlin, and such the value of his services as general secretary, that one naturally looks for him on all occasions. These friends seemed delighted that, by God's goodness, it was possible to report so joyously upon the past, and look forward so cheerfully to the future. There is now a Y.W.C.A. as well as a Y.M.C.A., and about forty meetings are held every week in connection with the spacious building.

The report for last year says: "It has been our privilege to witness constant signs of blessing. Many a home in Stratford has been brightened through a father, mother, son, or daughter being reclaimed from a life of sin, and being enabled, by the grace of God, to rise into newness of life. By far the most important event of the year was the inauguration, on Saturday, December 7, of the men's book club. After great preparations we had the pleasure of enrolling 240 men as members at the first meeting, and at the close of the third meeting 304 had joined. The effect of this has been that our congregations on Saturday evenings have risen from 200 to 600. Members joining pay one penny per week, and at the close of four months are presented with first-rate books, the publishing prices of which are twice the amount of the money paid in. The Evangelistic Band held 109 meetings in mission halls and other places during the year, and the large band of open-air workers, during the season, lasting from Easter to the end of September, held upwards of 240 meetings, and have seen their simple testimony blessed to the salvation of many. In connection with the work 100,000 tracts were given away, and 133 persons signed the pledge."

Under the head of finance an adverse balance of £24 was reported; but, by gifts and promises in the course of the evening, this was made up and a working balance left in hand. Kind and searching words having been spoken by the Chairman, a vigorous address was delivered by Dr. Barnardo on the Lord's words, "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men."

Exeter Hall.—The Monday and Wednesday Parlour Meetings have been continued without interruption, and an increased number of workers for the distribution of invitations in the Strand and neighbourhood has resulted in a larger number of men being gathered in. Several cases of real spiritual blessing have been recorded during the past month. At one of these meetings a lad who had been invited in from the Strand stayed behind, and in conversation with one of the workers told his sad story. It appeared that he had robbed his employer in Scotland, and had run away from home and journeyed to London, where he found himself homeless and penniless. The fact of his presence here was communicated to his father, who at once telegraphed for him to be sent home, and it was with much joy that a letter was received a few days later, stating that he had not only been restored to his parents, but that his employer had forgiven him his wrong-doing, and taken him back into his service.—Association News.

Rev. J. McNeill at Cambridge.

THE visit of Rev. J. McNeill to Cambridge has drawn to a close. The size of the meetings testified to the general response in Cambridge to the claims of the Gospel of Jesus Christ as advocated by Mr. McNeill. As night after night of the last week of the mission rolled by, the great Corn Exchange was filled with eager crowds anxious to hear more of the Word of Life.

But, perhaps, of all the meetings, two may be singled out as being more impressive than the rest. On two successive Sunday evenings Mr. McNeill, under the auspices of the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union, gave an address in the Guildhall to University men. The meetings of the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union are always full of go and earnestness. There is no mistake in the true ring of the message which comes from the lips of the speakers Sunday by Sunday. Earlier in the term the platform was occupied by Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe, Rev. E. A. Stuart, Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, and other well-known speakers. Each Sunday a large crowd of men has turned up. During Mr. McNeill's visit, the attendances have been very large. All shades of opinion have been represented, every side of University life has had its exponent. The rowdy man and the "pi"-man alike have sat side by side to hear the utterances of our "Scottish Spurgeon."

Let me try and picture the Guildhall on the evening of Sunday week. Hundreds of men are there—men from every college in the 'Varsity. Neither is there wanting a complement of grey-headed scholastic-looking dons. There is a curious fascination about the preacher, who preaches as if the very souls of the men he is addressing depended upon his effort; now allowing some sally of almost unconscious humour to rouse his audience almost to laughter; now making every heart respond to his touch as he held up before men's eyes the scales of the judgment of God. It was, indeed, wonderful to watch the mass of men in their sombre gowns listening with heart, and ear, and eye. There was no life that could remain untouched surely, after hearing such a sermon. McNeill is no longer there. It is surely the Holy Spirit of God that is striving with that surging crowd of lives; surely there will go forth some new Luther to send the trumpet-blast throughout the world; surely some heart will go forth with the fullness of the desire to serve the living Christ.

And then came the final appeal of the preacher—that climax to his message, that last note that always thrills and moves—the whole preacher's soul summed up in those last words. Yea, surely as the preacher stops and as the heads are bowed in prayer that solemn stillness is one which ushered many souls into the kingdom. "Christ for me" will be the prayer at many a bedside that night. Then we closed and the crowd dispersed—dispersed to talk, to think, to act.

This is a listener's record of the scene. The preacher is gone, but Christ remains. The Inter-Collegiate Christian Union has gained one new friend, Mr. McNeill has gained many. B.

Distress in Newfoundland.

SIR,—I have received a letter from Rev. G. Ward Siddall, minister of the Congregational Church at St. John's, in which he thus describes the present condition of that colony:—

"We are having a terrible winter here, perfect Arctic weather, worse than has been known for the past forty years. Snow lies on the ground from 10ft. to 15ft. deep, country roads completely blocked, communication with the outposts almost entirely suspended owing to ice blockade. The suffering among the poorer classes is very great, especially in Fortune Bay, where the entire failure of the herring fishing has brought the people to the verge of starvation. We have done all we can in the way of relief, and I do not think there has been much actual suffering at our two stations."

I shall be glad to receive and forward any contribution which readers may send to you, or direct to this office, in aid of the oldest British Colony.—Yours truly,
D. BURNFORD HOOKE,
Secretary of the Colonial Missionary Society.

Mrs. Whittemore.

THIS lady, whose visit to Europe has created so much interest, left England on Wednesday for America. Happily her son, whose health was the primary cause of her journey, is now in a large degree restored to physical vigour.

A great many invitations were sent to Mrs. Whittemore to address meetings, which she has been unable to accept. Her time, however, has been very fully occupied. Much interest was awakened by her stay in Paris, and it is gratifying to learn that as one fruit of her visit, a Paris "Door of Hope" is about to be opened in connection with Miss De Broen's Mission. Mrs. Whittemore had some meetings in Geneva also that have proved most fruitful, and a "Door of Hope," it is expected, will be established in that Swiss city.

It was our American sister's intention to return home via Southampton and the Continent, but the invitations to visit Glasgow were so pressing that she was constrained to comply with them. Here again the deepest interest accompanied her addresses and appeals, and as one outcome a Glasgow "Door of Hope" will be set on foot by Christian ladies. All their efforts will be affiliated in sympathy and method with the New York institution, and it is hoped they will only be the precursor of many similar loving endeavours to win back the erring from the paths of sin and sorrow. Mrs. Whittemore carries with her to her native land and her lifework the prayerful good wishes of a host of Christian friends this side of the sea.

Dublin Visiting Medical Mission.

THE fourth annual meeting of this Mission was held on March 12, in the Mission premises, 6, Chancery-place. Dr. J. W. Moore, who presided, said he was astonished at the progress made by the Mission—he might say by leaps and bounds—since it was first started. This progress was proof of the felt need it supplied in the city. The report for 1892 showed 1400 attendances at the morning dispensaries, and that for 1895 gave an increase to 10,812. The evening dispensary for men, the visiting, and other branches of work have kept pace also with this great increase.

The report for 1895 having been read, Dr. J. J. Long, one of the Mission doctors, gave some interesting details of the working of the Mission. He said there was no better medium for reaching our fellow-countrymen than the peaceful operations of the Medical Mission. There has been much opposition from the leaders of the people; our nurse was hooted and pelted out of an adjoining court, while the doctor was often said to be a clergyman in disguise. Nevertheless, people came to the place; the numbers have steadily increased until they reached the totals given by the chairman. Best of all, however, many are known who have been led to the Saviour, and have manifested the reality of their faith by changed lives.

Dr. David Turner said that this Mission was worthy of the support and prayerful sympathy of all present, because of its object, its progress, and its difficulties. He knew of no work so closely in sympathy with the heart of the Master Himself, meaning, as it does, life eternal to many a dark benighted soul. The hon. treasurer, Dr. Hy. Bewley, gave a short financial statement, showing that the Mission received over £700 last year, but needs about £250 immediately, for an unexpected outlay upon the premises, etc. Dr. Albert Fenn, the second mission doctor, also spoke a few words.

The "Home of Rest," Portobello.—The fifth annual meeting of the subscribers to the "Home of Rest" for the Aged, Prospect-bank, Portobello, was held last week at 5, St. Andrew-square, Edinburgh. General Smith stated that the Home was now occupied by twenty-four aged men and women. It had hitherto been rented, but now the proprietor required that it either be rented for another year from Whitsunday next, with a promise of purchase at the close, or vacated at Whitsunday, 1896. It was impossible, for lack of funds, to purchase the house, for which £1200 was asked, and the promoters appealed to the public for sufficient funds to enable them to effect the purchase. Speeches, in support of the work of the Home were afterwards made by Rev. George Wilson, Rev. George D. Low, Mrs. Pearson (hon. secretary), and Dr. Moir.

London Wesleyan Mission.

THE different branches of this forward movement held their united anniversary in Exeter Hall on Monday evening, in the presence of a very large company of friends. A general report of the year's work was submitted by the secretary, Rev. W. D. WALTERS, who told of progress and success all along the line. He said that £1500 are still required to complete the allocation made to the various missions a year ago. The Mission also has a debt of £5000, which it is most desirable to clear off.

The chairman of the evening, Mr. R. W. PERKS, M.P., said the agents of this home mission are neither politicians, traders, nor scientists; their sole function is to preach the Gospel, to raise the poor, and to help the helpless. He referred with much approval to the part that is being played in the work by godly, cultured women; though he somewhat sarcastically remarked that these ladies are not yet admitted into the pulpits of the Methodist church. On the point of social reform, Mr. Perks, referring to a recent utterance on this point by the Prime Minister, pertinently asked what that powerful politician was going to do for the temperance cause, for the repression of betting, and for the due observance of the Sabbath. Rev. WALFORD GREEN said the work was costly, but it was not to be abandoned on that account. What part of the work could be given up? Whatever the work may cost, it must be maintained.

As a sympathetic outsider, Rev. ALFRED ROWLAND, of Crouch End, said he greatly approved of the high moral and spiritual atmosphere of the meeting, and of militant Methodism. He said the conditions of the times called for the united warfare of all the Churches, and he valued the aggressive efforts of this Mission, as setting an example to other communions. The fight with the habitual and luxurious vice of the West End is especially necessary. We want the blazing light of God shined on these social cancers and skeletons. The speaker made an eloquent appeal for greater individual effort in extending this greatly needed and God-blessed movement.

All the principal leaders of the different branches of the work were on the platform—Messrs. Peter Thompson, H. Price Hughes, J. H. Hopkins, and J. E. Wakerley. The first rejoiced to be able to say that the work of the tenth year of the East End branch had been even more remarkable than that of the first year. The East End, he said, is not the East End of ten years ago. The people are not so indifferent and degraded. The work among the children is changing the songs of the East, and the vile music-hall ditties are being elbowing out by purer strains. There has been a patent decrease in the open public blasphemy and lewd speech of the streets. Referring to recent legal experiences in the courts, Mr. Thompson fervidly demanded that pure morals in Ratcliff Highway should be as much sought after as those of the Queen's palace. He could report 1600 converts gathered out of the courts and alleys of the East-End. There are conversions every week, and the "raw material" is being brought out of the deepest depths by the work of the devoted sisters. A very pathetic incident of this sort, of recent occurrence, was related amid the approving cheers of the audience; which were renewed when Mr. Thompson declared, "We must blot out the liquor traffic!" They were going to object to publicans' licences right along till they are all wiped out.

After the collection, Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES spoke. He deprecated the idea that there was any rivalry between mission work and pastoral work. It is by the co-operation of the two that London can be saved. Having just returned from the Free Church Congress, he said that the prevailing feeling there was the substantial unity of all these churches, and the folly of their keeping apart in face of the opposition throughout the country to Evangelical work and doctrine. As to the West End Mission, Mr. Hughes reported continual conversions. But they were overworked and overmaned. The membership was very fluctuating by reason of constant removals, and their members are found in all parts of the provinces. Special monthly services are now held in Craven Chapel for the benefit of young men and young women in West End business houses. These have been happily and fruitfully begun, and Mr. Hughes said he looked forward to a great work among the young people. In the closing part of his speech Mr. Hughes alluded to the recent prosecution of Mr. Peter Thompson and his helpers for libel, in connection with an East End public-house, which has landed him, through the disagreement of the jury, in the payment of £600 for costs. He earnestly appealed for public help in meeting this claim.

Rev. J. H. Hopkins and Rev. J. E. Wakerley briefly spoke.

Through the Villages.

LENGTHENING days remind us of joyous work in the villages; the hope that others will be moved to go forth makes us record past experiences. One Saturday evening last autumn after a quiet day of visiting those blessed many years ago, we reached an oft-frequented temperance hotel. We went early to rest and had breakfast at 7.30 on the following day. There are always delays in starting, and a call or two on interested friends made it quite 9 o'clock when we were on the road.

Our first village stood round a green on which we have held many meetings. Visiting from house to house, we had a very hearty reception, and then, raising our voices, made nearly the whole village hear the glorious invitations of God's Word. There is very little Gospel-preaching in the neighbourhood, and during the morning we met with much encouragement in three small places we reached. About mid-day we came to where two roads meet, and took one leading to a village where lives an invalid friend.

Small places, scattered houses, railway navvies, etc., came in our way, and, after a quiet time with the invalid, who always cheers us, we kept on quietly working through one or two more small places until about six o'clock, when we entered a town. The part where the tramps congregate came first, and after a little time there, we took our stand in two or three other central places, including a market square. People were just waiting about and starting to the places of worship. While two were speaking, other two of our party scattered Scripture leaflets in large numbers. In these two ways a large number received the messages of God's Word.

Proceeding, a little quiet visiting and a drive brought us into a large village about eight o'clock. There we had two good meetings, and in the quiet of the autumn evening, the Word came with great apparent power. We specially noted the intense interest shown by friends of a poor invalid now gone home, to whom we were permitted to carry the message of God's love, and who became a very bright Christian. Requests for a direct answer to the Lord Jesus ("Yes" or "No"), as He by his Spirit says, "Come unto Me," often clear away difficulties and bring seekers to decision.

The Railway Mission.

A JAPANESE native evangelist has been appointed by the Railway Mission to work among the men on the Japanese railways. A copy of the evangelist's diary has been received by the secretary of the Mission, in which an interesting account is given of a tour along the various lines. The Japanese railway men are, with very few exceptions, professed believers in some false religion, but the evangelist found in very many cases an earnest longing for light. In almost every instance his message, telling of the Gospel of Christ, was listened to with great interest, and many inquiries were made by seekers after the truth. The Japanese Government has allowed a copy of the New Testament to be placed at each station for the use of the staff. It is felt that the railway men of Japan, with their facilities for travelling about the country, may become an important agency in the conversion of the Japanese to Christ.

A very encouraging report has also been received, telling of definite blessing among the railway men in Cape Town, where several ladies are doing a good work. The Railway Mission is anxious to find a consecrated man and a soul-winner, who will go to the Cape and work among the men on the lines there. A little coach is provided by the railway authorities, in which the missionary would live and travel about from place to place, visiting the people and conducting meetings at each station. Communications should be made to the secretary of the Mission, Mr. B. Nixon, 1, Adam-street, Strand, London, W.C.

CHRISTIAN UNION FOR SOCIAL SERVICE.

DEAR SIR,—We have at length acquired a valuable and most suitable estate of 260 acres at Lingfield, in Surrey. The property is secured by mortgages, on which the interest will correspond with a rent of less than £100 a year.

While we share with many others the purpose of endeavouring to help men now drifting into pauperism back to independence, by employment on the land under competent instructors, we are specially anxious to do this with the utmost possible economy, and to keep in constant touch with the churches, so as to ensure their prayerful co-operation. There are so many decent and able-bodied men thrown out of work whom the Churches would gladly help, though they can neither employ nor support them, that the opportunity of giving such a hopeful chance of recovery through our agency, at a cost of 4s. or 5s. a week, will, we believe, be largely welcomed when it is understood.

—Yours faithfully,

F. B. MEYER.

THE FUTURE LIFE.

DEAR SIR,—In your number for March 5 you notice "the restraint shown in the revelations of the New Testament concerning the future life." There is this restraint, certainly, and yet we are told more about that life than might at first sight appear. In future blessedness, there are three elements—(1) a positive element which we understand, (2) a negative element which we can also understand, and (3) a positive element which we cannot understand. Taking these in reverse order, the positive element which we cannot understand is that connected with the glorified body. The perceptive organs of that body are in all probability so different from those we now possess, that language could no more describe to us its perceptions than it could describe colours to one born blind. The negative element is the absence of all evil of every kind. This, of course, we can all understand to a very large extent.

But the positive element which we can understand is that which, in a lower degree, we already possess, the spiritual joys of the new life here below, the love, joy, peace, which are the fruit of the Spirit. The highest joy of the glorified spirits in heaven is the joy of love, the joy of God's love to them, of their love to Him, and of their mutual love one to another. To this there is added—or rather with this there is inseparably connected—the joy of beholding God's glory in all his works. All this we can understand, because in lower measure we enjoy it already. But there it will be immeasurably greater, and without drawback. Surely, if this thought is followed out, there is no limit to the views which we may even now have of the glories of the future life.

Dr. Comandi's Home, Florence.

DR. COMANDI and his wife are passing through very trying times. For some weeks now next to no money has been coming in for the support of the Asilo; the work has no funds whatever, and every day, though the strictest economy is observed, a large sum is necessary for its maintenance. As a result of the war everything is getting dearer, and the future looks very dark indeed.

For over twenty-one years Dr. Comandi has been labouring in Italy among the orphans and the neglected ones. The work has extended, and has been a great power for blessing. At present, however, Dr. Comandi is asking himself what branch has to be given up, as it seems almost impossible to go on. Yet he shrinks from closing any part of the work, knowing what a triumph this would be to the Jesuits, who fight him every inch of ground.

The work is entirely one of faith. Having spent some time at the Asilo, I gathered these facts, and feel it laid on my heart to plead the cause. Dr. and Mrs. Comandi are resting on the promises of our faithful Jehovah. Their address is 6, Via Aretina, Florence.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Trowbridge Association received a visit from Mr. Geo. Holmes last week, who addressed three good meetings.

Coventry Association is developing a scheme for the acquisition of new premises and the appointment of a general secretary.

A most important move has been made by the Queen's College Christian Union, in the appointment of a sub-committee of the students to keep in touch with the Belfast Y.M.C.A.

The Welsh project for the employment of a travelling secretary has been satisfactorily completed in both the northern and southern districts, and the officer will shortly be at work.

Grantown-on-Spey Association are making progress in the building scheme they have undertaken jointly with the Y.W.C.A. £600 has been subscribed, and other £900 is required. A central block of buildings has been secured.

Norway returns 189 Associations with an estimated membership of 10,000 young men. Seventeen of the Associations own their own buildings, and secretaries are employed at Christiania, Christiansund, Bergen, Moso, Stavanger, and Baklandet.

An Association has been formed of the African Young Men who are in training at the Colwyn Bay Congo Institute. It is hoped that their acquaintance with the purposes and methods of the Y.M.C.A. may, hereafter, lead to a development of the work in West and Central Africa.

In the collegiate school at Samakov, Bulgaria, Rev. W. P. Clarke superintends the work of a small but useful Y.M.C.A. It has eleven members and thirteen associates; and Mr. Clarke writes:—"The spiritual tone is better this year than it has been for several years, for which we rejoice. The object is chiefly to work among and for the students."

The annual meeting of the Grays Association was held on Wednesday week, Mr. R. L. Barclay presiding. The report read by the hon. secretary, Mr. Philbey, shows that this vigorous little Association is doing valuable work in lodging-houses and in outlying villages, as well as in the town itself. The work is full of promise, and well deserves hearty help.

The Berlin Y.M.C.A. ended the thirteenth year of its existence in January. Twenty-one festive gatherings were held for various classes, as 400 soldiers, bakers, 650 waiters, scavengers, etc. At the end of November the funds were very low. They made it a special matter of prayer in the Association, and God answered the prayer, and in a very short time, more than enough money had come in.

Magdeburg has more than 200,000 inhabitants, about 21,000 being young men between eighteen and twenty-five years of age. Out of them 16,000 are strangers. Twenty earnest young men have been longing for an Association for above a year, and gathering a fund towards one. Indeed, one of the said friends since then has given his eight years' savings to the Association now started. On Nov. 9 last some friends met and formed an Association.

The thirtieth annual convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations of the State of New York, met at Newburgh, Feb. 20. Papers on phases in the work were presented. There are now 160 associations in the State. Determined efforts have been made to reach the small towns in which the majority of the young men live. Delegates from twenty-six colleges spoke of work in the Universities, while railroad work was also well represented.

The Sheffield Y.M.C.A. held two very successful anniversary gatherings on March 12. In the afternoon the Rev. J. R. Eyre occupied the chair and addresses were given by Mr. H. H. Benrose, M.P., and Rev. W. Hareus. In the evening the speakers were Mr. Henry Armstrong, Rev. A. B. W. Dennis, and Rev. V. W. Pearson. The secretary, Mr. W. Jervis, presented abstracts of an excellent report, showing good and growing work in every department.

Hamburg has recently celebrated its sixth anniversary. It has 242 members belonging to its men's division, seventy-five to the youths' division, and 160 to the boys' division. The best attended meetings in the Hamburg Institute are the distinctively religious ones held on Tuesdays and Sundays. There was such a demand lately for special Bible instruction that a public Bible-class, with eighty members, has been started over and above the private one held in the rooms.

In Oporto, Portugal, there is an Association for English young men, but a few months ago, on the initiative of Mr. Alfredo Henrique da Silva, an Association was formed at the same place for young Portuguese, and the membership already numbers forty-one; while the good example thus set has induced a number of Protestant young men at Villa Nova de Gaya, on the other side of the river, to form themselves also into a branch which has now a membership of twenty-one. The title of the association is "União Christa da Mocidade Portuguesa."

The Exeter Hall Association has inaugurated the happily-conceived project of seeking to reach young men of different nationalities resident in London. On Monday evening there was a well attended reception of young Irishmen, when a very pleasant and profitable time was spent. Meetings of Welsh and Scotch young men will follow. It is intended, if possible, to organise periodical gatherings of this nature, so that young men in our great city may be able to receive the sympathy and encouragement that come from Christian intercourse with those of their own nation.

The Y.W.C.A.

AT the annual meeting of the Brentwood branch, it was reported that the work had been very successful.

It was stated at the annual meeting of St. John's Wood Institute that three of the members had recently left for the foreign mission field.

The fifth annual meeting of the Highbury Institute was recently held. The report showed satisfactory progress in the work generally, including the missionary branch.

The fifth anniversary meeting of the friends of the Employment Agency Home, Dublin, has been held. The report showed that the good work done by the institution is steadily maintained.

The demand for the motto card and almanack has this year been unusually large, showing a deepening interest amongst the members in the daily Bible readings and the monthly Scripture subjects.

The annual meeting of the Birkenhead Y.W.C.A. was held on March 5. The annual report was very satisfactory. The classes and lectures have been well attended, and the junior branch has increased. There are now 360 members on the books.

Meetings for the deepening of spiritual life have been conducted by Mrs. Penn Lewis in Shaftesbury House, Burton-on-Trent, March 8 to 11. It has been a time of deep heart-searching, and many of God's children have been led into fuller light.

The annual mission of the Sevenoaks branch was held Feb. 29 to March 10, and was conducted by Miss Bazett, of Ealing. Many testified at the concluding praise meeting to definite blessing received. Sevenoaks has the advantage of an institute, combined with a home of rest, under the management of Miss Meredith.

The Leamington Association has issued the report of its Home. Some 93 young women workers and visitors have been received during the past year. As a training home for nurses it continues to render valuable service, a staff of private nurses having been formed. Apart from these the evangelistic and missionary interest is well sustained, and the whole work of the branch is full of encouragement.

A mission, held by Mrs. S. A. Selwyn and Mrs. Hubert Peek in the Swanage Institute and Holiday Home, March 9 to 13, has been greatly blessed, many of the girls openly yielding themselves to Christ. The presence and power of the Holy Spirit were specially manifest during the three closing evenings. In consequence of the steady growth of the holiday work, it has become necessary to add a new wing to the Home.

At the recent meeting of the London Council a report of the emigration department by Miss C. Hope showed that useful work had been done in assisting girls to emigrate. One or two parties will be going out in the course of the summer, and there are good openings for domestic servants with not less than two years' reference. Miss C. Hope's address is 7, Ovington-gardens, S.W. A report of the convalescent, sick aid, and holiday department stated that a large number of girls have been helped.

A QUIET but praiseworthy work has been steadily going on for the past twenty-six years at these Homes. There are now eleven Homes, in which 134 inmates are cared for. From the commencement up to the present time, 418 persons have been sheltered and cared for. "An empty room" is all that is offered, with 1d. a week rent to make the inmate a legal tenant; the rules, however, demand a weekly income for married couples of not less than 6s., or more than 10s. a week. In single cases the minimum income must be 4s., the maximum is 6s. (the larger income being preferred). This rule brings out co-operation and active benevolence. Why provide special homes? Why not pay the rent of a room in any ordinary house? The reason is this. To be eligible, each candidate must be over sixty years of age; and in life's eventide the needed quietude and rest would not be obtained in a house let out in rooms.

A copy of the annual report will be sent by the honorary secretaries, the Misses Harrison, 5, Grand-acre-terrace, Anerley, S.E.

Christian Endeavour.

A RECENT "rally" at Bromley, Kent, brought together some 250 Endeavourers belonging to various denominations.

Fifty-two young people have been led into the church since last April at Branchville, S.C., by the Endeavour Society.

A company of young men from the C.E.S. in Pittston, Penn., have been conducting evangelistic services in outlying villages.

The Sussex C.E. Union was formed in 1893. The eleven societies affiliated at the beginning have now increased to twenty-three.

Eighteen young men were led into the church as the result of ten days of special services, conducted by the Endeavour society of Fabius, N.Y.

When Colonel Ingersoll visited Kalamazoo, Mich., a short time ago, twelve members of the Christian Endeavour committee distributed anti-infidel leaflets at the doors of his meeting.

In order to seek greater spiritual blessing, a C.E.S. in Fairfield, Ill., was divided into praying groups, to meet daily for a week to beseech an outpouring of power upon the congregation.

Christian Endeavour has at last entered Italy; the first society having been formed recently in the Scotch Presbyterian Church at Florence. A Baptist church in the same city has followed the example of its neighbour.

Several New Jersey towns and cities within the past few weeks have been the scenes of organized evangelistic campaigns conducted by the Endeavourers, in co-operation with the pastors. Remarkable news of united efforts, aroused communities, and converted souls is being received.

A united convention of the Christian Endeavour, Epworth League, and Baptist Young People's Union has been held at Los Angeles. This convention is the first of the kind ever held, says Mr. Sankey, who, with Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Stebbins, took an active part in it; "and the combination of these powerful societies is bound to sweep everything before it." The consecration service was one of great solemnity. The great building was crowded, and the deepest interest prevailed.

The South-West Essex Union of Societies celebrated its anniversary last week at Stratford. Encouraging progress was reported, and stirring addresses were delivered by Alderman Belsey and Rev. F. B. Meyer. The various societies were shown to be doing excellent work for their several churches. One reported the formation of a Smiling-up committee, the members of which agree to take care of the young children of poor women who would otherwise be prevented by family cares from attending public worship.

One of the most wonderful revival stories that has been told of any place for a long time comes from the little town of New Millport, Penn., a place of less than 200 inhabitants. Beginning with the week of prayer, the Endeavour Society held special evangelistic services that from the very first night were attended with much spiritual power. The definite results of the four weeks of service are converts to the number of more than seventy, sixty-one of whom united with the Lutheran Church and the rest with other churches. All of the associate members of the Society were converted, and the membership of the organisation increased more than 100 per cent. A revival of giving also arose in the church. Both the hotels relinquished their licences to sell liquor. The entire community was stirred, and the good work is not yet at an end.

The Women's Holiday Fund is intended to bring a short holiday within reach of some of the tired and hard-working women who require rest and change, but who, unaided, are unable to meet the expense which a holiday entails. The satisfactory results which followed from the work last year makes the committee earnestly hope that the work this summer may be considerably extended. Reports of the work done last year can be obtained by applying to the hon. secretary, 47, St. James's-square, Notting Hill, W.

Mexico.—Mr. Eglon Harris, of Orizaba, reports a visit to Vera Cruz, and the island of Ulua, where he distributed Gospels and tracts to nearly 600 prisoners. He writes:—"As showing the interest awakened by reading our tracts in a small prison in Chalchicomula (about sixty miles from Orizaba), the prisoners got together enough postage stamps to send for a Bible to read among themselves. Mr. Walters is sending good supplies of his useful Gospels. Also I have cards from Mrs. Grimké. I have printed some wall texts, Sunday-school cards, and new tracts, also Mark's Gospel in large type. You will have read about the burning alive of ten 'heretics' by the worshippers of the Virgin of Guadalupe in a Mexican village." Copies of the circular letter may be had from Mr. John Mercer, 143, Dickinson-road, Rusholme, Manchester.

Evangelistic Notes.

Buckhurst Hill.—An interesting eight days' mission has been conducted in Prince's Hall. There were good attendances, and much blessing among the young. Mr. John Brunton, of Croydon, conducted this mission. God's children were much refreshed. G. H. LORD.

Skipton.—A week's mission has been conducted by Rev. R. Balgarnie, in connection the Congregational church here. The mission has resulted in quickening and deepening the spiritual life of the church, whilst a goodly number have made public avowal of their love to the Lord Jesus Christ and their desire to serve Him.

St. James's Hall.—On Sunday night week Rev. H. Price Hughes had one of the best services ever held in this hall. In the after-meeting an extraordinary number of persons arose, and subsequently went into the inquiry-room. In a very marked degree the power of God was present to heal the people.—Methodist Times.

Fife.—Mr. Charles Galletly, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a Gospel mission at Largo, Fife. The people came out in good numbers night after night during the four weeks of special effort, and seemed deeply impressed by the earnest and heart-searching words of the preacher. Mr. Galletly's visit has proved a source of great blessing to the district. W. P.

Great Assembly Hall, Mile End.—Mr. William Nobbs, who is labouring at this busy centre this month is seeing much blessing. The Great Hall is crowded, on Sunday evenings especially, and there is evidence of deep conviction. Large numbers went into the inquiry room, and it is believed many accepted Christ. Prayer is desired for Mr. Nobbs's remaining meetings at Mile End.

Inverness.—Mr. Mackendrick, an evangelist well known on the East Coast of Scotland, has concluded a series of Gospel meetings in this town. The meetings were held on the west side of the river for three weeks, and many were won for Jesus. The last week was spent at the Y.M.C.A., where a number of young men professed to experience blessing. Mr. Mackendrick spoke several times at the Highland Orphanage.

Lower Tooting.—An eight days' mission, conducted by Mr. Charles Inglis, has been concluded in connection with Miss Bell's mission-hall. The faithful and solemn addresses were listened to night after night with rapt attention. On Sunday night the hall was crowded, when a very searching address was given, and several manifested deep concern of soul. We are hoping that much abiding fruit will result from the mission. T. A. C.

Bath.—A three weeks' mission is now in progress at the Railway Mission Hall, Monmouth-street, conducted by Mr. Wm. Thomson, of Glasgow. The forcible and appealing Gospel addresses of this servant of God are illustrated, with much effect, by excellent limelight views. The afternoon Bible-readings for Christians at 3 o'clock are highly profitable, and greatly appreciated by those who have had the privilege of attending. M. W.

Nottingham.—A series of Gospel meetings have been conducted here by Messrs. Bewley and Frank Weaver, extending over a period of three weeks. This effort has been greatly used of God in the quickening of believers and the conversion of sinners. The Albert Hall, which is the largest building in the town, has been packed to its utmost capacity each Sunday night. The week-night meetings, held in Circus-street Hall and Canaan Church, were well attended. A feature of the mission has been the large number who have gathered each mid-day for prayer. A. H.

Birkenhead.—Mr. Sydney Vivian, of the Evangelisation Society, has recently held a successful seventeen days' mission in St. Mary's, Birkenhead. Much prayer and work preceded the mission, the result of which was a good attendance from the first, and many souls professed to find peace. The boys' schoolroom was crowded with the poor of the parish, whose interest in the earnest and clear Gospel addresses increased as the mission proceeded. A band of earnest workers went out together each evening for one hour before the meeting, singing Gospel hymns, and invited the people in all parts of the parish.

Keady, co. Armagh.—A blessed work is being carried on now in this parish, attended with Divine grace and spiritual result. Every week special mission services are held in various centres, and remarkable testimonies to blessing are recorded. Many young people have definitely decided for Christ. The rector's Sunday Bible-class has been largely increased, and the Friday evening prayer-meeting in the Parochial Schoolroom is crowded with earnest worshippers. The rector, Rev. M. B. Hogg, is assisted by Mr. R. Hastings Rolleston, whose labours are being crowned with abundant success. Several drunkards are being reclaimed, and a general awakening of the careless and indifferent is distinctly noticeable. God's people here "thank God and take courage." M. B. H.

Boston, U.S.A.—God is honouring the labours of Gipsy Smith in the People's Temple, the largest Protestant Church in New England. The power of God (says a correspondent) has rested upon the people. The preaching has been the pure Gospel of the Son of God, and has been in the demonstration and power of the Holy Ghost. Multitudes have yielded their hearts to God. More than a thousand seekers have been found, and over six hundred profess conversion. The converts include all classes, many of them are men; indeed, sometimes there are more men than women in the congregation. The great temple has been well filled every evening, except in storms, and on Sabbath mornings, and greatly overflowed on Sabbath evenings for six weeks. It is the greatest revival that this city has seen in any single church for twenty-five years. The whole region of country around Boston is benefited by these services.

Personalia.

Mr. Ballington Booth has named the evangelistic movement he has begun, "God's American Volunteers." The new organisation is governed by a quasi-military constitution, with Mr. and Mrs. Ballington Booth as joint presidents.

Mrs. Josephine Butler, who is staying at Lausanne, asks for the prayers of Christian friends that Divine help may be given to the friends at Geneva, who are seeking to free the city from the State-regulation of vice. The opposition is strong and dangerous. A vote of the people will be taken on Saturday.

Rev. John Robertson.—It has been arranged that Mr. John Robertson, City Temple, Glasgow, will preach during the month of August in the new Tremont Temple, Boston, while Dr. Lorimer comes to London to occupy the pulpit of Marylebone Presbyterian Church, whose minister, Dr. Pentecost, takes the place of Dr. John Hall, New York.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse leaves England on March 27, and will be due at the Cape on April 19. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Pearse, and one of his daughters. His tour will include most of the principal towns in the Cape Colony and the Free State; the Transvaal and Natal will also be visited. His stay in the country will be a little over three months. The news of Mr. Pearse's visit has created quite a widespread interest throughout South Africa.

Pastor Wm. Birch, late of Manchester, and recently settled in Christ Church, New Zealand, is now making a visit to the United States to extend over some months. He desires, as far as possible, to influence public Christian opinion in the States towards fraternal relations between the white and coloured races. Another purpose of his visit is to arrange for the issue of an "All round the world A.B.C." guide book, giving useful information as to routes to travellers. His address will be Pastor W. L. Birch, Post Office, Chicago, Ill., U.S.A.

Rev. Andrew Murray has been welcomed back to South Africa by meetings at Capetown. The Natal Witness, of February 22, says:—"No other S. African minister has received such an enthusiastic welcome in Europe and America as fell to the lot of Mr. Murray. The Moderator's tour was a series of successes, and the many invitations from abroad which he has received since his return to the colony shows that he is one of the most popular of modern preachers. Rev. David Russell, late of Maritzburg, was among the speakers at one of the numerous representative gatherings to welcome Mr. Murray. Mr. Russell remarked that Mr. Murray had been telling him that he had received invitations to India and China."

The Salvation Army.

A GREAT demonstration of welcome to General Booth on his return took place on Monday afternoon and evening at the Crystal Palace. It was attended by some 20,000 members of the Army. In the afternoon addresses were given by leading officers, and different parts of the Army work were illustrated.

In the evening came the General's welcome in the central transept. He gave a stirring address, in the course of which he expressed great sorrow at the American "split." Commissioner and Mrs. Booth-Tucker, the new American leaders, were formally dedicated to that post.

Mr. Tritton will, it is stated, introduce the C.E.T.S. Bill into the House of Commons, without any present hope of its being carried, but to insure its provisions being considered by the Royal Commission.

Obituary.

MR. C. M. JONES.

CHARLES M. JONES, superintendent of the American Friends' Mission at Ramallah, has died there of Syrian fever. Last summer he left the States with his wife to take up this important work. Matters were progressing satisfactorily, when illness attacked both Mr. Jones and his wife, the former succumbing to the attack. He was born in Maine, and most of his life has been spent at Winthrop in that State. He accompanied Eli Jones in his last visit to this country and to Palestine, and thus had a good deal to do with the founding of the Friends' Mission at Brumana. The loss of an acceptable minister of the Gospel and a capable leader will be much felt.

CAPT. A. P. WILLIAMS, R.N.

Many to whom Captain Williams was well known as the secretary of the Protestant Reformation Society, will be surprised to hear of his sudden and unexpected death, while on a lecturing tour on behalf of the Society in Yorkshire. He had delivered a lecture on Martin Luther at a village near Selby on the evening of Thursday, 4th inst., and on Friday morning he arrived at the residence of his brother-in-law, Dr. Brett, of The Elms, Bridlington, feeling very ill. He lay in a suffering and very prostrate condition until Sunday afternoon, when he gradually sank, and passed away peacefully. On retiring from the Royal Navy, Captain Williams married a daughter of the late Canon Blakeney. Soon after his marriage he was appointed as the representative of the Protestant Reformation Society at Oxford. Within about a year of his marriage, Captain Williams had to mourn the death of his wife. He continued to reside in Oxford, and carried on a most energetic Protestant work amongst the undergraduates and townspeople. On the death of Rev. George Clements, who had for many years been the general secretary of the Protestant Reformation Society, there was, for a brief period, a danger lest the Society should cease to exist. Captain Williams, however, came at once to the rescue, and accepted the vacant post, at the earnest request of the committee. He removed to London, and soon became the means of infusing new life and vigour into the old society, and rallied to its support a host of friends.

Moslem and Druse Girls, Beyrout.

Miss TAYLOR's work among Moslem and Druse children in Beyrout has been clouded with anxiety owing to the troubles in the East. But in the midst of all the outward disturbance and commotion the work has gone steadily on. The Central Orphanage is always full. The Ras School continues to do its work of daily teaching under Mehesineh and Zareef, and the Ghareef school has also kept prosperous. The new report gives details of quiet, patient, helpful service among the poor, distressed, and oft-times refugee people.

The school work goes on quietly and happily. When in autumn last it was reopened there were thirty-eight children, but a month after came an epidemic in Beyrout which seriously affected the scholars. The Medical Mission work has been carried on with great usefulness. At the close of the year Miss Taylor writes:—"Our mothers' meetings on Thursdays are better attended than they were a few weeks ago. Fear seems to have left them, as they say, 'We say, like the English, trust in God, and do the right.' Our Sabbath meetings are well attended. I am glad to say we have no sickness in the institution. All thanks to our Heavenly Father who takes care of us. We have great cause for gratitude for his watchful care from one year's end to another, and all thanks for his care of the young converts, whose walk would bring credit to older heads. I must not forget to note the number of patients. Our young doctor has had 324 from November 1 to December 31. The poor people need more than medicine. Thanks to kind friends at home, I am giving them two bags of flour a week, for which I join them in returning thanks. I wish you could see their starved and pinched-looking faces."

The treasurer and home-correspondent, of whom information may be had, is Mr. W. Ferguson, Kinmudy, Mintlaw, N.B.

Requests for Prayer.—For a mission at Vernon Chapel, King's Cross-road, by Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz, from March 22 to April 2: that many may be brought to the Lord.—For an eight days' mission March 22 to 29, at Hurstpierpoint, near Brighton by Mr. B. H. Angel.—For a special mission, March 22 to April 3, in Havelock-place Mission, Belfast. For a Christian minister and his family threatened with heavy affliction, that they may be delivered, if it is God's will.

International S.S. Lessons.

March 29.

REVIEW OF QUARTER'S LESSONS.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Luke xii. 8.

THE whole period of our Lord's earthly life, with the exception of the last three months, has been covered by this series of lessons. Two of the lessons (I. and III.) referred to the Forerunner—one to the interesting facts connected with his birth, and the other to the character of his public ministry. There is still an important sense in which Jesus is preceded by a Forerunner. As the ploughman precedes the sower, so the conviction of sin precedes the acceptance of pardon.

Only one lesson (II.) refers to the early life of Jesus. Curiosity asks many questions concerning those thirty years spent in Nazareth; but only one incident is recorded. Yet that is sufficient to show how real was the boyhood of Jesus, and how He grew toward manhood just as we do. The duty of obedience to his parents was exemplified side by side with his entire devotion to his Father in heaven.

All the remaining lessons are occupied with our Lord's public ministry, in which teaching and working were remarkably combined. Recall some of the miracles as in Lessons V., VII., VIII. All bore witness to Him, gave emphasis to his teaching, and enforced his claim to the surrender and faith of men.

For the review, the question is, What use are we going to make of our knowledge about Jesus? Of course, we believe the record; and have been considerably interested in the stories which have manifested his wisdom and his power. But is that all? Note what the Golden Text requires. Are we prepared to confess Him?

We have seen in one lesson (IX.) how our confession may go far, and yet stop short of what He requires. True confession includes an acknowledgment of our need, a distrust of ourselves, a confidence in Him, a fearless declaration of Him as our Lord. Peter made such a confession, and we can only do as he did by the same Spirit (Matt. xvi. 16, 17; 1 Cor. xii. 3).

We are to do it "before men," and at the risk of being subject to severe persecution. Confessors in past days have been martyrs. Recall the story of the Theban legion of soldiers, consisting, it is said, of 6666 men, all Christians. The Emperor Maximian ordered a general sacrifice, and required all his soldiers to swear to assist him in extirpating Christianity from Gaul. The whole legion refused, and the emperor had every tenth man put to death. The rest remained firm; and again every tenth man was slain. The remainder drew up a remonstrance, which concluded with the words, "We confess ourselves to be Christians, and therefore cannot persecute Christians, nor sacrifice to idols." The emperor was only exasperated the more; and the whole legion was put to death. Confession does not now lead to anything so painful; but it still requires courage.

To those who make the confession, how great the reward that is promised! Own Him now, and He will own you "before the angels of God." Cowardice escapes some kind of present suffering, but it also loses the reward. We must "suffer with Him" if we are to "reign with Him."

Pastor Jacob, Oroomiah.

MY DEAR SIR,—Pastor Jacob, who is well known to you, and who has been twice to England to raise funds to enable him to carry on his work, has now again put himself under the direction of our mission, and wishes to give his whole time to this work. Ever since he began this particular mission he has had our cordial support. When he last went to England, the work rather fell out of his hands, chiefly because he was not here to keep close watch of it. He has really done more than anyone else here, native or foreigner, to gather about him and instruct a little congregation, and build up a little church. It has been a cause of great regret to us that this work has been allowed to decline. He has now undertaken to resume it with his first love and zeal, and we heartily endorse his effort.

I am instructed to write to his friends in England and ask them to come again to his help, if possible. He needs support for himself and family and something for the outside expenses connected with the work. I know that the old pastor has next to nothing to live on. The very nature of this work, you will of course realise, is such that, the less said about it in public the better. We feel sure that those who give to the support of this work will be spending their means wisely.—Yours fraternally, in behalf of the Oroomiah Station of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions of the United States,

J. P. COCHRAN (M.D.)

Oroomiah, Persia, February 12.

Temperance Notes.

AT a recent official dinner given in America to President and Mrs. Cleveland no intoxicating liquors were provided.

The Archbishop of York's Sunday Closing Bill provides for somewhat earlier closing on Saturday night. Permission is accorded for licensed houses to be open for one hour in the middle of the day on Sunday for the sale of drink to be consumed off the premises.

The medical officer of Leek, drawing attention to the heavy mortality among infants in Staffordshire, says the most important factor is strong drink. The practice of indulging in strong drink has sadly increased among women, with deplorable results for the children.

The Deutsche Worte states that the drink account of the German people for the past year is three thousand million of marks, in which is included five hundred million of marks for schnap spirits. Can we wonder, it is asked, there is a necessity for mad-houses and prisons?

The Intoxicating Liquors Ireland Bill, which has been crowded out in the House of Commons, proposes that public-houses shall be closed on Saturday at nine o'clock p.m. in large towns, instead of eleven o'clock as at present. Also that the five exempted cities shall be included henceforth under the Sunday Closing laws, the bona fide limit to be raised from three to six miles.

A series of good meetings have been held by the Women's Total Abstinence Union in Chelmsford and Coggeshall. The annual meeting of the High Wycombe and District Branch of the W.T.A.U. took place on Wednesday week, Mrs. John Thomas in the chair. Earnest total abstinence addresses were delivered by Mrs. J. Christie Mackenzie, Miss Orme, and Mr. John Thomas.

The Mayor of Bradford, speaking in connection with a mission conducted by Rev. L. M. Isitt, said Bradford's share of the drink bill would be about £15,000 a week, and yet there were complaints of bad trade and poverty in their midst. It had been estimated that of the 142 millions spent on drink last year 85 millions came from the pockets of the working and the lower middle classes.

Petitions from Abeokuta, Ibadan, and Lagos, signed by 12,000 inhabitants, mostly native, have been sent to the Native Races and Liquor Traffic Committee for presentation to the House of Commons, calling attention to the immense harm being done in Western Equatorial Africa, as well as elsewhere in Africa, by the traffic in spirits, and declaring that the time has come for decisive action to be taken.

There was a goodly attendance in Streatham Hill Congregational Church last Monday evening at the annual meeting of the Tulse Hill and Norwood branch of the B.W.T.A. Mrs. Gledstone presided, and rousing addresses were given by Mrs. Pearsall Smith, Miss Agnes Slack, and others. A message of deep sympathy was sent to the absent president of the branch, Mrs. Woodford Fawcett, who is still confined to her sick chamber.

The annual statement of the head constable of Liverpool is encouraging to temperance workers. Twenty years ago, more than 20,000 persons were prosecuted for drunkenness in a year, but since 1876 the number had never risen to 17,000, and it has steadily fallen year by year. Last year the prosecutions were only 5035, and that notwithstanding the fact that the figures for the last two months included a very large area newly added to the City jurisdiction.

Alderman W. D. Stephens, of Newcastle, says:—"I have been an abstainer for thirty-six years, and I attribute my good health and spirits to this fact. I have seen during that period hundreds of young men pass away to drunkards' graves. Sons and daughters, in whose young life their parents and friends rejoiced, but who had acquired the habit of tasting, too often learnt and practised at home. And beautiful promising lives have been ruined and lost. Now that alcohol is known to be a poison, intelligent people should treat it as an insidious enemy, which will wreck many on the voyage of life."

The annual meetings of the Hampshire and Isle of Wight United Temperance Council were held at Portsmouth, on Wednesday. At the afternoon conference resolutions were adopted asking the Government to grant a licensing suspensory measure for a discretionary power for the refusal of all licences, a repeal of the Act under which grocers and shopkeepers' licences were granted, for prompt measures to secure closing on Sundays and election days, for prohibiting the sale of intoxicants to children, and for some drastic legislation to prevent a gigantic evil in the shape of the continuance and multiplication of drink-selling clubs. The Dean of Winchester presided at a mass meeting held at the Town Hall in the evening. Amongst the speakers were Rev. J. H. Horslev, Miss Weston, and Mr. Whittaker, M.P.

The Soldiers' Home, Winchester.

THE Home and Mission Hall in Hyde Close Winchester, originated, and so usefully carried on, by the Misses Perks, is well-known to many as the centre of active aggressive evangelisation. The new report says:—"Work throughout the Mission was never in a more healthy state. The seriousness of the times, the demands of the suffering and bereaved ones, with whom we are brought in touch, not only at home, but nearly all over the world, have been the means in God's hands of leading us to prayer, much prayer, and practical sympathy and energetic help."

Letters from soldiers in distant lands bear cheering evidence of continued blessing amongst young recruits and soldiers in whose interests these sisters were led to commence the work. The burden of many of the writers is "Praise God He ever led me into the Soldiers' Home." Here is one extract:—

"During the military manoeuvres we had a busy time visiting the camp and holding meetings. Special preachers came to help us, and many young men yielded to the strivings of the Holy Spirit and date their conversion to God from those services. It was a grand sight to see the soldiers of all regiments after a long and tiring march lying all around us on the grass or sitting on trunks of trees listening earnestly to the 'old, old story,' and joining in the Gospel hymns. A young soldier, who gave his heart to the Saviour at one of these meetings and who is now in India, writes: 'Never shall I forget the 22nd August, 1895, when you came round and spoke to us in our tents. I felt it was God speaking through you, and I could scarcely stand. So soon as you were gone I hurried to get down to the meeting, and although my feet were bad from the march, I didn't seem to feel while the preacher spoke those good words, they went into my heart, and I do know I belong to Jesus, I used to wish I was saved. Thanks be to God He has saved me and now I want to show His love in my life.'"

In addition to their fruitful service among soldiers the evangelistic operations of the mission, under the leadership of Mr. Charles Edwards, reach out into many of the surrounding villages, such as Fulford, Canon Street, Shroner Hill, Twyford, and Shawford; while in Winchester itself open-air preaching, lodging-house services, Bible-classes, Gospel and temperance meetings, are carried on with vigour and cheering results. We commend this work to the helpful sympathy of our readers. The address is Miss L. Perks, Soldiers' Home, Hyde Close, Winchester.

The Tramps' Mission.

THE new report of this Mission describes the work done among tramps in Unions and lodging-houses. Testimony is borne by all the workers in the Mission, regarding the attention and interest with which the casuals listen to the Gospel instruction. During 1895 thirty-eight Unions were supplied with Bibles, Gospels, attractive story books, wall cards, etc., for the use of casuals, and fourteen Unions also received additions to their libraries. 393 workhouses have now been supplied, but 254 still remain without aid from the Mission. Gospel services are now held in 174 Unions for casuals, or the tramps are allowed to attend the regular services of the chaplains. Letters are given from many chaplains and masters showing the value of this work. For example, Rev. T. Hodgson, chaplain of the Shoreditch Workhouse, writes:

"The Tramps' Mission is undoubtedly doing a good and necessary work, and is filling a place in our Christian sociology of the very highest importance. Your Mission is greatly valued not only by those it aids in prosecution of their evangelistic work, but also by the tramps, for whose special benefit it was started; these latter deeply appreciate and use the literature you have supplied, to such an extent, that it would simply astonish those whose acquaintance with tramps is only hearsay. The library sent by the Mission is in constant request, and books lent are carefully read and returned." The secretary, Miss Barnett, 2, Eldon-villas, Battledown, Cheltenham, will gladly give information.

The Darby-street Mission, Royal Mint-street, E., carried on as the East-End Mission of the King's Weigh House Chapel, reports an encouraging measure of success. This mission-hall is now a hive of earnest and useful activity, both among children and adults. Full information may be had of the secretary, Mr. J. H. Kiddle, 66, Grosvenor-road, Ilford.

A Mission of Help.—The report of the Mission of Help to the Suffering Poor gives many cases showing the pitiful extent of poverty and misery, and the way in which these workers have been able to relieve the distressed and comfort the sorrowing. This interesting record of loving service may be had of the secretary, Miss A. F. Perram, 38, Westbank, Stamford Hill, N.

The "Welcome Mission," Portsmouth.

THE report of this Mission shows the character of the work among sailors ex-service men (naval and military), and among the poor. "Few realise how essentially Portsmouth is a naval and military centre. Not only have we stationed here at least an average of ten thousand men in active service, but this is the town of all the world where ex-service men congregate. Many of the latter have been invalided out of the service, and with wives and children are in deepest poverty.

"A problem of national importance, of the greatest moment, is the condition of our 'time-expired men.' Since the short-term service has come into operation this has been increasingly felt. While in the army they have abundance in food, clothing, recreation, and even pocket-money. Once out of the colours, these advantages cease, and having spent in comparative idleness the years that a good workman is in training for his craft, and often having become dissipated by the life peculiar to a soldier and the trials of a foreign climate, these men are at a discount in the labour market, and find it impossible to earn a living."

The need of these ex-service men is illustrated by a number of cases, showing the distress and destitution in which many of them are found.

Circumstances have compelled these workers to give much attention to temperance effort, but above all it is recognised that Christ alone can save and keep, hence Gospel work receives the first and fullest attention. This, as shown by facts furnished in the report, has been greatly blessed in what seemed the most hopeless cases.

Amongst the many important branches are the Mother's Help Society, the Rescue Mission, the letter writing to Bluejackets at sea, and the "One by One" working band, formed in order to lay individuals before the Lord, and to bring to bear on such that personal effort which God is pleased to bless to so many. Amongst the incidents of this kind we read in the report of a young seaman in a man-of-war with over 600 men. So far as he knew, there was not another kindred spirit on board. Some time before he had learned to pray for those whose spiritual interests he had become concerned about one by one daily. He commenced to do so for the men on board his ship, and soon a gracious spirit of inquiry was manifested, and during the first ten months he was aboard over twenty of his shipmates came to inquire how they might enjoy the same peace and happiness he had, and some of the worst men on board have turned from sin to God through his earnest efforts.

We trust this interesting report will be widely read. Copies may be had of the director, Mr. Thomas Hogben, Welcome Mission, Edinburgh-road, Portsmouth.

Newness of Life.

If any man is in Christ, he is a new creation.—2 Cor. v. 17. (R. V. Margin.)

Nor an improvement, or alteration, or patching up of the old, but new life from God for those "dead in trespasses and sins." Life which in its right growth and development will overcome all obstacles, just as the fragile snowdrop finds its way through the earth-cloids.

1. "A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit" (Ez. xxxvi. 26.) That the latter may be a dwelling-place for God's Spirit, "that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God" (Cor. ii. 12).

2. "The new man which after God is created in righteousness, and true holiness" (Eph. iv. 24). And "is renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created him" (Col. iii. 10).

3. "A new name" (Rev. ii. 17). Even as Christ said to his disciple, "Thou art Simon...thou shalt be called Cephas" (John i. 42), showing a new character.

4. "A new covenant" (Heb. viii. 8). Ratified by "the blood of Christ" giving an inward knowledge of God's will. Personal communion with Him. A "blotting out" of past sin.

5. "A new commandment" (John xii. 34). Given by Jesus that we may "fulfil the law" (Romans xiii. 8).

6. "A new...way" (Heb. x. 20). Into the "holiest of all."

7. "A new song...even praise unto God" (Ps. xl. 3). "Behold, I make all things new" (Rev. xxi. 5).

E. M. CHRISTIAN.

Mr. Balfour, speaking in the House of Commons, said a large measure of agreement, if not absolute accord, had been arrived at with regard to the terms of reference to the proposed Commission on Licensing. He thought Scotland should be included.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

THE C.M.S. lady missionaries in Fuh-Kien are now authorised to return to their stations.

A new mission hall and Sunday-school was opened last week in connection with St. Andrew's, Newington.

Dr. Alexander, the new Primate of Ireland, will preside at the annual meeting of the Church Army in St. James's Hall in May.

Rev. Henry Partington has been celebrating his eighty-seventh birthday, and his sixty-first anniversary as vicar of Wath-on-Dearne.

Owing to an affection in his eyes, Canon Gore has been obliged to give up all work for some weeks, and his Monday lectures at Westminster Abbey will be interrupted.

Rev. F. A. Parker, who has been inducted to the charge of Waddington, is the fourth member of his family who has been vicar of Waddington since the close of the last century.

The twentieth annual conference of the Yorkshire Evangelical Union will be held at York on Thursday and Friday, June 25 and 26, the president for the year being Rev. Dr. Hughes-Games.

The position at the C.M.S. College, Islington, vacated by Rev. W. I. Moran, who is to be the first Vice-Principal of the Elland Clergy School, Hull, has been filled by the appointment of Mr. A. J. Tait, Ridley Hall, Cambridge.

At Tunbridge Wells on Monday a conference was held, with a view of forming a local branch of the N.P.C.U., when an address was given by Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe, who also addressed a meeting in the evening on "England and Rome."

Many will be thankful to hear that the Bishop of Stepney has made a practical protest against the Romanising tendencies of many clergymen by refusing to hold a confirmation in a church in which the vicar had rejected some candidates because they declined to go to confession.

Archdeacon Taylor, presiding at a meeting in the Gordon Hall, Liverpool, said there were no fewer than 7000 churches in connection with the Church of England where the Romeward movement was extending and exerting its influence. If the articles of the Church of England were understood, all the doctrines of the Church of Rome would be repudiated and dismissed at a moment's notice.

The annual meeting of the Manchester and East Lancashire Association of the Church Missionary Society was held last week in the Free Trade Hall. Sir J. H. Kennaway, who occupied the chair, said that there were 673 ordained missionaries labouring at the present time in connection with the society, and of these 309 were pure natives. Missionary addresses were delivered by Revs. James Stone, from South India, Hugh Stowell Phillips, from China, and Mr. G. L. Pilkington, from Uganda.

In connection with St. Leonard's Church, a new church has been built at Bulverhythe, an outlying district of the town, where for three years a successful mission has been carried on.

Rev. W. Pedr Williams, who is still at Bournemouth, is making steady progress towards recovery. He is expected to be able to resume his ministry at Lower Clapton on the first Sunday in May.

Park Chapel, Crouch End, reports good progress in all departments. The roll now numbers 1030. Rev. A. Rowland has completed twenty years' pastorate, during which £73,246 has been raised for various purposes.

Arrangements have been made for a special assembly of the Congregational Union on Wednesday, May 13, for the further consideration of the report of the Special Committee on the Revision of the Constitution.

Rev. F. Gasquoine, of Bedford, has concluded twelve months' special ministry in connection with the Northamptonshire Free Church Council, visiting and holding services in Baptist, Congregational, Wesleyan, and other Methodist chapels, with a view to closer co-operation between them, occasionally holding united meetings.

The manual of Lyndhurst-road is a record of varied and successful activities. Dr. Horton's address is couched in a tone of gratitude for the signs of spiritual prosperity. The number of church members is given as 1089. The total contributions of the church amount to £5792. The sum raised for the L.M.S. was £1962. Nine members of the church are actively engaged in the foreign mission field. The Kentish Town Mission is reported as progressing in every way. "The service, indeed, is so great, and the spirit and efficiency of the workers equal to so much more, that it really has become an urgent question if an extension of the hall buildings should be contemplated."

Calls.—Rev. Martin Anstey, of Gallowtree, Leicester, to Dewsbury (accepted); Rev. E. T. Jones, to Staplehill and Mangotsfield (accepted); Rev. W. H. Pritchett, to Repton; Rev. John Byles, of Ealing, to Zion, Wakefield; Mr. J. E. Simon, to Brampton, Chesterfield; Mr. T. Price Davies, to Meersbrook Park, Sheffield.

Resignations.—Rev. W. Pierce, of New Court Chapel, N.; Rev. A. Henderson, of Ware.

Baptist.

Mr. Thomas Davies has been welcomed at Gold Hill, Bucks.

The Pioneer Mission has taken up the charge of the work at Hampton Court and East Molesey.

A mission at New England, Peterborough, has proved such a success that a new chapel has been decided upon.

A church has been formed at Swanscombe, near Dartford, and steps are being taken to secure a site on which to erect a chapel.

Ferne Park Church reports 401 members, a net increase of eleven. The Sunday-school has 234 scholars, of whom three joined the church during the year.

At Bewdley Chapel on Sunday week Mrs. Lowe, who had arranged to conduct the service, had given out the opening hymn, when she fell dead in the pulpit.

The number of scholars on the roll of Regent's Park Chapel Sunday-school, including infant and Bible-classes, is 435. There is also a branch school, with an average attendance of 209.

Mr. Newton Jones has concluded a six days' mission at the Old Baptist Chapel, Rushden. One pleasant feature of the mission was that the most earnest workers were those brought in during a previous mission two years ago.

With a view to reduce the debt on the South London Tabernacle, the pastor, Rev. E. Roberts, asked the members and congregation to subscribe at least one half-penny per day for seventeen months, which would complete his ten years' ministry. The first month's subscriptions have realised £63.

A mission has been held in Huddersfield, Milnsbridge, by Rev. F. C. Spurr. The afternoon conferences on spiritual life were highly appreciated. The evangelistic meetings produced wonderful impressions, but by false sentiment or hysterical excitement, but by the forceful and logical presentation of the great facts of Scripture.

A series of Thursday evening sermons on "The Glorious Person and Work of the Holy Spirit" is being given at Devonshire-square Chapel, Stoke Newington, N. Rev. Archibald Brown preached the first of the series on Thursday week, and the remaining addresses are being delivered by Revs. W. Fuller Gooch, E. C. Gange, W. Cuff, F. B. Meyer, and G. P. McKay (pastor).

At a conference held in the Church of the Redeemer, Birmingham, to consider the position of the denomination in that town, Rev. J. M. G. Owen stated that there are twenty-seven churches in the city, with a membership of over 5000. The denomination has increased eighty-six per cent. in thirty-five years. This increase, however, compares unfavourably with London, Liverpool, Manchester, and Sheffield, the increase in London being 100, Manchester 173, and Liverpool 170 per cent.

Calls.—Mr. G. W. Bloomfield, to Stanningley; Rev. John Andrews, to Hilperton; Rev. G. Elnaugh, to Zion, Walthamstow; Rev. L. W. Lewis, to Zion, Cefnawr (accepted).

Resignations.—Rev. Thomas Antill, of Pinner; Rev. J. F. Smythe, of Berkhamsted.

Methodist.

Successful evangelistic missions have been held at Aylesbury, Cambridge, Hornsea, and Tadcaster.

Rev. T. Mitchell, Primitive Methodist, is to be a speaker at the Bible Christian Missionary gathering in London.

Mr. George Dingley, of Yarmouth, has undertaken to subscribe the whole of the £200 needed for the erection of a hospital at Wenchow, China.

Miss Kate Howe, of Chatham, has been accepted for service in the foreign mission field, and hopes, after undergoing a course of training at Biddeford College, to proceed to China.

At the anniversary of the Wesley Mission, Leeds, Revs. Thomas Champness and Dinsdale T. Young were the preachers. The report shows a membership of 721, with 212 on trial, being an increase of 55 on the year.

The work at Surrey Chapel has been developing in various useful directions. The house adjoining the chapel has been presented by a friend, and has been opened as a temperance institute, while part is to be used as a residence for the sisters serving in the mission.

The Hull Wesleyan Mission, which four years ago was established in connection with the mother Methodist chapel in the town, then practically empty, has proved a great success. The chapel is now crowded with poor people, and Wesley Hall has a large congregation.

The Clapton Mission reports an increase of twenty members, six teachers, and fifty-three scholars for the year. A mission to Germans is to be commenced, premises having been secured in Whitechapel. The social operations of the mission are so embarrassed by debt that it is expected they will have to be abandoned.

Sir Frederick Howard, of Bedford, has resigned his position as treasurer of the Wesleyan Education Fund in consequence of Dr. Rigg's letter to Cardinal Manning; the special ground being that Dr. Rigg in his defence has expressed regret, not for his attack on fellow members, but only for its unauthorised publication.

The Free Methodist Missionary Committee, at its last meeting, made arrangements for the building of a new mission house at Chau Chia, the training institution at Tientsin, and the re-opening of the girls' school. A committee was appointed to arrange for the welcome home from China of Rev. John Innocent after thirty-six years' service there.

Presbyterian.

Dr. Moinet has declined the call to Bromley, Kent.

The work at Holybourne (Hants) is full of encouragement. Rev. C. Anderson Scott, of Willesden, has declined a call from Moseley, Birmingham.

The Pan-Presbyterian Council is to meet in Glasgow on June 17 and following days.

Chalmers Church, Ancoats, reports a considerable increase on last year. Under the leadership of Rev. J. H. Scott the work seems reviving.

Dr. Walter Morison's resignation of the Westbourne-grove Church has been accepted by the Presbytery, but he has been asked to act as minister-emeritus.

The executors of the late Mr. George Sturge, the well-known Friend, have paid over a further sum of £1500 to the English Presbyterian Foreign Missions, making £16,500 in all from that source.

At the annual meeting at New-road, Woolwich, Rev. John More reviewed with thankfulness the work of the past year. The membership is now 226, and the various missionary and evangelistic operations are well sustained.

Tidings have been received by telegram of the death of Mr. Alexander Macdonald, one of the proprietors of The Presbyterian, which occurred on Monday week at Cradock, Cape Colony. Mr. Macdonald, who was well known in Presbyterian circles, and was a deacon of Wimbledon Church, left this country for South Africa about twelve months ago, on account of his health. He leaves a widow and two children.

Calls.—Rev. R. W. Wilson to Dudley; Rev. R. Johnstone, of Edinburgh, to St. James, Kirkcaldy; Mr. Leslie Rankin, of Coleraine, to Waterside, Derry; Rev. James Hannil, of Magheramason, to Lauriston-place, Edinburgh; Mr. W. Smith, to Kilinchy; Rev. W. B. Jack, of Arbroath, to Caldercruix.

Resignations.—Rev. W. A. Cathcart, of Ramsey; Rev. W. Pearson, of Earle-road, Liverpool; Rev. D. Henderson, of Rock Ferry.

Chingford.—Mr. G. H. Lord has given three lectures on Egypt and the Holy Land at The Hall, King's Head Hill. They were illustrated by a fine collection of diagrams, photographs, and maps. The descriptions were made still more real by the presence on the platform of fifteen persons attired in various costumes.

If the things of the Gospel were real to all who profess to believe it, as real as the objects they touch and handle, what a great and instant change would pass over the habits and characters of many who now cannot be distinguished from worldlings! Suppose it were real to them that after death is the judgment, what an enormous effect would be produced on the ways of buying and selling, of conducting business and professional affairs! And once professing Christians were all under the influence of the solemn fact of judgment, how quickly the outside world also would feel it. It would steal into men's hearts as a change in the temperature steals into the innermost rooms of a house; it would trouble their consciences more than does the most urgent preaching. The habits of every exchange and market in the kingdom would undergo a transformation. Suppose it were real to all professing Christians that they were "washed, sanctified, and justified in the name of the Lord Jesus and by the Spirit of our God," what good news they would continually be proclaiming in the clearest terms! Surely men would be constrained to say, "We will go with you."

"The light of Nature" does not reveal the Gospel of grace. The laws of the physical and moral order are retributive, but not redemptive. When we would inquire of the universe whether God is good as well as powerful, gracious as well as supreme, it falls dumb. Its spectrum of truth falls short of the "red rose of sacrifice." It is here that the Gospel "in the face of Jesus Christ" comes with its blessed light. It shines out of the darkness, and into the darkness. Where all other voices fall silent the words of Jesus come with clear and convincing emphasis. God is "our Father;" "God is Love." When once we refuse to listen to Him, even though we may retain some faith in the personality of God, we are bound to become agnostics as to his moral dispositions and his message of grace. "No man hath seen the Father at any time; the only begotten Son, who is on the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him."

If any man ever had an eye for character, and an appreciation of life, whether high or lowly, it was Sir Walter Scott, and his view of the comparative moral worth of the rich and the poor is well worth attention. He told Miss Edgeworth that she should not attach so much importance to literature and literary people; that, although he had known some of the most celebrated men and women of his time, yet he had derived "more satisfaction and comfort from the conversation and example of the poor, unlettered, hard-working people, than from all the wisdom of the learned folks." He said he had heard "finer sentiments and seen finer lives among the poor people than he had ever seen or heard of anywhere outside the pages of the Bible." To him learning was "mere moonshine compared with the culture of the heart." Here is the secret of the moral soundness of all his works; and the explanation, to a large extent, of their enduring popularity.

The official year-book of the Church of England gives encouraging signs of progress during the last year or two, so far as figures go. The voluntary contributions have increased by a quarter of a million sterling, the number of communicants from 1,701,000 to 1,778,000, and auxiliary institutions, such as the Sunday-schools, show a similar advance. The only movement that seems to have stood still is the temperance department. It would seem that a new spirit of devotion is inspiring many clergy, that they are rising to the opportunities afforded to them by the parish system, and that they are mastering the secret of making use of outside helpers as never before. How much of this energy, however, is being used for Romanistic propaganda is not indicated. Evangelicals must see to it that tares are not sown while they sleep.

The discussion provoked by Mr. Purcell's life of Cardinal Manning shows no immediate signs of abatement; new developments come with new writers. Mr. Purcell, whose revelations have caused such a commotion among Romanists, defends himself with vigour against his assailants, and carries the war still further into their ranks. He does not hesitate to say, in The Nineteenth Century, that a tied Catholic newspaper is like a tied public-house, the one gives adulterated drink, and the other criticisms which are neither pure nor undefiled. "On occasions of grave differences of opinion arising among Catholics an outsider enters the office of such a paper, as but too often before has been the case, and takes possession of the chair." The intruder, he says, "poisons the wells of Catholic criticism." Instead of being sorry for having published so much, he thinks it was an evil hour when he listened to timid counsels, and omitted to give Manning's attack on the corporate action of the Jesuits in England and Rome. What will be done with this wayward man, who has a mind of his own? Make him miserable, and so drive him forth? We should not be surprised to hear that he had become a Protestant.

Dr. Ryan's book, "With an Ambulance through the Franco-German War" (John Murray), lets us see war as it is. The "glory" suffers at the hands of our moral pre-Raphaelites; who show us a good deal more of the horror and cruelty and uselessness of war. Dr. Ryan describes the agony of men and animals, and the consequences which follow to all the people in the war-trodden countries.

"I will not have one law for men and one for women," says President Theodore Roosevelt, of the New York Board of Police Commissioners—"they shall be treated exactly alike, so far as I am concerned." The principle is the only sound and consistent one on which to go; it is the principle of the New Testament. Were the example of Jesus followed, our laws and customs would at once undergo a great change for the better.

Attention should be called to the painful frequency of infant mortality in London, through suffocation in bed, and juries should be more severe on the parents and nurses who are responsible for them. This is one of the most difficult cases in which distinction has to be made between accident and culpable carelessness or worse. Among certain classes of callous people there is little sorrow shown for the death of their young offspring, who are often regarded as a burden. The utmost care should be exercised by our magistrates and coroners to detect the not infrequent cases of wilful "overlying," and the severest penalty should be visited on those who can be convicted of evil intent. Last week, out of sixty-four deaths by violence in London, twelve (including eleven of infants under one year of age) were due to this cause! These cases are largely found among the intemperate and improvident classes. Hence the importance that Christian teaching at "mothers' meetings" and in the homes of the people should be accompanied by instruction in habits of thrift and sobriety.

Scripture Readers in Ireland

THE seventy-fifth report of the Scripture Readers Society for Ireland opens with a note of praise to God for the blessing which has during the past year attended the labours of the Society's agents. The report says: "Ireland is at the present moment open for God's Word in a way that it has not been for generations. If the people do not get the Scriptures, there is nothing for them but Socialism, superstition, or infidelity; and will not a measure of responsibility rest upon those who have been hitherto more blessed than they? Additional workers are available if the funds are provided. We seek in a quiet way to bring God's Word before those who are of a tender heart and seem to have 'an ear to hear.'"

The Society's income for last year amounted to £3478, and the expenditure to £3108. The report gives, as usual, extracts from letters by the Readers and their superintendents. One of the former writes:—"The work in my district was never more favourable than during the past quarter. I am very thankful to say that there is no door closed against me by people of any class, while I am often sent for where there is illness or anything requiring special attention. My visits, thank God, have been blessed to many, and several have professed conversion. Many of God's children have been instructed and built up in the faith of Christ; at the same time several who did not come to our meetings or services have been brought in and I trust will continue to come. Another of the Readers says:—

"I cannot say that my work has been much in the sight of man, but I hope the Lord increased it in the hearts of those to whom I read and explained his Word. Thanks be to God, when not able to visit out, I have opportunities of doing work in my own house. Yesterday, when I came in from church, six Roman Catholics entered as they were coming from Mass. One of them said, 'The priest read for us in the Mass to-day what we heard you reading out of the Bible.' I said, 'Will you wish to have me read it again for you?' They answered 'Yes,' and I read Matt. ii. 1-13, and other portions, and explained them. Some of them (who had not heard the Scriptures read before) were surprised to find that what the priest read at Mass could be found in my Bible."

Another Reader writes that, in company with second agent of the society, he visited the tenantry on a large estate. "We visited from house to house, reading passages of Scripture. In each case there was a willing assent, and in many instances a hearty 'Amen' to what we said. Several people remembered our visit two years previously."

Copies of the report may be had from the secretary, Captain James Kearney White, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

Christ and the Old Testament.

THE Great Teacher contemplated the sacred records of the past from the practical standpoint, and found there the active germ-forces of all saving religion, and this aspect of the subject absorbed Him. The sacred writings of the Jews were a record of successive acts of power for the vindication of the covenant, and of the fidelity with which God sought through long centuries to bring near the blessings of the covenant; and he who reads the record aright will always feel the nearness, sufficiency, and strength of the Eternal Presence that asserts itself there. The books tremble with the infinite, like a temple to which God and his flame-winged seraphs have come, but, alas! some lack eyes for the vision. Men must learn through the Word their lessons of Divine power, and if they neglect or despise it, must continue in fatal ignorance to the end.—Rev. T. G. Selby.

Search for Souls

SOULS are worth seeking. God thinks so; He gave his Son. The Lord Jesus thinks so; He left his eternal glory, and came into the wilderness to save them. The Holy Spirit thinks so; He is ever convincing them of sin, and seeking to win them back to God. Would that we all thought so! Who can measure their infinite value? Viewed from the standpoint of God and eternity, one single soul is worth more than the commercial value of the whole world. "For what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

Sometimes we marvel that we meet with Christians who never do anything in their little minute of opportunity for the salvation of their fellows. But one can only believe that this authentic valuation has never been burned into their innermost heart by the Spirit of God, or it would not be so. Oh, why is it not in all of us as a burning fire shut up in our bones, so that a guilty indifference and a sin-bedrugged inactivity would be grand impossibilities! Oh, to possess a holy enthusiasm for souls! Even as that missionary, who, when taunted with only making one convert in twenty years, said, "And is it true that I have won a soul to Christ in twenty years? Then I will serve another twenty, if I am spared, for one more." He knew his Lord's estimate: "The redemption of their soul is precious."

Yes, souls are certainly worth seeking; but more, they need seeking. They are lost and in great danger. Confined in a bewildering maze of sin, they grope for the light, but all is dark, and they know not the way. We remember the word by the prophet Ezekiel, "For thus saith the Lord God, Behold I, even I, will both search my sheep and seek them out." And God calls upon believers everywhere to have fellowship with Him in bringing back these banished ones from their haunts and hidings.

They are worth seeking, they need seeking, but more also, they must be sought. "What man of you having an hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness and go after that which is lost." We are saved to save; rescued to rescue; blessed to bless. The man who does not realise this must have an extremely poor conception of the salvation of God; he has yet to learn the first principles of the Gospel of Christ. He has not half awaked to the majesty and mystery of eternal life, who has not linked himself to that noble order of men who are in the world to seek and to save that which is lost. This is the chief raison d'être of a saved soul—to glorify God in labouring for the salvation of others. As sinners saved by grace, we are debtors to all unsaved sinners, to tell them the good news of a Saviour's love.

But let us examine ourselves. Have we had, in the past of our Christian life, a strong and ruling desire to create joy in the heart of Jesus by winning lost ones from the paths of death? And are we making it our chief business to search for them and woo them to God and a holy life? Is it our daily occupation to seek for those of whom the Lord says, "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold: them also I must bring." These souls are in the wilderness. Thousands are perishing; thousands are dying. Verily, death is busy, and the coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

Do you dread the death of a relative, a friend? If God is real, and the Bible true, and eternity not a myth, ought you not to dread, ten thousand times more, the death of his soul! You would do anything to save him from temporal loss and pain, how much more should you be willing to give yourself, your all, and work like any slave, to rescue him from eternal ruin and despair?

Still to you comes the voice, "As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you. Go." Hold back, and you will suffer loss. Be obedient, and you will make the glad discovery that the promises of God, and the purposes of God, and the power of God are all on the side of the God-filled hearts that hunger to save, and the God-empowered hands that are outstretched to succour Christ's straying sheep. But, if through sickness or peculiar circumstances, you are denied the joy of personally seeking the lost, you may help together by prayer, and by loving gifts to those who are literally giving their lives to the work?

The need is great; the call for volunteers real, intense, urgent, awakening. Who will go? Let the answer echo: "Here am I, send me." W. MONRO COLLINGS.

Our Work for God.

By REV. J. R. MILLER, D.D.

GRAVELY responsible is the work of a Christian minister. Whenever he speaks to people, he is laying materials on the walls of God's temple. He must do work worthy of God's honour. If he has only wood, hay, and stubble to bring, he had better never enter the pulpit. The same is true of the Sabbath-school teacher. He also is at work on God's building. If he has only the trifles of week-day topics, bits of gossip, airy nothings, to give to his class, what that is worth while is he putting into the scholars' lives?

The lesson applies to parents. They get the young life from God when as yet nothing has been built into it. What do they bring to put into the character that they are helping to build? What are the influences of their home? What songs are sung beside the child's cradle? What lessons are taught at a time when every lesson becomes a permanent part of the life? What books are put into the young hands when every sentence makes an indelible mark on the soul?

But the teaching is for us all, for we are all builders on the life-walls of others. What opportunities for edifying one another we all have in our conversations, as we sit together or walk by the way! Words are wonderful things. They may become adornments in the life of him to whom they are spoken. They may give happiness, courage, comfort, or impulse. There have been single words that have changed destinies. Then there are also words that are only rubbish—wood, hay, and stubble. Too much of the common conversation of the street, the parlour, the table, is poor building material to put into human lives. Too much of it is only idle words. Too much is criticism of the absent, hurtful gossip about people. Too much of it is wrangling and bitterness.

We may think, too, of what we are building and allowing to be built on the walls of our own character. What are our companionships? Companionships make us. Every one that takes a half-mile walk with us, or talks with us ten minutes, lays something on the wall of our life. The books we read do their part in our character-building. Our thoughts also have their important place among the builders. As we think, so we grow. Trifling thoughts—a flippant, shallow life. Sad thoughts—a sombre character. Reverent thoughts—a life on which rest the hallowed marks of divinity. What are our thoughts—gold, silver, costly stones; or wood, hay, stubble? Are we as careful as we should be concerning the things we take into our life, God's building?

There is more of the lesson. The fire shall prove each man's work, of what sort it is. Whatever in it is gold, silver, costly stones, shall abide; but whatever is wood, hay, and stubble shall perish. The things we are putting into the lives of others these days—are they imperishable things, things that will be elements of beauty in the heavenly life? It is not enough that they be not evil; the yet more searching question is, are they the gold, silver, and costly stones of truth and love?

Very grave is the responsibility of the man or woman that writes a book—a novel, for example—that catches the fancy of people and is read by thousands. "It is a great success," men say. Yes, but what does it put into the lives of those who read it? What impulses does it start? What impressions does it leave? Does it kindle holy or unholy fires in the hearts of its readers? Is it gold, silver, costly stones, or is it wood, hay, and stubble, that it builds into life-walls?

The work done in our own life must also be proved, and only that which is immortal shall endure. No doubt many of us build much rubbish into our character. We read books that do us no good, even if they leave in us no virus of evil. We spend hours in conversation that consists at best of only idle words, imparting no inspiration toward better things. We indulge in thoughts, feelings, imaginings, longings, which build up in us nothing that we can carry into eternity. That is the true test of life. Only what is fit for heaven is worth while on the earth.

The end of the lesson shows us a man, saved himself, so as through fire, while his work is all burned up. We think of one that has spent all his life in building a house and gathering into it the things for which he has toiled. The house is burned, with all that is in it. The man himself escapes unhurt, but he carries nothing with him. So, says St. Paul, shall some men pass into heaven, barely saved, but losing all their work. They have lived uselessly. They have advanced Christ's kingdom not at all. In all their life they have done nothing that shall endure. The world would have been quite as well without them. We need to remember that it is not enough to be busy, active, ever doing something; the work we do must be true work for God, such as will really bless the world.

It is sad enough to be a useless Christian, doing no good, building nothing that will last. But it is sadder far to live to tear down, with unhallowed hand, what others with love, prayer, and toil, have built up; or by unloving and censorious words to discourage those that are sincerely trying to do God's work and to bless other lives. We should all pray to be saved from the doom of those that destroyed the temple of God.—The Golden Rule.

Trust in God.

O PUT thy trust in God! He can and will sustain
The soul that on Him leans, in hours of grief and pain,
O put thy trust in God! He'll keep thy soul secure;
His love that ne'er forsakes will to the end endure.
O put thy trust in God, when gloom o'erspreads thy way!
His power alone can make the darkness as the day.
O put thy trust in God when thorny paths appear!
Thy way is known to Him; faint not, but persevere.
O put thy trust in God! Fear not, but onward move,
Since all things work for thee an everlasting good.
O put thy trust in God! Thy needs He will supply;
His fulness is for thee, his grace will satisfy.
O put thy trust in God! Thy future leave to Him.
The calm that trust inspires is his own peace within.
O put thy trust in God! Doubt not his love so free,
Since everlasting love Himself encircles thee.

Letters from South Africa—10.

AS in America, so in South Africa, the Y.M.C.A. is not only a convenience, but a necessity. Many a young man, disappointed or discouraged from various causes on his first arrival, finds in the hearty grip of the hand which is characteristic of the Association an assurance of brotherly sympathy and incitement to hopeful endeavour. Fathers and mothers should do it good in all the ways they can, for they never know how much their boys may need its help at home or abroad; and, if their own should not, other people's children are constantly receiving good from it.

There is no "smoking-room" here, but smoking in the common sitting-room is not prohibited, though not encouraged. There was a discussion on this subject in The Association News at home some months ago. The arrangement here goes as far, I think, as the Y.M.C.A. is justified in going. It seems to work unobjectionably, and perhaps brings some into touch with the Association who might otherwise be found in less desirable places. Nevertheless, I am not recommending the plan for home consumption.

Amongst the many men whom I have met in S.A., whom I had known before, or had been acquainted with through their friends, was a son of my old friend, the late Mr. Edwyn Shipton, the historic secretary of the Y.M.C.A. in Aldersgate-street. His son holds a position in the Bank of Africa, in Capetown.

At Durban I was met before I landed by my kind friends Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Walton, whose guest I was for three pleasant weeks, the two ladies I have previously mentioned—Miss Holt and Miss Jacob—finding excellent accommodation and courteous attention at the Royal Hotel, of which travellers may make a note. The former came to escape the English winter, accompanied by her friend, and both were pleased with the opportunity of visiting some of the mission stations. We are, therefore, for the present travelling together. Miss Jacob has been able to call upon several members of the Mildmay Association of Women Workers, which has its representatives in all parts of the world.

My first evening was spent at an open-air meeting opposite the town hall, held by Mr. Spencer Walton and his helpers every Friday evening. Very bright, lively, and profitable occasions they are—brief talks, pointed and pungent, interspersed with hymns, solos, and choruses. Mrs. Spencer Walton and the lady missionaries speak and sing, and are a great attraction. At the close, and during the meeting, opportunity is found for individual dealing. Two young men, one of whom had been a fellow-passenger, stayed afterwards, though both had evidently been drinking. They had been brought up in Christian homes, with holy memories of parents' tears and prayers, yet seemed drifting downwards. They are the type of many whom a kindly word and helping hand may save. At one of our hotels it was remarked that the waiters seemed like the brokendown sons of gentlemen.

Meetings similar to the above are held every Sunday night in the same place, the centre of the town, after the hours of public worship; and also one for railway men, at the station, during their dinner hour on Tuesday.

When Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Walton removed from Capetown to Durban and took charge of the eastern branch of the South Africa General Mission, they wisely cultivated good relations with the churches and their pastors, which has been found in many ways mutually helpful. This Mission is regarded, not as an interloper, but as a fellow worker, which they recognise and help, and Mr. Walton is asked not infrequently to render aid in their pulpits. My kind host and hostess afforded me the pleasure of meeting a number of representative ministers and friends at their house one afternoon, from whom I learned much that was gratifying as to Christian life in Natal, though there, as everywhere, there is need of more separateness and devotedness to God.

I mentioned in a former letter a lawn meeting at the residence of the Rev. W. Copeland, C.E. clergyman of St. Thomas's district—on the Berea, a suburb where most of the prosperous people of Durban reside. Close to the vicarage is the church, and in the burial ground a stone bearing the following inscription which will be of interest especially to those who knew Capt. Allen Gardiner and his work. Incidentally it accounts for the name of the locality.

In memory of JULIA, daughter of CAPTAIN ALLEN GARDINER, R.N., first English missionary to the Zulus. He resided near this spot in 1835, and named it Berea. His daughter was buried here May 12, 1837. He went to found a mission in Patagonia, where he died in the service of his Saviour.

Brief space she trod this vale of tears,
But soon the living stream she found,
Redeeming love allayed her fears
And bore her safe to Canaan's ground.
And now she hymns the angelic strain—
"Worthy the Lamb for sinners slain."

The story of the death of Capt. Allen Gardiner and his companions on the bleak shore of Patagonia is one of the most touching in the history of missions.

The oldest missionary at Durban connected with the S.A.G.M. is Mr. Suter, who was formerly a member of Bethesda Chapel, Sunderland, under the pastorate of that faithful man of God, the late Arthur A. Rees. Mr. Suter has been in Natal twelve years, speaks Zulu like a native, and has the charge of a Zulu Church, whose meeting-house is on the premises of the mission. I found him a truly spiritual man, and a student of Scripture with more than ordinary insight. Such men are few. I never forget them when found.

The later arrivals were Miss Ellis and Miss Apps, Mr. Palmer Jones and Mr. Hawkins, who are studying the Zulu language. Of the two ladies one will probably join Miss Harris and the other Miss Gabb, two older missionaries who have been together in Swaziland. The addition of the two younger will enable the mission to open another station.

The two closing and the two opening months of the year are the least healthy in Durban. The Dengue fever was very prevalent when we left. Among other expositions of the word: "Dengue is said to be a compound from Aden and ague formed by the latter syllable of each. The disease is seldom out of season at Aden and on the coast of South Africa. Calomel is its cure."

Leaving Durban on Feb. 19, we spent four delightful days in Pietermaritzburg, 2000 feet higher. Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Walton accompanied us, as the S.A.G.M. had undertaken a Soldiers' Home, which was opened on the following day by Major-Gen. Cox, commanding the troops in Natal and Zululand. In declaring the Home open "for the glory of God, and for the spiritual and temporal good of H.M. troops stationed at Fort Napier, Maritzburg," he said that if it were not for drunkenness, crime in the world and in the army would be very much diminished; and he was quite sure that such an institution would be of very great benefit to the army and to the community at large. It is good to have commanding officers speak out, and take interest in Soldiers' Homes.

Mr. Spencer Walton, in referring to the work of the S.A.G.M., said that in its seven years of existence its missionaries had increased from six to between seventy and eighty. Its work concerned soldiers, sailors, railway-men, etc., as well as all races and colours.

My host here was Mr. Henry Bale, a member of the Legislative Assembly and president of the Y.M.C.A., a good man, and doing good in many ways—not least by his kindly interest in young men, who are frequently invited to his house. He asked the Y.M.C.A. committee to meet me—a band of sterling Christian men.

Notwithstanding the doctor's prohibition, I preached on Sunday morning for Rev. Walter Searle (formerly of Birmingham, successor to Rev. David Russell, now of Cape Town); in the evening for the Baptist minister, Rev. J. B. Heard; and, later, addressed the evangelistic meeting in the Y.M.C.A. hall—a capital meeting every Sunday night, principally of men, including several soldiers. I was much interested in all these meetings, and I think the people were in some fresh thoughts on familiar themes. I think we are generally interested by new lights on well-known portions of Scripture. I was charmed at Cape Town with a discourse by Rev. W. Abrahams on Martha and Mary, and the discriminative skill with which he sketched the character of each.

In consequence of my disobedience to my doctor, I almost lost my voice. On Monday afternoon (February 24), we went to Howick (1300 feet higher) for a few days' rest, staying at the comfortable Railway Hotel, where (2½ miles) is a waterfall of 364 feet. Returning to Maritzburg, we again saw our kind friends the Searles and Mr. Bale, and reached Johannesburg, passing Majuba and Sir George Colley's grave, and those of the 300 brave men who lie near him. Beyond Majuba the rail rises by zigzags, the engine being removed from one end of the train to the other, until the high tableland is reached, which is a marked feature of central South Africa. We arrived at Johannesburg, at 10.20 p.m., on February 28, and were met by Mr. W. McCulloch, the genial secretary of the Y.M.C.A., who had secured rooms for us, with difficulty. It is like a little London or New York on the top of the mountains.

Johannesburg, Feb. 29. R. COPE MORGAN.

Miss Emmeline Holt writes us from Pietermaritzburg on Feb. 24:—

DEAR SIR,—Would you kindly insert the following respecting Mr. R. C. Morgan's visit to South Africa? Having travelled with him to various places, I am able to see how gladly he is welcomed by all, and how his cheering words strengthen and encourage those who are bravely toiling on amid many difficulties in this vast continent. His visit to South Africa is proving a time of much spiritual refreshment to the various Christian churches in this land. In spite, oftentimes, of bodily weakness he is ever ready to speak a word for his Master, fully believing that it will be owned and blessed "in that day."

Mr. Morgan's name is a "household word" out here, and the right hand of fellowship is held out to him wherever he goes. Especially welcome is he in the lonely mission stations, where his loving words cheer and encourage the faithful workers.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor in India.

DURING my recent visit to Calcutta, I had the opportunity of becoming somewhat fully acquainted with the work of the ladies who are carrying on the Y.W.C.A. Home, at 31, Free School-street, and was interested to find what a boon it was to the inmates, and what opportunities there were for work outside the home. I am sure that your readers, who may not be aware of the existence of this Y.W.C.A. centre, will be thankful to know that there is such a safe and happy shelter—truly Home, and not a mere institution—where young people engaged in business, teaching, etc., can reside amid bright and Christian influences at a very moderate expense.

The following brief quotation from the last report will show one of the needs for such a Home. "Some months ago an English girl was brought out to India under false pretences, and got into a place of ill-repute, from which she was rescued by some members of the Free Church Mission, and brought to the Home. Her gratitude for its shelter and safety was touching. Homeless, friendless, and in a strange land, she was indeed in peril."

I was particularly interested to find that this valuable work is carried on by ladies who give their services freely, and are looking to God in answer to prayer, to incline his people freely to contribute the 300 rupees a month which are required to supplement the payments of boarders. This need for the first year was met by a special donation from the parent society, but now each month brings its need of about £18, and I feel sure that this only requires to be known, to lead many who love the Lord, to wish to share in the privilege of meeting it. I am writing this from the N.W. Provinces, but the hon. sec., Miss Bethune, would I feel sure, thankfully receive any contributions sent through you.—

Yours very truly,
February 25, 1896.

J. HUDSON TAYLOR.

From the Gate of Day.

By Mrs. HARVEY-JELLIE.

"NO break in the cloud, I fear, Annette," said the doctor, as he entered the dining-room.

"Father woke up just now, and seems quite clear about all; do come up and see him," she said eagerly.

Maclaughton followed the daughter, thinking of the day when he stood helpless by her mother's side—in the presence of a husband's and child's tears.

The smile of recognition that greeted him, as he grasped the hand of his old friend and patient, was good. They had been in true and close relationship as friends, since boyhood, and to lose one such, even for a few years, leaves an unfilled gap.

"Good-morning, Doctor," said Maurice Branstons.

"I came in to say good-night, my friend; you forget, it is late."

"Ah, true, to you it is; you see not yet the breaking of the day; but, Doctor, hearken to me, I am in haste, for I must go. Will you carry the burden of my heart as a message from the gate of day, to my Sunday-school?"

It almost seemed as though death were to be cheated of its prey, as the man who had been unconscious for days firmly grasped his hand and talked—but he had seen such flickering of the flame ere its light went out too often to be deceived.

"It would be a sorry thing to say you 'No,' but I could not superintend a school."

"Nay! you have your work; I only ask for once—and one message. It is this. When Sunday comes, stand in my old place, and give my teachers this, my last exhortation: 'Be filled with the Holy Spirit, and pray, and live, and speak, with the day in view that shall reveal the quality of the work.' Then say to them my loving farewell."

Love is dumb as well as eloquent, and neither spoke for awhile, save as soul speaks to soul, in those silent communings.

It might have been the result of that hour—anyway, instead of turning homeward, the doctor walked a mile out of his way to give another look at the wee sufferer whose mother had watched him so imploringly as he examined her chest earlier in the day. He seemed to long to do something to help others, and thus to cheer himself.

Sunday came, and a heavy fog was over the place where teachers and children met. Alternate hopes and fears had given place to the painful certainty that never again would they behold the man whose presence had been an inspiration and help. Faces were grave, and hearts were sad, and in vain they tried to sing the opening hymn.

It was a surprise, when, faithful to his promise, they saw the well-known doctor walk up the room and take the chair that had been unused since Maurice Branstons sat in it. The order was altered for the afternoon, and attention asked to the platform.

He looked at the expectant faces, and, with difficulty steadying his voice, he said: "You know it, your superintendent is gone. His last words to me were a message for his teachers, and I bring it to you. He said, 'Give them this, my last exhortation: Be filled with the Holy Spirit, and pray, and live, and speak, with the day in view that shall reveal the quality of the work, and say to them my loving farewell.'"

Even the children listened with moistened eyes, and the workers' hearts were full. Then said the doctor: "My friend and yours is in heaven, and we hope to meet him there. I ask myself and you, in prospect of that meeting-day, are we filled with the Holy Spirit? That was the secret of his joyful, useful life." And the words that followed were God-given and God-directed, for the speaker had not thought to say more than the message from his friend.

School was dismissed, but the teachers lingered. Not one but wished to stay, and searchings of heart and deep contrition, with earnest prayer, continued for an hour, and not in vain. And if he knows not yet, he shall know soon, that "the message from the gate of day" led to a new and consecrated life in those workers, and scholars are being saved. They miss him, but the remembrance of him cheers them to this hour. The doctor's visits in the homes are doubly blest—to the souls as well as the bodies of his patients.

The House at the Corner.—3.

AS in the physical and mental, so in the spiritual sphere. The souls of men are everywhere blighted by this terrible curse. Those who are labouring to bring the glad tidings of Jesus Christ into the hearts and lives of men know well enough what a sad hindrance the drink presents. How many a sorrowful story could be told of those who have set out in fair weather with full sail, and on this rock have made shipwreck of their faith!

Is it not well nigh an impossibility to preach the Gospel to a drunken man? Alcohol sears the conscience, dulls the understanding, stifles the true and generous feelings of a man's nature, and silences his nobler aspirations. Is a man in this state likely to open his heart to the Gospel message? I ask the question because we are sometimes told that the Christian's duty is to preach the Gospel, and leave such matters as temperance on one side. We know that God's Holy Spirit can work, and does work, in the hearts of the most degraded, and can enlighten the most sin-blinded soul. But has not the Word of God, through his prophet of old, gone forth to-day to his servants? "Prepare the way, take up the stumbling-block out of the way of my people."

What greater stumbling-block is there to the spread of the Redeemer's kingdom, both at home and abroad, than this strong drink, with its hardening and demoralising influence? God forbid that those solemn words of the prophet should be applicable to the Christian people of this land, "Curse ye Meroz, curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof, because they came not to the help of the Lord against the mighty." King Alcohol is a mighty foe, and we shall not slay him all at once, but it is only by constant, earnest, individual effort that the battle will be won.

The battle is the Lord's, not ours; but He wants clean-handed, devoted men and women to fight under his banner. Our duty as Christians goes further than to press for legislation, although that is sorely needed, and must come when the voice of the people demands it. But our noblest and wisest temperance reformers tell us that it is of no use legislating ahead of public opinion. Therefore, our part clearly is to prepare, by individual abstinence and united testimony, the way to permeate the nation with true temperance principles, and so to imbue the minds of the people with their truth and reasonableness that they may be ready, when the opportunity is given (as God grant it may soon be given), to shake the country free of this curse, which is binding it, and by which so large a number of its sons are enslaved. E. M. W.

Birmingham.—The ballet and chorus ladies of the principal Birmingham theatres were invited to attend social-religious services in the Temperance Institute, preceded by an excellent tea. The two first meetings were arranged by Mr. William Forbes, and they have since been conducted by Mr. G. J. Hutson, secretary of the Midland Temperance League, assisted by friends. Nine services in all were organised, at which the average attendance was fifty-five. Homely talks were given. Over forty total abstinence pledges were taken. It is confidently hoped that the impressions made will permanently affect the life of those young people.

WE have passed through a series of meetings which in their power and blessing have been an answer to many prayers here and at home. I refer to the "Students' Conference," the fifth of a series of conferences held within the last three months in this country. The other conferences have been at Bombay, Lahore, Lucknow, and Calcutta. This is really an extension to India of the Student Volunteer Movement, which, for the last eight years, has been so largely owned and blessed, first in America, Great Britain, and the Continent of Europe.

The central thought of this whole movement, in its application to the mission-field, is that while more labourers are urgently needed to be sent out from the home-lands, the evangelisation of the world must not, and cannot, wait for or depend upon that particular kind of reinforcement. India must be evangelised by the people of India. From the ranks of native Christians, missionaries whom God has called must be separated to the Gospel of Christ, and the evangelising of India. Much prayer has been offered that among the Christian students there might be found many who would be willing to turn aside from worldly ambitions and secular gains, and consecrate their lives to the preaching of the Gospel among their own people, and that prayer has been abundantly answered.

The aggregate attendance at these five conferences in India has been over 1000, representing 127 colleges and schools. So far as results can be tabulated it has been ascertained that 128 students have "volunteered" for missionary work; others definitely accepted Christ as their Saviour, and a large number have pledged themselves to keep the "morning watch," i.e., the first half of the day at least to be devoted to prayer and the study of the Word of God. These numbers represent native students, with a small sprinkling of Eurasians, and one or two Europeans.

The meetings in Madras have been attended with manifest tokens of the Divine presence. The Madras Missionary Conference, a standing body which holds monthly meetings, and includes all the missionaries of the city and neighbourhood, took up the matter very heartily, and appointed a local committee to co-operate with the leaders of the Student Volunteer Movement. The principal speakers were Messrs. J. R. Mott, R. P. Wilder, Campbell White, J. Foreman, and their addresses were felt to be very direct messages delivered in the power of the Spirit. Besides the Madras students, delegates to the number of about 100 came from Vellore, Bangalore, Madura, Tinnevely, Coimbatore, Bellary, and even such distant places as Masulipatam in the East, and Calicut in the West. Many were from secular colleges, where the number of Christians is proportionately very small—one college, e.g. 350 miles from Madras, with 450 students, has only twelve Christians, of whom four came to the Conference. What cause we have to pray and hope, and believe that these lights, shining in dark places, may burn brightly for Christ, and bring others to Him.

Let those who read these lines pray earnestly for this Student Movement. There can be no doubt that God is in it, and that He, by means of it, is moving the native church to realise the responsibility of evangelising India.

Totterdown Mission Band.—The anniversary of this band was held in the new Mission Hall, Bath-road, on March 19. The secretary presented a most encouraging report, telling of much work done in the open air all the year round, and in the hall both for children and adults, as well as the starting of a Sunday-school at Whitchurch, which is making very successful progress. The band have also conducted services in various places, being formed for Christian work wherever there is a call. Fifty-one have professed conversion during the twelve months; some have not stood, but many are bright witnesses to-day to the saving power of Christ. The band, who do not include any well-to-do people, have raised over £50 for rent and furnishing expenses, leaving about £5 still to be collected. The leader's address is F. J. Yeo, Knowle-road, Totterdown, Bristol.

"TO OBEY IS BETTER THAN SACRIFICE, AND TO HEARKEN THAN THE FAT OF RAMS."—1 Sam. xv. 22.

THIS is a great principle, which is repeatedly enforced throughout the Bible. Men have always been tempted to distinguish between religion and morality, and to suppose that a certain tribute of sacrifice to God will be sufficient compensation for notorious evil-doing. But in every age God's servants have protested against the notion, and have insisted, as Samuel did with Saul, that it were better to obey, although there should be no spoil out of which to gather beasts for sacrifice.

Let the ritualist beware. There is a grave fear lest extreme attention to the outward rite may induce carelessness to the inward temper. Where the outward observance is the expression of the attitude of the soul, it is to be respected by those who feel that excessive symbolism is hostile to the devout life; but where the rite takes the place of the soul's devotion, or condones a lax morality, it cannot be too sternly deprecated. All the Levitical rites might be observed without flaw, but they could not compensate for persistent violation of the least item of the decalogue.

Let us all beware. We are apt to make sacrifices of time and money and energy for God, and to comfort ourselves with the reflection that such as we are may be excused if in small lapses of temper, or in other ways, we come short of the Divine standard. No, it cannot pass muster. One sin mastered, one duty performed, is dearer to God than the most costly sacrifices that were ever piled upon the altar.

"THE SPIRIT OF THE LORD CAME UPON DAVID FROM THAT DAY FORWARD."—1 Sam. xvi. 13.

What may not a day bring forth! Here was a shepherd lad, summoned hastily from his sheep, and anointed king. But an even greater blessing came into his life that day, for he was mightily endued with the Holy Spirit. Without doubt, for long the Spirit of God had dwelt within him, moulding his character, inditing his songs; but, henceforth, the Spirit was to abide on him, as a divine unction.

Why should not this day witness a similar transformation for you; not in the change of earthly position, but in your reception of the divine might through a renewed endowment? Why should not the Spirit of the Lord come mightily upon you from this holy hour, even as your eyes glance down this page? Though it be granted that you have been empowered once, there is no finality in God's bestowals; the apostles were filled and filled again.

The age of Pentecost in which we live is distinctly one of mighty endowment. It awaits all who will separate themselves to God, and receive it for his glory. The characteristic preposition of this age is on. If you have not received power, seek it, he that seeketh findeth; nay, receive it, to ask is to get. The great High Priest and Prophet of our profession stands ready; bow meekly beneath his hand, and arise into the full participation of power. You may not be sensible of it at first, but as you begin to use it, you will find it there.

"THE ARMIES OF THE LIVING GOD."—1 Sam. xvii. 26, 36.

This made all the difference between David and the rest of the camp. To Saul and his soldiers God was an absentee, a name but little else. They believed that He had done great things for his people in the past, and that at some future time, in the days of the Messiah, He might be expected to do great things again; but no one thought of Him as present. Keenly sensitive to the defiance of the Philistine, and grieved by the apathy of his people, David, on the other hand, felt that God was alive. He had lived alone with Him in the solitude of the hills, till God had become one of the greatest and most real facts of his young existence, and as the lad went to and fro among the armed warriors, he was sublimely conscious of the presence of the living God amid the clang of the camp.

This is what we need. To live so much with God, that when we come amongst men, whether in the bazaars of India or the market-place of an English town, we may be more aware of his overshadowing presence than of the presence or absence of anyone. Lo, God is here! This place is hallowed ground! But none can realise this by the act of the will. We can only find God everywhere when we carry Him everywhere.

Each of us is opposed by difficulties, privations and trials of different sorts. But the one answer to them all is faith's vision of the Living God. If our faith can but make Him a passage, along which He shall come, there is no Goliath He will not quell, no question He will not answer, no need He will not meet.

"DAVID BEHAVED HIMSELF WISELY."—1 Sam. xviii. 5, 14, 15, 30.

There must be some strong reason for the four-fold repetition of this phrase in so short a space. It is as though the Holy Ghost would lay very distinct stress on the divine prudence and circumspection, which must characterise the man whose life is hid in God. Let us walk with God, abiding in Him, subjecting our thoughts and plans to his, communing about all things with Him, talking over our lives with Him before we go out to live them in the presence of our fellows. Then we too shall have this gracious wisdom, which is more moral than intellectual, the product of the grace of God rather than of human culture.

Our life shall commend itself to men (5). David's was good in the sight of all the people, and more wonderful still, in the sight of Saul's servants, who might have been jealous. Be sure that a life lived in God disarms jealousy and envy.

Our life shall rebuke and awe our foes (15). Saul stood in awe of him. When traps and snares are laid for us we shall be enabled to thread our way through them all, as Jesus did when they tried to entangle Him in his talk.

Our name will be precious (30). People loved to dwell on David's; it was much set by; they noticed and were impressed with the beauty and nobility of his character. Let us so live that our name also may be precious, for the honour of the name of our God.

THURSDAY, April 2.

"AND SAUL HEARKENED UNTO THE VOICE OF JONATHAN."—1 Sam. xix. 6.

It was a noble act of Jonathan. He might have withdrawn from his friendship with David when it threatened his relations with his father; but, instead, he stepped into the breach, and pleaded for his friend, endeavouring to eradicate the false and ungenerous conceptions of which Saul had become possessed. It is an example we do well to study and copy.

Men often misconceive of one another. Jealousy and envy disturb behaviour and actions which are in themselves as beautiful as possible. Misrepresentation will blind us to the true excellences of one another's characters. Wrong constructions are often put on the most innocent incidents. We cannot help these things, they are part of the sad heritage of the Fall; but we may often take up the cause of a misunderstood man, and at the risk of losing our own reputation, and diverting to ourselves some of the odium which attaches to him, may plead his cause.

If we dislike another, as Saul did David, let us give scope to the good Spirit to plead his cause at the bar of our hearts, as Jonathan did for his friend. Let us consider all the kind and loving things that may be said of him, let us put ourselves in his position, let us be willing to believe and hope all things. This is the work which Christ has chosen as his own.

FRIDAY, April 3.

"THOU SHALT BE MISSED, BECAUSE THY SEAT WILL BE EMPTY."—1 Sam. xx. 18.

There are a good many empty seats in our houses. Those that occupied them can never do so again; they have gone never to return again, and we miss them sorely.

Let us see to it that we do not leave our seats in the home circle needlessly vacant. Let not the mother be away at the dance, or even at the religious meeting, when she should be at home, joining in her children's evening prayers. Let the father be very sure that God has called him elsewhere, before he habitually vacates his place in the evening family circle. Let each of us avoid giving needless pain to those we love by leaving empty seats. But if God calls us away to his service, then for those who miss us, Another Form shall glide in, and sit in the vacant chair, and we shall be conscious that the Master is filling the gap, and beguiling the weary moments.

Above all, let not your seat be empty at the house of God, at the ordinary service, or at the Lord's Table. We are too prone to allow a trifle to deter us from joining in the sacred feasts. At such times we are missed, our empty seat witnesses against us; there is a lack in the song and prayer, which cries out against us. Oh that there may be no empty seats at the marriage supper, vacated through our unfaithfulness!

SATURDAY, April 4.

"THERE IS NONE LIKE THAT; GIVE IT ME."—1 Sam. xxi. 9.

What David said of the sword of Goliath we may say of Holy Scripture, "There is none like that."

There is no book like the Bible for those convinced of sin. The Word of God assures the sinner of God's love in Christ, whilst it refuses to condone a single sin, or excuse one shortcoming. The Bible is as stern as conscience herself against sin, but as pitiful as the heart of God to the sinner. It, moreover, discloses the method by which the just God may be the justifier of those who believe.

There is no book like the Bible for the sorrowful. It tells of the Comforter; it reminds us that in all our sorrow God also is sad; it points to the perfect plan according to which God is working out our blessedness; it insists that all things are working together for good; it opens the vision of the blessed future, when all the griefs and tears of men shall be put away for ever.

There is no book like the Bible for the dying. "Read to me," said Sir Walter Scott, on his dying bed, to his friend. "What shall I read?" "There is only one Book for a dying man," was the answer; "read to me from the Bible." The Book which tells of the Lord, who died and rose again; of the mansions which He has gone to prepare; of the reunion of the saints; of the fountains of water of life—is the only pillow on which the dying head can rest softly.

Secession from the Romish Church.—A deep feeling has been caused in Roman Catholic circles by the secession of Lady O'Hagan, her son, and her daughters from the Catholic Church, and their entry into the communion of the Plymouth Brethren. Lady O'Hagan belongs to the Townley family—one of the oldest Catholic families in England. In the chapel at the family residence, "the Lamp of the Sanctuary" was lighted, according to tradition, at the introduction of Christianity into England, and it has been kept burning ever since until recently. On Lady O'Hagan's secession from the Catholic Church the burning of the lamp became a superstitious observance, and it has been allowed to go out. It can easily be guessed what an effect the step taken by Lady O'Hagan has produced in the Roman Catholic world.

ANSWER TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 12).

The following indicate the general lines of the answers given. Owing to lack of space, I cannot reproduce them so fully as my young friends have done. Some of their papers have shown most praiseworthy care and thoroughness.

Jesus refers to David—

1. In reference to the Sabbath—Matt. xii. 3; Mark ii. 25; Luke vi. 3.
2. To show the Pharisees that David foretold the coming of the Messiah—Matt. xxii. 42, 43, 45; Mark xii. 35, 36, 37; Luke xx. 40, 41, 43.

UNCLE TOM.

Fred, the Fo'c's'le Cook.

FO'C'S'LE is a short word used by sailors when speaking of the fore-castle of their ships. But, there, perhaps you children don't know even what a fore-castle is, so I must tell you. It is the place where the sailors sleep and eat on board, and is generally placed right in the bows or front part of the vessel, and is no doubt so called from the fact that in older days, like when the Spanish Armada was destroyed by Sir Francis Drake and his gallant fleet, every ship had a sort of castle perched at both ends of the vessel, so then the one in front would be called the fore-castle, the castle by the old name, which sailors have shortened into fo'c's'le.

Having told you what a fo'c's'le is, let me now explain what a fo'c's'le cook is. You will, as a rule, find one on board a yacht, where he is generally a cabin boy provided to help prepare the men's food ready for the cook. He peels the potatoes, cleans up the fo'c's'le, and washes up the plates and dishes.

Fred was fo'c's'le cook on the steam yacht Mistral, and when I met him first was about fourteen years of age, and such a dear bright lad, quite one's ideal of a sailor boy, bright blue eyes, short curling hair of a sunny hue, clear skin, and when decked out in what sailors call “shore-going togs,” brown shoes, white trousers, blue blouse, and broad brimmed straw hat, he looked every inch a sailor. Everybody on board liked Fred, they couldn't help it, he was so upright and pure—his presence seemed to gild everything with sunlight. He was always singing, never idle, and so obliging. Of course, he had faults, for no one is perfect, still his uprightness and goodness all the crew respected, and they said that he was a real Christian.

When he joined the yacht he had just left a training-ship. He wanted to be a “good soldier of Jesus Christ,” but when I asked if he knelt in prayer in the fo'c's'le, he said that he did not like to for fear of what the men would say.

“Is that the way for a soldier of Christ to talk?” I asked. He could not answer, so I then had a little talk with him, and he opened his heart to me about his desire to be a follower of the dear Saviour. I advised him to come to a real decision by accepting Christ, and then to live Him out in his life. He promised, and kept his promise too, thank God, and became a real example to many an older believer.

That very night on retiring he knelt down by his bulk in the fo'c's'le, and offered up his evening prayer. He expected a storm of abuse and ridicule, but it didn't come. One man shouted out, "Hello, look at Holy Joe." No one else said a word until he got up from his knees, and then the other men began to ask Fred if the captain had been tackling him, and wanted to know if he was "going to be a parson."

But the boy gave no sharp answer. He told them just what I had been saying to him, and when he had finished several of them wanted to know if they could have a service on board. This being reported to me I quickly arranged to hold a service, and night after night we used to sing and converse on Gospel truths. At first some held aloof, but after a bit we had all the crew; several signed the temperance pledge, and quite a number of the men gave in their allegiance to our Lord.

Fred stayed fo'c'sle cook on the Mistral until the cruise was finished, and then I lost sight of him for some time. But not long ago I met him again—no longer a bit of a lad, but a fine well-built young man sailing as a full blown A.B. (able-bodied sailor) in a large north-country steamer—with the same bright, honest face, laughing eyes, and curling hair, and, better than all, he had stood firm in the faith, and was known to those on board as an earnest worker for God, his good influence was felt throughout the ship, several joined him in daily prayer and Bible reading in the fo'c'sle—and before he left the steamer, quite a number of the crew had decided to yield their life's devotion to our Lord and Master. So a poor little fo'c'sle cook was and is the means in God's hand of turning many to righteousness.

From Central Africa.

It was only in 1894 that our excellent Commissioner saw his way clear fully to establish representatives of H.M. the Queen at Kota-Kota, in British Central Africa. The town was formerly governed by the late Jumbe, a noted chief.

Until quite the close of his reign, Jumbe remained opposed to any European missionaries residing within his territory, possibly fearing that the illegitimate trade in slave dealing would be stopped. However, in due course the Universities Mission was invited to open a mission at Kota-Kota, and the late Rev. A. F. Sim having just arrived from England, came forward. For a year Mr. Sim worked on, single-handed, in spite of the many difficulties, dangers, and trials. I joined him in September, taking up school and dispensary work. Shortly afterwards my friend was laid low with fever, and passed away.

Thus, at the end of October, I found myself left alone to carry on the various departments of mission work. The loneliness was very painful, and my health became impaired. I had many attacks of malarial fever, but in all my varied extremities, dear Mr. Swann (late of the London Missionary Society, and now on duty as H.M.S. Collector of Revenues) has proved not only to myself, but also to Mr. Sim in his illness, a loving, true, and sympathetic brother. It has been a source of comfort to me to find the school continuing to increase in numbers, the attendance being remarkably good.

Happily the preaching is wonderfully attended under the trees. The mission-ground is at times literally crowded; the women and men's classes are encouraging, especially the former.

Starvation in Sicily.

TWO districts of Sicily have been especially stricken by the sulphur crisis, viz., Caltanissetta and Girgenti. The almost entire shutting up of the mines and the general suspension of the works (owing to the heavy taxation and the markets being already glutted with sulphur) has not only struck a blow at the 25,000 or more families of the miners, but also injured those who got their living from the earnings of these men, and has especially put a stop to the small trade in these places.

The Government not having wherewith to provide work for such a number of people, has considered it prudent to send troops to maintain public order, knowing well what a terrible counsellor is hunger. After having pawned everything, for all must go for food, the people find themselves without clothing in the bitter winter days, and especially during the severe winter nights. Such is the hopeless case of a family of eleven, belonging to our Waldensian Church in Grotte. Having nothing left to pawn, they are obliged to remain in a half naked state in their miserable dwelling, where they cry to God. This is a typical, not a solitary, case.

The unemployed cannot find work on the land, for agriculture is languishing. Let us listen to what the Commission, who studied the question of the landed properties, said on the subject:—"The large number of farm labourers, who form a threateningly great majority in Sicily (two millions out of the three which represent the whole population of the island) are perishing from hunger." This is the reason why those who have still something left emigrate before that also is gone; but the majority have not enough even for that.

In this way the church of Grotte last year lost seven of her best members, who were emigrating to Brazil. At Grotte the Waldensian Church has thirty-three members, 250 Sunday-school children, 155 night-school and 125 day-school pupils. We have until now been carrying on the work there in the rooms of an old palace, which the proprietors, at the present time, are requiring again for themselves. We cannot find a substitute, especially one such as we require.

It is absolutely necessary to provide for this emergency, and there is only one way of doing so possible, viz., by erecting a building to answer the purpose. The starving inhabitants, and especially the members and frequenters of our church, do not ask for a momentary relief of money, which is soon spent, but for work, which they are willing to do on very modest terms, and by setting to work at once, to build church and schools for our mission, we should employ a great number of bread-winners, who would be thus enabled, through the help of their fellow-Christians, to draw their families out of misery by their own efforts. Boca Mission, Buenos Aires.

DURING the past few months I have spoken at many meetings in the metropolis and in the provinces, on behalf of missionary work in South America in general, and of the work of the Boca Mission in particular. Deep interest has been awakened; a number of young men and women (promising workers some of them), have offered for service. Promises and gifts have been received to the extent of about £750; but as a good part of this amount is promised on condition of the entire sum needed being raised, I would ask all who can to enable us to secure the sums conditionally given. My time in England is now very short, and I would plead that the help needed may be sent, and that we may be enabled to take the Gospel to the fifteen thousand who in the Boca district are dwelling in superstition and darkness.

Beddome.

New Calabar, West Africa.

NEW CALABAR consists of three principal towns, each with a population of several hundred persons, and is situated on three islands in the Bight of Benin, West Africa. Previous to the occupation of these seats, the inhabitants dwelt in another part of the district, in one town, which was the scene of missionary efforts under the C.M.S.; and in the three towns into which that one has since developed, the fruits of earlier work are still visible. One of the three islands is an outpost of the Delta Pastorate, a native undertaking organised and directed by Archdeacon Crowther; the second is at present unoccupied; and the third constitutes our own sphere of labour.

The work here was begun some three years ago by Rev. W. Hughes, of the Congo Training Institution, Colwyn Bay; and our connection with it is approaching the second year. On arriving, our first efforts were directed to clearing some six acres of forest land, that have since been stocked with such plants as will keep the station in food, &c.; and judging from the appearance of the first-fruits, as well as the general aspect of the immature crop, we anticipate a harvest worthy of the outlay incurred.

After living for some time in very insanitary quarters, we have been enabled, through the generous help of friends at Lagos, to begin the erection of a more comfortable house. In the department of education we give prominence to the industrial element, combined with religious and general instruction. The medical art proves itself invaluable. Recently a great chief—a bitter antagonist of the Mission—sent for us to attend a sick woman, although he knew we would pray with all present in the house, which he much disliked. We enjoy the luxury of having to acquire two languages; our acquaintance with the first of these is ripening into intimacy.

Now we have reached our evangelistic work—the sum and summit of the other departments. This work has been somewhat tortuous in its course, owing to the desperate opposition presented. While, however, hostility has been fierce, the Spirit of God has been moving, and we are cheered in our work. Looking to the vast interior, with its spiritual darkness, we are overwhelmed; and on this account we aim at educating native Christians in the duty of witnessing for Christ. The converts at Bonny show how this may be done, several churches having through them been gathered where the voice of a missionary has never been heard. In this work lies hope for the evangelisation of Africa.

2 Cor. iv. 8.

"Not in despair,"
Though long our bread be cast
Out on the waters vast:
Wide oceans though it traverse round,
It will be found
At last.

"Not in despair,"
Though sore perplexed
On every side, and vexed;
This day his dying marks we bear,
His crown we'll share
The next.

"Not in despair,"
Though friends may prove untrue,
And oft our work undo;
They fail, God faileth not, nor will;
His way we still Pursue.

"Not in despair,"
Though some lov'd hope no more
For us may dawn before.
He rules the floods which bear us home,
Where wind and foam
Are o'er.

"Not in despair":
Though now we see it not,
His purposes are wrought;
And we shall reap from out the wrong
The right we long
Have sought.

JOHN WILFRID M'CLOURE.

Mr. James Harrison.

"THE BISHOP OF HUNGATE."

SOME forty years ago Rev. James Parsons, of York, had in his congregation a young working-man whose labours of faith and love have provoked not a few to imitate him. He seemed to have an eye for every forgotten or overlooked class of men. With only the limited time and means of one who had to win his daily bread, he has done an amount of work which very few with ample means and leisure have equalled. The economy of time is one of the secrets of his usefulness.

Mr. Harrison's labours began in the streets. On Sunday evenings, during church time, he would take his stand for an hour on the Ouse bridge, and give away tracts. In the first four years of his work he gave away 42,500. If his distribution has continued at the same rate he has given away tracts enough to reach every inhabitant of the city many times over.

Missions to soldiers were uncommon in those days, but Mr. Harrison saw a field of labour open among them, and he visited the barracks in order to win souls. His first and chief object was always to bring men to the Saviour, but he had a large and liberal view of their needs, and adapted himself to such conditions of life as he found.

The debtors in York Castle also had, as long as it was needed, a great deal of his loving attention. They were a strange mixture of sufferers from misfortune and rogues who had cheated their creditors. They were divided into three classes, according to their circumstances and the nature of their offences. The writer remembers one old man in the second class who had been a prisoner more than thirty years. His mind had become unhinged, and he imagined that he was the Prince of Wales. Mr. Harrison was no speaker or preacher, but he knew where to find those who could aid him in holding services and giving lectures. Some of these were youths and young men whom he was thus unconsciously preparing for future Christian work; he was a good college tutor without knowing it. These were times of kindly intercourse with the men in trouble which made the heart tender, or times of solemn appeal touching the great interests of the soul and eternity. In 1860 the debtors convened a meeting by themselves, and passed a vote of thanks to Mr. Harrison for his labours on their behalf; one of the speakers remarked that their friend had visited the prison no less than three hundred times in the course of the year, and had paid twenty-four thousand personal visits. The old castle has seen strange sights, but none more beautiful than that of this working-man in his spare hours visiting debtors in their need. New arrangements as to debtors brought this part of his work to an end.

The Model Lodging House also received some attention, the preachers being taken thither also. Mr. Harrison went diving into every dark pool, seeking to save the lost.

The County Hospital was another place in which his face became familiar, and where his personal contact with the patients often produced the happiest results. One man, a lion tamer, the son of a good mother, was himself tamed in spirit, and after passing through much suffering gave evidence of a real change of heart.

Hungate Mission Schools having been started in one of the lowest parts of the city by one of his young friends, Mr. Harrison threw himself into its various opportunities of service with all his might. With this district of the city Mr. Harrison had so long and so closely been identified, that, although he has for many years been a member of the Society of Friends, he is often called "the Bishop of Hungate." It had lads and girls to be aided for the present life and for the life to come. They were poor and ignorant and too often vicious, just the material for him to work upon. He thus became a city missionary in the truest sense of the word. In the course of his labours he has visited thousands of parents, and has gathered them together on suitable occasions to hear the truth as it is in Jesus. He has stood by hundreds of deathbeds, giving comfort and hope. For the children free Sunday morning breakfasts have been given in winter, and succour has been carried to the sick in their homes. Among their institutions is a fund given by Mr. Parsons for the purchase of Bibles to be given as rewards. The sale and distribution of the Scriptures has from the first been a portion of Mr. Harrison's work. There is a good library, which is appreciated by the parents of the scholars as well as by the scholars themselves, an average of forty books being issued on a Sunday.

Now that the school has become an established institution its work can be tested in one way—the attendance of senior scholars. This is large, a majority of them being young men and women over eighteen years of age, and several married and in middle life. How many schools would be thankful if they had a similar testimony to give with regard to their senior scholars.

Work of an educational kind has been done on week evenings, one of the scholars to take advantage having been a converted scavenger, who came at the age of sixty to learn to read his New Testament. So anxious and so resolute was he that he would sometimes take off his coat in order the better to grapple with his difficulties, until he fairly mastered them, and could read the good news which had changed his life.

These mission schools for boys and girls have supplied two Sunday-schools in York with superintendents; they have sent forth a city missionary; an old scholar has opened a similar place in the Isle of Man, and hundreds have expressed by word of mouth or by letter to the superintendent or teachers "their deep thankfulness for blessings received there."

The means for all this work did not, of course, come out of Mr. Harrison's pocket, for he has never had more than a working-man's wage, and has had a wife and family to keep. Unknown, he was yet well known. Richer men of all denominations knew and trusted him. He had a character which was as good as a bond. The mission and all the work done by this servant of Christ are an example of the value of minutes and hours, of pence and shillings, of small buildings and humble workers. Here is an illustration of the capacity for usefulness in an English working-man.

Now, in his old age, Mr. Harrison's time is all his own to give to his much-loved and Christ-imposed duties. He says that, although he often sees changes and new methods, he is glad to go on old lines. He still wishes to tell forth the good news that Jesus Christ is the Saviour of the world, since "this message is as full and as joyful as ever."

The Land of a Thousand Lakes.

IN an unfrequented nook of Europe is set the Grand Duchy of Finland, a picturesque and fertile country supplying much of the farm produce of Northern Europe, and carrying on a large timber trade with Hull; it forms an outlying portion of the Russian Empire. Helsingfors is its capital, a noble town containing the seat of government, law courts, a university, and many fine public buildings. The established religion of the country is Lutheran, but a Lutheranism that has lost its ancient fire, and under the sapping influence of its connection with the State has become a mere husk of formal religion.

In 1884 the Swedish Conference of the American Methodist Episcopal Church sent a minister—Rev. B. A. Carlson—to establish a mission in Finland. From that has grown the Finland and St. Petersburg Methodist Mission. Methodist societies were formed on the old lines in the capital and other parts of the country; it grew and expanded, until to-day there are twelve organised churches, 850 members, eighteen preachers, including ministers and local preachers, eighteen Sunday-schools with 800 scholars, and the beginning of a literature; four magazines are published by the book room in Helsingfors, two for adults in each language, and two children's, one in Swedish and the other in Finnish. Rev. N. J. Rosen, in addition to his duties as pastor at the Swedish congregation, and editor of the various magazines and other published matter, was appointed superintendent in 1893. Through his indefatigable labours, and the fervent zeal of his energetic staff of brother labourers, the mission has attained a firm footing, and enjoys legal rights in Finland.

In Finland the inhabitants for the most part speak two languages, the Swedish and the Finnish. It is thus necessary to have two kinds of services in each locality, and accordingly at Helsingfors two halls are rented for the Methodist services. The authorities there have resolved to build a church worthy of their name, being confident that with such a sanctuary the cause will grow mightily. They are endeavouring to raise the sum of £12,000 to purchase a central site and erect the building. A lady member of the church, Mrs. F. Swensson Parker, has come to England in order to secure help. The Finnish Methodists are poor, and have done their best to raise some little portion of this sum; they now appeal to the birthplace of Methodism to assist them in helping along their worthy cause. Anyone who would like further information should communicate with Mrs. Parker, at Miss Mason's House of Rest, 10, Finchley-road, St. John's Wood, London, N.W.

The Irish Temperance League has opened at Belfast a fine new suite of refreshment-rooms as a counter-attraction to the public-houses.

Portsmouth.—The committee of the Midnight Meeting Movement have held a mission here, in concert with Commander Key, R.N., and other local workers. Three meetings were held, and were all well attended. The general moral condition of the borough is very bad.

King David and His Psalms.

By REV. J. STORJOHANN, CHRISTIANIA.

WORDS TO THE HEATHEN.

THE promise given by David in xviii. 49, "Therefore will I give thanks unto Thee among the heathen," he keeps in PSALM LXVI.

For the Chief Musician. A Song, a Psalm.

1. Make a joyful noise unto God, all the earth,
2. Sing forth the glory of his name,
Make his praise glorious!
3. Say unto God, how terrible are Thy works!
For the greatness of Thy power shall Thine enemies feign obedience to Thee:
4. All the earth shall worship Thee, and sing to Thee,
They shall sing to Thy name. Selah.

PART I.

- 1.
5. Come and behold the works of God,
He is terrible in his doing toward the sons of man.
6. He turned the sea into dry land,
They went through the river on foot—
There did we rejoice in Him.
7. He who rules by his might for ever,
His eyes watch the nations;
The rebellious—let them not exalt themselves.
8. Bless our God, ye peoples, [Selah.]
And let the voice of his praise be heard,
9. He who has set our soul in life
And suffered not our foot to slip.

10. For Thou hast proved us, O God,
Thou hast tried us, as silver is tried.
11. Thou hast brought us into the net,
Thou layedst a sore burden upon our loins;
12. Thou hast caused men to ride over our heads;
We went through fire and through water,
But Thou broughtest us out into abundance.

PART II.

13. I will come into Thy house with burnt offerings,
I will render to Thee my vows,
14. Which my lips have uttered,
And my mouth spoke while I was in distress.
15. Burnt offerings of fatlings will I offer to Thee,
With the savour of rams;
I will offer bullocks with goats.

16. Come and hearken, and I will recount,
All ye that fear God,
What He has done for my soul:
17. To Him did I cry with my mouth
And high praise was under my tongue.
18. If I had intended iniquity in my heart,
The Lord would not hear.

19. But verily God has heard,
He has attended to the voice of my prayer.
20. Blessed be God,
Who has not turned away my prayer,
Nor His lovingkindness from me.

This psalm is Elohistic; it does not contain the name of Jehovah, but everywhere God's creator-name of Elohim, because it is addressed to the heathen. It could, therefore, only find its place in the second collection (Psalm xlii.-lxxii.). Why it is without the name of the author will be explained later.

In the prologue (1-4) the nations of the whole earth are exhorted to praise God; the words are put into their mouths with which they are to do it: "Through the greatness of thy power shall thine enemies submit themselves unto thee." Reference is here plainly made to what is mentioned in Psa. xviii. 41-44, where the same words are used.

In the first part (vv. 5-12) stress is laid on the two miracles with which Israelitish history begins, the passages through the Red Sea and through Jordan (6). These have, as it were, found their conclusion in a two-fold miracle of deliverance, which, like the miracles above mentioned, are shown "us"; i.e., Israel, in whose name David exhorts the heathen to "come and see." This appears in the following double description, prefaced by verse 9:—

Thou hast tried us as silver is tried,
Thou layedst a sore burden upon our loins;
We went through fire.

Thou hast brought us into the net,
Thou hast caused men to ride over our heads;
We came through water.

We have here the most accurate description of the situation. By the fire is meant the fire of drought, by which the Israelites were purified as in a crucible, and by which the affliction of famine was as a sore burden laid upon them; in which famine, as is expressly said in Ps. xxxiii. 19, God "kept their souls alive" (9). After God had led them into the net, namely, the snare of the Philistines (Psalms ix. 15 and cxxiv. 7), He allowed men (mortals, as in Ps. ix. 20) to ride over their heads (with horses and chariots), so that many of them were killed; and thus they went through the waters, the overflowing crowds of the Philistines, who in Psalms clxiv. 7, xviii. 16, and cxxiv. 4, are designated "great waters." But in this distress He did not suffer their feet to be moved (9), i.e., did not let them succumb, but led them out, brought them forth into abundance. The whole of this double deliverance proves that God watches the nations; only they must not be too presumptuous.

In the second part (again eight verses, 13-20), David speaks in his own name, and addresses himself especially to those who in all nations fear

God (comp. Acts i. 35), the true proselytes among the heathen; he exhorts them to a right understanding of the wonder described in the first part, for which he will praise God with offerings—a wonder evinced in the fact that the double deliverance, from the famine and from the hand of the enemy, has for its background David's prayer. To this appeal he was so sure of an immediate answer that a hymn was already on his tongue (v. 17). This psalm was, as we have seen, the new song, Ps. xxxiii. 3. What is to be wondered at in the incident, is that God received his praise while David and his people were still in the greatest distress. This clearly proves that David "had not intended iniquity in his heart" (18), otherwise God would not thus have listened to a human voice. For the miracle of prayer heard, as the true and greatest miracle, God shall be praised above everything else by those that fear Him. The outward miracle everybody will be able to see, but the inward, the miracle of the granted prayer, will only be believed by the proselytes, and can only be offered them as an exhortation to praise. In verse 5, therefore, we have "come to see"; here, on the contrary (v. 16), "come and hear."

WORDS TO ISRAEL.

How would it be possible for David, after having spoken to God, and exhorted the angels and the nations to praise, not to address a word to the Israelites on this great matter? We have it without doubt in Psa. cxxiv., a psalm sung by the people on their journeys to Jerusalem at the great festivals.

PSALM CXXIV.

A Song of the Goings-up. By David.

1. Had not Jehovah been on our side,
Thus let Israel say,
2. Had not Jehovah been on our side,
When men rose up against us,
3. Then they had swallowed us up alive,
When their wrath was kindled against us.

4. Then had the waters overwhelmed us,
A stream had gone over our soul.
5. Then had gone over our souls,
The proud waters!
6. Blessed be Jehovah,
Who has not given us a prey to their teeth.

3.

7. Our soul is escaped,
Like a bird from the fowler's snare.
The snare is broken,
And we—we are escaped.
8. Our help is in the name of Jehovah,
Who made heaven and earth.

From this song Israel was to learn—"Thus let Israel say"—to thank God that the snare of the fowler (Psa. lxxvi. 11), which had already encompassed Israel through the Philistines, was broken; they were to think of what would have happened to them had the proud waters of the Philistine army gone over them (Psa. lxxvi. 12) and drowned them; Israel would then have become a prey to the teeth of this people (6), of whom Zechariah says that God will take away their blood (which they eat) out of their mouths, and their abominations from between their teeth (Zech. ix. 7). There was good reason to use this expression regarding the blood and raw flesh-eating Philistines: "to become a prey for their teeth."

By the words "Thus let Israel say," the people are, so to speak, taken by storm. The great deliverance is celebrated as a testimony that Jehovah has been with them (1), and that Israel's help is always in the name of Jehovah (8). The raging fury of these men, the proud, perilous, soul-engulfing waters, the craftily-laid snare, all remind us, all depict vividly, the well-known story of the Philistine war. The psalm is as fresh as the song of a bird which has escaped from the snare, and, merry and glad, learns to value its freedom. Composed to be sung at festal journeyings to Jerusalem, its purpose was ever to keep fresh and vivid in the hearts and mouths of the people, the memory of the great deliverance.

A Blind Kafir Apostle.

RIDING over to shake hands with a neighbour last week, I found over a hundred natives in one of his cowsheds. It was a week-day, and the crowd was composed principally of women and children. They were listening to an impassioned, vigorous appeal from a blind Kafir to love the Lord Jesus Christ. When he had poured forth his soul he sat down panting, and recovering his breath gave out a hymn; then a very earnest prayer, a few more words, and invitations to any to come forward. Several responded. Afterwards Ujuani, the blind man, remained to talk with them.

Later on, I had the privilege of conversation with him. It appears he was not a believer, but "a very bad man," a maker of charms and medicine to win the affections of young marriageable girls, when he was suddenly struck blind; the next day he found himself stone-blind but happy, "the book had come into his heart." Where he trained I did not ascertain, but his knowledge of the New Testament, chapter and verse, and the number and words of the hymn-book he quoted (a version of the American Congregational Zulu Mission), was marvellous.

The owner of that shed, a shrewd, energetic Scotch farmer, was deeply impressed, and his good wife and he threw open their grounds to Ujuani. On the previous Sunday there were over 400 natives, mainly heathen, and afterwards about 200 on their knees in the veldt seeking God.

To the "wise of this world" Ujuani may be regarded as a fanatic, an enthusiast, who, having practised a kind of sorcery and perhaps got some of his medicine in his eye, or sudden paralysis of the optic nerve, takes up another line. How does that account for this wonderful knowledge of the Gospel suddenly grasped by an ignorant heathen? I could but regard him as not only a Christian brother, but one to look up to for his great faith and simple obedience.

Ismont, Natal.

A. N. MONTGOMERY, J.P.

The Wimbledon Conference.

THIS annual convocation for the deepening of the spiritual life seems now to be well consolidated. Once again it has proved a channel of distinct blessing to many. The uncertain spring weather of last week rather hindered a full attendance at some of the meetings, but the Drill Hall was from day to day a scene of earnest discourse on the higher doctrines of our faith, and an evident receptiveness on the part of the people. Captain Tottenham presided, as in former years, and the audiences were well served with speakers.

Some notes of the addresses on Thursday will indicate the practical character of the teaching. At the forenoon gathering the first address was by a new speaker, Rev. F. J. SLOANE. Judging from some of his remarks, it is but recently that he himself has practically grasped the force and significance of full consecration doctrine, and his line of thought was naturally of an elementary character. "The Divine Hands" might be said to be the title of his address. He referred first to Luke xxiii. 39, where our Lord shows to his frightened disciples his hands and his feet—the tokens of his love and sacrifice on their behalf. Isa. xlix. 16, "I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands" was next considered as teaching the comforting truth of assurance; whilst Numbers xi. 23 speaks eloquently of deliverance. The question is often asked: Will this blessing last? In this connection Isa. xli. 10-13 was commented on as unfolding the continual help that comes from God's right hand of power. The unfailing supply of the needed grace is taught in Ps. cxlv. 16, "Thou openest thine hand liberally, and satisfiest the desire of every living thing."

A closely-reasoned and most helpful address followed from Rev. G. H. C. MACGREGOR, who expounded 1 Pet. i. 2, as being a veritable mine and treasure-house of encouragement to those who are desiring to live up to the point of God's call. In this passage we learn of three forces at work in order to make and keep us holy. There is, first of all, the fore-knowledge of God the Father. The word "fore-knowledge" was conjugated, from the original, by the speaker as being a stronger one than that rendered "purpose," though less emphatic than "predestinate." But this fore-knowledge, or prevision as to the result of God's purpose, is the basis of his fore-ordination. We have thus a three-fold ground of confidence, which ought to drive all fear out of our life. As to the phrase, "through sanctification of the Spirit," Mr. Macgregor said he did not regard that as describing the act or process of sanctification, but the position in which our sanctification becomes possible. It is a position of heart separation from sin; it is a position of self-despair; and it is a state of trust in and surrender to God. The third point mentioned was, "unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Christ." This phrase was expounded in the light of Exodus xxiv., where the sprinkling of "the blood of the covenant" is described. The blessings secured by this covenant were pardon, cleansing, daily provision, guidance, victory, and rest. When we remember that Jesus is the mediator of the New Covenant, and that the Triune God is thus pledged to work in us, what room is there for discouragement in the pursuit and attainment of holiness?

In the afternoon the Bible reading was given by Mr. Macgregor. Missionary meetings were also held on this and the following afternoons, when information was given about various foreign fields of work.

On Thursday evening there was a very large gathering to hear the addresses by Rev. J. Brash and Rev. Musgrave Brown. The former took, phrase by phrase, the account of the healing of the leper by our Lord, and applied the miracle, in a spiritual sense, to the work of sanctification in the life. The whole address was remarkable for its quaint incisiveness, its clearness of thought, and the sympathetic tone that breathed through it. The speaker, evidently a man of mature spiritual experience, and saturated with old-fashioned Methodist views of sanctification, did not make much use of "Keswick" terminology, but he conveyed the familiar truths in a form less technical and more easily grasped than is customary at such conventions. The second speaker, Mr. Musgrave Brown, was of a different caste. "Reality" was the keynote of his extremely trenchant, vigorous, and plain-spoken address. He was very severe in his handling of the failures and inconsistencies of believers in the small daily frets and worries of life, which do so much to nullify the testimony borne at convention times. Nothing, he declared, is a more prolific cause of practical agnosticism and atheism in the world than the low standard of daily living seen among Christian professors.

THE EVANGELIST.

The Case of Old D—.

IN a large populous village we had been holding services, my husband and I, in a comfortable hall, formerly used as a schoolroom.

God had been graciously pleased to accompany the services with marked signs of the Holy Spirit's power convicting and converting many, both old and young. From hearts all around was the inquiry going forth, "What must we do to be saved?" Some cases of peculiar interest arose, amongst which was the following:—

"Old D—," as he was familiarly called, was a retired village shopkeeper, who had earned for himself no enviable character, having been a hard grasping man in his dealings with his poorer neighbours, by whom he was, in consequence, both disliked and feared. Disagreeable both in speech and manner, it was a standing wonder how he ever won his gentle, refined Christian wife, and still more surprising was the fact that, like the flowing rivers, the Rhône and the Arve, flowing side by side, yet for some distance retaining each its own character. These two, so unlike, had journeyed together for long years, growing only more dissimilar. "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick, and the heart of old D—'s wife had grown hopeless, and weary with long drawn desire and prayer for the conversion of her ungenial husband. Looking at him rather than at the mighty power of God, she had almost come to regard it as impossible, and, indeed, he did seem an unpromising subject.

Why he attended the special services none could tell; yet with unfailing regularity he was to be seen each evening in his place, until at last a crisis came. At the close of an address given by my husband a solo was sung by a lady, "Over the Line," one of the sweet hymns so used of God, and for which the Church has to praise Him. Sung with feeling, accompanied by prayer, the words touched many hearts, and the suggestion was flashed into my mind to use it as a test of the state of those present.

Rising as the last notes died away, the Holy Spirit seemed to impel me to say, "We cannot see it, but there is a real dividing line separating those in this hall to-night; we are divided into two companies, saved and unsaved, in Christ or out of Christ. To one or other we each of us belong. To which is it? I am going, as it were, to make a visible line, and I will ask all those, and only those, who are in Christ, and who know it beyond all question, to stand and sing again the last verse of the hymn just sung." Never before had such a thing been known to have been done in the village, and it was with deep solemnity that the Christians rallied to the challenge and rose all over the room, husbands standing whilst their wives sat, Christian wives rising in glad obedience, whilst their uncon-verted husbands were constrained to remain seated. Amongst these latter was our old friend, looking most uncomfortable, seated between his standing wife on one side and a bright young girl, thus testifying in all the radiance of her first love to her newly-found Saviour, on the other. It was a searching time, and many were blessed that night.

Closing the meeting with a few words of prayer. I hastened to the door to shake hands with the departing people, seizing the opportunity for speaking a word of warning or entreaty as the Lord led. Stretching out my hand to old D— as he passed, I said, "Good night! You did not stand up to-night?" Bending forward to speak close to my ear, he gruffly said, "There's too much of this sort of thing." Guessing what he meant, but not deeming it best to appear to do so, I replied, "Too much of what? Too much of confessing Christ?" Muttering some unintelligible words, he moved off, and in a few moments my husband and I hastened to the home of the kind friends with whom we were staying.

The following morning our hostess, after a visit in the village, said to me, "I don't know what you have done to D—, but I saw him when I was out and he looks ten years older." In the evening we were to hear what had befallen the poor hardened soul. I can recall nothing special in regard to the meeting, but at its close I again took up my position by the door. Presently I saw the old man approaching with the evident intention of speaking to me. Remembering my experience of the previous evening, I awaited with a little trepidation his expected remark. Great was my surprise when, in a humble sort of way, he said, "You've given me such a twenty-four hours as I never had in my life before." "Thank God!" I could but exclaim. Yes it was true; conviction had fastened deep upon his soul, and for many weeks did he carry his burden of sin, seeing no way of deliverance. At last God's sovereignty was to be displayed in the very manner of his finding peace. Our continuous meetings had come to an end, but from time to time my husband or myself would go down to hold a meeting, more in order to strengthen the young converts. On one of these occasions the meeting was closed and the Doxology sung, when a dear Christian man, himself not long converted, said, "We must sing one more hymn before we part. Let's sing, 'Whosoever will may come.'" D— was present, and as the chorus was sung with its reiteration again and again of the words, "Whosoever will may come," the Holy Spirit flashed the truth into his mind, hyper-Calvinist as he was, like many others in the district. It was difficult for D—'s friends, and even his wife to believe in the change, and his application for church membership was received with distrust, and he was put off from time to time, till at last even the most sceptical were convinced of the reality of his new birth, and he was admitted to the Lord's table, where he had the joy of remembering the death of the Saviour who died for him, and who in his old age had showed mercy to him.

As I close this short account of God's dealings with one now within the pearly gates, let me ask my reader, "On which side of the line are you? Have you crossed it and come to Jesus? or are you still without Christ, without God, without God in the world?" If so, I entreat you to come to Jesus, "Whosoever will may come." P. J.

Royal Lifeboat Institution.—The Duke of York presided over the annual general meeting of the governors and friends of the Royal Lifeboat Institution, held on Saturday. The Institution now possesses 303 lifeboats, and has since its establishment been the means of saving 39,354 lives. Last year its expenditure was £9000 more than its income. The Duke announced that May 16 had been fixed for the first "Lifeboat Saturday" in London, and that the Duchess of York had consented to become president of the Ladies' Auxiliary, which has been started in connection with the Fund.

THE SUFFERING ARMENIANS.

SIR,—You kindly permitted me, last August, to appeal to your readers for aid on behalf of the Armenians of Sassoun, in their dire distress, and the ready response of the public has enabled the Relief Committee to remit £30,000 to Sir Philip Currie, for distribution through the hands of the American Presbyterian Missionaries, who have personally undertaken the work in that difficult and mountainous region. During the past four months the terrible slaughter of Armenians in Anatolia has caused widespread alarm and destitution amongst the survivors, who have fled, for safety and succour, to towns where British Consular officers reside.

It is to enable us to send further sums to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, for the service of these unhappy people, that I venture again to beg those who are ever ready to relieve distress to aid with their bounty the survivors of the recent outrages and massacres, which have horrified the civilised world.—Your obedient servant,

ARGYLE,

President Armenian Relief Fund.

THE FUTURE LIFE.

DEAR SIR,—There is another standpoint from which the future life of the Christian may be considered, beside that of the realisation of the beatific vision, and that is the employment of his perfected and glorified powers when associated with Christ in the government of this inhabited earth. Even here the Christian has something to do for Christ besides feasting upon the joys of reconciliation; "feed my lambs," minister to the sick and needy, preach the Gospel, etc., are loving and blessed duties, increasing present joy, and doubtless preparing in a pre-eminent degree for the hallowed service of the future.

When Christ shall come a second time in his glory, to sit upon the throne of David his father, and to gather the scattered tribes of Israel; He will then raise his sleeping saints from the dead, and translate the living, and they, glorified and perfected, will be associated with Him in the world. Angels who now supply this service (Hebrews i. 14 R.V.: "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to do service for the sake of them that shall inherit salvation") will give place to the glorified saints. "For not unto angels did he subject the world to come (the inhabited earth, R.V.) whereof we speak." But the saints having "suffered with Him, will also reign with Him." "He that overcometh I will give to Him to sit down with Me in my throne, as I also overcame and sat down with my Father in his throne" (Rev. iii. 21). The future life is a life of service, and the more blessed because unattended with imperfection and failure.

THE PARENT AND THE CHILD.

SIR,—In the Daily Homily for March 16, I observe some admirable remarks on the power which we parents possess of moulding the habits of our children.

This idea has for some time impressed me very strongly in regard to the habit of prayer. I observed recently, with much regret, in one of the best of our children's religious periodicals, an expression like this: "She said her prayers to her father and mother." This and similar expressions are thoughtlessly used every day in hundreds of Christian families, but do parents ever think what meaning they convey to the simple senses of the dear little ones?

The common practice to which the expression I have quoted owes its origin, of the parent remaining seated, while the children kneel at her knee, is, I think, a very mistaken one. What can be more natural than that the child should feel somehow as if it were "saying its prayers to mother," or at least that this act of worship is one in which "mother" has no need to participate? Moreover, is not the expression, "Say your prayers" an unfortunate one? Would it not be much more reverent to say something like "We shall pray to God now"?

My invariable habit is to kneel beside my child, and first myself to pray briefly and simply to our dear heavenly Father; after that the little one's prayer, which I "join in" rather than "hear," naturally follows.

One more thought. Do we sufficiently endeavour to impress upon our children a sense of the love of God the Father? We speak much, and rightly, of the love of Jesus, and yet who should comprehend so well as we how the Father-heart of God was wrung on parting with his Son for our sake; how much easier it would be for us to suffer than to see our child suffering. It is almost only by means of our Lord's own prayer that many children hear of the Fatherhood of God. Such verses as "Thou God seest me," are too often used as a sort of threat, and the communion of soul with a loving God which a little child, with its acute spiritual perceptions, is capable of enjoying, is sadly hindered.

I fear I have expressed these thoughts somewhat awkwardly. I am far from desiring to see a child other than natural and childlike, but it is so easy "here a little and there a little" to guide its feelings rightly, and lay a good foundation for an intellectual apprehension of the doctrines of our faith later on.—Yours sincerely, A MOTHER.

Dublin Prison Work.

For twelve years past the Dublin Prison Gate Mission has been endeavouring to help back to a better life women and girls who have come within the scope of the criminal law. From a statement recently made at the annual meeting, it appears that there is an average daily attendance at the Mission rooms of nearly a hundred and forty. Dormitory accommodation is provided for sixty-five women, but an extension of room is greatly needed. During the past year many of the women have been satisfactorily settled. The laundry work is a source of considerable income to the Mission, but the year shows a deficiency of £200.

Mr. J. R. Wigham (chairman), Dr. Barton, Rev. H. Brown, Rev. C. Inwood, and others spoke on behalf of the work.

Open-Air Work.

With the advent of spring we begin to rejoice in the near prospect of extended opportunities for taking the Word of Life to the multitudes out of doors.

An indispensable and greatly blessed part of our work lies in the distribution of Gospel literature among the people found at races, fairs, and fêtes, and at open-air meetings.

To compass our task we need nearly a million tracts and books every year, while we are quite without funds to purchase more than a fraction of that number. Hence we are almost wholly dependent upon the gifts of Christian friends who have it in their power to send us supplies of such literature. May I, on behalf of the committee, appeal for a renewal of the kindness of your readers to us in this direction? Last year we received 879,182 tracts and other publications as the free gift of seventy-one donors.

"The Higher View of Evolution" was the subject of Prebendary Reynolds's lecture on Wednesday last, at St. Anne and Agnes, Gresham-street, E.C. Having exposed various theories regarding the genesis of man, the lecturer said: "Evolution as a universal process, with the working factor natural selection, must be rejected. We believe in a grand future, because in the past we were grandly made. 'The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul.'"

The Westmoreland Home Colonisation Experiment.—The director of this enterprise, in his report on last year's operations, says: "There are at present eighteen colonists resident at Starnthwaite Mill and fourteen at Browhead Farm, making a total of thirty-two. This is twice the number of colonists resident twelve months ago. Since the establishment of this experiment, there have been ninety-nine colonists resident, some having remained only a few months, others remaining for more than three years. At Starnthwaite the year had been spent in establishing a group of manufacturing trades, suitable to the district, such as corn milling, timber sawing, the manufacture of gates, hurdles, etc., and the conversion of peat excavated from our own moss-land into peat moss litter." The capital has been inconveniently small for these purposes, but work has gone on continuously, and a fair share of the good will of the district has been secured. Copies of the report, with balance-sheet, may be had from Rev. Herbert V. Mills, Anchorites Wells, Kendal.

A Good Work in Glasgow.

A VERY blessed work among the masses of Glasgow, by Mr. David Rea, Irish evangelist, has been carried on for over three months with interest and blessing increasing up to the last. Mr. Rea and Mr. A. Marshall commenced in a theatre at the east end of the city, and after some weeks the former went to the west end, where a hall had been taken. Here he began the work with three daily prayer meetings, where many Christians of various denominations continued with one accord for over seven weeks, pleading with God for a special work of the Spirit's power. God heard, and exceeded all expectation.

Soon the hall was filled. The Spirit began to move upon the dry bones, and the cry went up from many wounded hearts, "What must I do to be saved?" On Sunday nights the place got packed out, and another place close at hand, called the Olympia, capable of holding 14,000 or 15,000, was secured. Remarkable to say, that for eighteen months previously two Christian women in the district had been uniting in prayer that God would open this very place for the Gospel. This was only known after the work commenced in it.

It came as a great and sudden surprise to all that "The Olympia" had been taken. Long before the time for opening the first meeting, crowds were standing outside waiting for admission, and almost caused a panic in their desire to get in. The numbers increased nightly until it was believed that over ten thousand persons entered the place. Mr. John Robinson, of the City Temple; Mr. Last, of Cambridge-street Baptist Church; and Mr. W. J. Menely gave help in the preaching.

It was marvellous to see such vast audiences being drawn from all classes and sections of society, standing jammed together for upwards of two hours listening to the sweet story of the Cross. As one well said when entering: "What a wonderful sight, and nothing but the Gospel." Many were brought under conviction, and many professed to find peace in believing. The day will declare the true results. Quite a number have confessed the Lord Jesus in baptism; Mr. Rea baptized thirty-three at one time, and twenty-nine at another, four of whom had been Roman Catholics. J. B. KINGSTON.

Glasgow Y.M.C.A. Club.

FOLLOWING upon the laying of the memorial stone of the Bible Training Institute a week before, came the laying of the memorial stone of the "Y.M.C.A. Club" on Saturday last. The weather was brilliantly fine, and the ceremony took place under the most favourable auspices.

A large company assembled, and after praise and prayer, Lady Overtoun laid the stone, in which a jar had been placed containing the usual documents. A meeting was held in the Christian Institute, of which the club will form the west wing. Lord Overtoun presided. Mr. W. M. Oatts made a statement in reference to the plan of the club, and Bailie J. R. Paton, Mr. W. A. Campbell, Mr. D. Dreghorn, and Mr. J. Bruce gave short addresses.

The club is intended to be a boarding-house for 200 young men, under Christian influence, but managed on business lines as a limited company. There will be dining-halls, sitting-room, music-room, recreation-room, etc., and the terms will be within the reach of the large majority of young men who come to the city from country homes—viz., from 15s. to 20s. for full board. While not under the Glasgow Y.M.C. Association, it has a close connection with that body, and will prove a valuable adjunct. All the ordinary shares (5000) and all the debentures (£17,500) have been applied for, and of the 8500 preference shares (£1 each), 6500 have been taken up, leaving only about 2000 to be placed. The total cost of the building and furnishing will be £30,000.

Protestant Reformation Society.—The monthly prayer meeting was well attended on Thursday last, at 20, Berners-street. Mr. W. J. Fraser (the chairman) referred with evident feeling to the sudden death of Captain Williams, the esteemed and valued secretary of the Society, and special prayers were offered for the widow and members of the family, that they may be sustained in this their time of sorrow. Canon McCormick followed with an interesting address upon Psalm li. 13, speaking in very high terms of the workers connected with the Protestant Reformation Society.

April 5.

THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST.—Luke xxiv, 1-12.
GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 6.

EXPLANATORY.—First day (1), our Sunday. The Jewish Sabbath ended at dusk on Saturday. If our Lord died on Friday, He was in the grave a portion of Friday, the whole of Saturday, and a portion of Sunday. Very early—compare Matt. xxviii. 1; Mark xvi. 1; and John xx. 1. They set out at the earliest possible moment—a beautiful testimony to the strength of their affection for Jesus, even though they supposed Him to be dead. Spices—see John xix. 39. Whether the body needed further embalming or not was not the point. The devotion of these women did not stop at what was barely necessary. Love must give its best. The stone (2)—probably a large round stone, rolled against the entrance to the sepulchre, which was cut into the rock. It was too heavy for the women to move (Mark xvi. 3); and was sealed and guarded (Matt. xxvii. 66). The removal of this stone was the first sign accompanying the resurrection (Matt. xxviii. 1). The Lord Jesus (3), the first time that this name is given to the Saviour. From this time He is not only Jesus, but the Lord-triumphant, and invested with Divine authority. Two men (4), see Acts i. 2. They were angels appearing in human form, their shining garments indicating whence they came. The living (5), or (margin) Him that liveth. Compare Rev. i. 18. Saying (7), the verse contains the substance of our Lord's teaching. Must declares the necessity for his atonement and his subsequent resurrection (46). Magdalene (10), not to be confounded either with the woman in vii. 37, 38, or with Mary of Bethany. She had been healed of a fearful form of demon possession (viii. 2), hence her loving devotion to Jesus. Joanna was the wife of Herod's steward (viii. 3). The other Mary was the wife of Cleopas (John xix. 25).

LESSON POINTS:—I. Christ is risen (6).—That is the only satisfactory explanation of all the facts of this narrative. Recall the story. These women had seen Jesus die, and had watched while He was laid in the tomb (xxiii. 49, 55). His enemies had taken every precaution against deception being practised by his followers (Matt. xxvii. 62, 66). Yet on the third morning the sepulchre was found open and empty, the watch of the Roman soldiers had fled, and within the tomb everything was arranged in an orderly manner (12). Who had opened the tomb, and removed the body? Not his enemies, or they would have easily refuted the story of the resurrection by producing the body. Not the disciples, for they had neither the spirit nor the courage to attempt it, and would have gained nothing by it. There is no other explanation than that furnished by the Golden Text. How do you think of Christ? As of any other person who lived in past history? He is more than that. You can not only know about Him as He lived on earth, you can know Him. You can trust Him, love Him, serve Him, walk in his companionship, be one of his personal friends.

II. The fact of the resurrection is beyond dispute. The evidence was sufficient to convince even the doubting disciples. The women had no thought of finding Him alive. The angels' words, when told to the rest, were treated as "idle tales," the original word for which means, "words of no value, idle nonsense."

The story was too momentous in its issues to be believed without indubitable evidence. The crucifixion had given a rude shock to their hopes. They would not begin to hope again unless every doubt was removed. Yet remember that they were convinced, and were so certain of the fact that at all risks to themselves they proclaimed it everywhere. Let us be thankful for their previous scepticism; it leaves no room for the shadow of a doubt in us. And the fact of the resurrection makes sure the whole system of Christianity. It verifies every other word spoken by Christ; it declares the certainty of our forgiveness; it secures to all his people a similar resurrection.

III. If Christ is risen, then our greatest enemy is vanquished. What is our greatest enemy now? Recall the times when the rooms of your house were darkened, when everybody spake in whispers, when the eyes of all were red with weeping, when loud sobbing was heard in every room. How cruel death seemed to rob you of one so dear! And how mighty this enemy is. No power on earth could withstand him. No resistance could drive him back. But he has found his Conqueror. Jesus has destroyed death, by putting away the sin which was the sting of death, and by rising triumphant over the grave. What was a dark cavern has become a brief tunnel, connecting this life with that in which there shall be no more death.

Help for Brazil.

THE mission known under this phrase has now six missionaries in the field. The report for last year, as given in an "Occasional Paper," just issued, shows the need for larger help on behalf of work in this vast region of gross darkness. The latest worker, Mr. W. Fotheringham, writes home that his medical knowledge is proving useful as a means of gaining a hearing. Mr. and Mrs. Joyce are earnestly desiring to be able to build a meeting hall in Passa Tres. The land is already paid for, probably by Christians in Rio, and perhaps with some contributions on the spot, where, however, the people are mostly exceedingly poor. It is believed that there are materials in the old house which could be utilised, and it is calculated that £250 would cover all expenses.

Miss Melville gives an interesting incident which occurred last December: "I was just on the point of leaving the school at the close of the day's work, when a man came to the door and asked to see the pastor of the church. I told him he would have to go elsewhere to find him, but this did not satisfy him at all. He wanted to have our 'Society,' as he termed it, explained then and there! He appeared really interested, and read the verses after me slowly and thoughtfully. Then he wanted to bring his relations to talk with me, and we arranged he should bring them to the evening service. This he did, two women and a young man accompanying him. At the close I spoke with them, and then arranged to visit them; and the following Monday I spent two hours reading and talking to them. One woman appeared indifferent; the other seemed to hang on every word. She told me she had never before heard the message of love, and there was such a sweet joy in telling the story of redeeming grace to a soul for the first time! The man, too, was present, and listened attentively the whole time, and I left the house feeling much cheered and encouraged. And now mighty prayer is needed on their behalf, that the Spirit of our God may apply his own truth to their heart." Miss Melville, who has latterly been much occupied in the formation of a branch of the Y.W.C.A. in Rio, will soon be joined by another accepted missionary, Miss Ayton, who has for some time been engaged, with much acceptance and blessing, in the Lanarkshire Christian Union.

Copies of this interesting paper may be had of the secretary, Mrs. R. R. Kalley, Campo Verde, Tipperlinn-road, Edinburgh.

Friendless and Fallen.

THIS mission of mercy to friendless and outcast young women and girls will close its accounts for the thirty-ninth year on the 31st inst. By God's good providence, the work, which was begun in one small house for sixteen inmates only, is now carried on in three preventive homes, four rescue homes, and a refuge which is kept open all night; and there is accommodation for 240 inmates. Several hundreds are assisted every year to make a fresh start in life; but above all the temporal aid that is afforded, the spiritual good of everyone admitted is kept prominently in view. Last year the records show that upwards of 2500 Gospel services, Bible, temperance, and other classes were held in the Homes. Two hundred and seventy-six voluntary workers are engaged in this branch of the work, and nearly 100 of this number are ladies. Morning and evening prayer, conducted by the matrons, is not included in the above figures. At the open-all-night refuge many hundreds of poor young creatures have been received in the dark and silent hours of the night, and every effort is made for the permanent recovery of those admitted. Great blessing has attended the work in the Homes, and the letters received by the matrons from former inmates, some of whom are members of Christian churches, and engaged in seeking the rescue of others, testify of the good that has been done. Particulars will be sent, on application, to any address. Those of our readers who can help the work in a pecuniary way may send their contributions to us, or to Mr. W. J. Taylor, the secretary, 200, Euston-road, London, N.W.

The People's Hall, Lee, S.E.—The first anniversary of this mission-hall was held on March 15 and 16, Rev. A. Sturge conducting the service on Sunday. At the public meeting on Monday, Mr. John Woodman, superintendent of the mission, stated that fifty-seven had joined the mission as members, and ninety Gospel Temperance pledges had been taken. The Sunday-school, Band of Hope, mothers' meeting, men's class, and other branches were well attended. Revs. J. E. Martin and A. Hancock, Mr. Hobbs, Mr. Maltwood, and others addressed the meeting.

"Wearing Native Dress."

I AM generally contented to wear the Chinese native dress myself, and beyond this to let the subject alone. But as it has been suggested (not at all in an unkind way) by one whose testimony is likely to have weight, that wearing the native dress is scarcely straightforward, I think it is for God's glory that so serious a misapprehension should be removed. And, perhaps, as simple a way as any of showing this may be to relate the following incident:—When at college it was my privilege, with many others, to share the friendship of Mr. Jani Alli, who was then a fellow-student, and who afterwards became the well-known C.M.S. missionary. Jani Alli was a native of India. In coming amongst us he adopted our dress. Did one of us on that account think he was trying to palm himself off on us as an "imaginative Englishman"? Did it seem to any one of us he was not quite straightforward? Such a thing for one moment never entered our heads. How could it? We all know perfectly well our friend was not an Englishman. But by wearing our dress he made it much more easy for us to associate with him and he with us, both in the house and in the street; and so amongst the Chinese. In the smaller inland towns the missionary gets to know many of the families. All of course know him, and he is often received kindly as one of the inhabitants of the place. Whether the people know, as some do, that the English dress is different, or whether they think, as some do, that the Chinese is the only dress worn by civilised people—nearly all of them regard his wearing their dress amongst them simply as a matter of course. None of them imagine he is trying to palm himself off as an "imaginative Chinaman." (That would be impossible.) But all of them would feel less at home with him, and he with them; all would regard him much more as a stranger, and he would certainly feel it himself, if instead of wearing the same as they do, he were to come amongst them in the strange and, to the Chinese, quite distasteful dress of England.

The suggestion which has been made that the Chinese are willing to condone the eccentricities of foreigners if they wear the English, but not if they wear the Chinese dress, is surely theory and not fact? I think the generality of the Chinese would tell you, if they spoke the truth, that from their standpoint, they find less to condone in foreigners who wear the native dress than in those who wear the English.

I can understand missionaries who have not seriously tried wearing the dress of the people entertaining fears respecting it. But as one who for some years wore the English dress, and who now for some years has worn the native, and, therefore, perhaps, as one who can speak with more authority than if he knew one side only, it may be permitted to me to say that I find no genuine disadvantage in wearing the Chinese dress, nor can I think of one genuine or worthy advantage in not doing so. To me, as I believe to hundreds of my fellow-missionaries who adopt it, wearing the native dress has become a question which has only one side. But still, we may all be wrong; and, after all, in the light of other things the outside dress we wear is very secondary. The indispensable missionary dress is here: "Be clothed with humility."

In conclusion, the bond which unites us English and Chinese and all other nationalities is close and strong. We are fellow-men, for whom alike Christ died. The difference of nationality is utterly trivial in comparison with that. In coming to the Chinese we come as men to men, as sinful men to sinful men, all alike needing the one Saviour for sinful men. The thought that they are Chinese and we are English is an intrusion. As far as possible let it be forgotten by us and by them. And let us avoid what would emphasise unnecessarily any minor and accidental difference which exists between us. Let them, or let us, feel to the uttermost that we are of one common race, and that as fellow-men we come together to talk of that which deeply concerns us all. Faithfulness to our commission demands this, for God has sent us surely to deliver his message of love as man to man, as sinner to sinner, and not at all as Englishman to Chinese.

Si-chuen, China.

J. HEYWOOD HORSBURGH.

Dr. A. T. Pierson.—After closing his month's tour in Ireland with a series of services in Londonderry, Dr. Pierson travelled across to Wales. Almost immediately on arriving in Aberystwyth he went to a meeting of students in the University, and after an address delivered by Mr. C. T. Studd, spoke from the words, "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." On Friday afternoon a large congregation assembled in the Congregational Church, and in the evening the Baptist Tabernacle was crowded; addresses were delivered on both occasions by Mr. Studd and Dr. Pierson on missionary work.

The Y.W.C.A.

THE Y.W.C.A. week of self-denial for the Northern division has been fixed for April 19 to 26. Mrs. Hett Noble, of Reigate, opened a successful sale of work at Tonbridge, in aid of the funds of the local branch.

Miss Entrinsic, travelling secretary of the Y.W.C.A., addressed, last week, a crowded meeting of the Halifax Association.

The estimated cost of the new institute at Boscombe is £3000, not £8000, as stated, by a printer's error, in a recent issue.

The Liverpool Y.W.C.A. conference will be held on April 7 and 9, and the Liverpool Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life, on April 6 to 10, Friday being the Foreign missionary day.

The Upper Norwood and West Dulwich branch reports a total membership of 120. 3440 attended the Bible classes throughout the year. The monthly social gatherings have been well attended.

The annual meeting of the Y.W.C.A. and the Y.M.C.A. was held on the 16th inst. in Shaftesbury Hall, Dawlish. Addresses were given by Revs. W. Mallett and E. Read, and others. The reports of both societies were very satisfactory.

At a meeting of the Newport Y.W.C.A. recently held, arrangements were made for the formation of a Young Abstinents' Union to be carried on under the auspices of the B.W.T.A. and the Y.W.C.A., and the meetings will be held weekly in the hall, West Newport.

The tenth annual meeting of the Leicester Y.W.C.A. was held on the 12th inst. Councillor J. T. Walters presided. Miss Baines read the report, which showed progress in the work. Reports were also presented of the county branches at Oadby, Fleckney, Loughborough, and others.

A series of special meetings in connection with the Ross branch have been commenced. The first day was also the twenty-first anniversary of the opening of the Institute. A large number attended, and an interesting address on the work of the Y.W.C.A. in India and other foreign parts was given by Miss Nisbett, of Worcester.

A series of special meetings, conducted by missionaries and workers connected with the China Inland Mission, have been held in the Y.W.C.A. Hall, Dundee. Mr. and Mrs. J. Simpson, of Hwui-luh, Miss J. Stevens, of Tai-yuen, Mr. G. Brown, C.I.M., and others, were the speakers on the claims and needs of the C.I.M. Daily Bible-readings were also held in the afternoon.

The Mill Girls' Institute in Manchester held its annual meeting on the 16th inst. The Institute is affiliated to the Factory Helpers' Union and the Y.W.C.A., and has seven branches in the town. It is carrying on an excellent and much-needed work, including a restaurant, a commodious gymnasium, and various classes well attended, besides religious and temperance meetings, Bible-classes, a penny bank, and clothing club.

In Borrisokane, a small town in the county Tipperary, with a population under 700, almost all Roman Catholics, a young lady, Miss Exshaw, has established, and for some years carried on, a branch of the Y.W.C.A.; it now numbers sixty-four members, some of whom have come six Irish miles to attend the meetings. These scattered members Miss Exshaw visits on her bicycle, and so keeps in touch with them. Miss Exshaw is now trying to obtain funds to put up an iron room for her meetings, as her work has much outgrown the only available room in the town.

The Glasgow Y.W.C.A. committee gave their annual tea to young women from the Highlands on Friday, March 20. About 180 were present and much enjoyed hearing addresses, hymn-singing, &c., in their own Gaelic tongue. Mrs. W. M. Oatts welcomed the young women in the name of the committee, and Mrs. Hatfield, Rev. D. M. Connell, and Captain Maclean gave addresses in Gaelic. Lime-light views of Scottish scenery and of scenes in the life of our Lord were shown, Rev. D. F. Mackenzie describing them in Gaelic and giving an earnest address. This is the seventh meeting of the kind in Glasgow.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.—The meetings for prayer in connection with Dr. Barnardo's Homes, announced for next Monday afternoon and evening, March 30, at Exeter Hall, have, we learn, been unavoidably postponed till Monday, April 27.

London Street Mission.—The report of this mission in Dockhead, S.E., is chiefly devoted to the new and larger hall opened lately in the main street, and providing a splendid centre for vigorous evangelistic work. The activities of the mission are now expected to develop considerably amongst the young folk and their elders. During the past year much blessing has been granted and many conversions are recorded. The secretary is Mr. W. Bustin, 13, Pritter-road, Bermondsey, S.E.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE BAYSWATER ASSOCIATION.

THE large hall at Paddington Baths was crowded last Thursday evening, on the occasion of the annual meeting of this vigorous Association. Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., presided. The report, read by the secretary, Mr. Walter Wild, recalled the origin of the Association ten years ago, and indicated that during the past twelve months letters have come to hand from many young men in all parts of the world, testifying to the blessing received in the Queen's-road Rooms. Amongst the thousands of young fellows employed in and around Westbourne-grove, there is a wide field for thorough-going work, and in many cases this has had blessed results. Sixty-nine new members and associates were enrolled last year. The various departments for the welfare of young men have proved helpful in many ways, to young men generally, to lonely country lads in London, and to those who had fallen through drink and gambling. The missionary interest is well sustained, and several men converted at this centre are now labouring fruitfully in the foreign mission field. The various operations mentioned in the report showed a wide range of aggressive and resultful effort. In a vigorous address, Rev. H. Graham Thwaites showed that the churches owe a debt of gratitude to the Y.M.C.A. for taking in hand this specific work among young men—a work demanding special means and methods not easily compassed by the ordinary churches. Thousands of our young men are hurrying to ruin. They must be saved. The Y.M.C.A. is reaching them, and in so doing must have the sympathy of all Christians. After addresses by Mr. A. A. Head and the chairman, Prebendary Webb-Peploe gave a long and masterly address on true joy, as opposed to happiness which depends on mere circumstances. His exposition of the sinfulness and the fatuity and folly of immorality as personally ruinous in this world as well as the next, was vivid and must have reached many hearts and consciences.

BRIEF NOTES.

Denmark reports 150 Associations, with a membership of 5000 young men.

A "get one club" has been organised by the Railroad department, Cincinnati.

The Eastbourne annual meeting was held last week, Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston delivering the principal address.

A feature of the twelfth State Convention of the Colorado Y.M.C.A. was the naming of one of the prominent peaks at the entrance of the Grand Canon of the Arkansas "Y.M.C.A. Peak."

The Cleveland, O., Association is planning to increase its membership to 3000. This is the new tide-mark, and already it is anticipated that the mark will be raised to 5000 when the 3000 mark shall have been reached.

The annual gymnastic display of the Hackney Y.M.C.A. took place on Thursday last, and proved a great success. The proceedings were varied by an exhibition of first aid to the wounded by the members of the St. John Ambulance detachment.

The Y.M.C.A. has a centre in Buenos Ayres, and also in two or three other South American cities, which were founded and are most nobly supported by Mr. William Barnett, of Rosario. These centres have done and are doing a really good work among the English-speaking community of young men.

A "membership contest" at Geneva, N.Y., resulted in bringing in 241 new members. The town is thoroughly awakened and renewed interest created for the Association cause on the part of the community. The Milwaukee, Wis., Association has inaugurated a membership contest with the hope of adding 500 members.

A successful reception took place at the Manchester Y.M.C.A., on St. Patrick's Day, March 17, when a crowded gathering of young Irishmen assembled, on the invitation of the president, Mr. W. J. Crossley. A good programme of Irish music, both vocal and instrumental, was arranged, and, after refreshments, short Gospel addresses were given.

An interesting gathering, in the form of a reception, of young Irishmen took place at Exeter Hall, on St. Patrick's Eve, Monday, the 16th inst. After refreshments there was a selection of national music, vocal and instrumental, followed by a brief address, and an exhibition of lantern pictures and Irish scenery. It is intended to hold shortly receptions for both Scotch and Welsh young men employed in the metropolis.

The Hon. John Wanamaker in a phonographic message to a recent Y.M.C.A. convention in Michigan, said:—"I was one of the pioneers of the Y.M.C.A. in America, beginning forty years ago, and whatever part of the world I am in I want to stand up with, and for the Association. The Church of God has no such mighty auxiliary as its out-reaching or care-taking Young Men's Christian Associations. For every one such Association there should be twenty, and for every dollar expended there ought to be at least one hundred."

The Sevenoaks Association, formed not many months back, largely through the instrumentality of Mr. A. C. Tessier, promises to do an exceptionally good work. A friend known locally as the ready supporter of all good enterprises, has made over to the association the lease of a most eligible building, and has himself expended in adapting it a sum of several hundred pounds. On Wednesday the premises were formally handed over. Lord Kinnaid presided over a crowded assembly; an overflow meeting had to be held, and Mr. W. H. Mills, secretary of the National Council, attended and gave an address.

The Tientsin Y.M.C.A. Bulletin says:—"It is a pleasure to be able to announce the completion of the fund for the purchase of a site for the erection of a Y.M.C.A. Building. It will be of interest to all readers to know that a good proportion of the money has been given by the Chinese young men themselves, implying in many cases no small sacrifice on their part. Both the fact that the money has been subscribed, and the spirit in which it has been given, are great encouragements to the hope that before long the building itself may stand before us completed for its great work. We must now look to friends in America and England to come to our help. It will be trifling with the opportunity which God has placed before us to continue working in our present little room."

Christian Endeavour.

TWENTY-FIVE young women Endeavourers, employed in a factory in Richmond, Va., met for fifteen minutes each noon to pray and read the Word. The result has been several souls saved.

The C.E. Society among the students of the Schofield School for coloured children, at Aiken, S.C., has appointed a "recess committee," to prevent quarrelling and disorder on the playground during recess.

Rev. W. Skinner says, referring to the Christian Endeavour Society, "This Society, which now numbers close on 150 members, is exerting an incalculable influence for good among the young people of the congregation."

Even in the Protestant Episcopal Church, which has been slow to receive the movement, Christian Endeavour is proving its usefulness. The society in the St. James' Church, Woonsocket, R.I., conducts a weekly mission in East Woonsocket, and the erection of a chapel will follow shortly.

The practical results of six years of Endeavour in an individual church are witnessed in the Grace Lutheran Church of Springfield, Ill. From the society one missionary has gone to India, two young men are preparing for the ministry, and one has just assumed his first pastorate.

Writing upon the subject of the various forms of work possible to a C.E. Union, President Clark uses these words: "Whatever work you undertake as unions, for missions, citizenship, evangelism, or anything else, always and everywhere seek the approval of your churches. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred it will be given, and in the hundredth case do not do it."

Services for Men, Brixton.

THE parish of St. Matthew's, Brixton, like all others, contains a great number of men, old and young, who do not attend the ordinary church services. Rev. Marcus Rainsford, jun., set himself, some months ago, to draw them to hear the Gospel. Sacred music of a high order is provided in the afternoon of the first Sunday of the month. On a recent occasion 1,700 men of all ages were present, eagerly attentive to the speaker's words. Actors, singers, clerks, coachmen, merchants, tradesmen came and listened to the invitation of Jesus. The preacher spoke of our difficulties, our weakness, our evil natures, and our reluctance to accept the call of the Saviour, until we are drawn in spite of ourselves. With an earnest prayer that Christ would draw his hearers from sin, self, and the world's snares, the meeting closed.

Mr. Rainsford stood at the church door and greeted each man with a hearty hand-shake and a friendly word. The ever-increasing numbers prove that Mr. Rainsford's experiment is a success, and worthy of imitation by other ministers of the Gospel in London. P. B. M.

Old Orchard, Maine.—A wealthy American lady has built at this favourite seaside resort a summer house of rest for returned missionaries. It is intended as a memorial of a deceased daughter, and will, therefore, be known as "Minnie's Seaside Rest."

Oxford Notes.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE term that has concluded has been one of manifest spiritual blessing in the circle of Inter-Collegiate Christian Union. Apart from individual instances of blessing (and there have been these), the meetings of the Missionary Union and the D.P.M. have been exceedingly well sustained throughout, both in attendance and interest. The circular issued by the I.C.C.U. asking for prayer and praise during this vacation is but one indication of the real blessing now coming upon Oxford. Many of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN will doubtless unite and continue in this praise and intercession.

This vacation will see some changes in the Evangelical churches of Oxford. No less than four churches will be losing curates almost simultaneously. Rev. F. J. Hazledine and F. Gmelin, from St. Clement's, are removing to Taunton and Eastbourne, Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas from St. Aldate's to London, while Rev. E. H. Elwin, from St. Peter le Bailey, has the honour of being called to the foreign field (West Africa). Canon Christopher's curacy will be filled by Rev. G. Stephen Jones, now working in Stratford.

Rev. H. B. Case, of Commercial-road Baptist Church, will also soon be leaving for Evesham after several years of strenuous service in Oxford, amid exceptional difficulties.

Irish Notes.

MANY Methodist circuits report an increase in members this year.

The Belfast City Mission continues to do an excellent work. Intemperance is the great hindrance to work.

Several Methodist circuits in Belfast and the neighbourhood report this year a considerable increase in church membership, and a larger number of candidates are offering themselves this year for the Methodist ministry than have done so for some time.

The Dublin Women's Temperance Association has concluded a successful series of meetings in Dublin and the suburbs, extending from March 10 to 18. Ten meetings were held, most of them being drawing-room meetings—two were for young women in business, and one for attenders of mothers' meetings. Addresses were given by Mrs. E. W. Brooks, of London (representing the Women's Temperance Association Union), and Miss Hanna, secretary of the Irish Women's Temperance Union. Mrs. Brooks also spoke at meetings of the Friends' Temperance Association Society and Band of Hope. Visits were paid to the Prison Gate Mission and the North Dublin Union, and addresses given to the inmates. These meetings have been helpful in giving a fresh stimulus to temperance work.

A controversy between Protestants and Roman Catholics, which is attracting a good deal of public attention, is going on in Dublin. Rev. Mr. Delaney, a Roman Catholic priest, is delivering, on Sunday evenings, in the Chapel of St. Francis Xavier, a series of discourses on "Protestantism," and as these are being published in some of the daily papers they are being replied to, point by point, in their respective churches, by Revs. Dr. Edgar (Presbyterian minister) and Philip B. Johnston (of the Irish Church Missions). It is some years since any controversy like this has occurred in Ireland, and it has been understood that the authorities of the Roman Catholic Church were not favourable to such discussions. It is hoped the controversy will be the means of spreading the light and of doing good.

Scottish Notes.

A CONFERENCE was held in Aberdeen last week on Sunday observance, when the prevailing laxity was deplored and condemned.

Elaborate preparations are being made in Edinburgh for the next annual Scottish convention of the Y.P.S.C.E., to be held there in April. The largest halls in the city have been engaged for the public meetings. Prayer, conference, and open-air gatherings will be held, in addition to denominational rallies. A number of eminent speakers have been arranged for, and altogether the convention promises to be a great success. The movement is now beginning to take firm root in Scotland.

The Stockwell Orphanage.—At the quarterly meeting of collectors and helpers, recently held in the C. H. Spurgeon Memorial Hall, Mr. Thos. Olney presiding, addresses were given by Mr. Geo. E. Morgan, and Rev. Geo. Hay Morgan of Woodberry Down Chapel. Dr. J. A. Spurgeon, who was absent through illness, sent a cheery letter, which was read by the secretary to the meeting. A pleasant evening was spent, the orphan children contributing a very attractive programme, and a display of musical drill.

Personalia.

Mrs. McAll is, we hear, at work writing a memoir of her deeply-regretted husband, the founder of the McAll Mission.

Mr. George Hatton has changed his residence from Newport Lodge, Beulah-road, to No. 20, Guildford-road, Tunbridge Wells.

Miss Frances Willard expects to sail for England in April in order to take part with Lady Henry Somerset in the Convention of the National Council of Women of Great Britain.

Miss Ada Rose, who went out to Australia last year on a visit, is returning to England for Easter, when she hopes to resume her work of singing the Gospel as opportunities occur.

Professor Agar Beet proposes to cross the Atlantic this summer. He has promised to give a course of lectures at one of the Methodist Summer Schools of Theology on "Systematic Theology."

Dr. Joseph Cook is so much improved that he has been able to walk out recently, and it is expected that he will be well enough to leave the Sanitarium, Clifton Springs, in early summer to spend the season at his home in Ticonderoga.

Rev. W. L. Watkinson is recovering from his severe attack of influenza. His brethren on the other side of the sea are looking forward with great expectancy to his approaching visit. He has promised to deliver in May the annual address at the Commencement of Garrett Biblical Institute, New York.

Dr. John Smith, of Broughton-place U.P. Church, Edinburgh, preached at Marylebone Presbyterian Church on Sunday last, for Dr. Pentecost, who is taking a short holiday in Italy. Dr. Smith seemed in vigorous health, and in the forenoon he preached an eloquent inspiring discourse on the joy of Christ. Next Sunday Principal Rainy, of Edinburgh, will preach at Marylebone.

Evangelistic Notes.

Ireland.—Gospel meetings have been held at Irvinestown, Enniskillen, Ballinamallard, and Newtownmore.

Bromley, E.—Mrs. J. B. Horton and Miss M. E. Parker have closed a second ten-days' mission at Poplar and Bromley Tabernacle, London, E. Much blessing has been given and many testify to a nearer walk with God.

Peckham.—Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has conducted an eight-days' mission at Christ Church, McDermott-road. Each evening the audiences increased. The mission has been profitable to believers, whilst the unbelievers have been kindly dealt with.

Ross Bible Carriage.—Mr. John Coates reports much encouragement in recent work among the villages, preaching the Gospel, and distributing good books. Addresses have been given in the collar and cuff factories at Bridgwater, with blessing to the employes.

Liverpool.—Mr. Thomas Payne has conducted a ten-days' mission in connection with St. Alban's Parish Church, Bevington, Liverpool. His labours have been greatly owned of the Lord, and many have come out for the Lord. His messages have been blessed to both sinners and believers. B.

Macduff, N.B.—Messrs. J. A. and John Smith, evangelists, have brought to a close a three-weeks' mission here. There were large gatherings from the beginning. Those dealt with in anxiety during the first half of the mission were almost exclusively from Banff. During the last week Macduff shared in the blessing.

Juniper Green, Edinburgh.—Rev. Thos. Currie has concluded a series of Gospel meetings in the Free Church Hall of this village. The interest and impression have been great. Christians have been quickened, and many have been brought to accept the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. D. P.

Wiltshire Villages.—Mr. John Elliott has been having crowded meetings and much blessing in the villages of Bushton and Tockenham, Wilts, people walking many miles to attend the services. Some who have been prayed for many years have now come out boldly on the Lord's side, while Christians have been greatly cheered and blessed.

Louth.—A week's evangelistic effort has been held in connection with the Railway Mission (G.N. branch), by Dr. Barnes, of Folkestone. The hall has been well filled every night, and at each meeting the power of God has been manifested in conversion. The afternoons were devoted to Bible readings on the deepening of the spiritual life; they were times of great spiritual refreshment and blessing to believers.

Ewell.—A mission has been held in this village (near Dover) by Mr. George Back, who has been actively engaged in visiting the cottagers in their homes, preaching in the open air, and holding services in the mission-room. The little village, which has three public-houses planted in its midst, is in a very dead state, and we trust that some souls may through the faithful proclamation of the Truth be quickened into life.

Koady, co. Armagh.—Rev. Geo. Steen writes that there is a remarkable work in Koady and neighbourhood. It is like the Revival of 1859—not confined to any one church. Before Christmas special services were held; prayer meetings followed in all the churches. Last week a series of services were held in the Presbyterian Church by Mr. Jackson. The church was crowded every night, and many waited in to inquire the way of salvation. Rev. R. S. Porter assisted at all the services. It is interesting to note that the rector and his people have heartily joined in the movement. If an earnest evangelist would visit this field of labour he would find much encouragement.

Obituary.

REV. DR. GETHIN DAVIES.

THE Baptist denomination has sustained a sad loss by the death of Rev. Gethin Davies, D.D. Having been trained at Bristol Baptist College, he began his ministry in 1870. During recent years he did much excellent work in connection with Bangor College, of which he was principal, as well as tutor in theology, apologetics, and Hebrew. Dr. Davies recently underwent a serious surgical operation in a private hospital in London.

REV. THEO. J. MEYER.

Many will hear with regret of the death of the venerable missionary to the Jews of London, Rev. Theodore J. Meyer. For a quarter of a century he laboured in East London, under the auspices of the English Presbyterian Church, and only retired from active duty a year or two ago. He recently took up residence at Gorey, Jersey, and died there at the advanced age of seventy-eight. Mr. Meyer was a German Jew, and being converted to Christianity in early life, he became a pupil of the famous Neander. After coming to Great Britain, he taught Hebrew for many years in the Free Church College, Edinburgh; but, although in a fair way for advancement, he relinquished academic pursuits for the trying work of a missionary to the Jews. After labouring for the time as Free Church missionary in the East, he returned West in 1871, and began his labours in Whitechapel. He combined scholarly culture with spiritual intensity, and enjoyed universal respect for his high personal character.

REV. A. R. H. INGRAM, MYSORE.

The missionary staff in Mysore, and many in England and Scotland, have been plunged into sorrow through the death of one of the most promising of the younger missionaries, Rev. Arthur Romilly Hall Ingram, the son of Rev. D. C. Ingram (chairman of the Scottish district). His early training had been chosen in view of his entering upon some scientific profession, but when the Master called him, "straightway he arose and followed him." After a short time at Richmond, he was sent out to the Mysore district in 1893, and at the close of 1895 was in charge of the High School in Mysore city. His death following on so short an illness has come with a terrible shock to the brethren associated with him in the service of Christ in the Mysore. On the 19th of February Mr. Ingram became slightly feverish, but no serious symptoms showed themselves until quite suddenly on the morning of the 22nd, it was found that he was suffering from the most malignant type of smallpox. All that medical skill and trained nursing could effect was done for him, but there was very little hope from the time that the disease first showed itself, and at 8 p.m. on the same evening he passed away. Mr. Ingram had a rare combination of qualities, scholarly, yet unselfish and sympathetic. He had the mind of the scientist, yet all the passion of the evangelist. All admired his manliness, yet he was tenderness itself, and little children loved him not the least. The scene in the school the morning after the funeral will not easily be forgotten by those who witnessed it. The assembly-hall was crowded with close upon 700 boys and young men, and after prayer had been offered they stood in silence while reference was made to him whom they had loved, but the silence was quickly broken by sobs and crying as strong young men bowed themselves in grief because he had gone.

Mission to Jews and Gentiles.—A week's mission is to be held, under the auspices of the Mid-May Mission to the Jews, at the Central Hall, Philpot-street, Whitechapel. Mr. C. Russell Hurditch will be the missionary, and the meetings will be held every evening, April 12 to 19 inclusive. The presence and active help of Jewish missionaries and Christian workers will be most welcome.

THE BOOK WORLD.

Summer Gatherings for Winter's Need, by J. R. Miller, D.D., is a bright booklet of "words for life's sunny days." (6d. Sunday School Union.)

Stories of the Far West, by Frank Mundell, describes scenes and incidents in the advance of civilisation on the American continent. Boys will revel in the pages. (1s. 6d. Sunday School Union.)

A Primer of Roman Catholicism: or, the Doctrines of the Church of Rome briefly examined in the Light of Scripture. By Rev. Charles H. H. Wright, D.D. This is a valuable addition to the series of "Present Day Primers." (1s. Religious Tract Society.) It deserves a wide-spread circulation.

Cocoa: All About It. By Historicus. (Sampson Low & Co.) A wide literature (scientific and historical) has been ransacked in order to place before the public a plain and comprehensive account of the cocoa plant and its nourishing food product. The volume is embellished with many excellent plates and other illustrations.

The Young People's Hymnal is a collection prepared under the direction of the Wesleyan Methodist Book Committee, and intended for the use of children and young people in schools, guilds, and family gatherings. The edition with tunes, brought out under the care of H. Elliott Button, is an attractive book. (1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.)

The Exiled God, by Fred. C. Spurr, presents "some plain words to the men of to-day," showing that God is "exiled" by those who profess to believe in Him, from the family, society, commerce, and science and literature. Finally, Mr. Spurr shows that men who exile God from their hearts must at last be exiled from his glorious presence. (1s. Marshall Bros.)

Some Scripture Problems and their Solutions. By T. H. Archer-Hind, M.A. (Elliott Stock.) Here are eight papers on much-debated points and passages, including Baptism for the Dead, The Sin unto Death, and the Bible History of Satan. We do not commit ourselves to the author's positions when we say that his suggestive little book is worth the attention of such as study Scripture with critical care.

The Fallacy of Sacramental Confession.—Three discourses delivered at St. Mathias's, Poplar, by Rev. Charles Neil, M.A., with notes appended. (Paper covers, 8d.; cloth, 1s. 3d. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton & Co.) A thoughtful and succinct treatment of a subject of urgent importance. The notes enforce many of the positions maintained. Protestant Evangelicals should promote the circulation of this useful little work.

Walled-up Nuns and Nuns Walled-in, by Rev. W. Lancelot Holland, M.A., is a work which gives some idea of the tyranny and corruption of the Papal system. The fact that the book is in its third edition is some indication that it meets a demand. Twenty illustrations help the letter-press, and the result is a work which occupies a place of its own in the Romish controversy. (Stiff paper covers, 1s. net; cloth, 2s. R. W. Hunter, Edinburgh; J. Kensit, London.)

The Stone Cut Out Without Hands, by Rev. George Lakeman, M.A., B.D., is a statement of Christian evidences that should prove very useful to young people. After outlining the principal religions of the world, and pointing out the distinguishing features of Christianity, the author argues from the progress of the Gospel in the past to its triumph as predicted in Holy Scripture, especially in Daniel ii., from which the title of the book is taken (2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.).

Thinking about It: Thoughts on Religion for Young Men and Women. By Albert H. Walker, B.A. Here are some highly practical chapters on questions of supreme moment. The volume belongs to the Wesley Guild Library, and is as chaste in exterior as it is strong in contents. We trust the work will get into the hands of many thoughtful young people; for we are confident that a prayerful perusal of its pages, at once cultured and earnest, will do much good. (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.)

A very useful Map of Palestine has been issued by the Palestine Exploration Fund. It is a Collo-type Print, or photo-relief, taken from a specially prepared copy of the well-known Raised Map, constructed by Mr. George Armstrong, acting-secretary of the Fund. The large map indicated a new era in cartography; this reduction, which is admirably clear, and perfect in its way, has advantages not to be found in any of the handy maps of Palestine. Students and teachers will find it of great service. (2s. 3d. to subscribers; 3s. 3d. to non-subscribers—post free—Palestine Exploration Fund Offices, 24, Hanover-square W.) of Katherine as the natural consequence of her life of self-will; the years of deception, during which her higher nature seemed dead, though outwardly leading a useful Christian life; her lack of all true peace and strength, apparent to those who loved her: these are graphically described. The chief beauty of the book, however, is the Christ-like love and forgiveness of those who had been so grievously wronged, and their happy lives of useful service.

Articulation and Lip Reading. By Richard Elliott, L.H.D. (Published by The Committee for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb, London and Margate.) This is the best and most complete work of its kind. The author treats the subject in a thorough and masterful style, gathered from years of practical experience. The subject of sound as applied to lip reading is fully explained, so that friends of the deaf mute will find the work a means of opening up oral intercourse with those less fortunate than themselves. It is surprising that lip-reading is not better known and more cultivated even by the partially deaf. When this wonderful art is universally understood and appreciated, the poor deaf mute will be raised to the level of his more fortunate fellow-creatures, who have the precious gift of natural speech.

The East in the West. By J. Salter (L.C.M.). (2s. Partridge & Co.) Last year we called special attention to "Pioneer Work in the Great City," a real live book, giving the stirring experiences of a City Missionary among the poorest classes. This has been followed by the present volume, describing work among the Asiatics and Africans who (chiefly as sailors) come to London. The author has plenty of good material in the wild ways, outlandish habits, gross superstition, and ignorance of Lascars, Chinese, Soudanese, Manillas, and other heathen and Moslem birds of passage. Hopeless as his efforts may often seem, this devoted worker has been the means of bringing light to many dark souls. He tells his story in a straightforward and attractive style which should win for the book many readers.

The Power of the Spirit: With Additional Extracts from the Writings of William Law. Selected, and with an Introduction, by Rev. Andrew Murray. (2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) In bringing before a new generation of readers Law's Address to the Clergy, Mr. Murray declares that he knows not where else to find the same clear and powerful statement of the truth which the Church needs at the present day. He says: "I have tried to read or consult every book I knew of that treats of the work of the Holy Spirit, and nowhere have I met with anything that brings the truth of our dependence on the continual leading of the Spirit, and the assurance that that leading can be enjoyed without interruption, so home to the heart as the teaching of the present volume. It is because I believe that teaching to be entirely Scriptural, and to supply what many are looking for, that I venture to recommend it."

. In our recent review of the Life of Thomas Langton, the Yorkshire evangelist, published from Joyful News Office, Rochdale, we omitted to state that the price is 1s. 6d., post free.

Messrs. Penman & Co. have issued a series of striking card tracts, by W. H. Boston, well suited for general distribution. (6d. per dozen.)

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION, by W. Catchpool, is a capital booklet on a great subject. (6d. per dozen. H. K. Lewis, 136, Gower-street.)

RHYME AND REASON ON ROMANISM, by an Englishman, is a capital protest and deliverance in verse. Such pamphlets should have a wide circulation. (Partridge.)

Miss Emily Headland has added to her series of "Brief Sketches of O.M.S. Workers" a capital outline of the Life of ALEXANDER M. MACKAY, of Uganda. (2d. Nisbet & Co..)

Mrs. DENE'S MARY: A true story about an Irish servant-maid, who was found of Christ and left a blessed testimony on her dying bed. (2d. Rose & Harris, Broadmead, Bristol.)

THE PAPAL PLEA FOR REUNION TRIED IN THE BALANCES OF TRUTH AND HISTORY, AND FOUND WANTING. By an Oxford Graduate. (4d. C. J. Thynne, 6, Great Queen-street, W.C.) A timely pamphlet, calculated to clear the vision of some at the present time.

FROM THE BONDS OF RITUALISM INTO THE LIBERTY OF CHRIST JESUS is a booklet setting forth a remarkable life-story—practically in the same words as it was told in our issue of Jan. 20, under the title "From Bondage to Liberty." (1d. Partridge.)

APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION: Its Claims Tested by the Scriptures, History, Facts, and Reason. By Rev. Henry Sturt, late of Dewsbury. An able examination, and a complete refutation of the preposterous claims of Rome and her followers. (6d. The Author, 23, Leopold-street, Leeds.)

LINKS BETWEEN SCIENCE AND CHRIST. This is the title of a thoughtful discourse, by Dr. J. Oswald Dykes, preached in September last at Ipswich, in connection with the Meeting of the British Association. (4d. Publishing Office of Presbyterian Church of England, 14, Paternoster-square.)

A pamphlet of peculiar interest is "Dr. Martin Luthers funfundneuzig Thesen an der Thür der Schlosskirche zu Wittenberg." The theses are given in the original Latin, with a German translation and introduction by Pastor Kromphardt. (30pfge. Kiedler & Kluge, Wittenberg.)

A substantial pamphlet by Rev. Charles Jordan, M.A., LL.B., of the U.P. Church, Greenock, bears the expressive title, ARE THE BOOKS OF MOSES HOLY SCRIPTURE? OR, THE MODERN THEORY OF THE PENTATEUCH ANTI-BIBLICAL. The pages are strong in facts and arguments. (4d. Macniven & Wallace, Edinburgh.)

"WILL YOU TAKE MY PLACE?" An outline of the life of Edward Roberson, who gave himself for China, and was called home after a brief period of service. When the end was drawing near, he asked the question which constitutes the title of the booklet. Every page is of sterling interest. (6d. Partridge & Co.)

WHY IS YOUR SEAT IN CHURCH EMPTY? An Appeal to My Neighbours who Neglect God's House. By Rev. J. Rogers, of Ulverston, Carnforth. This is a booklet of great force, and likely to prove very useful. We trust it will be circulated far and wide, and bring many under the sound of the Gospel. (1d. Kensit.)

THE WHOLE COUNSEL OF GOD; or, How to be Clear of the Blood of all Men. With this title, Rev. W. Lancelot Holland, M.A., publishes his farewell words, full of serious earnestness, on leaving St. Thomas's English Episcopal Church, Edinburgh, and resigning office in the Church of England. (3d. J. F. Shaw & Co.)

A valuable issue in Mr. Stead's "Penny Popular Novels" is a copyright abridgment of Baroness von Suttner's work, LAY DOWN YOUR ARMS, which is well described as a "Realistic Romance of Modern War." Mr. Stead has opened his series of "Books for the Bairns" with an illustrated edition of ÆSOP'S FABLES, which is a marvellous pennyworth. (Review of Reviews Office.)

Personal Purity.—At the close of a week's successful advocacy, on behalf of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, in Birmingham, Mr. James B. Wokey, on Sunday afternoon, addressed an audience of over a thousand men at Lozells-street Mission. At the close, practically the whole of the audience rose and took the five obligations comprised in the pledge of the White Cross Army. F. E. R.

A Holiday Conference, on the lines of the Chautauqua gathering in America, is to be held this summer at Davos Platz. The arrangements are being made by the editor of The Young Man. The advantages of co-operative travelling are seen in the offer of a thirteen days' Swiss holiday, with second class travelling and first-class hotel accommodation, for ten guineas. Copies of the illustrated prospectuses can be obtained from Mr. F. A. Atkins, Temple House, Temple-avenue, E.C.

American Pilgrimage to England.—The Congregationalist Pilgrims, coming from America to this country next June, have been invited by Dean Bradley to Westminster, and Dean Farrar to Canterbury. The Bishop of Winchester has asked the party to visit Farnham. Dr. Lefroy has also invited them to the deanery of Norwich, and church dignitaries in other cathedral cities are likewise showing personal interest in the visit. During the stay in London (June 20-25) the headquarters of the party will be the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street. Application having been made by people in this country to take part in the Pilgrimage, arrangements have been made by which a limited number may join for either (1) the entire English and Continental tour (June 12—July 22), (2) the English (June 12—July 2), (3) Continental (July 2—21), or (4) Holland (July 2—11) section. All applications to be addressed to Mr. Albert Dawson, Inglenook, East Finchley, London, N., who, on receipt of an addressed wrapper, will forward programmes.

Requests for Prayer.—For blessing on Gospel services at Kingsbridge (Devon) and neighbouring villages, by Mr. John Elliott.—For a mission by Mr. William Forbes, in the Island of Guernsey, to commence on Sunday, 29th.

The Union of Indian Christians.—Mr. W. S. Caine presided on Monday evening at the first public meeting of the Indian Christian Association of Great Britain, held at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, E.C., when a paper was read by Mr. A. Nundy, barrister-at-law, on "The Union of Indian Christians." He said it had been the desire of Christians in India for some time to form a Christian Union among themselves, and he deplored the fact that there was so much wrangling among the Christians arising from the sectarian prejudices and denominational feeling largely into the new converts by the various denominations. The time had come for Indian Christians to organise a union among themselves, and to drop all denominational distinction. Dr. Jenkins, Mr. Percy Bunting, and others spoke.

Sailors in Rotterdam.—The branch of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society at Rotterdam is under the direction of Mr. J. Jones, who has laboured in the port for seven years. The latest report states that during 1895 all the varied efforts were pushed forward. Not only does the missionary preach the Gospel and promote temperance principles among the sailors; he also visits them on board ship and in hospital, and helps them in a variety of ways. The report says:—"The steam launch Faith has done good service in bringing seamen to the Sunday services, and enabling the missionary to visit a large number of ships moored in mid stream. The large and growing port received into its river and havens last year no fewer than 3086 British steamships and ninety-eight sailing vessels; so that, allowing an average of twenty men per ship, we find that there were more than 60,000 seamen, from British ships alone, in Rotterdam." Communications to Mr. Jones should be addressed:—"Seamen's Bethel and Reading-room, 126, Schiedamschedijk, Rotterdam."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

EASTER is once more upon us, with its suggestions of the Passion and Resurrection of our Lord. We stand on the threshold of the season when the supreme event in the world's history is commemorated with devout thankfulness by those who love Him, and realise what He has done for them. Our thoughts should be those of earnest self-scrutiny, as well as of reverent consideration of the great mysteries revealed through and in Him who died, and who rose again from the dead—"the first-fruits of them that sleep." What had we done for Him that He should do so much for us? Nothing; and yet He did it. He suffered the pangs of death that we may enter into the fruits of his sacrifice. He rose again that we may be glorified with Him. At this time we specially remember this great victory of love. May our "meditation of Him be sweet," and may we rise into a real fellowship with his suffering, conquering, love for a lost world.

God, in these early spring days, is giving us an "earnest" of the beauty and fruitfulness that is soon to cover the earth. So, in many earthly experiences, He gives us an "earnest" of the inheritance purchased for us by his Son. In hours of perfect health, when body and mind are in thorough accord, we have a foretaste of the perfect heavenly existence; in moments of high mental experience and spiritual exaltation, we may conceive of the expansion of nature which will be ours when this mortal shall have put on immortality, and this body of humiliation shall be clothed upon by the glorious body of the heavenly state; and in the occasional instances of flawless friendship and love between us and those dear to us, we have a glimpse of the absolute communion of glorified spirits with each other and with their great Head. All these rich and rare experiences are an earnest of better things to come; our highest here touches heaven at its lowest.

"I was envious at the foolish, when I saw the prosperity of the wicked." This is a stumbling block to many—that God is so kind to those who are rebellious and use his goodness for their own evil purposes. If we had our way, unspiritual and wicked people would have poor crops and scanty raiment; their speculations would all fail; their every day would be marked by some sign of Divine displeasure. We are, indeed, often pained at the steady beneficence of nature towards those who hate God. The earth does not refuse to blossom for them, nor their harvests to ripen. It seems as though this ought not to be. But Jesus, looking at the same fact from a higher standpoint, finds in it a beautiful proof of the undeserved goodness of the Heavenly Father. He exhorts his disciples to do good to them that persecute and ill-treat them, that we may become the children of Him who is kind to the unthankful and the evil. This seeming indifference of nature, as God's handmaid, to the moral condition of men, is shown to be but proof of the unwearied love of the Eternal. It is the goodness of God meant to "lead men," not to further rebellion, but "to repentance."

The death of Judge Hughes last week has made the world poorer by the loss of a good as well as able man. The author of "Tom Brown's School Days" was like a personal friend to everyone who has read that popular boys' book. But his claims to recognition were many and great. From his youth up he was remarkable for his sympathy with the poor, and his brave advocacy of the just rights of working-men. With the exception of a period of his undergraduate days at Oxford, he was throughout his life earnestly religious. Among his many literary productions, a little book on "The Manliness of Christ" is one of his best.

A lady writes to our "Children's Editor" concerning the weekly "Bible Searcher":—

I have fifty or sixty children in my class, and several have been very keen over your questions, but they are very poor and ignorant, and often have to come to me for the paper to write upon; and I am afraid they don't get much chance against brighter and more fortunate children, although their delight has been great at sometimes seeing their names appear in print.

The writer is by no means the only Sunday-school or Bible-class teacher who has found similar help from our "Children's Page." Others may like to have their attention called to it.

"The proof of the pudding is in the eating!" Do the people need or desire, to any considerable extent, the Sunday opening of museums, etc.? Evidently not. In no less than twenty towns the innovation has proved a complete failure, and has been replaced by the original condition of things. The report of the Lord's Day Rest Association on this subject will be found on p. 17.

It is satisfactory to note that our legislation has a steady tendency in the direction of treating prisoners more as men. The Prison Commissioners, who have made their "observations" on the recommendation of the report made last year by the Departmental Committee on Prisons, have gone strongly in the direction of preserving the man, the woman, the child, and so of getting rid of the convict. A portion of a prison in each district is to be set apart for the special use and treatment of "juveniles." Special facilities are to be given for conversation with Scripture readers, and to receive the ministrations of local clergy and others, whose methods and spirit will probably be more interesting and less mechanical than regular prison chaplains. There are to be other reforms, all aiming at making prison life less degrading in its effect on the mind.

All this is a movement in the right direction, but it is not without its dangers. The great desideratum, as was pointed out in these columns a few weeks ago, is not so much to make legal punishments more light, as to make the path of a discharged criminal back to honesty and virtue easier. In so far as prison life hardens and demoralises men, it should be reformed. It has been proved that the more carefully punishment is adjusted to the enormity of the offence, the more deterrent is its influence on crime. But the penalties of the law may be made too light, so that habitual criminals find a positive inducement to commit wrong simply because they are more comfortable in prison than out of it. In America the punitive system has become dangerously light and easy, so that the "terrors of the law" are almost done away with. The great thing is to quicken a kindlier public sentiment towards the discharged offender, and foster the hopeful spirit of Christ, who (according to the R.V. marginal reading of Luke vi. 35) tells us to "despair of no man."

The Sunday Closing Bill of the Archbishop of York has fared badly in the House of Lords, but that need not make us despair of a similar measure when it appears in the House of Commons early in May. Members of the Lower House are in touch with the people, and may be persuaded to do things that the House of Lords would slight. It is for the constituencies throughout the land to move, and to show that they are in earnest; it is for the churches to move the constituencies. Were every minister of religion in England to lead his congregation, we greatly doubt whether any House of Commons would dare to stand by the present facilities for obtaining intoxicating drinks. If prayer were offered for a pure Sunday, and action were taken according to the prayer, we should soon see both Houses of Parliament moving in the right direction.

While there are troubles enough in Europe and Africa, it is most gratifying to know, on the authority of the Prime Minister, that there are now proposals before the Government of the United States, which it is hoped will result in the establishment of some system by which in all cases arbitration might be resorted to. This will be better than the mere settlement of the Venezuelan difficulty. It will be a pledge of enduring peace between two of the mightiest nations in the world, and thus a guarantee for greater peace all the world over.

By whatever combination of circumstances and causes Armenia has been brought into trouble, there can be no doubt that one object of the Turk is to crush out Christianity by killing or forcibly converting its adherents. The strength of the resistance which he has had to face has been in the religious faith rather than in the patriotic fervour of the Armenians. This of itself ought to be enough to raise the question, how far have the churches at home done their duty by their brethren who have suffered and are suffering? They have protested, and given money, and urged their own Government to do something, and prayed. Can they do no more? If Russia holds the key of the situation, can she not be influenced by the English people if the Government is powerless? Would an appeal from Englishmen to Russians be in vain? If it were, we should then, but not till then, have exhausted all peaceable means for saving our brethren from the hands of savages who have not only persecuted them to death, but are now trying to seize the money aid which has been sent to them in their extremity.

The conquest and occupation of Madagascar by the French has so far proved a very slight hindrance to missionary work. In view of probable danger, and because their work was, for the time being, at a standstill, a few of the workers came home or withdrew to nearer shelter, but the bulk remained with their people. The conquerors have been fair and courteous, and have found in the missionaries friends and advisers whom it is worth their while to cultivate. The number of converts and adherents of Protestant churches is so large that no Government which cared for its own peaceful and easy establishment would think of despising or oppressing them. The schools are a splendid instrument for the advancement of the people in the arts of civilisation, and cannot be safely closed or ignored. The French have an easy task before them, if they will respect the work already done. Their Resident-General bears the reputation of being a right-minded man.

The continued presence of slavery in Zanzibar is a blot on the escutcheon of England. The Sultan of Zanzibar is nominally under our protection, but is really a vassal, and if we put our foot down would be at once forced to abolish slavery. It is stated that by not adopting that course in this dependency we are doing much to perpetuate the "open sore" of Africa, and cause the sacrifice of over a score of thousand lives every year to supply the Protectorate with slaves, besides causing untold misery in Zanzibar itself. England has been associated the world over with the great anti-slavery movement; and yet, for reasons hard to fathom, she here perpetuates the vile traffic in human bodies. It is a disgrace to our name, and steps should be at once taken to put an end to it.

The cause of social purity has unfortunately suffered defeat at the polls at Geneva. By a large majority the voters decided to retain the system of regulated vice in the city; as many, however, as 4800 voted against it. The forces of evil left little, if anything, undone, save assaults on our friends, to accomplish their end. But this kind of thing cannot ultimately prevail, even in a city which has become hardened and blinded by a system introduced a hundred years ago under the military rule of Napoleon. Bad supports of a bad cause become its downfall. When our sorely-tried friends asked Mrs. Butler if she had no word for them, she replied, "Every death of person or thing which is good is followed by resurrection." This was sure comfort. Geneva will have to fight for its own emancipation. The true hearts in it will have to go on educating, agitating, working, praying, until they have won a majority to their side—and they will get a majority; this check is only temporary.

The claims of foreign missionary work are sometimes represented as being opposed to those of work at home; "press for money for the foreign field, and you will lose it for the home field," it is said. The experience of the past year among Congregationalists does not bear the theory out; on the contrary, it flatly contradicts it. The Centenary Fund of the L.M.S. is close upon £100,000, the greater part of it having been given by Congregationalists, although in honour of the undenominational principle of the Society, some generous donations have been given by members of other churches. At the same time, the Church Aid Society has enjoyed one of its most fruitful years among the churches in England and Wales; its enlarged income will carry joy into many a minister's home. Prudence would have said, "Hold back for awhile"; a sense of duty pressed on, and has had its reward.

The work of the Reformation is attacked from two sides—from that of the sacerdotalist, who hates the doctrines it taught; and from that of the secular historian, who attributes its rise and growth to secular rather than religious causes. Time was when the philosophy of the movement explained it as an emancipation of the soul from the bondage of legalism which inevitably carried with it the freedom of the mind from intellectual bondage, and ultimately the liberation of the man, the citizen, from political servitude. Once man's relation to God, and the ground of that relation, were made clear, intellectual, political, and social advantages were guaranteed. But now such writers as Froude teach that the Reformation was not primarily a question of doctrine. We think, however, that the older view will again hold the field. Men of the middle ages found the intellectual domination of the Papacy to be intolerable, and its morals a scandal; and these elements opened the way for the power which wrought their deliverance—viz. the doctrine of Justification by Faith.

The article of Mr. Bensusan in The English Illustrated Magazine on the cruel way in which performing animals are trained, can hardly fail to do some good. His facts are not questioned; it is only affirmed that all trainers are not cruel; though one manager of a theatre where such performances are common, says that "fifty years' experience has taught him that they are attended with cruelty in varying degrees." The root of the evil seems to be want of humane feelings towards animals in other lands. Mr. Bensusan is of opinion that outside Europe humanity to animals is unknown, and that the average foreigner has no soft place in his heart for them. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has work enough, however, among the men at home who kill our gentle birds, and torture our noble horses. Public opinion will be found ultimately to be the only effective remedy.

Dean Farrar tells the case of a young man in whose family there was a taint of insanity, homicidal mania, who, on that account, very properly determined to remain a bachelor. Had he married, the end might have been a tragedy, but he died peacefully in an asylum. That there are some with such nobility of soul and self-control as will refuse to pass on physical weaknesses to another generation, is a fact to be grateful for. Of course, we know little of them; this is a kind of self-sacrifice which cannot be advertised. We only wish that their number were increased. No one can lay down a law of conduct in such matters, but any little aid towards the formation of right feeling and opinion is welcome. If we ought to do to others as we would have others do to us, we ought not to be the means of perpetuating diseases which are a lifelong burden, and may inflict a violent death upon others.

The Reserve of Scripture.

SOME time ago a young man wrote to an older friend and urged, as an excuse for his not reading the Word of God, that it kept him in the dark about so many things he wanted to know:—

"The merest child's book I look into tells me more about the causes of things than the Bible," he wrote, "and a shilling science primer gives me more satisfaction than I can get out of the whole Bible. Why this extraordinary reticence on matters which concern everybody, and which everybody wants to know?"

The reply he received to this began by saying, that because a child's book and a shilling primer satisfied him, was possibly the reason this young man was unable to find satisfaction in the Bible. "However," wrote the elder correspondent, "I will not sharpen my pen upon you, but just send you, as a reply to your letter, a reminder that the glory of God is often to conceal a thing (Prov. xxv. 2). 'Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit? There is more hope of a fool than of him' (Prov. xxvi. 12; xxiv. 7). I send you some thoughts on the subject of the reticence of Scripture, which were written by a friend. I hope they may help you, as they should:—The reticence of the Bible is a mark of its genuineness. It attests its Divine origin. If men, unaided and undirected by the Holy Spirit, had written this Book, they would have told both much less than it tells and a great deal more. No false revelations have the self-control and sanity of this true revelation. The apocryphal writings of the early Christian centuries are examples. "The Gospel of the Infancy" tells ridiculous stories of the boy Jesus working insignificant marvels. In the second place, the reticence of the Bible checks that wild, fruitless speculation on the unseen and the unknown which otherwise would draw off human attention and energies from the real concerns of life."

The revelation of the Son of God incarnate, suffering and dying, and rising again victorious out of death, all because God loves to seek and save fallen man, is to be trusted as the communication of One who would tell us no more if it were best for us. The mercy which saves withholds the premature disclosure of unneeded and perhaps perilous secrets. In the third place, the reticence of the Bible as to questions that lie outside of the domain of practical present life, concentrates attention on present duty. It is more important that men should believe in God and practise righteousness than that they should read the dark riddle of sin's genesis, or start and wonder over the uncovered mysteries of another world. The true life for man is a life of faith, lived by the day in conscious obedience to a present Divine command. Hence so much of the Bible concerns itself with to-day. It is not important that we should know the secrets of the spirit world. It is supremely important that we should live and serve God, and do with all our might the holy work which our hands find to do. It is not important that we should know the mathematical quantity of heaven's population. It is infinitely important that we should be saved ourselves, and thus put into the way and into the enterprise of saving others. It is not important that we should know the day and the hour when the Son of Man shall come in the clouds of heaven. It is vastly important that we should be so living that it will not matter to us how soon He comes, except as it shall be an occasion for unspeakable joy.

Is the Bible silent on some things we ought to know? The Bible is not God's last word to his children. He will not always be silent. His time will come. Meanwhile, this is the message, 'Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.'

If aught should tempt my soul to stray
From heavenly wisdom's narrow way,
To fly the good I would pursue,
Or do the sin I would not do,
Still He, who felt temptation's power,
Shall guard me in that dangerous hour.

The Matabele Rising.—It is intimated that no further news has been received as to the rising of the Matabele. The directors of the London Missionary Society have learned by telegram of the safety of their missionaries in Matabeleland, Revs. D. Carnegie (Hope Fountain), Bowen, Rees, and G. Cullen (Inyati). Rev. C. D. Helm, also of Hope Fountain, reached London on Saturday. Mr. C. J. Wilkinson, a newly-appointed artisan missionary, is at the present time on his way to join the mission

A Life-Giving Tomb.

By REV. W. B. RUSSELL CALEY.

And Elisha died, and they buried him. And the bands of the Moabites invaded the land at the coming in of the year. And it came to pass, as they were burying a man, that, behold, they spied a band of men; and they cast the man into the sepulchre of Elisha; and when the man was let down, and touched the bones of Elisha, he revived, and stood up on his feet.—2 Kings xiii. 20, 21.

THIS is a lovely Old Testament parable of "good things to come," a wondrous foreshadowing of that glorious life and immortality which has been brought to light through the Gospel.

It is a story full of practical lessons, and holy encouragements; it brings before us with startling clearness the Divine intention regarding life through the dead.

The prophet, the deliverer, the great national adviser, was dead. Intensely did Israel realise it, and mourn over it. Yet the power of God through him was not dead. Through death flowed a strange power of life.

I. (a) Consider first the man to be buried. He was dead. There was no disguising the fact, and his friends carried him to his last resting-place sadly and sorrowfully.

How many of our friends are we daily carrying to their spiritual grave! We have a friend, a relative perhaps, deeply loved, but "dead in trespasses and sins." We mourn over him. Day by day he is being borne along the road to a spiritual grave. We are powerless to assist such; steadily, slowly, but surely, they pass on.

(b) Next come upon the scene "bands of Moabites." Fresh dangers now threaten us. So it may be with our friends. They may not always remain, as it were, respectably dead. Viler passions and more frightful developments of sin may come. Not only sorrow but shame is in prospect. Exposure, degradation are near at hand.

How often has this dreadful fact wrecked the happiness of a respectable and religious home! Some members of the family, though not absolutely spiritually-minded, yet have many charming and attractive qualities. We love them, admire them; yet we know there is no real spiritual life, and some day the indwelling sin may manifest itself in some shameful way; and we shall be awakened to the fact that we cannot bury them quietly and respectably, for the "bands of Moabites" threaten to disgrace us.

(c) But what did the people do? They cast the dead man into Elisha's tomb. It was probably the impulse of a moment. They thought the tomb of the renowned prophet would perhaps be respected, so the body was hastily laid inside. Little did they imagine what would be the consequences of the simple act.

II. Here was a wondrous witness to Elisha's life. Elisha lived. Through his dead body came a strange life-giving power.

Surely this is a foreshadowing of some greater truth—a picture of things seen then only "through a glass darkly," but now by us "face to face." Shall we not in earnest anxiety cast our loved ones and ourselves on the dead yet living Christ—"God manifest in the flesh" that through his death, they may receive his life?

Here we have an Easter subject.

Only as we identify ourselves with the death of Christ can we receive power to "walk in newness of life." We must accept oneness with his death if we are to enjoy oneness with his life. As the light of Easter breaks upon us, have we been down into the grave with Christ, and through his incarnation and atonement received freedom from the death of sin, and his resurrection power? And again, have we ever brought a friend into personal contact with the dead, yet ever-living, Jesus?

Think how unspeakably grateful must this man have been to these earnest friends of his. He now walked in "newness of life"; "old things had passed away, all things had become new" to him.

Also there was henceforth, a new bond of interest and affection between the saved man and his friends, and also Elisha. The latter was no longer to him only a celebrated prophet, or a national hero, but a personal, living power—a reality, and not simply a name. Is Christ this to us?

And yet again—what holy, tender, inspiring memories, must that tomb have had henceforth for him! Is it so in regard to our souls and the death of Jesus? Do we love to commemorate that death?

As we draw near to the table of the Lord, may it awaken within us a holy and inspiring remembrance of his life-giving death, and enable us by faith to "receive all the benefits of his passion."

And let us not fail to notice the full consequences of this act. The man "stood up on his feet"—not only life, but power; no uncertain indication of vital energy, but a manifestation of it that no one could doubt. If we have had personal contact with Christ, and received life, we must rise to work and usefulness.

Then, too, faith in Elisha would increase; this marvellous operation of God through him would make people receive with unquestioning faith his predictions. So when we see souls "dead in trespasses and sins" regenerated by the life of Christ, we can feel encouraged regarding his ever-present power and presence, his eternally true promises.

Rabbi Lichtenstein.

THE story of Rabbi Lichtenstein is now widely known, and his testimony and work have made for him many friends among those who are interested in the evangelisation of Israel. There is much that is striking in the career of the Rabbi; his witnessing for Christ for years in his own synagogue, and his boldness in leaving the synagogue in his old age. It is a joy to know that Christians in Great Britain have taken up his case, and that he is relieved from temporal anxiety while prosecuting his work in the name of Christ. A few weeks ago the Rabbi came to England for a short stay, and after attending meetings in Scotland, he was accorded a hearty welcome at Exeter Hall on Friday evening.

The chair was occupied by Mr. J. E. MATHIESON, who made some helpful remarks on Zeph. iii., a portion of Scripture previously read by Rev. A. Bernstein. Rev. C. A. Schönberger followed with a deeply interesting narrative of the Rabbi's life and work. He referred to the Rabbi and his fellow witness, Joseph Rabinowitch, as evangelistic prophets in the camp of Israel. In their testimony we should recognise the first glimpses of the dawn of a happier day for poor, benighted, Israel—when the veil will be removed, and that part of the nation to whom blindness has happened will have its eyes open and see Jesus, and adoringly say, "Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord."

An address by the Rabbi was interpreted by Rev. David Baron. He said that as a Jew he could not be at peace with himself and his God. He saw God, but He was far from him; he realised an inward need. In his old age, when his eyes began to dim, he suddenly saw light, and the glory of God's salvation—saw that God had fulfilled his promise regarding the Messiah, and sent a Redeemer in the person of his Son. Then, at a time when he thought himself forsaken in his home, love greeted him, and new friends had stood by him in his hour of need.

Professor DALMAN, of Leipzig, referred with pleasure to the fact that in London there are more Jewish missions than in all the Continent put together. The way to Christ, he said, always leads, not from Israel, but to Israel. Christ is Israel's glorious King. If He belongs to Israel, and that cannot be denied, then Israel belongs to Him; that also cannot be denied.

Rev. DAVID BARON having spoken of the Rabbi's remarkable pamphlets, General HALLIDAY bespoke help towards the fund in aid of the work.

Easter.

THE blush and bloom of springtime
Are spreading o'er the earth,
Green leaves their grace unfolding,
And new, white flowers have birth.
Oh! may our souls be whiter,
And from our hearts be pour'd
Sweet strains of solemn gladness
To greet our gracious Lord.

He riseth in his splendour,
Our Sun of Righteousness;
He comes, with accents tender,
His waiting ones to bless.
Our weeping eyes behold Him,
Our mourning hearts adore,
Our raptured souls enfold Him,
And we are sad no more.

Is this our lowly Jesus?
Is this the Crucified,
Who on the Cross was lifted,
With robbers by his side?
Yea, even so He told us—
"First anguish, death, and pain,
And three sad days of sleeping—
Then will I rise again."

Oh, ne'er before so glorious,
So radiant as now,
With death and hell beneath Him,
And life upon his brow;
The earth shall bow before Him,
To Him all praise be given,
By angels and archangels
And all the host of heaven.

Is this our lowly Jesus?
It is; for He alone
Hath fought and won the battle,
And now ascends the throne.
Henceforth, to all believers,
The gate of heaven is free;
And death is but the portal
To immortality. CAROLINE TICKNER.

"Till the Shadows Flee Away."

ARE we looking for the coming
Of glad Easter day again;
Learning all its joyful meaning,
Not in vain?

For this day is but a forecast
Of a fairer, sweeter morn,
That upon all faithful watchers
Soon shall dawn.

"I come quickly," is the message,
Flashing forth to all around,
Only those who know the Master
Love the sound.

Yes! the dawn is surely breaking,
Brighter glow those tints of gold;
Yet more glory shall the watchers
Still behold!

Oh! the sweet, yet solemn beauty!
Of that nearing Easter-day;
Reuniting Past and Present
In its ray

Many a sad, a long estrangement
In that Light will disappear;
All earth's distance in That Presence
Wrought so near.

Thou canst hold us, Gracious Master,
In thy hands of love so fast;
Till these swiftly flying shadows
All are past.

The Cure of Care.

HAST thou within a care so deep,
It chases from thine eyelids sleep?
To thy Redeemer take that care
And change anxiety to prayer.

Hast thou a hope with which thy heart
Would almost feel it death to part?
Entreat thy God that hope to crown,
Or give thee strength to lay it down.

Reality of the Resurrection.

By REV. JOHN R. BRUCE.

THE Resurrection of Christ is the most prominent and distinctly-emphasised fact in the New Testament; nor is there in the oldest literature any hint that at Jerusalem or among the Jews there was any attempt at an inquiry, with a view to disprove the facts of the case. Christianity, as the oldest documents prove, was not a secret but a public faith, singularly outspoken and aggressive.

Its career began in the very city where its Founder had been crucified; and there, where the hate to Him was deepest, where the memory of his fate must have been most vivid, the faith in his Resurrection lived a fearless and victorious life, challenging an exposure which never came, invincible before the combined interests and passions of priests and rulers.

The fertility of unbelief has invented many solutions of the faith which breathed new joy into that sad band on the first Easter morning; but no other account of this belief has ever been given, which commends itself to the common understanding which accepts what appeals to it. The belief in the Resurrection which so effectually possessed the first disciples remains unexplained by any other supposition than the simple one—that the Lord died and did rise again. The Resurrection of Christ is unique, because He is unique. There are certain of Christ, which correspond to certain features in the new life of faith in the believer.

Of these, the first is its Reality. Christ "showed Himself alive after his passion, by many infallible proofs." There have been many attempts to account otherwise for the story; and each of them in succession has "had its day and ceased to be." For instance, we hear nothing now of the coarse old explanation that the Resurrection was a lie, and became current through the conscious imposture of the Apostles. And it was high time that such a solution should be laid aside. A sane, and honourable, and informed spirit could never either conceive or believe such a theory. Who, with half an eye for character, could study the deeds and the writings of the Apostles, and not feel that whatever else they were, they were profoundly honest, and as convinced as of their own existence, that they had seen Christ alive after his passion?

That a company of men could be confederate in evil, for good; that they could preach virtue, or live virtuously, with a lie on their consciences; that they, in the face of death, could cherish the hope of being with Christ in glory, while they were fully aware that He was in the grave—are positions that involve so many psychological impossibilities, that any serious discussion of the matter would simply be absurd.

Then, when this theory was discredited, we were told that the mythical tendency would explain everything. But how came myths to be formed in an age of lively, historical, and literary activity, and a quick historical consciousness? Moreover, there was not time for the myth to grow. Again, what was the Church to feed on while the myth was growing? The idea of a man like Paul sacrificing himself for a myth, than whom no man was ever better fitted to move among the realities of life, or to ascertain what these realities are!

Then came the last theory, which was meant to be a sort of compromise between Christian faith and modern unbelief, that Christ rose only in the hearts of his disciples. According to this view, the idea entertained by the disciples of the character and work of their Master was too bright and glorious a thing to be buried in the grave; and then, when the first agony of grief was past, the Crucified One presented Himself again to their imagination, arrayed in even more than his previous beauty. But the plausibility of this solution ceases as soon as you touch on the actual facts in their variety and completeness. Does hallucination last for a long country walk, and give rise to protracted conversation? Do hallucinations lay hold of five hundred people at once? Does hallucination explain the story of Christ eating and drinking with his disciples? It was no vision created by their own imagination which could at once and for ever alter the Apostles' idea of the Messiah, which they held in common with their countrymen. It was no phantom who could inspire the disciples with unity of purpose, and lead them forward to the most splendid victories men have ever won. No; nothing will explain the faith of the Apostles and of the rest, but the fact of their really seeing the Lord after his death, clothed in power.

Paul makes a comparison between Christ risen from the dead, and the believer walking in newness of life: "Like as Christ was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." Indeed this Apostle is continually holding up to us the Risen Life of Christ as that to which we are to be conformed. As Christ has done with death, having died to sin once, so must his people be dead to sin, and alive to God with Him. It would have helped the world but little had Christ risen merely in the imagination of his disciples. And it will avail us nothing if we live merely in our own imagination, while we are dead in sin. What is the value of the mere of prayers without heart, of actions without a religious motive, of religious language far in advance of our true convictions and feelings? No; our life in Christ must be as real as his risen life, if we are to have a motive for work prevailing through all disappointment and failure.

A second characteristic of Christ's life is that it endures. Christ raised the daughter of Jairus, the son of a widow at Nain, and his friend Lazarus of Bethany, after he had been dead four days. These all took up the broken threads of life just where they had left them, and after they had lived their allotted time, fell into the hands of death again. But "Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over Him." Or take the account that Christ gives of Himself after his resurrection and ascension: "I am He that liveth, and was dead; and behold I am alive for evermore."

So the life of the Christian is a life that lasts. God will certainly be true, and keep what we have committed to Him. He will keep the life of faith alive in us. Every Christian can say, "I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

As Easter comes round, we are reminded of friends that we have lost, and changes that have taken the colour out of life. But we are also assured that Christ has risen, and in a little while we shall find with Him the Christian friends who have gone from us. As we believe that Christ rose from the dead, we believe that He has made plain to us the realities in the midst of which we are, as well as of the future, and is our life and strength. Christ is alive for evermore to help us. A dead Christ might have been the object of faint historical admiration, and the fair statue might have stood amidst others in the halls of the world; but the risen Christ can love and be loved; and we, in common with the first disciples, may be glad with the joy of those who have found a heart to rest their hearts upon, and a companion that can never fail.

The Month & Its Lessons.—4.

APRIL.—The Seed Month.

APRIL is the beginning of the new life of the year, the opening of Nature's treasures, and the budding of new mercies and blessing for the world. It is a fit emblem of the spiritual awakening or quickening by the Holy Spirit in the realm of grace, for all true conversion to God is really April in the soul. This month supplies us with innumerable seed-thoughts.

LESSONS FROM THE SEED.

LIVING SEED. A Picture of life in the soul—Gen. i. 11; 1 John iii. 9.

SOWING SEED. A Guide to preaching the Gospel—Psa. cxxvi. 6; Eccles. ii. 6.

WATERED SEED. A Help to life and labour—Isa. lv. 6; Col. iii. 6, 7, 8.

QUICKENED SEED. A Mark of the Spirit's grace—Luke viii. 15; 1 Pet. i. 23.

ABIDING SEED. A Sign of eternal life—1 John iii. 9, v. 13.

SCATTERED SEED. A Measure of earnest service—2 Cor. xv. 36; James i. 7.

April is the emblem of youth, a picture of life, nature waking out of sleep—a link between winter and summer, the month of buds and blossoms, and a messenger whispering joy and hope, a beautiful illustration of grace in the soul and life of the Christian.

"Ye fearful saints, fresh courage take;
The clouds ye so much dread
Are big with mercy, and shall break
In blessings on your head."

"One day the master of Lukman (an Eastern fabulist) said to him, 'Go into such a field and sow barley.' Lukman sowed oats instead. At the time of the harvest, the master went to the place, and seeing the oats, asked him, 'Did I not tell you to sow barley here?' He answered, 'I sowed oats in the hope that barley would come up.' His master said, 'What foolish idea is this?' 'Have you ever heard of the like?' Lukman replied, 'You yourself are constantly sowing in the field of the world the seeds of evil, and yet expect to reap in the resurrection day the fruit of virtue, as soon might I get barley by sowing oats.' The master was abashed at the reply and set Lukman free." (Gal. vi. 7, 8.)

SOWING AND REAPING (PSA. CXXVI. 6).

Individual effort—"He that goeth forth,"
The right spirit—"and weepeth,"
The good seed—"bearing precious seed,"
The certainty of success—"shall doubtless come again."

Encouragement for every worker—"rejoicing."

Protestantism in Hungary is making itself observed. Through the influence of a pious widow, Mme. de Heggi, a monument has just been erected at Debreczin to the memory of the Hungarian martyrs of the seventeenth century. On March 5, 1674, seven hundred Protestant pastors were cited to appear before a tribunal at Preseburg. Three hundred of the number obeyed, and all were condemned. They were subjected to many cruelties, and forty-one were sent to the galleys. Through the intervention of the celebrated Dutch naval commander, Admiral Ruyter, the King of Spain secured their liberation. Thousands of young people attended the inauguration of the monument, and the occasion was marked by the setting apart of sixty-one young men to the work of the ministry. Among other objects, the monument displays an open Bible, and the names of the forty-one galley-slaves.

Letters from S. Africa.—II.

JOHANNESBURG.

I ARRIVED here on Friday night, Feb. 28, and leave for Bloemfontein and Basutoland on Monday night, March 9. The sojourn here has been full of interest. Johannesburg has been called "a mushroom city." Few terms could be less appropriate. A mushroom springs up quickly, and so has this city, but there the resemblance ends. Bournemouth and Chicago and Johannesburg sprang up quickly, but they came to stay. The causes of their speedy development lie deep in the past centuries. No less than the Pyramids, they are the work of an advanced people. We have been into the Robinson and one of the Barnato mines, and seen the diamond mill, worked by compressed air, boring chambers for dynamite in the hard rocks; we have been deafened by the sound and shaken by the concussion of the dynamite exploded in a dozen such chambers in succession; have looked with admiration on the machinery for stamping the rock to powder, and the skilful, scientific adaption of successive chemical processes for separating the gold from the "slimes"; and we have been rather reminded of the powers described in the Book of Job and in the Psalms than of Jonah's gourd that "came up in a night, and perished in a night."

In the providence of God these stores of gold have been opened to supply metal for the currency required for the commerce of the world. This is one and the chief reason why Johannesburg has sprung up so quickly upon this series of reefs in the Transvaal, and we shall mislead ourselves unless we recognise the fact.

True there is enough, and more than enough, of worldliness and wickedness here. It has proved an awful testing place. The dreadful wreck of houses, covering two or three desolated square miles, the result of the late explosion, is but an outward and visible symbol of the wreck of reputation and Christian profession. Many who came here proposing to win others to Christ have themselves been entangled in the wiles of the devil, and have lost themselves. For that word, "Yet once more," is a continually repeated process, and "signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain." Thank God there are many who do remain, and are the stronger for the shaking, as of things not made of man but "rooted and built in God."

A new Act is proposed to be submitted to the Council of the Republic restricting the liberty or licence of the Press. As a pressman, I am naturally averse to the Fourth Estate being gagged, but I have long felt that "the liberty of the Press" is greatly abused. There are papers the interest and life of which is perpetual agitation, and which find their advantage in separating those who should be very friends—by aggravation, exaggeration, and exasperation. If it were not for the difficulty of preventing the remedy from being worse than the disease, we might accept with great equanimity a law for gagging the cantankerous and the demoralising portion of the Press. "The liberty of the Press" has indeed become to a considerable extent a fetish and a fraud. A fraud because many papers are the subsidised agents of interests, governmental, financial, commercial, or otherwise. A fetish, so far as it is an article of faith by which people are influenced out of proportion to its reality and truth.

I have been assured that seventy-five per cent. of the mines will be unable to bear the burdens pressing upon them. The monopoly of the sale of dynamite makes a difference to one mine, and that not a large one, of £20,000 a year. This and other burdens ought certainly to be alleviated. And there could be no objection, but the reverse, to the grant of a reasonable franchise. The Government has passed from almost bankruptcy to a well-filled exchequer by the revenue from the mines, and a righteous and generous policy toward those who have contributed to this result would exalt the nation.

It is said, however, that there is a party who desire to oust the English Imperial power from the South African Republic, and the English language from predominance there; they think they are able to do it, and that now is the time or never. It is evident that these are in no humour to receive advice from Mr. Chamberlain or any other Englishman. They want war, and have no doubt of success. They are, however, an irresponsible and influential section. The better informed are wiser.

On the other hand, there are those among the English and other nationalities who do not shrink from contemplating and anticipating the arbitrament of the sword. There are high-toned men, whose forefathers have fallen fighting for liberty, and who think life is not worth living if the rights of freemen, enfranchised men, are denied them. Others care little about the franchise and an ideal liberty, if the burdens are removed from the industries in which they are interested. Some think that the coming of Christ is hindered, and that the glory of the Lord cannot be revealed, and all flesh see it together, until by political amelioration men prepare the way of the Lord, and make straight in the desert a highway for God; until the valleys are exalted and the mountains and hills made low, the crooked made straight, and the rough places plain. Others, again, think that they hear the voice of the Lord, which breaketh the cedars, saying unto them, "Let the potsherd strive with the potsherd of the earth. Go forth unto Him without the camp, bearing his reproach; for here we have no continuing city, but we seek one to come."

Mr. Rhodes is a man of master mind, great administrative ability, and fearless execution. But he is credited with the assertion that he has "never known a man he could not 'square.' Every man has his price; find out what it is, and if he is worth it, pay it." If those be the principles on which any man works, they are certainly not such as we could expect or ask God's blessing upon.

It seems evident that in the past England has not well understood South African affairs, and has not well or wisely treated some of her best men, such as Sir George Grey, Sir Bartle Frere, and Rev. John Mackenzie.

Mr. Basil Worsfold, in his lectures on South Africa, says: "The cause which lay at the root of the endless divergencies of opinion between Home and Colonial authorities lay in the simple fact that the information, or rather the data, upon which the respective opinions of Downing-street and Cape-town were founded, were different. The Home authorities were guided by certain general principles, the Colonial by a knowledge of the actual facts, acquired locally, and impossible to communicate. It is to this conflict between 'the man in Downing-street' and 'the man on the spot'—whether a civil or military officer—that the disasters suffered by the British arms and the losses incurred by the British Treasury are directly attributable. It is this conflict, too, which has made South Africa 'a grave of reputations' for the Colonial administrator."

It is to be hoped that in any new negotiations "the man on the spot" will be duly and sufficiently consulted. A very intelligent Scotchman, long resident here, tells me that, in his judgment, a Government Commission, sent from England, to become thoroughly informed as to the condition of affairs here, would be the best way of obtaining the information without which no satisfactory arrangement can be made. Each party to a negotiation ought to fully understand the position. At present this is here thought to be very partially the case with the English Government and people.

In the midst of these many voices, what are the churches doing? Where is she, who was once pictured "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, terrible as an army with banners"—the Church which is His Body? Now is her opportunity, her duty, her privilege. Oh, that she may rise to the occasion! "Ask of Me things to come concerning my sons, and concerning the works of my hands command ye Me."

Rev. Andrew Murray has recently been welcomed, and his words made mighty through God, in Great Britain and America. He has the ear of a large body of Christians of both the English and Dutch-speaking peoples in South Africa. And his printed utterances have struck the key-note of the spirit in which these important matters should be treated. I venture to hope that he may take the initiative in regard to the Christian churches and constituencies which he represents, and to the earnest, spiritual, and unworldly of all sections and all denominations; calling upon them to exercise the priesthood which Christ Jesus our Lord has conferred upon us, making us a kingdom of priests to his God and Father, in order that, "first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks be made for all men; for kings and for all that are in authority, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life, in all godliness and honesty."

This precept has been very generally neglected amongst non-liturgical churches, and even where the liturgical words have been said, it is to be feared that in a large number of instances there has been little prayer in the saying. Can we not shake ourselves free from our older and more modern wrangles, and be united together in one solemn covenant of prayer for kings and rulers; for the Sultan and the Czar, that the persecuted remnant of our Armenian fellow-Christians, and the divided and desolated families of our Stundist brethren, may have a little reviving in their bondage and a nail in God's holy place? That the increasing armaments of Europe may be restrained from blood; that South Africa may not experience the horrors of civil war; but that grace and wisdom may be given to the Governments of England and the Transvaal, so that an amicable arrangement may be arrived at, honourable and advantageous to both nations? That the Chartered Company, and any other companies that may be formed, may be kept within the bounds of righteousness? That all men, coloured and uncoloured, may have justice administered, with recognition of equal human rights?

Nothing will more tend to do away with the scandal of a divided Church, and to show the world how these Christians love one another, than to unite together in praying for the peace of Jerusalem. Our Jerusalem may be in the land of Palestine, or it may include the five great portions of the world. The blessing is not confined to prayer for the beloved city, but consists in drawing near to the loving God in the name of his beloved Son.

Enter the Holiest, happy nation;
Love rent for you that opened way.
Faith's utterance is supplication,
Adoption's dearest right to pray.
The boldest comers are most welcome there;
He honours Jesus best who proves Him most by prayer.

Johannesburg, March 7, 1896.

The People's Bethel Mission, Bristol, has for fifteen years been carrying on a good work in the lowest part of this city, and God has wondrously blessed the work to hundreds. Services are held every night in the week. Preaching, prayer-meetings, Sunday-schools, an institute for the lads and girls to rest and have tea or coffee, etc., rather than frequent the public-houses, open all day. A crisis has, however, arisen, the mortgagee having called in, and £350 is required. Will those interested in the work for Christ amongst the poor and fallen help in this difficulty? The need is pressing. The following gentlemen have contributed, and recommend the work of the Mission:—Messrs. R. Cory, J. T. Fry, and Opie Rodway. Hon. pastor, J. J. Elliott, 10, King-square, Bristol.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, April 5.

"TILL I KNOW WHAT GOD WILL DO FOR ME."—
1 Sam. xxii. 3.

WE shall never get to the end of all that God will do for us, if only we perfectly give ourselves up to Him. David had a very imperfect vision of all that was in God's plan for him; he had an inkling, but that was all. And we have still less. Yet let us recapitulate some of the things which God will do for us.

He waits to give us the Spirit of Sonship, so that we may ever be conscious of his Fatherhood, and look up into his face in the garden of Gethsemane, and on the Mount of Transfiguration alike, calling Him Abba Father.

He longs to lead us to full consecration, to lead us into such close association with Jesus in his redeeming purpose, that we may become his absolute slaves and chattels, with no other purpose and aim in life than his service and glory.

He desires to deliver us from all known sin, that we may be blameless and harmless, his children without rebuke in this sinful world, and walk before Him in holiness and righteousness all our days.

He wants to anoint us with the Holy Spirit, so that our ministry to men may have more of the savour of Christ, may plough deeper furrows in human hearts, may have more abiding results.

He desires us to come into partnership with his Son. To this indeed He calls us.

Who can know all that God waits to do, not here only, but yonder, when life has entered upon its eternal stage. Let us not thwart or hinder Him, but allow Him to work out all.

MONDAY, April 6.

"HE SAID TO ABIATHAR THE PRIEST, BRING HITHER THE EPHOD."—1 Sam. xxiii. 9.

How many times in this chapter we are informed that David enquired of the Lord! Some three or four times the appeal for direction was renewed, as though he were fearful to stir one step by the light of his own unaided wisdom. In that changeful life of his, it must have been extremely difficult to set the Lord always before him, and await Divine direction. Many a time his circumstances might seem to demand immediate action rather than prayer; and the rude soldiery must have insisted on their voice being heard rather than a priest's; but David was not deterred by one or the other, and still held to his practice of consulting the Urim and Thummim stone, set in the ephod; which was probably a splendid diamond, flashing with God's "Yes," or growing cloudy and dark with his "No."

Let us inquire of the Lord. The answer will surely come, if we wait for it. If we are not sure of it, let us still wait, for it will come. Not so early as to save us from using our faith, not so late as to permit us to be overwhelmed. Direction will come in the growing conviction of duty, in the drift of circumstances, in the advice of friends, in the perceptions of a sanctified judgment. None that wait on God can be ashamed. Whether our duty be to arise and pursue, to sit still, or to escape—"the meek He will guide in judgment, the meek He will teach his way."

"AND DAVID'S HEART SMOTE HIM."—1 Sam. xxiv. 5.

It is well to have a tender conscience, and to obey its least monitions, even when men and things militate against it. It was a very small thing that David had done; he had taken advantage of Saul's retirement in the precincts of the cave, where his men and he were hiding, and had cut off a piece of his robe.

It was a trifling matter, and yet it seemed dishonouring to God's anointed king, and as such it hurt David to have done it. We sometimes in conversation and criticism cut off a piece of a man's character, or influence for good, or standing in the esteem of others. Ought not our heart to smite us? Ought we not to make confession or reparation?

Circumstances seemed to favour it. Of all the scores of caves in the neighbourhood, the king had happened to choose the very one, in the dark recesses of which David's and his men were sheltering. What more natural than to obtain some token to convince the king how absolutely he had been in his young rival's power? But favouring circumstances do not justify an act which is not perfectly healthy and right. Opportunity does not make a wrong thing right.

His men unanimously approved the act, nay, they wanted him to go further. Their standard was a very low one, not only in this case, but in others. How wonderful that David kept such a high ideal amid such comrades. He exercised himself to have always a conscience void of offence towards God and man.

WEDNESDAY, April 8.

"THIS SHALL BE NO GRIEF UNTO THEE."—1 Sam. xxv. 31.

There was an inimitable blending of woman's wit and worldly prudence in the words of the beautiful Abigail. Poor woman, she had had a sorry life of it, mated to such a man as Nabal was! An ill-assorted pair certainly, though probably she had had no hand in bringing about the alliance. Like so many Eastern women, she was the creature of another's act and choice. But she succeeded in averting the blow which David was hasting to inflict by asserting her belief that the time was not far distant when he would no longer be a fugitive from his foes, and by suggesting that when that happy time came it would be a relief to feel that he had not allowed himself to be carried to all lengths by his hot passion.

It was very salutary advice. Let us always look at things from the view-point of the future, when our passion shall have subsided, when time has cooled us, when we review the present from the verge of the other world—how then?

We can well afford to do this since God is with us, and our life is bound up with Him in the bundle of life. Abigail reminded David that God would do to him all the good of which He had spoken, and would sling out his enemies as from a sling. So God will do for us; not one good thing will fail of all that He hath promised; no weapon that is formed against us shall prosper. Within a little, Nabal was dead, and David's wrong righted. So shall the evil that now molests us pass away. God will deal with it. Let us leave it to Him, and then we shall have nothing to regret.

THURSDAY, April 9.

"THEN SAID SAUL, I HAVE SINNED."—1 Sam. xxvi. 21.

The Apostle makes a great distinction, and rightly, between the sorrow of the world and the sorrow of a godly repentance which needeth not to be repented of. Certainly Saul's confession of sin belonged to the former; whilst the cry of the latter comes out in the 51st Psalm, extorted from David by the crimes of after years.

The difference between the two may be briefly summarised in this, that the one counts sin a folly and regrets its consequences, whilst the other regards sin as a crime done against the most Holy God, and regrets the pain given to Him. "Against Thee, Thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight."

Obviously Saul's confession was of the former description, "I have played the fool." He recognised the unkingliness of his behaviour, and the futility of his efforts against David. But he stayed there, stopping short of a faithful recognition of his position in the sight of God, as weighed in the balances of eternal justice.

Many a time in Scripture do we meet with that confession. The Prodigal and Judas, Pharaoh, David and Saul uttered it; but in what differing tones, and with what differing motives? We need to winnow our words before God, not content with using the expressions of penitence unless we are very sure that they are current coin of the Kingdom of Heaven.

FRIDAY, April 10.

"AND DAVID SAID, I SHALL NOW PERISH ONE DAY BY THE HAND OF SAUL."—1 Sam. xxvii. 1.

What a fit of despondency and unbelief was here! We can hardly believe that this is he who in so many Psalms had boasted of the shepherd care of God, who had so often insisted on the safety of God's pavilion. It was a fainting fit, brought on by the bad air he had breathed amid the evil associations of Adullam's cave. Had not God promised to take care of him? Was not his future already guaranteed by the promises that he should succeed to the kingdom? But nothing availed to check his precipitate flight into the land of the Philistines.

Bitterly he rued this mistake. The prevarication and deceit to which he was driven; the anguish of having to march with Achish against his own people; the sack and burning of Ziklag; these were the price he had to pay for his mistrust. Unbelief always brings so many other sorrows in its train!

Let us beware of losing heart, as David did. Look not at Saul, but at God, who is omnipotent; not at the winds and waves, but at Him who walks across the water; not at what may come, but at that which is, for the glorious Lord is round about thee to deliver thee; He shall deliver thy soul from death, thine eyes from tears, and thy feet from falling. He that has helped, will help. What He has done, He will do. God always works from less to more, never from more to less.

SATURDAY, April 11.

"BECAUSE THOU OBEYEDST NOT THE VOICE OF THE LORD, AND DIDST NOT EXECUTE HIS FIERCE WRATH UPON AMALEK, THEREFORE . . ."—1 Sam. xxxviii. 18.

Thus unforgiven sin comes back to a man. We cannot explain the mysteries that lie around this incident, but it is clear that in that supreme hour of Saul's fate, that early sin, which had never been confessed and put away, came surging back on the mind and heart of the terror-stricken monarch. He did not realise that even then the gates of God's love stood open to him, if only he would pass through them by humble penitence and faith; and he perished a suicide.

In strong contrast with this, let us put the assurance of the new covenant: "Their sins and iniquities will I remember no more." When God forgives, He blots out from the book of his remembrance. The sin is gone as a pebble in the ocean.

This was a sin of omission. The question was not what evil Saul had done, but the good he had failed to do. Let us remember that we need pardon for the sad lapses and failures of our lives, equally as for the positive transgressions. And if such things are not forgiven, they will lie heavy on our consciences when the shadows of death begin to gather around us. The New Testament especially judges those who knew and did not do, the slothful servant, the virgin without the oil, the priest that passed by on the other side.

Sheffield.—The King's Herald's Lodging-house Band is doing good work in the slums. Four houses are visited each week by a company of young men and women, and a Gospel service is held. At the monthly meeting, on Saturday last, an address was given by the hon. sec., Mr. A. Shipman, whose address is, Steelhouse-lane, Sheffield, on "How to Conduct an Evangelistic Meeting." During the past quarter over twenty Gospel addresses have been delivered to nearly 200 men and women in the various lodging-houses.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to UNCLE TOM, the Children's Editor, 12, Paternoster-buildings, London.

To My Young Friends.

AS this is the beginning of the second quarter, I must write a few lines to those of you who have recently joined in the "Bible Searching," as well as those who have answered the questions week by week since the beginning of the year.

The "Searcher" this week (No. 14) is the first one of the new series, in connection with the June prizes. As before, it will be necessary for all who wish to compete for them to appear in the weekly lists as correct at least NINE times between now and then.

I have been very much gratified during the past quarter not only at the increasing interest which my young readers have shown in this page, but also at the kind messages which I have received from them and their parents. It was rather an experiment at first, and I am so glad it has succeeded, and that in hundreds of homes the Sunday evening has now become a greater pleasure than before. I hope you will all do your best to help, and get others to join, because I am sure there are many more children who would be glad to do so if they only knew about it. If every boy and girl would get one more to join during this quarter I should be more than pleased, because I should like to make our weekly page useful to as many as we can possibly reach.

I suppose that during the summer months many of you will not be able to give so much time as you have done in the winter evenings, so I must remember not to make the questions too long. I find that some of you think they have "got harder" week by week, so I shall have to remedy that as well, I suppose.

One word more, especially to those (I don't think there are many, but I know of a few) who began very pluckily, but soon ceased sending in answers because they did not succeed in getting them right.

If at first you don't succeed,
Try, try, try again.

I expect you have heard that verse before; but never mind. I hope you will not only learn it but do it. I have found very often that the questions have not been properly understood by the little ones. If that is so, ask your parents the meaning of them first, and then you will be able to answer them better.

Now I must say good-bye and hope that you will all have a very pleasant Easter; and while you enjoy the holiday that it brings to many of you, do not forget why it is observed.

The Bible Searcher.

Answers to these competitions are acknowledged in two lists:—

1. Those received up to Monday morning, in the next Thursday's issue. 2. Those received later, in the one following.

But no answers can be dealt with which are received later than the Thursday morning following the issue in which the competition appears.

UNCLE TOM.

A Little Girl's Letter.

DEAR UNCLE TOM,—My little sister and I have been at our school nearly seven years. My dear mother and father brought us over in a big ship from Hyderabad, in India. We both looked so pale and thin, the heat was so great for us, and we used to sit on the ground and everyone laughed at us in England. In India we used to eat rice and bananas.

I am just eleven years old, and have not seen my parents for seven years. They are glad we like Scripture, and I send the paper to them. It takes us a long time to do some of the Searchers, and we laughed at your references to laziness and diligence. I don't think we can be lazy if we do your paper every week, Uncle Tom, besides all our other studies. —Your little friend,

MABEL TYERS.

Hot Cross Buns.

Hot Cross Buns!
One a penny, two a penny,
Hot Cross Buns!

SUCH was the old-fashioned cry. B, U, N, S, buns —four letters, and we will put each letter for a word, and with them make four sentences of four words each, a word for each quarter of the bun.

Two preachers were once put in prison, and in prison they sang; and God was so pleased with them that He shook the prison with an earthquake. This so frightened the jailor, that he ran in crying, "What must I do to be saved?" They replied with a word beginning with the first letter in Buns.

"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved" (Acts xvi. 31).

So we will write on bun No. 1, "Believe on Jesus Christ." What is it to believe on Him?

There was once a preacher, named Peter Miller, who had a great enemy. This enemy got condemned to death, and Peter walked sixty miles, to Philadelphia, to get General Washington to pardon him. All he could say in his favour was, "He is my greatest enemy." The pardon granted, he walked another fifteen miles to stay the execution. The wicked man was being led to the scaffold when he arrived, and, mistaking his errand, said, "There's old Peter Miller come to have his revenge in seeing me hung." When he learned what he had come for, wouldn't he believe in Peter Miller? And cannot we believe in Jesus, who has come all the way from heaven to bring us a pardon?

One Good Friday I addressed nearly 1000 children who had been told by their teachers they should have a bun each. They believed, came, and had two buns and an orange apiece. If we believe Jesus we shall get what He promises, and more.

Now for our second letter U, and on a second bun we will write, "Be Under Jesus Christ."

Suppose a little boy were to have the cane, but just as the stroke is falling the master put out his own great hand and received the blow. The little hand underneath would escape. This Jesus does. "Surely He hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows: yet we did esteem Him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But He was wounded for our transgressions; He was bruised for our iniquities; and the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with his stripes we are healed." (Isa. liii. 4, 5).

Here is a little threepenny bit, precious, but so small he is likely to be lost. Here is a big half-crown brother. How kindly he covers his small relation. We are precious, but so small. Therefore to keep us from being lost, Jesus covers us, and if we are under Him, God will not see our littleness, but the greatness of his Son.

Two firemen were once at a burning building, when a wall was likely to fall.

"When it comes down what shall you do?" asked one. "Run under that staircase," was the reply.

"I shall stand under that pillar," said his mate.

When the wall fell it crashed the staircase with it, and he who was under it perished; the pillar stood firm, and as the brickwork struck it, the masonry parted and fell on either side of him who hid beneath it. Jesus is such a pillar. He bears what we cannot bear, and so saves us.

Upon our third bun, N, we will write, Neglect not Jesus Christ. He lives. In the winter six boys were playing upon the canal, when the ice broke, and they were all in danger of drowning. A brave little chap rescued them all; but on the way home he fell into the canal himself and was too weak to get out. Had he lived, surely these boys he saved would not have neglected to thank him. Have we thanked Jesus?

A little girl knelt in an open-air meeting before all the people, and said—

"Lord Jesus, I want to give my heart to you, and be your little lamb for ever."

She did not neglect Jesus, though only six and a-half years old.

If uncle comes and brings a bag of buns, you do not keep him knocking at the door, or neglect to speak to him. Why neglect Jesus?

If we have understood the B, the U, and the N, we may write on our fourth bun S the words, Saved by Jesus Christ.

Now, let us look at our four buns, and repeat the mottoes written in their four corners.

No. 1. B—Believe on Jesus Christ.

No. 2. U—Be Under Jesus Christ.

No. 3. N—Neglect not Jesus Christ.

No. 4. S—Saved by Jesus Christ.

By believing in Peter Miller the man was saved from execution. By being under the pillar, the fireman was saved from death. By not neglecting to believe in Jesus and be under Jesus, we shall be saved from sin.

"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved" (Acts xvi. 31).

"Whosoever believeth in Him shall receive remission of sins" (Acts x. 43).

"How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?" (Heb. ii. 13).

As a Little Child.—2.

"Please, take care of Yourself, God."

LITTLE five-year-old Dorothy knelt at her mother's knee, and said her evening prayer. She had asked God to bless all that she cared for—father, mother, sister, pussy, and the tame white mouse. Then she paused, and a perplexed expression shadowed her fair brow. But it was gone immediately, and her face was full of gladness and love as she added, "And please take care of yourself, God." Evidently in a dim way she felt that her prayer had been entirely taken up with asking for good things for herself and her dear ones, but she had done nothing, offered nothing. "Take care of yourself, God," was her childish way of saying that she did not want all the wealth of blessing showered upon her, while the Great Giver received nothing but empty outstretched hands.

"Take care of yourself, God." We older folks are too often wanting in the spirit which dictated the strange little petition. Our prayers for the most part savour too much of the nature of deputations to some high official authority, who has the power to redress our wrongs and lighten our troubles, if only we can sufficiently interest Him in our cause. We crave everything. We ask everything. But "Take care of yourself, God," or in other words, "Hallowed be thy name," seldom come from our lips with the fervour with which we pray, "Give us this day our daily bread."

Yet, if we only knew it, there is a deep, rich joy in flinging ourselves at the feet of Him who has given us all things, and who will care for us more carefully than we can imagine; and in a devout longing that He will "care for Himself," and for the glory of his name in his dealings with us.

Rev. W. H. Aitken in Canada.

IN a recent letter with respect to his labours in North America, Mr. Aitken says:—

The work at Halifax increased in interest and extent as the mission went on, until, at the end, the place was a good deal stirred. A very large number of cards were given away at the closing service, and much most encouraging testimony was offered to blessing received. It was about 11 p.m. before we could bring that very happy service to a close.

In no city that I have visited were the clergy more united in their support of the mission than in St. John's, New Brunswick, and to that circumstance I attribute, under God, to a great extent, the large blessing that followed there. I do not think that in any place I have ever visited so many have stayed to the after-meetings, in proportion to the congregation. I shall always look back on this mission at St. John's as one of the most remarkable that I have ever taken part in; the interest seemed to deepen from day to day, until, towards the end, we were besieged with inquiring souls, who came nominally to apply for memorial cards, but in a large number of cases to seek for spiritual guidance and assistance. The mid-day services for business men were better attended than any other similar services that we held in Canada, and I think that they produced a very considerable impression. Amongst the most regular and deeply interested attendants at the mission services was one of Canada's veteran statesmen, Sir Leonard Tilley, who for many years was Finance Minister under the late Sir John Macdonald. No public man in Canada has had a better or more blameless record, and though he has now entirely withdrawn from political life he is still to-day one of the best known public men in Canada. We gave away between 600 and 700 memorial cards of the mission, and the proportion of those who professed that with them it had been a time of finding a peace to which they were strangers before was unusually large.

Mr. Stephens not only did very satisfactory work amongst the children and young people during this mission, but also had some most useful work in a church across the water, where he held a distinct mission during the first week.

By the time this mission ended we began to feel as if rest would be sweet, for we had had no interval of repose since we commenced at Montreal, and I had preached or spoken publicly nearly 170 times in sixty days. So we fled to Quebec for a little quiet and rest. We had three clear days of rest, and then set off again on our travels, having greatly enjoyed our brief visit to the old historic capital of Canada. It is now almost entirely a French and a Roman Catholic city, as the Protestant population is steadily diminishing, and the others have everything pretty much their own way.

We commenced our work at Ottawa the following Saturday. It was a great experiment attempting a mission at such a time of the year, and no doubt the season and the very inclement weather told against us somewhat at the beginning. But the work, hopeful from the first, became more and more encouraging as the time wore on. The weather during a greater part of the time was really terrible. On the Watch night, with an almost Siberian temperature, it was blowing a terrific gale, and the large congregation that assembled under such unfavourable conditions was in itself a witness to the hold that the work was taking on the people. The work became most intensely interesting during the latter days of the mission, and as far as man could judge these two missions were the most unmistakably successful of all that we conducted on our tour.

I am sorry I cannot speak as hopefully about the work at Toronto as about any other mission that we held. I think this was perhaps not difficult to explain, but nothing could be gained by attempting to explain it. It will be wiser thankfully to acknowledge that good was done, though not as much as we had fondly hoped for. The disappointment that are hoping for a good harvest week. Mr. Stephens, who had a most successful work at Ottawa amongst the children, was laid aside for a week at the close of that mission with a painful indisposition. He recovered, however, sufficiently to help in the second week at Toronto, and is now working by himself in Canada, at the city of St. Thomas. Two missions still lie before me, and perhaps a third, ere I set my face homeward. I hope that we shall still have the earnest prayers of yourself and your readers.

Manchester Refuges.

THE twenty-sixth report of the Manchester and Salford Boys' and Girls' Refuges and Homes and Children's Aid Society is a record of steady progress in work beset with many difficulties and discouragements. The Central Refuge, with its family of over a hundred boys, is a hive of industry; and in addition to many Homes and Shelters, there are departments of work for various classes, youthful and adult. During the year 2787 children were dealt with, and helped on the journey of life. As many as 284 were permanently admitted to the Institution, being added to the 430 who were in the Refuge and Homes when the year began; so that a total of 714 were under care and training during 1895.

The report gives some account of the different efforts. The Open-Day-and-Night Shelter, at Chatham-street, Piccadilly, has proved very useful, as many as 450 young people between the ages of three and eighteen being received. The chief authorities of Manchester used the Shelter largely; the police thus avoiding the introduction of all and sundry juvenile offenders to prison associations, and the School Board officers helping in rescue work as well as educational progress. "I saw the red lamp, and found the door open, so I went in," was the remark of one poor girl, a type of many others, to whom the Shelter proved "a door of hope" into a new and better life. It proved such also to M. W., a fine strong girl of seventeen, who applied, telling a strange story of ill-usage and wandering through various parts of Lancashire. She arrived here utterly friendless and penniless, and investigation showed that she had escaped from very dangerous surroundings in a neighbouring town. Fatherless and motherless, with a violent temper and a strong, unruly will, the future for M. looked indeed dark; but, though she lost from these causes the first place obtained for her, another chance was given. Miss Smethurst's last report of M. is, "She has now held her situation for twelve months, and though temper is still the trouble, thank God she is overcoming it." The Rosen Hallas Home, with its laundry work and training, is the valued complement of the Shelter.

The Prison Gate Mission provided breakfasts for 9896 persons, two-thirds of them males, the remainder females.

On the subject of emigration the report says:—"We sent 103 boys and girls to Canada, who were placed with Canadian farmers. We have now been the means of placing over 1000 poor children in new homes in the West, and on no branch of their work do the committee reflect with greater thankfulness." The year's income, £12,841, rather more than met the expenditure, so that the debit balance of £1213 with which it began was reduced to £1139.

we suffered there has been compensated by the good news that has reached us since of the blessed work that God was pleased to use our beloved brother, Rev. George (Irubb), to do there; we rejoice to find that Toronto did not miss a big blessing after all, though it did not come through us. Of our last mission in Canada we can speak very hopefully. It was in the neat, pretty little town of Woodstock. There was much to be thankful for there, though perhaps we did not reach the high water mark of blessing attained in some other places. It was what I should call a good average mission.

I am now working with much encouragement in a fashionable suburban church in New York. We are just beginning our second week's work, and

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, WESTBOURNE GROVE.

FOR a quarter of a century the Christian pastor whose portrait we give to-day has been a well-known figure in the Presbyterian world of West London. After more than forty years' honest, earnest service in the ministry of the Gospel, Dr. Walter Morison is now stepping down from public office, and passing into the more leisured and reposeful arena of private life. The congregation at Westbourne Grove, to whom Dr. Morison has ministered in holy things these five-and-twenty years, have not allowed him to retire from the active pastorate without carrying with him a very tangible token of their esteem and affection. At a meeting of the church on Wednesday evening last week he was not only the recipient of many complimentary verbal tributes, but there was handed to him a cheque for £1000. Some account of this interesting pastoral valedictory will furnish the leading events and characteristics of Dr. Morison's public life and work.

The meeting was of course chiefly congregational in its composition, but a number of the doctor's ministerial brethren testified by presence and speech their deep interest in the proceedings of the evening. The president was Mr. Justice Stirling, whose clear-cut, mobile, and placid features are so pleasantly familiar to all frequenters of the Chancery Division of the Royal Courts of Justice. His Lordship, in a very neat and appropriate little address, told how four decades had gone since he first heard Mr. Morison preach in a country church near Glasgow at the very beginning of his career. Shortly after that he was settled ten years in the town of Ayr. When the vacancy arose in Westbourne Grove church twenty-five years ago, Mr. Morison was strongly commended for the post by the late Dr. Robson, of Glasgow, among others. In the result he removed from Glasgow, where he had been labouring for some seven years, to London, where he has passed his longest and his last pastorate. Mr. Justice Stirling then referred to the active life which their pastor had led, not only in pulpit and congregational work, but in the church courts of the denomination, and in the wider fields of literature. His weekly pulpit ministrations had always been marked by earnestness; while he had also kept closely in touch with the great intellectual movements of his time, and had sought to influence them in right directions. Now after a long and arduous pastorate the time had come when he felt that he needed to seek relief from the regular duties of the office. While deeply regretting that they had to sever the official tie which had subsisted so long, his congregation did so with feelings of deepest gratitude for his past services, and with their best and most prayerful good wishes for the future of his life.

The speeches that followed were all in the same vein—full of expressions of personal regard and of appreciation as to the work of Dr. Morison's forty years' ministerial career. Dr. David McEwan, of Clapham, eloquently spoke of the close intermingling of his own life with that of his friend—first at college, then as preceding him at Ayr, and for twenty-one years past as a fellow presbyter in London. With the renewed vigour which greater retirement will impart, he hoped that Dr. Morison would yet have many years' valued service before him in the cause of Christ. Rev. P. Carmichael, of Highburv.

testified in most appreciative and happy terms to Dr. Morison's influence as a man and as a preacher, and exhorted the younger friends in the congregation to use well, in the great coming battles for truth and right, those spiritual weapons which their pastor had, through his ministry, put into their hands. Rev. A. Jeffrey, of Stratford, bore testimony to the high worth of Dr. Morison's services, outside his own congregation, in all matters bearing on religious freedom and the best interests of the community.

The chief event of the evening was reached when Mr. Henry Robson, in the name of the church and congregation, presented Dr. Morison with the cheque for £1000. Before doing so, Mr. Robson rehearsed the main features of the pastorate now virtually terminated, making special reference to the clear expositions and earnest enforcements of Divine truth which the people had heard from Sunday to Sunday, as well as the lofty standard of spirituality and of literary ability shown in the discourses. As a pastor and as a friend, Dr. Morison had held a high place in all their hearts; and they could not forget Mrs. Morison's unobtrusive but real services in the help of the poor and suffering. With the handsome cheque Mr. Robson also handed to the pastor a silver inkstand, hoping that it might often be used in excursions "through the postern gate" of poetry, now that greater leisure would be at Dr. Morison's command. The pastor's reply, made under the influence of deep emotion, was altogether admirable—full of gratitude to God and to his flock; expressing consciousness of shortcomings in past service, though it had been honestly rendered; and hoping that opportunity would still be afforded him, as pastor emeritus, of helping the congregation and the church generally.

Other ministerial brethren added words of esteem and goodwill, and the proceedings were altogether of a pleasing kind for a farewell occasion. Dr. Morison, who finally retires in May, will be followed into non-official life by the prayers and hearty good wishes of many friends. His present assistant, Mr. Clark, is spoken of as a young man of high pulpit gifts, and presumably he will be formally elected to the pastorate.

The Queen has forwarded £200 to the C.E.T.S., to be used in the furtherance of temperance work.

Lord's Day Rest Association.

THE Working Men's Lord's Day Rest Association defends one of the many precious heritages of British Christians, and witnesses against one of the most hurtful tendencies of modern materialism. One of the many services performed by the Association is the diffusion of knowledge as to the observance of the Lord's Day, with the result that those who love God's Holy Day are able with intelligent interest to advance its claims upon the community, as the birthright of the weary toiler, the "pearl of days," fraught with blessing for all.

The thirty-ninth annual meeting of members and friends was held on Thursday last at the Y.W.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, Mr. John Jenkins in the chair. The secretary, Mr. Charles Hill, read a brief report, which opened with expressions of regret that the House of Commons should have adopted a resolution in favour of opening the national museums and galleries on the Lord's Day. Other items in the report were:—"The London County Council has prohibited the playing of cricket on Sundays in the parks. The average attendance of the Guildhall Loan Exhibition of Pictures on Sundays in 1894 was 2921. In 1895 the average Sunday attendance had fallen to 1518. A proposal to open the Guildhall as a promenade on Sundays was defeated in the Common Council. At Ipswich the Sunday opening of the museum and reading-room has been a complete failure, and both have been now closed. This makes twenty towns where the Sunday opening of museums, etc., has failed, and been followed by Sunday closing.

"Many classes of tradesmen—the barbers and bakers, the cabmen, newsvendors and railway servants, theatrical artistes and musicians—are feeling more and more the pressure of Sunday labour. The Association has worked much through the press—177,000 publications have been issued. Important movements for Sunday rest are being made in India. Germany has sent a commission to inquire into our Sunday laws. France has enrolled more than 4000 members in its Sunday Rest League. Japan has 600 newspapers and periodicals, not one of which is published on the Lord's Day. The income of the past year has been £1234 10s. 7d.; and we commenced the year with a balance of £162 8s. 9d."

In the course of a vigorous address, Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOW said that if the recent resolution of Parliament should arouse the people of Great Britain to action in defence of the Lord's Day, it will not prove an unmitigated evil. Christians must not be terrorised by the cry that they are insisting upon a piece of Jewish ceremonial law, when standing up for an institution which God gave to mankind at large, and which has proved such an unspeakable blessing to Englishmen. He advised the Association to rise to the needs of the present crisis, and send able men throughout the land to lecture on the Lord's Day, and to awaken public interest in the subject while it is yet possible for Sabbath rights to be conserved. Mr. A. A. Woods was grieved to say that a hostile vote in the Common Council was carried by the help of professing Christians. He urged the Association to make a special endeavour to bring home the importance of Sabbath observance to the youth of the Christian Church.

Addresses were also delivered by Rev. Richard Roberts, Mr. John Cockram, and Alderman R. Cory. A resolution was adopted, appealing to Her Majesty's Government not to adopt a Sunday Opening policy, and a memorial with the same object was signed by the chairman, on behalf of the meeting.

National Industrial Home for Crippled Boys, Woolsthorpe House, Wright's-lane, Kensington, W.—The thirtieth annual report tells of eighty-eight inmates. During last year twenty-six boys left the home after completing their three years' training, twenty-one of whom are now in good situations, and earning their living at the trades they were taught. The religious, moral, physical, and industrial education of the boys has been carried on as usual. The secular education was such as to ensure gratifying reports from the inspectors. With respect to finance the institution is gradually getting into safer waters. After paying the whole of the current expenses of the year, in addition to reducing the debt on building from £1,250 to £600, there was a balance in hand of £120 5s. 9d. on December 31.

The Easter Vigil; OR, "THE FRIENDS OF GOD."

IT was Easter Eve as to time, and the heart of London city as to place. The air was sharp and bracing; the streets were bright and clean; the shops were gay with their exhibitions of spring clothing, and others were full of the good things of this life—nothing seemed wanting to a people's happiness and prosperity. Everything was touched with the spirit of newness; it was the resurrection of Nature.

A young man stepped out of an office into the fast-crowding streets, locking the door behind him.

"Ah, no more business for three days! Good-bye to ledger, cash-book, journal, foreign correspondence. Grind, grind! I wish——"

The soliloquy was abruptly cut short by his coming in contact with a pedestrian as preoccupied as himself. He looked up.

"Ah!" cried a cheery voice. "You live in the clouds. What a fellow you are! A penny for your thoughts."

"Siegfried—thou! Yes, I was among the fjords of our dear land, though my body is in Cheap-side," replied Olaf.

Olaf Hartvigsen had just opened a navigation office, and Siegfried Jansen dealt in medical oils. They had been students at the same university, and were kindly-hearted, simple-living men, enjoying life thoroughly in the best sense, and both were sincere Christians.

"I wonder," said Olaf, who had a vivid imagination, "if there are many as happy as we to-day, my friend! How many miss the true joy of the season through not knowing, as we know Him, the Lord of all!" "Ah," said Siegfried, "I should have known as little as others had not our Lord sent you to me as his messenger. My laundress has a little son who is very ill—dying—and she asked me to go and see him, for she was disturbed about him. But he was asleep when I went, so I promised to go again this evening. Will you accompany me?" "Certainly! But how did the woman think you could benefit her child?" asked Olaf.

"Ah, now do not laugh at me, but I sometimes slip in with my collars a little book, or a line of promise, something to help her, perhaps; and she is always very pleased, and tells me they comfort her."

"Gentlemen," said the poor laundress, as she met them later, "I doubt if you can do any good. The doctor gives but little hope, and I have all my work to take home—how can I sit with my child? He needs watching, yet I have no friend to leave here."

"Look upon us as friends, Mrs. Ward," said both young men, "the clear air and a little walk will do you good. We will take every care of the boy, as you shall see. We cannot spend Easter Eve better than in doing as our Master would do. He will be glad to be remembered in this way."

The woman looked incredulous, as if she rather doubted the mental balance of her visitors. She said, "I knew as Mr. Jansen were one of the good sort—he so often puts little comforty bits in for me. Not as I can always understand them, making no pretence of being religious myself, for I'm nowadays perfect, as I know." So saying, she left the two benefactors, while she arranged her parcels of work for her several customers.

When Johnny Ward opened his eyes after a troubled feverish sleep, they rested upon the two friends. In a bewildered way he spoke. "Ah, you're the new doctors; 'taint no use, I'm goin', and I'm goin' Home!"—there was such rapture in the voice—"but I do want to know 'bout Jesus, Him as I read about in Mr. Jansen's little books; and mother, she can't tell me nuffin." He rambled on, and as the friends tried to calm him by gentle words, soothing remonstrances, and loving reminders from the words of Jesus, he suddenly said, in a low voice, "You knows my Jesus! You knows all about Him, and I knows such a little bit! Tell me more."

"How much do you know, dear boy?" asked Olaf. "Jesus loves me, that I know"; "I am the Good Shepherd"; "Jesus called a little child unto Him," and a little story what I read, as said as how He did love boys, and wanted 'em to come to Him to be made like Himself. But I want to know why?"

"Johnny, you know a great deal about Jesus. He wants you to know Himself; and the reason He loves you and me is because we are sinners, and He is the Saviour who longs to save us." Siegfried's voice was very tender as he spoke.

"Then I want Him to save me," gasped the poor child, "I stole Ned White's marbles, and I cheated at sums, and I've done lots of things I shouldn't if I'd 'a' knowed as He cared. Won't you ask Him to save me as well?"

They feared excitement would prove fatal, but they could not hush his cries, or silence his pleading voice. At last, the mother, returning, found both young men kneeling by the bedside in prayer. They spoke to God as to a well-loved friend, and they asked, not for the life of the child, but that he and his mother might know the power of God's love to save sinners. They remained kneeling as the clock struck the hour of midnight, for they hoped that a solemn silence might quiet the boy. They were startled at his crying out, "Mother, these is the friends of God; they knows all about Him! Oh, mother, they've told me everything, and I shall get well, and we'll all be God's friends, and you, too."

The poor laundress was overwhelmed—to see her child already, as she fancied, better; to hear herself prayed for as she had been; to listen to her child's words, were all too much for her after a very hard day's work and a long evening's walking; she sat down by her child's bedside and wept.

"Oh, gentlemen," she said, through her sobs, "you are indeed the friends of God, as my Johnny says! And you prayed for me so that I can see myself a sinner."

It was the hour past midnight, and Johnny grew worse. His mother could do nothing for weariness, sorrow, and dread. She let Olaf and Siegfried have their way in everything, and as the latter had very good medical skill, she felt her child was in good hands.

They read passages of Holy Writ to the tired mother, and then she, too, slept. When she awoke, at six o'clock, to a newly-found happiness, they felt that their Easter vigil was indeed accepted of God.

"I know now what salvation is," cried the joyful woman; "for I know Christ as my Saviour from sin."

As they were leaving, the child awoke, and, calmly speaking, said, "Friends of God, I shall get well. I heard you praying for me, but I could not speak. Mother, I'm so happy. I shall never cheat or lie again."

He recovered, and ran about early in the summer. When the two friends again visited the widow and her son, they found she had called in a lonely neighbour—one hitherto despised—to rejoice with her.

"Ah, sirs," she said, "if two gentlemen like you could spend hours in watching your poor washer-woman's child, only God's love could cause you to do it."

M. B. GERDS.

Fox Court School & Mission.

IN a dismal corner between Leather-lane and Gray's Inn-road, on the border line of the City, a few earnest souls were stirred in 1846 to attempt something on behalf of the children, rioting in ignorance, neglect, and entire contempt of law and righteousness. The state of things in this colony of wretchedness was at this time simply deplorable. Since then the whole district has been remodelled, ranges of ruinous old dwellings have been swept away, and thus the character of the place has been altered. But still there are several back streets and narrow courts where poverty and recklessness hide themselves, and where the children need a helping hand, loving care, and Christian teaching. The quiet work begun in a little back room has gone on and developed into the Fox Court Ragged School Mission, which has done and is doing a genuine and useful work. The first public meeting in connection with the school was held on the 28th February, 1853, in the Inquest Court, at St. Andrew's Church, Holborn. The then Lord Mayor presided, and in his address urged strongly the necessity for a day school, and volunteered to open it, which later on he did. New buildings opened in 1884 gave a fresh and healthful impetus to the whole operation.

The jubilee of this institution was held last week in the fine old historic Benchers' Hall of the Society of Gray's Inn. Mr. Justice Gainsford Bruce took the chair. After a tea, given to parents and friends of the children, a public meeting was held, in which bright addresses were interspersed with songs. The Chairman, in a brief but forcible address, urged the claims of this excellent Mission.

The report, read by Mr. THOMAS FAGG, the secretary, gave the story of the origin, glanced at past experiences, and indicated many signs of blessing in scholars grown up and serving the Lord. The present work is described as vigorous and encouraging. There is much need of additional teachers and workers in all departments, both amongst adults and children.

Alderman R. MELVILLE BEACHCROFT, a tried friend of the school, made a strong plea on its behalf as one who has seen and known its happy issues in renewed and useful lives.

Mr. JOHN KIRK followed with a brief review of what Ragged Schools had done for London in helping and saving the children of the poor, in leading large numbers to the Saviour, and fitting them for useful and industrious lives.

During the evening the Chairman made a presentation to Mr. Fagg, who for forty years had been connected with the school as secretary and general superintendent. The presentation took the form of a silver tea and coffee service, accompanied by an illuminated address. In recognition of the services of Mr. Fagg's daughters, a set of books was presented to those ladies.

Bible Class Union.

THE members of the Bible-classes comprising this Union recently held their spring social gathering at Exeter Hall. About 500, representing at least forty-two London business houses, came to tea, and the public meeting at seven was one of the largest ever held. Lord Kinnaird presided, and helpful addresses were given by Revs. Marcus Rainsford, jun., and H. E. Stone.

A short report of the work was read, showing that during 1895 seven houses had joined the Union, and a branch had been formed of the amalgamated classes at St. Albans. In fifty-five London warehouses Christian work is going on week by week by means of Bible-classes, devotional meetings, and Dorcas societies. Although outside agencies are necessarily debarred from free access into the houses, by invitation of the secretaries, ministers and others are permitted (with very few exceptions) to address the young people collectively in their own establishment. This privilege is largely due to the Union's operations.

Ladies and gentlemen desirous of starting classes in their houses of business, or needing assistance in sustaining those already existing, are invited to communicate with the central secretary, Mr. F. Phillips, 11, Vere-street, London, W.

Work Among the Lost.

THE BRIDGE OF HOPE.

"OH, Miss, if you'd look after us girls as you look after the sailors, you'd save some of us from this horrible life"—so said a wild wayward wastrel of Rateliff Highway to one who was seeking to save. It might have been forgotten as a chance remark, but to the worker it sounded as the wail of a sinking soul, and her reply was, "By God's grace, you will never say so again." This unexpected appeal aroused longings after these lost ones, which proved the germ of that remarkable rescue work carried on under the title, The Bridge of Hope. Beginning in 1879, it has been the means of clearing away many of the vilest houses, of saving many lost girls, of rescuing large numbers of children from an awful life, and of putting heart of hope into hundreds of despairing and friendless women. The one small room in Princes-square has grown into a large Refuge—one too large for the work going on inside—and a byway of evil fame seems transformed.

Last week I found Miss Steer, who has devoted herself to this trying and toilsome service, deeply engrossed in unravelling the twisted threads of sadly wasted lives, a task demanding patience and persistence by reason of the untrustworthiness and wilfulness of some of the girls concerned.

THE NIGHT SHELTER.

To an onlooker the work seems to divide itself into the Night Shelter, the Refuge, and the Children's Homes—that is the Rescue and the Preventive branches. In the Shelter the fishing work is done in gathering from amongst those driven to seek a night's shelter girls willing to accept a chance of escape. No part of the whole work has given Miss Steer and her helpers more anxious thought than this. Experience has shown the evil wrought by shelters, which may simply encourage wrong-doers by providing for them a retreat when "down on their luck." Amongst these there are many of an utterly reckless class, who care for nothing if they can get a few coppers daily for gin. These will try to spend three nights in one shelter, then in the casual ward, then some other shelter, and so drag on, propagating disease, and getting into a frightful condition. "Against this we set our faces; those we receive we want to help and save."

The principle now acted upon is to receive any miserable homeless creature who comes for the first time. Next morning each new comer is interviewed, and if after earnest and loving entreaty she resolves on going her own way, she cannot be detained, but is not again admitted, unless good cause be shown. If she seems sincere, she has a chance. Often a girl who has refused to stay at first asking, will come again after a time and seek admission to the Refuge. There are of course endless varieties of circumstances. Numbers are simply friendless, helpless women—not vicious, but shiftless—many of these are helped into ways of well-doing.

THE REFUGE AND HOME.

But amongst these come pitifully ruined young girls, whom the workers regard as their peculiar charge. No pains are spared win their confidence and to save them. From such—though alas! many turn a deaf ear—the Refuge is filled. A bath, a little attention, sadly needed, and they are admitted to the Refuge, to be classified, trained, disciplined, loved, and made to feel someone cares for them. They are taught to work—a novel notion to many—in household duties, the laundry, the sewing or woolwork room, as fitting, and all the while under gentle, firm, and wise supervision. The "demon of sin and lawless licence" is not cast out all at once it is a long, painful, tearful task; but in many hundreds of cases it has been abundantly successful. The ignorance shown by some is appalling. Many have not the faintest idea of what sin means, or why any particular action or line of conduct is wrong; seeming without moral perceptions of any kind. Such girls have to be dealt with in the plainest and simplest way—ordinary religious terms are to them quite incomprehensible.

This service demands peculiar gifts, and as Miss Steer says: "We have to train our own workers—none others can do it on the lines we have found successful." It is sore, hard, anxious work, abounding in disappointments, yet rich in reward; but, to quote Miss Steer once more: "We love the work, if only the Lord's people would leave us free to do it. What we do feel is to have to leave soul-saving work of this kind in order to plead for funds. Were the true outcome of such personal service fully understood, surely ample means would be forthcoming so that we might give our whole attention to the rescue of the perishing. The need is so great I grudge every moment spent in planning how best to find the money. These lost, ruined, betrayed girls claim our thoughts, our prayers, our entire and constant care."

That they benefit by such personal attention became increasingly apparent to me as I passed from room to room and found the inmates busy and contented, giving promise, most of them, that the horrible past is being forgotten, and that they will yet acquit themselves (as hundreds are doing now), a credit to the Bridge of Hope.

So much for the Refuge and Shelter in which, I should add, some eighty starving Board School children have a free breakfast many months in the year. Clothing is also given to shivering little ones. The workers are well supplied with girls' garments, but sorely lack old clothes for the boys.

THE CHILDREN'S COTTAGES.

A trip to Chingford completed my inspection of the Bridge of Hope operations. There I found five cottages occupied by some ninety little girls, rescued, in many cases, from the most awful life; some taken out of the vilest houses, others rescued by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children from torture and ill-usage. Here they are under motherly oversight, in small families, happy and loved, the past forgotten, the future bright. These cottages are "Regent's Park," largely helped by Mr. Gange's congregation at Regent's Park Chapel; "Hampstead" cottage, "The Cot," and "The Nest." In the schoolroom I heard the girls sing, and being permitted to address them, found them intelligent and responsive.

There are other cottages at Ticehurst, Crouch End, and Clapton, so that nearly 150 children are sheltered and cared for. All this means—considering whence they come—care, cost, and anxiety.

On all the diversified phases of this beautiful service for children one would like to dwell, but after all there is nothing like seeing, and visitors are most welcome. As I have already hinted, this large and intensely interesting work demands support. Its claims on all who pity the helpless, the betrayed, the fallen, are peculiar and pressing. It is to be hoped that many will have ears to hear, hearts to feel, and hands to give heartily and liberally. The address is Miss Steer, The Bridge of Hope, Betts-street, St. George's-in-the-East.

PEARL FISHER.

Tenit, Co. Kerry.—The report of last year's work among fishermen—Manx, Scotch, and English—records evangelistic and other effort attended by much encouragement. The meetings on board the Floating Bethel were well attended during the season, and many testified to blessing received. The reading-room is greatly valued. The hon. sec., Mr. Oliver H. McCowen, Nelson-street, Tralee, will be glad to hear from friends who may be able to supply it with illustrated papers or wholesome books.

St. Giles's Christian Mission.

A NEW DEVELOPMENT.

AMONGST the crowded poor in St. Giles, and the hosts who come within range of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, there are at all times large numbers who are weak and suffering, convalescent, and needing a change, which they cannot possibly afford. For such some provision has been made during past years, but now a bold and fresh departure has been made of a kind likely to commend itself to all. While recruiting for a few days at Hastings, Mr. Wheatley, the director of this mission, had his attention called by an officer of the police, who formerly had known and aided his work in London, to a large old-fashioned house in the High-street, splendidly adapted for a holiday or Convalescent Home, and to be had at a low rent, being remote from the newer and more aristocratic quarters of the town. After careful and anxious consideration, the house was secured and refitted for its new purpose.

The formal opening took place on Thursday last, when with a number of London friends, we travelled down to this lovely seaside resort to "assist" in the opening. We found the House admirably suited to its proposed use; being large, roomy, and airy. The garden in rear runs up the slope of the West Hill, and opens thereupon. The several dormitories for men, women, girls, and boys are spacious. The Home is plainly and economically contrived, yet comfortable and pleasant throughout.

The Mayor of Hastings, Major Stanley Weston, who presided, expressed his interest in the undertaking, told how, when he was a boy, this was a Mayor's residence, and heartily promised co-operation and aid so far as possible.

Mr. W. WHEATLEY touched on phases of the work of the St. Giles's Christian Mission, and showed the need for such a health resort for those unable to work from weakness, and equally unable to afford a change. After telling how he was led to this particular house, he gave a few details of the operations in London, and the benefits to be derived from a convalescent home.

Warm and sympathetic words followed by Mr. George Clark, long a worker in St. Giles, and now a resident in Hastings, Rev. W. R. Peacock, and others. The Home having been declared open for the reception of destitute sick, poor, and sickly children from St. Giles, the whole work was commended to God in prayer.

Any who wish to visit the Home will find it at 113, High-street, Hastings. Information may also be had from the London office of the St. Giles's Christian Mission, 29, Brooke-street, Holborn, E.C.

Dr. Pierson in Bristol.

AFTER having crowded meetings in Aberystwyth, on March 19 and 20, Dr. Pierson commenced a four days' mission in Bristol, by speaking to a large gathering of men in the Y.M.C.A. Hall on Sunday afternoon, March 22. In the evening Dr. Pierson preached in Broadmead Baptist Chapel. The pulpit stairs were used for seating accommodation while many were turned away unable to obtain admission.

Every evening, great gatherings assembled in the Y.M.C.A. Hall to hear addresses on spiritual subjects. Afternoon meetings for the public for ministers were also held. At the closing service, Mr. George Müller, of the Orphan Homes, Bristol, divided the service with Dr. Pierson. Mr. Müller spoke for over an hour, giving the history of his life as his testimony to the prayer-hearing and prayer-answering God. As the subject of the night was "Missions," Dr. Pierson pointed out, and emphasized the fact in connection with his closing address, that every great movement in advance the church had made at home and abroad was due to the united, fervent, and continual supplications of God's people; he implored those present to cry for a great revival in all departments of Christian work

Berlin Church Life.—I.

IT was not till 1560, nearly a generation after Luther's death, that Berlin, then containing 12,000 inhabitants, embraced the Reformed Faith. Berlin owes much of its prosperity to the kindly reception given by the Great Elector, in 1685, to the French Protestant exiles, and later to the Salzburg emigrants, whom Frederick William I. received no less cordially, meeting them at the Brandenburg Gate with bread and wine, in token of welcome. Encouraged by this, the persecuted Bohemians also threw themselves on the king's bounty, and they, too, found an asylum.

The Berlin churches are the plainest and fewest in number of any capital in Europe. The marriages of several Electors to Calvinistic princesses from the Low Countries, influenced not only their architecture, but their doctrines. Paul Gerhardt was banished from Berlin in 1656 for not conforming to the Reformed forms of worship, his noble hymn, "Befehl du deine Wege," being said to have been composed on his flight. Had Calvinism, that unfailing friend of constitutional liberty, predominated, as seemed likely then, would not things in Germany have been a little different to-day? Later, all the efforts of William III. to get the Lutheran and Reformed Churches to combine were in vain.

To anyone familiar with the high Lutheranism of Denmark, Pomerania, and Mecklenburg, the extreme simplicity of the Berlin service must be striking. When the communicants have resumed their seats, Psa. ciii. is sung, as in Scotland. Let us visit some of the churches, beginning with the Interim Dome, the old dome opposite the Schloss having been taken down to make room for the new. It is a large barn-like building. The Emperor and Empress sit in the side gallery; seat-holders have keys to their pews, so strangers must wait till the verger unlocks one. The Dome has four clergymen, and the Emperor appoints them. Visitors nowadays, have not the privilege of hearing Hof-predigers Koegel and Stoecker, whose oratorical gifts used to draw crowds—the former a very poet in the pulpit—and neither of them owing their popularity to attempts to make the narrow way broader than God has made it.

Herr Koegel was chaplain to the old Emperor, and retired in delicate health. The young Emperor, perhaps influenced by Herr Stoecker's anti-Semitic proclivities, passed him over in the choice of a chaplain, so he resigned, and joined the Stadt Mission. It was with difficulty the vacancies were filled, but Hof-predigers Kritzing, Faber, and Vierecke are all first-rate men, although they take the liberty of disregarding the Emperor's prescribed limits of twenty minutes for a sermon. Doubtless His Majesty's regular church attendance makes him think himself entitled to a say in the matter, he being four days running at church at Easter. The number of crowded services remind one of a Highland sacrament. There is liturgical Andacht on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday evenings, and the music is very grand. Great numbers communicate on Grün Donnerstag and Good Friday. What in Scotland is called joining the church, or confirmation, is far more general, and happens much earlier. No girl or boy would get work without their confirmation schein.

By following Matthäus Kirchen Weg in the Thiergarten, one reaches a great centre of religious life in the West-end, St. Matthew's. The aged Pastor Braun, a friend of missions, still draws large audiences, while Pastor Israels, a millenarian, and Pastor Fischer are no less beloved. And it is no mere gifts of oratory which conduce to this, as those hushed listeners to Pastor Fischer's spiritual addresses in a side hall at nine o'clock on Sunday mornings, and to Pastor Israels, at his Thursday night prayer-meetings, can testify. More faithful expositions of Gospel truth could nowhere be heard,

In St. Matthew's deaconesses are often set apart for service abroad, and on these interesting occasions the Empress is frequently present.

The great Garrison Kirche, with its hundreds of soldiers cramming galleries and side areas, is well worth a visit. The highest officers in the land, members of the Government, and of royal households, along with toiling men and women, gather strength for the battle of life from the burning words of the distinguished-looking occupant of this pulpit, Emil Frommel. Here, too, the simple word of life is the magnet which attracts this miscellaneous throng.

And now, in visiting the Dreifaltigkeits Kirche, we are treading on historic ground. This was Schleiermacher's church. He belonged to the Reformed Church and was one of the greatest scholars of Germany, and was the starting point of a new style of preaching, which in his followers, Tholuck, Julius Müller, etc., led to a revival of Reformation preaching, and to that of Tauler, Arndt, Spener, and Francke. And such a testimony was urgently needed then. The evil influence of "der alte Fritz," as Frederick the Great was called, upon religion, still lived, his friendship with Voltaire not being calculated to develop the religious side of his character, although latterly he deplored the falling away of the religion and morals of his people. Schleiermacher was the only city clergyman magnanimous enough to offer his pulpit to Gossner, then a fugitive, and did not object later to his wife frequenting his ministrations.

Dryander, at present pastor of the Garrison Kirche, Potsdam, is undoubtedly the most popular preacher of the day. It is only necessary to hear him once to dispel the illusion that all German theology is rationalistic. It is no cold intellectual essay, but earnest appeals to be reconciled to God, which kept weekly the vast audience that hung on his words, when I heard him four years ago.

Let us now cross the street to Gossner's Church. In the Latin inscription above the door, we read how Frederick William, I., in 1737, gave this "little Bethlehem" to the Bohemian exiles, as a spiritual "Brothaus" to hungry souls, the name being in memory of the chapel in Prague, where Huss was wont to preach. And a spiritual "Brothaus" it has proved to many outside, who failed to find what they needed in the rationalistic pulpits of the city; in fact, it has become a fount of blessing to the ends of the earth. Pastor Jaenicke was the son of an exiled weaver in Wilhelme Strasse. His pious mother said, "When reading the Bible secretly in the caves of Bohemia, I often vowed to be contented with bread and water, if only I might partake of the blessed sacrament according to the Lord's appointment, and now we have house, church, and school! How shall we ever forget the Lord's benefits?" "A fitting nursery for the future pastor of the Bethlehem"! In 1800 Jaenicke began to train artisan missionaries, and supplied the first men to the London Missionary Society. Gutzlaff, of China; Nicolayson, of Jerusalem; and the Albrechts who broke ground in South Africa in 1804, were his pupils. In 1805 the first Bible Society meeting was held in his church, and in 1815 the first anniversary of the Prussian Bible Society was celebrated in the Dreifaltigkeits Kirche. On Monday evenings he had rehearsals of his Bohemian and German sermons, so that any child might understand. These rehearsals, so much insisted upon by St. Paul, continue to this day. In a "Betsaal," hard by, with its tiny pulpit, gallery, and organ, earnest souls met several times weekly to study God's Word, and many who came to mock found a blessing there. Here, also, is held on Thursday evenings, at 7.30, that prayer meeting which has existed for a hundred and sixty years on the same night, and at the same hour! perhaps a solitary instance of the kind. Of Gossner, the successor of Jaenicke, it is needless to speak, he being well known to readers of "Praying and Working."

Converted Priests in France.

THE Œuvre des Prêtres Convertis, directed by Professor L. J. Bertrand, continues its deeply interesting mission. In the report for last year, we read that sub-committees in aid of the work have been formed in Switzerland and Holland. The specific object is to befriend such priests as feel the yoke of Rome to be a burden upon conscience. According to their temperament and qualifications, worthy ex-priests are helped out into independent life. Generally speaking, they are unable to do anything without assistance; at present, many who have been protégés of the Mission are engaged in commercial and other honourable occupations, and several are earnestly doing the work of an evangelist.

M. Bertrand says: "I have had visits and many letters from curés and abbés, to whom I have given advice and books. One of these inquirers is leaving the Romish Church. The number of curés dissatisfied with their church is constantly growing. These complain of the innovations and superstitions, of injustice and despotism. They say they cannot preach what they do not believe, but they cannot abandon their positions without a prospect of living outside. Many of these hesitating ones have seemed to me deserving of sincere sympathy, but it is impossible to find a situation for them while they still wear the cassock. Fewer unworthy and incapable men visited me last year than in 1894. They find us 'too stern' and, above all, 'too religious.' So much the better. I hope to be less troubled with them as time goes on."

M. Bertrand mentions the need of a refuge or home for priests who boldly throw up their all on conscientious grounds. The report also contains the text of the remarkable letter written by Abbé Bourrier to his bishop, and one by Abbé Bonhomme on his leaving the Roman Church. Communications regarding the work should be addressed to M. L. J. Bertrand, 86, Boulevard Bineau, Neuilly, Seine, France.

Evangelical Church of Italy.

DEAR SIR,—You will be glad to know that our 1895 accounts were balanced without a deficit. Nobody expected such a thing, as it was the worst of all bad years, owing to various trials which befel us, and which caused a larger expenditure. But I have always placed "Jehovah Jireh—the Lord will provide," at the head of our cash books, and all through these twenty-six years the Lord has stood true to his name, in which He has caused us to trust.

There was also during 1895 very nearly double the usual distribution of the Scriptures at our various churches—namely, 1134 Bibles and 1613 Testaments, and exactly one-third more than usual in the number of catechumen—namely, 500. This shows that God can use what seem to be untoward events for the furtherance of the Gospel.

Through the kind help of a Christian lady, our committee lately purchased a large piece of ground in Naples, on which to build suitable premises for our prosperous mission there. Finally, our place of worship in Milan was unconditionally restored to us in December last, and is now the centre of a blessed work under the pastorate of Signor Silva. The good Lord has seen fit to test our faith and patience, but with these and many other tokens of his favour I am sure your many readers will join with us and all our friends in grateful praise.—Yours sincerely,

Florence.

Drury Lane Working Girls' House.—

During last year much good work was done in connection with this institution: help took the form of providing a home for friendless working girls, whether in or out of employment, finding occupation for young servants in search of it, and bestowing care, food, and attention on the sick and suffering. As many as seventy-six working girls (including nine who remained over from 1894) were admitted as lodgers during the year, and for the greater number of these situations were found, while many received medical relief. The sewing class keeps up its numbers well; and the Sunday Bible class consists principally of senior girls, of whom from eighteen to twenty attend. The recreation class presided over by Lady Grantham is highly appreciated, and most beneficial. The matron is Miss Penning, 31, Stanhope-street, Drury Lane, W.C.

Imprisoned for Life.

SIR,—Not long ago I was walking beneath the high walls of a convent in this country. An unexpected opportunity arose of obtaining admission, accompanied by a relative of one of the nuns. In one of the walls of the room we entered was an iron grating some four feet square, with a shutter to it on the other side, before which we sat down. Presently we heard the unlocking of doors in the distance. The shutter was slightly opened, and the nun who had been permitted to receive us peered through this opening, and the conversation began.

Could this poor, frightened-looking creature, white as death, make any complaint to her relations? Could she tell of her longings to return to her former natural life of liberty, and to fly from the slavery she had so long endured?

Possibly, had there been no grating and shutter, but even then it would be no easy matter to formulate a complaint, for the Mother Superior was close at hand to hear every word and watch every movement.

How few of those who, day by day, pass and repass this convent, or any other similar institution, realise that the inmates are more truly prisoners, and deprived of bodily and mental liberty to a much greater degree, than the criminals in Her Majesty's prisons? What crime have they committed to deserve such treatment? None. By what law are British subjects so treated? But, sad to say, British indifference tolerates the carrying out in this country of the laws of the Roman Pontiff, with the result that Her Majesty's authority reaches to the door of the convent, but there the assumed authority of Leo XIII. confronts it with "thus far, and no further." Were the soldiers of France or Russia, as has been well said, to take possession of even one acre of British soil, the whole nation would be up in arms against them; but the emissaries of the Pope erect throughout Great Britain buildings which are really prisons, and hold them in such a way as to defy British authority.

It is almost incredible, but yet too true, that many of the inmates of a nunnery are virtually imprisoned for life without the possibility of release, no matter how earnestly they may desire it, despite the natural right of every law-abiding subject of the Queen to liberty. It does not alter the case that it is done in the name of religion, or that these women first entered the convent of their own accord. Many of them enter when only about sixteen years of age, little knowing what they do, only to discover when too late that they have in a fatal moment been deprived of their liberty, and left at the mercy of authorities responsible only to the Pope. Nuns, like the rest of Her Majesty's subjects, have a moral right to change their minds, and should have facilities afforded them to leave their prison if they see reason so to do.

Very occasionally a letter has gone forth from our prisoner in which there was some manifest hint of intense longing for liberty. How is it that friends without are so seldom made aware of the sorrows of the nun within? Because no letter, except by some oversight on the part of the authorities, is ever posted unless it has been scrutinised by the Mother Superior.

The nun of whom I write, and who was only to be seen behind iron bars, has more than once given hints of her desire to be freed from the terrible bondage. For many years she has not been permitted to lie flat on her back. Her couch is so ingeniously constructed that she can only rest in it with her knees almost doubled up to her chin, nor is she even allowed to repose in such a position for long together, for not infrequently during the dreary hours of the night, has she to arise to perform religious exercises.

In a report presented to our Parliament in 1874, it was shown that in every country in Europe, monastic and conventual establishments are subjected to restriction and state supervision, with the one exception of Great Britain. Consequently, in no country in the world probably have convents more rapidly multiplied than in this, so much so, that during the past forty years they have increased from fifty or sixty to over 500.

These are serious facts, and it is for our countrymen to carefully weigh them and to act upon them. —I enclose my card, and am, sir, your obedient servant,
EYE-WITNESS.

The Faith Mission in Scotland.

A LADY correspondent writes:—"I have seen some hundreds of real genuine Christian converts of the Faith Mission who are pursuing the ordinary avocations of life in this evil world of to-day—true witnesses to the power and grace of our wonderful Saviour.

"The Faith Mission workers, of whom there are at present about fifty, whose lives and time are wholly given up to the work, aim at quality rather than quantity. The Christian spirit in little as well as great things is made manifest, and self-sacrifice rather than any self-exaltation or aggrandisement are notable features of this soundly Christ-like undertaking. The largest collective sight of the Faith Mission I have yet seen was at my first acquaintance with it, at Rothesay Convention last autumn.

"In these days of multiplied conventions, in many ways this Rothesay one had a tone and character unusual, and of unique value; and most of all to my mind in the definite issue to which it led God's people of lives separated unto the Holy Ghost and his use.

"Some of the occasional District Conferences are full of the presence of God, where the deeper realities of spiritual life may be seen and heard of from living examples of the same, which, to say the least, is more convincing and refreshing than merely to expatiate on these sacred concerns. God has been pleased to reveal his Son in these people, as He did in St. Paul, and the same result follows. 'God is glorified in them,' though the measure and degree must ever differ. In one village in Fife it is interesting to find 'The Faith Mission' co-mingling its living waters with another stream set agoing years before its existence by a lady now in glory, who died before she saw the fruition of what she had planted. She was of French extraction, and lived in Edinburgh, well-known as a genuine Christian in her day. She left a small building in a quiet village in the country, where she hoped men and women possessed of God's Holy Spirit would, under his guidance, carry on his work.

"This unpretentious spot—well named 'The Mustard Seed,' bulks little in the sight of this world, but, strange as it may appear to some Christians even, the glory of the Lord fills that place and marvels of his grace are revealed there, for He reigns within its crowded walls as Saviour, Lord, and Teacher. When will we cease to limit the Holy One?

"In lowly places of meeting where the Lord is found, and in many humble homes in the land, there is a beauty and holy grandeur of character to be seen that rarely can be produced to the same degree where the glare and prestige of this world predominates.

"After such an education as this Mission affords, with its healthy development of life and work, it is not surprising to learn that many of those labourers are called further afield, and are being used for the glory of God in colonial or foreign service among the heathen and others. This Faith Mission was begun in Scotland ten years ago, first got firmly rooted there, and then the branches spread to Ireland and to some foreign countries."

The Bible and Colportage Society for Ireland, established in 1859, to circulate the Scripture and wholesome literature, held a meeting on Monday evening in Exeter Hall on behalf of the great work that was being done in the Sister Isle. Rev. W. Salmond gave some interesting details of the work carried on by the twenty-one agents employed, who were able to go among the people where no clergyman could. They attended fairs, took services for ministers, visited the sick and dying, and assisted in the work wherever they could. Rev. R. C. Hallows said the Irish were a religious people, they would bow to the name of Jesus, and then turn round and tell you to "go to hell." It was just six years ago since they started preaching in the streets, and in spite of all opposition, they had reaped golden fruits; he knew of 100 persons who had professed conversion during the past year, and not one of these had gone back again.

Almora Leper Asylum.

THE patriarch of our Asylum, Jai Bhan, died on February 20. Laid in a rude coffin, his burial was an affecting sight. The coffin was taken up by a few of his sorrowing friends, and carried up the winding path through the Asylum grounds; then down a tortuous path, across a ravine to the little spot where the bodies of the lepers who have died in the faith of Christ have been buried for several years past. Quite a number of simple tombs are rising up there, the laborious, loving work of mutilated leper hands that have wanted to show respect to those who have gone before.

Jai Bhan had not been so long an inmate as several others, nor had his Christian career been so extended; but, owing to his great age—eighty-seven years—and latterly his wonderful development in Christian character, he was looked up to with considerable reverence. When he entered the Asylum he was a Brahman, but he was not long in realising the love of Christ, and in turning to him with full purpose of heart, and that after he had reached the age of eighty. Latterly he suffered much from asthma, and was sorely tried, but he bore up most cheerfully and patiently, and looked forward with great expectancy to entering his heavenly home. Up to within a few weeks of his death he had full use of his faculties of hearing, sight, and speech, and used them in the Master's service. He was regularly in his place at the services, and always ready with sound advice for any of his fellow-sufferers who might be inclined to grumble and quarrel. We laid him to rest, repeating the words of great hope which have echoed down the ages since the Apostle said, "The dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed; for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."

One of the most recent of our admissions and conversions is a young lad of about fourteen years of age, who was baptized last October, on renunciation of idolatry and confession of faith in Jesus. His confession was very clear, and his knowledge of Christianity was more extensive than usual, causing us to wonder how it was that he knew so much. We found that a woman leper who died in the asylum a year or so ago had belonged to his village, and occasionally revisited it, for a day or two at a time, as a few sometimes do, after being admitted to the Asylum. On these occasions she had told her fellow-villagers what she had heard of the Lord Jesus Christ, and how the love of God had come into her heart. This poor boy had remembered what she said on these occasions, and when he, becoming a leper, too obtained admission to the Asylum, he had no difficulty in following the teaching, and was soon ready to see in Jesus his Saviour, and to accept Him as such. He, poor lad, is already terribly scarred and crippled in body; but in his soul now dwells a hope which lifts him out of the putrefying flesh, and helps him, though dimly, yet to realise a glorious transformation in the heavenly kingdom.

Will some of our dear friends in England and elsewhere come to our help again, as they did some years ago, and provide the needed funds to carry on this very Christ-like work? Help is urgently needed to give to the largest number we can the benefits of the institution. Expensive grain, owing to dry weather, and a scanty harvest, is daily increasing our debt and anxiety. Gratitude to God for health and freedom from such a dire disease should induce many to come to the help of suffering lepers.

Revival at Nottingham.

LAST Sunday was concluded a most encouraging mission by the Brothers Weaver at Nottingham. It was indeed a time of gracious visitation. A very large number of names were taken of those who publicly confessed their faith in Jesus Christ.

The Albert Hall, seating 3000 people, was every Sunday crowded to excess, sometimes half-an-hour before the hour of commencement.

The evangelists are commencing six weeks of meetings in the Free Churches of Glasgow next Sunday, and ask the prayers of their fellow Christians,

The Armenian Martyrs.

MEMORIAL SERVICE IN ST. JAMES'S HALL.

AT half-past two on Sunday afternoon (says The Daily News) many persons were waiting for the opening of the doors at St. James's Hall. They had come through the rain, and had still an hour to spend before the service in which they wished to take part. It was a service of exceptional character and solemnity, arranged by eminent representatives of the Free Churches of London in memory of the Armenian Christian martyrs, a co-operation extending to details, for the various hymns, psalms, prayers, passages of Scripture, and pieces of music had been chosen by Mr. Percy Bunting, Rev. H. Price Hughes, Dr. Oswald Dykes, Dr. Paton, Professor Rendel Harris, and Mr. Heath Mills jointly. The idea originated with the Armenian Information Bureau, 3, Arundel-street, Strand, where it is hoped that the example will be followed by churches of all denominations throughout the country. In the meantime, some of those present tried to comfort themselves with the reflection put into words by Mrs. Sheldon Amos, that the Armenian Christians, whatever their present sufferings, are on the side sure to prevail in the end. They were specially represented at the service. Twenty or thirty seats reserved for them were occupied by ladies and gentlemen whose dark regular features would have bespoken their race had not that been done by the deep mourning they wore.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes presided. The service was deeply impressive, all the more so that the congregation performed their part without vocal hymns, prayers and everything else being on an eight-page pamphlet, copies of which were freely distributed. First the "Dead March" in "Saul" was played, everybody standing silently, after which they sang, "The Son of God goes forth to war." Rev. W. H. Tindall, alternately with the people, recited Psalm lxxix., with its thrilling picture of an old martyrdom. "The dead bodies of thy servants have they given to be meat unto the fowls of the air, and the flesh of thy saints unto the beasts of the land. Their blood they have shed like water on every side of Jerusalem, and there was no man to bury them." Offering prayer, Dr. Monro Gibson petitioned that Englishmen, instead of saying, "Am I my brother's keeper?" might universally ask, "Lord, what would Thou have us to do?" After the hymn beginning, "For all the saints who from their labours rest," Dr. Clifford read verses 19 to 23 of John xvi., with the promise of joy after sorrow; and verses 9 to 17 of Revelation vii. Next came thanksgiving for the Christian martyrs of all times and countries. It was read by Rev. F. B. Meyer while the people stood.

Then followed the hymn, "What are these arrayed in white?" after which Rev. H. Price Hughes gave a brief address. The Armenian horrors were worse than the Bulgarian atrocities. Abominable deeds had been wrought day by day in Asiatic Turkey by permission of the British Government, responsible for the rule there. At least 60,000 persons had been murdered in cold blood, while women and even little girls had been outraged. After citing cases, he spoke of the Sultan as owing to Britain his power to do this devilry, the chief instruments in which he had decorated and promoted. Mr. Hughes would not have joined in this service—the prayers would have stuck in his throat—if he had pretended that his duty ended with remembering the Armenian martyrs before God. Twice in living memory, when the fiendish power of the Sultan would have been destroyed, we saved it. We had spent millions of money and thousands of lives to keep him and his assassins in their position. It was our duty to co-operate in ridding the earth of one of the foulest and bloodiest tyrannies that ever cursed the human race. Hitherto the congregation had shown all [312]

the signs which usually distinguish worshippers—quietness, devotion, and silent attention; but now they gave way to a sudden storm of hand-clapping, renewed when the speaker cried "Oh for a few days of Oliver Cromwell!" For twenty-five years he had advocated peace; but there were some things to which death was preferable; and if we were not justified in using all the resources of the empire to rescue the Armenians, we might as well disband the army and let the navy rust.

Mr. Hughes was followed by Dr. Dykes, who offered prayers for the lapsed, for those now under persecution, and for Christians in these islands, the petition on behalf of the last-named being that they might be stirred to help those who were nigh to perishing. The next thing on the programme was Christina Rossetti's "Martyr's Song," but the congregation were left to read it at home. "O God, our help in ages past" having been sung, Rev. Dr. Paton dismissed the people with the Benediction.

The Spezia Mission.

AN important meeting of this Mission was held on Wednesday week at Hyde Park-gardens. Mr. Arthur Pease, M.P., who presided, gave testimony to the work which had been done by it throughout Italy. Italy's claim on the practical sympathy and help of Christians in Britain is very great. This Mission is doing a good work for Italy.

Mr. R. Cory said:—No country in the world more urgently needed such work as the Spezia Mission is doing than Italy. He would earnestly say that, even if we have to pinch ourselves a little, we should seek to have a part in helping it. Rev. G. Turner and Mr. Reader Harris also gave hearty tributes to the devotion of the workers and the great value of the work which the Spezia Mission was doing.

Rev. H. H. Pullen, co-director of the Mission, read a letter from Rev. Edward Clarke, and gave a brief statement of Italy's present needs, besides an encouraging report of the work.

A Bible Reading on Leaves.

1. WORTHLESS LEAVES, Genesis iii. 7, teaching about sin, that it brings us into an estate of misery, shame, and fear; and that all our attempts at self-righteousness are as worthless as leaves.

2. FADING LEAVES, Isaiah lxiv. 6, teaching of death which is the consequence and curse following sin, seen in the old and young, rich and poor.

3. LEAVES OF HOPE, Genesis viii. 11, teaching that there is an abatement to the curse; pointing to the cross where Jesus stands between the living and the dead, till the plague is stayed, and so bring in a better hope.

4. FADELESS LEAVES, Psalms i. 3, teaching of life; the pilgrim at the cross receives the new life, thenceforth grows in grace, and is evergreen.

5. DELUSIVE LEAVES, Matt. xxi. 19, teaching us to work—to live to a purpose. A life of show or talk is a hindrance to others, and a disappointment to Christ who prohibits waste. Hypocrisy meets the fate of leaves.

6. HEALING LEAVES, Rev. xxii. 2, teaching Christ, and pointing weary workers to rest and home. Christ and heaven are suitable for all who will accept them, free to all, and needed by all.

7. SPRING LEAVES, Matt. xxiv. 32, teaching us of his coming again, so that we may prepare for it, look for it, think of it, and be ready. M. J. M.

Metropolitan Tabernacle Bible Flower Mission.—During last year 16,328 bunches of flowers, with text-cards attached, were distributed by this mission. The report shows in a measure how the work was done, and says: "If only for the smile of welcome one receives, the grip of the hand, and often the 'God bless you,' one is well repaid. But we are confident this is not all; we believe souls have been won for Jesus. Especially do we call to mind the case of one dear girl, who at first would only ridicule and laugh, when we spoke about Jesus. In course of time she became interested, and loved to listen to the 'old, old story, of Jesus and his love.' She was a great sufferer, and one could not fail to notice how patiently she bore her pain. Last September she was called to her rest, and we have every reason to believe she was quite ready and longing to go." Communications should be addressed to the secretary of the Mission at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Newington Butte.

The Figueras Mission.

ABJURATION OF A ROMISH PRIEST.

YOUR readers will be rejoiced to hear something of what the Lord is doing in Spain by the hand of his servants, Pastor Lopez Rodriguez, his wife, his brother, Don Alexander, his six Spanish evangelists, and English lady-workers. It was my privilege this March to see with my own eyes something of what they are doing, but your space would be insufficient even to record a small part of it.

I visited the schools in Figueras, and heard the children examined. The readiness with which they cited a text of Scripture in proof of the articles of our faith was astonishing.

I visited several of the villages where the Gospel is regularly preached, and observed both the faithfulness of the testimony and the eagerness and attention of those who thronged to listen to it.

This part of the work is carried on under great difficulty and opposition. The theatre in a neighbouring town had been regularly engaged, when on the morning of the day a telegram was received from the mayor to say that the proposed service was forbidden by the governor of the province. When we arrived, about seventy people, chiefly men, were assembled in the street, and Don Louis and his brother went to see the mayor. After a long altercation it was evident that the mayor had exceeded his powers. No order from the governor could be produced, and, at length, after much searching, a similar order, given a long time ago, was produced. However, there was no help for it, and the service had to be abandoned, to the great disappointment of the people.

But all is not discouragement. Our friends have recently had a great blessing in the conversion of a Spanish priest. After four months of probation he publicly (and at his own request) abjured the Roman Catholic Church and all its errors. This is probably the first occasion when such a wonderful service has taken place in Spain. The large hall of the Figueras Mission was thronged on the Sunday evening, in spite of the morning papers having suggested that a bomb would be the best thing to use in that service. The Christian mission workers were unmoved, and scarcely thought again of the enemy's threat, as they listened to the solemn service. I do not wish to anticipate, and thus to spoil the effect of the reading of the full account of this unprecedented event.

Our friends will shortly publish full particulars, with a translation of his letter to the Bishop of Gerona, with the bishop's reply, and an account of the service and the ex-priest's first sermon. I strongly advise all your readers to send a post-card to Madame Lopez Rodriguez, Calle Pedro 3, Figueras, Spain, and ask for a copy of the April "Letter from Spain."

Pastor and Madame Rodriguez propose to visit England during this summer. I trust that English Christians will give such substantial help to their mission that they may come for rest, rather than for such work. E. W. BULLINGER, D.D.

Mr. C. Inglis at Liverpool.

A VERY successful six days' Mission has been conducted in the Wesley Hall, Soho-street, Liverpool, by Mr. Charles Inglis. It was prefaced by a week of earnest prayer, and attended by very encouraging results.

During the week Bible readings were given, which were full of originality, and dealt largely with the life, power, and responsibility of the Christian. The Mission has been productive of great blessing. Believers have been quickened and strengthened in the faith, and the whole church has received an impetus for good. Each night there were enquirers, and many decided for Christ. One pleasing feature has been that old men of seventy and youths in their teens have knelt side by side. Missioner and workers were fully alive to their great responsibility, and with scarcely an exception inquirers have had a clear conception of their acceptance with God, that their sins have been forgiven, and that "there is no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus."

(Rev.) A. S. LEE.

Pontymoile Christian Mission.

MR. WINTLE has issued, under the title "A Lifeboat of Love," a report of the work of the Pontymoile Udenominational Christian Mission. The evangelistic and other operations, outdoor and in, have been well sustained and much blessed; so also the Bible carriage and Sunday-schools.

At Dowlais and other branches splendid temperance work has been done among a population who sadly need it. One case in which the effect of the Mission's influence has become apparent was that of a greengrocer. He was doing well in his business, but, as he spent practically everything in drink, his wife and eight children were in very straitened circumstances. At a temperance meeting he was induced to sign the pledge, and now the home is transformed, and the husband, wife, and children are doing splendidly. Mr. Wintle—the founder and director of the Mission—was visiting Ferndale a few days after the recent terrible explosion, and he met another man who owes much to the Mission. He was dressed most respectably, and in the company of his son-in-law, was going to bear one of the victims of Tylorstown to the grave. This man, who is doing well in the Rhondda Valley, pressed Mr. Wintle to stay with him, yet ten years ago he was arrested at Pontypool, and imprisoned for attempted murder while mad with drink. When he came out he was induced to attend the Mission's temperance meetings and to sign the pledge, and his changed life and condition bear testimony to the efficacy, under God's blessing, of total abstinence.

The Rescue and Preventive Home and Friendless Girls' Shelter are doing valuable service among girls ruined or endangered by the public-houses with their attached dancing-rooms. Many sad cases are given showing how the Mission has been able to save many of these. The aid lent by the police in the matter has been of the utmost value. There are now seven girls in the home at Pontymoile, and sixteen have passed through it during the year. The Mission badly needs a larger home. Another branch of the Mission's work which is excellent, but limited by circumstances, is that of prison visitation and aid to discharged prisoners.

Touching details are given of the Mission's endeavours in relieving the distress which for so long has prevailed in the Eastern Valley of Monmouthshire. During the early part of 1895 the Mission stood face to face with a starving population. From January 1 to December 31, 1895, the Mission spent more upon relief than during any previous twelve months. The need, unhappily, is still very great. A strong and earnest plea is made for continued help. The superintendent is Mr. T. M. Wintle, Pontymoile, Pontypool, Mon.

Helping One Another.

For over sixteen years there has been in operation a special work amongst women at Hoxton, which is the outcome of the early efforts in connection with the Blue Ribbon Army. Meetings are held every Monday evening for work, Bible reading, and Gospel and temperance addresses. During the past two years 266 women have signed the pledge, 2873 visits have been paid by the members and Bible-women to newly-pledged and sick members. Only five of those have fallen away. There are rainy-day, clothing, and coal clubs; £75 3s. 3d. having been paid into the former. During the severe weather of 1895, many teas and soup dinners were given, while garments, books, and many other articles were distributed. The members help each other in times of sickness and distress. Many acts of self-denial might be recorded to show that women are willing and do show practical sympathy with each other.

The annual meeting at Hoxton Hall last Monday evening was a proof of the vitality of this branch of the work. Prior to the public meeting, over 200 sat down to tea, after which Mr. J. Fyfe Stewart presided. His words on service for others formed a key-note to the addresses which followed. Solos were sung by Miss Shepperd and Miss E. Goodman, and the Hoxton Hall choir sang during the evening. The large and enthusiastic audience sent a message of loving sympathy to the president of the work (Mrs. William Noble) who has been absent for many years through ill-health. Mrs. Howel, the secretary, read the report, and the meeting closed with earnest prayer for the future of the work.

AN IDEAL PRAYER MEETING.

DEAR SIR,—A circular lay in my pew the purport of which was, "How can our prayer-meeting be improved?" I shrank from giving a reply to the inquiry, but it revived a mental picture of a prayer-meeting I casually attended three years ago, which stands out in my memory as an instance of what a prayer-meeting should be. We (three of a family) were spending our holiday in a provincial city, and to relieve the tedium of a dull, murky evening, in the absence of our usual engagements, dropped into the week-night service at a chapel without any idea of the kind of service about to be conducted.

The vestry was filled with a company of worshippers, and in the absence of the pastor, one of the brethren, at a suggestion from another of the congregation, took the lead. After a few words explaining the absence of the minister, he alluded to some circumstances incidental to the church life, which might be suitably remembered in prayer, and asked for someone to name a hymn, Sankey's book being used. The number and title of one was mentioned in a female voice, and was sung to the allotted tune, led by an harmonium. The leader then read a few words of Scripture, and asked for two or three friends to pray, without naming anyone. Without haste or delay, a young woman uttered a simple, earnest petition, quiet, reverent, but intense, and the blessings implored were real, present, and personal. This was followed by another female suppliant, and then by a male. In this way an hour of close fellowship with God and with one another was spent. It was, I found, the ordinary way in which the weekly prayer-meeting was conducted. When we left, after a kindly greeting at the door, we felt we had without doubt been where true prayer was wont to be made, and that it was indeed no other than the house of God, the gate of heaven.

Of course, the spirit of prayer is not to be obtained by the adoption of outward methods. The secret of the Lord in the heart of the worshippers will make any kind of prayer-meeting blessed with a sense of his presence. Nevertheless, it appears to me, that there are some lessons to be learned from the manner of conducting this one, that would be helpful where the meetings are languishing under their present forms.

Note—First, the absence of formality. There was practically no conductor in the sense of controlling or directing autocratically the order of the service. The chairman was literally and merely the leader, only prompting the successive movements of the service. The choice of hymns being left to the audience, was so utterly unconventional as to give to us, who were visitors—and apparently no less so to the regular attendants—a sense of freshness and zest in the worship, and in fact, as far as externals were concerned, nothing was set or stereotyped. Secondly, the women were on an equality with the men in the functions of praise and prayer, and in the worship of God on earth, even as it is in heaven, there was no distinction of male or female. Thirdly, it was essentially a prayer meeting. Prayer was the primary and all-important purpose for which the worshippers were gathered together, and to it all else was subservient. The modern idea that the prayer-meeting could advantageously be united with the weekly lecture was not entertained.

Such prayer-meetings must be the best outward means of grace to any church, and are at once the evidences and the vehicles of spiritual life and blessing.—Yours faithfully E. R. G.

"NOT AT HOME."

SIR,—I shall be glad if some of your readers will tell me what they do when not wishing to see callers.

I am expected to say, "Not at home," though the lady may be in the house all the time, and I feel I am speaking an untruth. My mistress will not let me say she is "engaged," because "it would be very rude to the visitor"; but she is not a professing Christian. What ought I to do?

A PERPLEXED ONE.

Barry Dock.—The new Gospel Hall was opened on Wednesday, March 25. Mr. John Cory presided over a crowded meeting. Addresses were given by local ministers and friends, while Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh gave a soul-stirring word to the unsaved.

Scottish Notes.

THE Brownland Home for Inebriate Women, Peeblesshire, is doing good service in connection with the Scottish Union of the B.W.T.A.

A prize of £50 is to be offered to students in the three colleges of the Free Church for the best essay on some study of great authors. The subject of the essay will be Augustine.

The annual convention in Dundee on the deepening of the spiritual life was held last week. The gatherings were well attended, and there were many practical and helpful addresses.

The Aberdeen S.S. Union had its annual conference last week. There was a spirited discussion on Professor's Adeney's recent strictures on Sunday-school work, and some strong protests were made to the teaching of denominationalism in Sunday-schools.

The United Temperance party have issued an appeal to the people of Scotland in support of Mr. John Wilson's Liquor Veto Bill, the Bill for the extension of the early closing of public houses to the seven exempted cities and towns of Scotland, and the Bill of Sir John Leng for the abolition of grocers' licences.

Meetings in Scotland by Rev. Dr. A. T. Pierson are being arranged in various centres by the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society. Among the places to be visited are Inverness, Aberdeen, Perth, Dundee, Kirkcaldy, Edinburgh, Hamilton, and other centres. The meetings commence on April 19, and last three weeks.

The Free Church Colleges have closed their winter season. At Aberdeen, a lecture on the Sacraments, by Principal Brown, was read. Principal Rainy, in Edinburgh, found a theme in the career of the late Cardinal Manning, as revealed in Mr. Purcell's "Life." He declared the Papacy to be a despotism, and every despotism in the nature of the case is worked by backstairs influence.

Open-air work has again been commenced in the thickly-populated district in which is situated Dublin-street Baptist Church, Canonmills Mission, Edinburgh, and it is hoped, as usual, to continue the services during the summer months. The meetings held in previous years have proved very fruitful both in conversions and restorations, as well as in personal blessing to the workers, who desire prayer for God's continued blessing on their efforts.

The Reformed Presbyteries of Edinburgh and Glasgow held last week a joint meeting to complete the arrangements for the Great Convention of Reformed Presbyterians, to be held in Edinburgh, June 30 to July 3. In connection, an exhibition will be open of relics and memorials of Covenanters. Quite a large detachment of American Reformed Presbyterians are expected to sail for New York on June 6 to take part in the convention.

Christian Police Association.

THE International Christian Police Association held its thirteenth annual meeting on Thursday afternoon and evening, in Exeter Hall, which was crowded to overflowing with policemen and their wives from all parts of the United Kingdom. Mr. C. Ernest Tritton, M.P., presided in the afternoon, and dwelt on congratulations, consideration, and consecration. Among the many matters for congratulation were that the Association closed its year entirely free from debt; that it had been permitted to go on in its great and good work, and enabled to bring under its influence the 61,320 men who now formed the total "strength" of the police forces of Great Britain and Ireland. The work was also carried on in all parts of the United States, Canada, Australasia, South Africa, China, Japan, and Ceylon, and soon it was hoped that they would have a representative among the thousands of India, who urgently claim their sympathy. Continuing, Mr. Tritton said that a vast army of immortal souls had been put in their power to win, and they were winning them, for the Association was full of vigour, and was most popular in the "Force." The headquarters of the work at 1A, Adelphi-terrace, Strand, is open to every policeman in the force, of every rank and creed. It has dormitories for those coming from a distance, a restaurant for those wanting a good dinner, etc., reading-rooms, library, etc., meetings, Bible classes, and social evenings. Constables from all parts are always sure of a hearty welcome, and the right hand of fellowship, and all are shown the way of salvation, and taught to put "God first" in everything.

Revs. G. H. C. Macgregor and J. Gregory Mantle gave most enthusiastic and helpful addresses, which carried conviction to many.

Colonel H. H. Oldham presided in the evening, and Rev. Thomas Cook spoke most earnestly on the dedication of the body to the service of God, sacred to Jesus, bound up in Him.

The police choir and string band led the singing, assisted by 160 children from the Metropolitan and City Police and the Provincial Police Orphanages.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE Newton Abbot general committee have appointed Mr. T. James Joce, of Plymouth, to be their secretary.

A new association has been formed at Ringsend (a suburb of Dublin). Nearly thirty members and associates have been enrolled.

A cordial welcome has been given to Mr. Frank Whitehouse to the secretaryship of the Ryde Association. The hardships of pioneer work in China compelled Mr. and Mrs. Whitehouse to return home, and they have taken up work at Ryde.

The annual report of the Camden and Kentish Town Associations speaks hopefully of the Bible-classes, the open-air and Gospel lantern services. During the year 143 new members and associates have been admitted, making 276 in all. The whole work is full of encouragement.

A splendid testimony to the value of the Y.M.C.A. work for railroad men was given by ex-Governor Beaver, in Boston, who quoted the president of the Pennsylvania Road as having said that the thousands of dollars which that company puts into buildings and equipment for railroad Y.M.C.A. work is the best investment it makes, steel rails not excepted. The results are large, immediate, and from every point of view satisfactory.

Special meetings for the promotion of spiritual life have been held at Harlesden in connection with the Y.M.C.A. At one of these meetings Rev. F. B. Meyer said he thought this was one of the most touching services in which he had taken part for a long time. He had perpetual calls to preach sermons, etc., but he seldom found a whole district meeting together in one place to ask for God's blessing on the work of the churches.

An enjoyable social evening was spent last Friday at the New Cross Y.M.C.A. Rev. Edwin W. Stringer presided. The feature of the evening was an address by Rev. E. J. Kennedy, entitled "Purpose." Friends were present from a number of the suburban Associations, and all were pleased with the very comfortable and home-like appearance of the rooms, which is mainly the result of the efforts of the newly-formed Ladies' Auxiliary.

A mission to men is being held this week at the Norwich Y.M.C.A., by Messrs. Alfred Furse and Frank Anderson, and a party of undergraduates. The greatest care has been taken in making preparation. During last week an earnest band of young fellows have canvassed the streets, with the result that a large number of men have been got together, and the interest has increased each day. Numbers of young fellows have had their Christian life stirred, and several have sought and found the Saviour.

The large hall at the Assembly Rooms, Bath, was crowded twice on Wednesday week, on the occasion of the annual meetings of the Bath Association. The annual report showed that the Association has taken a prominent place in the religious life of the city, and that there was abundant evidence that it was appreciated by the young men for whom it existed. The Sunday afternoon Bible class numbered sixty, and the boys' meetings averaged seventy to eighty. There was an attendance of nearly 300 at the Sunday evening Gospel services. Several members were preparing for foreign missionary work.

The Wakefield Y.M.C.A. held its tenth annual meeting on Tuesday week. The gathering was a most enthusiastic one, the speakers being Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., and Pastor Fuller Gooch. Mr. Alfred Haley, the president, gave a brief but telling address. The whole meeting was a time of great spiritual power and fervour. The past year of the Association has been one of great spiritual activity and blessing. The membership is well maintained. A missionary zeal is manifest from the fact that £25 is annually raised for the part support of one of the Association's three missionaries now in China.

Mr. M. C. Leite Rozas has received a letter from the Y.M.C.A. of Rio de Janeiro (Brazil), asking for help from Christians interested in the work among young men. Owing to the susceptibilities of the people in the city of Rio, they are hampered whenever they seek to open rooms in any quarter of the city, and there seems nothing left for them to do but to buy or erect a building of their own, where they may carry on this most useful work. A sum of about £5000 is required to build and furnish a suitable house. An appeal for help is made to Christians in England. Mr. Rozas, whose address is 23, Rood-lane, E.C., will be glad to receive and forward aid.

The central international committee of Young Men's Christian Associations, whose headquarters are at Geneva, have addressed a letter to the National Unions of Associations in the different countries of the world, pointing out that in the regions where the persecutions have taken place there exist branches of the Y.M.C.A., situated in the localities of Adana, Aintab, Bitlis, Erzroom, Har-poot, Marash, and Marsovan. Notwithstanding the steps taken, no direct information has been received with regard to these Associations, and, in consequence of the alarming accounts published, it is not known whether their members are still living, if dispersed, or even massacred. It is one of the privileges of this international organisation to be united in faith and prayer for the support of the Associations menaced by divers dangers. It is suggested that the Associations of the United Kingdom cause special prayer to be offered in this matter at their meetings held during the week commencing April 5.

The Y.W.C.A.

A SALE of work in aid of the funds of the Nottingham branch was opened on the 19th inst. at Shaftesbury House, by the Mayor, who drew attention to the good work being done by the Association.

Miss Thornton, an active and sympathetic worker in connection with the Y.W.C.A., Dorchester, the Railway Mission, the Soldiers' Home, and other agencies, will be shortly leaving, much to the regret of the members.

The committee of the Holiday Home at Colwyn Bay have taken a much larger and more convenient house. The Home is not carried on for the sake of profit, but for the benefit of sisters to whom such an arrangement may be a boon. Full particulars may be had from Miss Marston, Y.W.C.A., Colwyn Bay.

The annual meeting of the Birmingham Y.W.C.A. took place on the 20th inst., under the presidency of Mrs. George Cadbury. Mrs. Udall, hon. sec., read the twenty-first annual report. The various activities in connection with this Association had been carried on most efficiently, and the home had been used and valued by many young women in business.

The annual report of the Leamington branch states that the Home has now completed its twenty-first year. During the past year ninety-three inmates were received. The scheme in regard to a staff of private nurses, it is hoped, will prove a financial success. The missionary interest has been stimulated, both among senior and junior members, and Miss Seymour was accepted by the China Inland Mission. Miss Phipps conducts a Bible-class numbering thirty.

At the annual united meeting of the Dawlish Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., Capt. Walcott occupied the chair. Miss Fiske having filled the post of hon. secretary to the Y.W.C.A. for eleven years, is now retiring, much to the regret of all, her place being temporarily filled by Miss Pearson. The mortgage on the Shaftesbury Hall has been reduced to £300. The institute has seventy-seven hon. associates, 144 senior, and seventy-one junior members. The reports of both societies were very encouraging.

The annual meeting of the York branch was held in the Mansion House, the Lord Mayor presiding. The report was very satisfactory. Foreign and home mission work had been promoted with earnestness. Encouraging results have ensued from an effort made by the members to attract to the Sunday services young girls who rarely attend any place of worship. During the year seventy-four boarders passed through the Home. By means of a staff of district visitors, each member is visited once a month. New premises are being secured, as the present ones are insufficient for the work.

The Chicago Y.W.C.A. has at last a home worthy of the work. The new building was dedicated on the eve of Washington's birthday, at 283, Michigan-avenue. This organisation was formed here in 1876, and its twenty years have been marked with great usefulness, which ought now, with enlarged facilities, to be greatly widened. Mrs. Leander Stone, one of the original vice-presidents, has been president since 1880. The structure just opened has a high basement and seven stories. Its front windows overlook the park and beautiful Lake Michigan. An elevator, steam heat, and electric light bring it down to date. The first floor has a library, parlour, reception-rooms and dining-room, with accommodation for 300 persons. The second story contains an auditorium, with seating capacity for 600, also class rooms and a number of sleeping rooms. Nearly 300 sleeping rooms are above this. A gymnasium is being fitted up in the lower part of the building.

A Jewish Mission Paper, entitled Divrey Hayyamim ("Daily Affairs," or Words—"Chronicles"), has been issued in connection with the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. It is printed in Hebrew and Jargon, and edited by Mr. H. Goodman. It contains a portion of the New Testament, tract and Gospel matter, items of news, and advertisements of mission meetings for the Jews. The magazine is readily taken by Jews. Readers who would like a supply for use in their own districts may secure them by writing to Rev. John Wilkinson, Central Hall, Philpot-street, Commercial-road, E.

Christian Endeavour.

AT East Blue Hill, Me., twelve persons have joined the C.E.S. as a result of a recent revival. At the monthly meeting of the Liverpool Union, five societies were added to the Union. Good progress was reported by the Visiting Home Mission, Deputation, and Floating Society Committees.

The revival services recently begun in Spokane, Wash., in which the Christian Endeavourers have a leading part, continue in full progress. The capacity of the largest church in the city is taxed nightly, and on Sunday evening hundreds are turned away.

Out in Kansas they have a good literature committee that has undertaken a novel enterprise. The farmers come into town on Saturdays for their trading, and in the afternoon, when they return, they find stowed away in their wagons good reading-matter for wife, children, and themselves to read on Sunday.

The Leicestershire Union has concluded a successful six days' mission in Bishop-street Chapel, Rev. W. Y. Fullerton, one minister, and two Endeavourers being the speakers at each meeting. Hundreds of young people were brought into the inquiry room, and a large number of them were led to make a definite decision for Christ.

A Philadelphia society has tried the following capital plan. Toward the close of the service, without any announcement or request, five of the members rise, one after another, in different parts of the room, and each makes a three-minute exhortation to those out of Christ to accept Him at once. This has proved impressive and fruitful.

One C.E.S. has organised a Missionary Band who sign the following pledge:—"I promise that I will endeavour to learn all I can about foreign missionary work.—That I will ask God's blessing upon it every day.—That I will give at least one penny every week towards its support.—This will I do unless prevented by some reason I can conscientiously give to my Lord and Master, Jesus Christ."

The World's Christian Endeavour Prayer Chain has for its special subject of prayer for April—"That Christians everywhere may realise their stewardship, giving more generously, and praying more earnestly for the conversion of the world." Ever increasing numbers of Christian Endeavourers are being enrolled as links in this golden chain of prayer, which is rapidly belting the globe in its helpful and inspiring fellowship.

Dr. Barnardo's Emigrants.

THE familiar Aldersgate-street room, where prayer is wont to be made daily at noon, was on Monday occupied by over two hundred fine, healthy looking lads in white jerseys, about to start for Canada. In introducing these, Dr. Barnardo recounted the case of a young man who, writing home years after, ascribed his conversion to the prayers offered at the farewell meeting in the Aldersgate-street Hall. Passing on, "the doctor" said that the present party numbers 210, composed of sturdy youths from the Stepney Homes, and big lads from the Youths' Labour Home. This fresh addition raises the full number sent out to Canada to 8244, including both boys and girls, all of whom have passed through the Homes, have been tested and trained, and amongst whom the absolute failures have been less than two per cent. Illustrating the useful results, Dr. Barnardo narrated several cases, and indicated that about £4000 have been received during the last five years from boys and girls who have passed through the Homes, which they now aid in supporting. On all this, of course, the indefatigable friend of the poor children based a strong and earnest plea for the famous Homes and their 5000 inmates.

East London Nursing Society has for its object the care of the sick poor in their own homes by means of trained nurses. During last year 5438 persons were nursed, the aggregate of recorded visits being 130,483. That the labour of the nurses has not been thrown away will appear from the fact that out of the 5438 cases 3867 recovered, and to these may doubtless be added a large number of the 483 moved to hospital, and an equal percentage of the 358 still under treatment. The report also refers to the more grave side of the work, namely, 570 patients have been nursed with tender care to the last moment of life; their sufferings have been lessened, and their families have had the untold comfort of a wise helpful friend close at hand, and ready to do all in her power for them in their time of greatest need. The thankfulness often expressed for such help is most cheering to the hard-working matrons and nurses. Full particulars of the beneficent operations of the Society are given in the report, copies of which may be had from the office, 49, Philpot-street, Commercial-road, E.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

AN important evangelistic project has been launched in Belfast by Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Albert-street Presbyterian Church. This new departure includes the erection of a large hall to seat 2000 persons, in which evangelistic, temperance, and social work can be carried on, and in connection with which there are to be reading-rooms, a medical mission, with advice and medicine free. Christian nurses will visit the poor in their homes, and there will be pleasant evenings to counteract the baneful influences of the drink-shops. A "settlement," where men and women of means and culture can live among the poor and be trained for mission work, is one of the projected agencies. The scheme, which will involve an outlay of about £10,000, has secured the hearty approval of members of the various Evangelical churches.

Readers of Pastor Storjohann's articles on the Psalms of David will have observed that the entire series has had reference to the wonderful hearing of David's prayer, on the occasion of the last Philistine war (2 Sam. xxi. ; 1 Chron. xx. 4-8), an event of the king's life more distinctly critical than many expositors have yet discerned. As the story shows, the war arose in the time of famine. This week's contribution relates to that fact in particular, and those who study it with care will allow that the two Psalms which are included were obviously based on the incident with which Pastor Storjohann so skilfully associates them.

Thousands in every part of the land recall with thankfulness the intensity and power with which Mr. Moody's words reached their souls, compelling them to flee to Christ, or calling them out to fresh and fuller service. From him they learned to read their Bibles as they had never done before, and hence they will welcome a new volume from his pen, entitled: "PLEASURE AND PROFIT IN BIBLE STUDY." (2s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.) Introducing it Mr. Moody says:—

It is always a pleasure to me to speak on the subject of this volume. I think I would rather preach about the Word of God than anything else except the love of God; because I believe it is the best thing in this world.

We cannot over-estimate the importance of a thorough familiarity with the Bible. I try to lose no opportunity of urging people by every means in my power to the constant study of this wonderful book. If through the pages that follow, I can reach others and rouse them to read their Bibles, not at random but with a plan and purpose, I shall be indeed thankful.

In Colossians iii. the effect of the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ is traced in the affections, in the character, and in the hope of believers. "Set your affection on things above," because Christ is at the right hand of God. The passionate attachment of men to Jesus is not merely because He died, but because He died and rose again; and their hearts beat with the warmth of an undying love.

The resurrection also touches character; for one who is bound to a living holy Saviour, who has redeemed him with the sacrifice of life, must mortify his members who are upon the earth. He feels caught up by the mighty power which raised Jesus again from the dead. He puts "on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created him." And, further, the resurrection becomes the energy of a sure and undying hope, which embraces fellowship with the Saviour and participation in his glory. "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory."

The new Education Bill has at length made its appearance, to the delight of denominationalists and to the pain of those who would like to see the education of English children removed from sacerdotal influence. The Bill is largely an upsetting of the existing system, and will plunge the country into a fierce controversy. It is a pitiful thing that the preparation of little children for the work of life cannot be carried on without provoking such intense feeling and such social, political, and religious conflict.

The Licensing Commission is now appointed, and will have to inquire into the laws, which regulate the sale of drink, and into proposals for amending them, "due regard being had to the rights of individuals"—a very suspicious-looking clause. No one, we suppose, except the brewer and the publican, believes that any good will come of it, and to them it means an indefinite extension of time for making money and for destroying the souls and bodies of men. How much money may be made is seen from the case of a tied-house which was worth £32,000 in 1892, but £55,000 in 1896. How many men, women, and children are destroyed none can compute. It is an insult to the nation to deal with such a tremendous evil, known to everybody and admitted on every hand, in such a procrastinating way.

The report of the committee appointed to inquire into the condition of the Metropolitan Pauper Schools contains an unqualified condemnation of "barrack" schools where pauper children are herded together. Many of them are hotbeds of disease—especially of severe ophthalmia, one form of which was asserted by a prominent surgeon to be a disease "created by the Local Government Board" in these institutions. The elementary education in these schools is undoubtedly lower than that attained in elementary schools, though the struggles through which the children had passed had in many cases prematurely sharpened their intelligence. But the morals of these schools came under the severest condemnation. The dull monotony of institutional life, and its weary routine, which reduces everything to the dead level of colourless experience, have created a peculiar tendency to ill-temper, especially among the girls, and to a shiftlessness and lack of interest in their surroundings which argues badly for their performance of life's duties in after years. The committee makes out a strong case for radical reform.

Following up our recent notes upon our criminal system of punishment, a correspondent urges strongly that the law should require restitution. He says:—

If A is convicted of robbing B he should remain in prison until, by his own labour or otherwise, he repays the cost to which he puts the country in proving his guilt and in keeping him; and until he repays B the sum stolen. Thus a man would know he gained nothing by robbery. In case of burglary the jury should assess a further sum, proportioned to the circumstances, damages for personal injury being also assessed. Thus restitution would in effect be the sentence in every case, and neither judge nor magistrate should have power to alter it.

A letter in our last issue on "Secret Imprisonment for Life" mentioned two facts demanding particular attention:—

1. In every country in Europe monastic and conventual establishments are subjected to restrictions and State supervision with the one exception of Great Britain.

An Englishman's sympathies being on the side of perfect and unfettered freedom in matters spiritual, he resents State intrusion into his religious institutions, especially if they are maintained by voluntary subscriptions. But convents and monasteries are of a special order, and should be dealt with in a special way. If persons may suffer life-long imprisonment in them, such a possibility should be destroyed by adequate supervision.

2. In no country in the world, probably, have convents more rapidly multiplied than in this, so much so that during the past forty years they have increased from fifty or sixty to over 500.

Is England then to be the training ground of priests and nuns for the world? Such facts bring back to us uncomfortable historic recollections.

The Church Times, in a very powerful article on "The Expediency of the Cross," inquires whether the crucifix will ever find its place, by common consent, on the table of the House of Commons, a sign and token that all who speak on that floor would rather die than lie, rather lose all than surrender one jot or tittle of truth's honour? Very likely not; but what then? Can men only speak the truth in the presence of a crucifix? Do they always speak it even then? There are thousands of homes from which, for solemn reasons, the crucifix is excluded, and yet in which truth and honour are dearer than life. There are hundreds of places of business conducted with a scrupulous regard to the ten commandments where a crucifix never was and never will be seen. And, further, it is painfully true that under the very shadow of the crucifix men lie and steal. Christ in the heart, not the crucifix on the table, is the universal need.

Rev. W. J. Woods, Secretary of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, computes in The Independent the average length of Congregational pastorates, viz., nine and a-half years. In the Channel Islands it is twelve years. Wales comes next with 11.7 years. The system of grouping churches under one minister in that country, which, while making the pastoral work heavier, greatly lightens the intellectual strain on the ministry, will account for this long average. Scotland figures at the bottom of the list, with 7.5 years. These facts show that there is no general unsettlement in the ministry. If it were otherwise, it would indicate a lack of that happy bond of fellowship between pastor and people without which no fruitful work can possibly be done. The pulpit may not retain its first freshness in all cases, but a church of long pastorates often sends out the noblest succession of Christian workers and citizens.

In spite of the strenuous endeavours to bring the missionary cause adequately before the public, it does not yet take its proper place in the minds of Christian people. With the improvement in trade, it would be natural to expect a corresponding improvement in missionary gifts; but this has not been so far the result. When we remember how the institutions that cater for amusement flourish and multiply, it is humiliating to find that so much effort is needed to get money for the extension of the Gospel among the heathen. We do not rightly appreciate our privileges as Christians, or this would not be so. If we felt the true constraint of the love of Christ we should find it easier to extend the benefits of that love to those lying in darkness and ignorance of its glorious gifts.

The result of the St. George's Election Petition, which has dragged its weary length through six weeks of costly litigation, has shown the strange inadequacy of our present bribery laws, and the difficulty of regulating such matters by legal enactments. The decision of the judges, so far from making clear what the laws really are, and helping Parliamentary candidates in future to know what is and what is not permissible during an election, has plunged the whole subject into a hopeless fog. It is clear that the subject must be reorganised from the foundation, and the laws and limits of responsibility in the matter more clearly defined. The root of the mischief, however, lies deeper than in its legal aspects. It is to be found in the state of public opinion rather than in the uncertainty of the law. We need an awakened social conscience, and a clearer sense of the sacredness of civic duties. No external law can remedy the present condition of things. Not till the moral and religious aspects of voting are more clearly grasped, can the evil of social corruption cease from the land.

If the European Powers cannot keep the Sultan of Turkey in order the representative of the United States was equal to the task when the American missionaries were ordered away from Bitlis. The threat of the charge d'affaires, that diplomatic relations would be severed, soon cancelled the orders for the missionaries to leave. Our ambassador seems to have enjoyed joining Mr. Riddle in doing something at last. If Turkey knew its true interests it would retain and encourage the American missionaries who have done so much for the people wherever they have laboured.

A Word to Christian Workers.

By MR. GEORGE MÜLLER, BRISTOL.*

AMONG all the manifestations of the majesty of Jehovah, we find nowhere else in Scripture a vision such as we have in Isaiah vi., which shows us the Lord Jesus Christ as the Son of God. Having read one hundred and fifty times the Old and New Testaments, I do not know of one single passage which so brings before us the majesty of Jehovah as this chapter; and we may note that in John xii. 39-41, it is expressly stated that the prophet Isaiah refers to the Lord Jesus. Therefore the majesty of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, was seen when Isaiah had this vision.

Our great business is to surrender ourselves to God by saying, "Here am I," and to be ready to do the work, whether pleasant or trying, whatever it be. Let us, then, ask ourselves individually, as servants of the Lord Jesus Christ, "Am I willing to accept any service from God?"

There is just an instance in the case of Philip the Evangelist. He had been preaching in Samaria. The whole city was moved, the blessing was wondrously great, and when all this had taken place, suddenly comes the message, "Go away into that desert." To a solitary place he was to go. He does not say, "How can I leave this work? What a strange thing to go to the solitary place where I am not likely to find persons to whom I can minister the Gospel." But he goes, and see how God uses him in the conversion of the eunuch. In all this, beloved brethren, we have to ask ourselves individually, "Am I willing to do anything which the Lord tells me to do?"

That leads to another thought—the full surrender of the heart to God. I was four years converted, in the beginning of November, 1825, but came only into the full surrender of the heart in July, 1829. The love of money was gone, the love of place was gone, the love of position in life was gone, the love of worldly pleasures and engagements was gone. God, God, God alone became my portion. I found my all in Him. I wanted nothing else.

And by the grace of God this has remained, and has made me a happy man, an exceedingly happy man, and it led me to care only about the things of God. I ask affectionately, my beloved brethren: Have you fully surrendered the heart to God, or is there this thing and that thing, or another thing, with which you are taken up, irrespective of God?

The joy and the peace in the Holy Ghost which I obtained at the time, and which I have had ever since, now these sixty-six years afterwards, I cannot tell you what a blessing it has been to my soul. I never get tired of the Word of God. I read it with the greatest delight, and when I read the Bible again, it is a new book to me.

I read a little of the Scriptures before, but preferred other books, but since that time the revelation He has made of Himself has become unspeakably blessed to me, and I can say from my heart, God is an infinitely lovely Being.

Thus, in the deepest and greatest trials (and I have met them by hundreds during these sixty-six years), I have found that the greatest trials afterwards brought the greatest blessings. Oh, be not satisfied until in your inmost soul you are able to say, God is an infinitely lovely Being. Then you will understand what David meant when he said, "Thy gentleness hath made me great."

By DR. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

THE proof of the transforming power of the Gospel is not only seen in the experience of the individual Christian, but in the history of Christianity. The religion of Christ has operated during the last nineteen centuries like the great silent forces of nature; it has exercised a world-wide influence as a moral and spiritual power, working from within upon society, changing and transforming its beliefs, customs, organizations, and laws. It has educated the child, liberated the slave and the serf, elevated woman, purified and ennobled man. It has transformed marriage, mitigated the horrors of war, created institutions of mercy, and promulgated the principles of universal brotherhood and peace.

But the work of redemption has wider relations than those of a merely terrestrial character. Moral defection and ruin are not confined to earth. Angels have sinned as well as men, and have been the tempters and leaders of men in their rebellion against God. The kingdom of evil is a complex thing, and is centred in superhuman powers. The Son of God was manifested that He might destroy the works of the devil; He came to cast out the deceiver of mankind, and to deliver the world from his dominion. And Christ's redeeming work not only accomplishes this end, but has an illuminating and establishing effect upon the unfallen universe. Hosts of holy angels have been enabled by its means to behold treasures of wisdom and grace never before revealed, and in their active co-operation with the Son of God, both in the ministration of mercy and the infliction of judgment, have been confirmed in righteousness, and raised to higher degrees of spiritual perfection.....

While the telescope reveals to us the wonders of the physical heavens above us, and the microscope the marvels of the earth beneath our feet, the Christian consciousness enables us to perceive the still more glorious realities of the spiritual universe. Man has spiritual faculties. He is a plant which, rooted in the soil, seeks the sun. Man belongs to two contrasted spheres; on the one hand he has physical needs, powers, and possessions; and on the other spiritual wants, senses, and supplies. Hence religion is not an invention or discovery, but is natural to man, as being made and suited for God. The Christian religion is the highest religion in the world, but it is more than a natural religion. The Christian is a naturally religious being, supernaturally enlightened. He walks in a light which never shone on sea or shore. His whole life moves round a supernatural unseen centre. God teaches him by his Spirit things which the natural man cannot comprehend or receive. The spiritual experiences of such men as Augustine, Luther, Pascal, Brainerd, Edwards, Simeon, and Weitbrecht, in the past, and those of multitudes of devoted followers of Christ in the present, plainly evince the existence and declare the character of the Christian consciousness, and as compared with the experiences of the Apostles and early Christians prove its identity and indestructibility as a distinct faculty or power operating from age to age.

Present Day Preaching.

By REV. R. HEPPENSTALL, HULL.

THERE is a tendency in the present day to speak of preaching as an institution of the past, the need and utility of which are passing away before the march of intelligence and the superior influence of the press. Preachers and sermons are the favourite topics of social grumblers. "The foolishness of preaching" is a favourite text of the satirist; and even in the conversation of middle class society—the class which still attends public worship—nothing is more common than a flippant tone of criticism and disparagement, in regard to the inflictions of the pulpit.

The favourite explanation of this decreasing respect for the pulpit is that the press is largely taking its place, and doing more efficiently what formerly was the work of the preacher. It cannot be for a moment doubted that the press is doing a vast work—good work—and some part of what was once the province of the pulpit. All the intellectual side of religious culture is shared by the press. Books, tracts, and newspapers, now diffuse information which men once learned from the preacher, and diffuse it far more widely and effectually than the latter was ever able to do.

The pulpit has no longer any monopoly even of moral and religious subjects, but we find topics discussed by the press, and reflections given, which once would have been thought trenching upon the peculiar province of the ministry. Theology is discussed in books with a fulness and thoroughness beside which any sermon must seem flimsy and incomplete. Even the great foundations which were left for the preaching of special courses of sermons on points of Divinity, such as the Boyle and Hulsean lectures, have gradually come to be, in reality, the mere reading from the pulpit of works prepared for the wider audience and the closer study which books attract.

Now all this may, it is true, point to considerable changes in the relative place of the pulpit to the wants and the agencies of the time, but not to its being superseded. Indeed, many of the changes are rather such as to help the true preacher in his work. They clear the ground for him. They enable preaching to be made more interesting and effective. The increase of education, if it takes away the preacher's monopoly of instruction, gives him a far more prepared soil in which to sow his special seed of religious and spiritual thought.

The preacher can now take much more for granted as known by any ordinary congregation than he could fifty years ago. To those who preach a Christianity affecting all the relationships of life, this must be a very great encouragement. Acquaintance with literature has indeed made men far more critical of the pulpit, and far more expectant from it. The habit of finding every topic of the hour discussed in newspaper articles in a terse, lively, and varied style, makes society intolerant of mere common-places in the pulpit, to an extent unknown in "the good old times." This will be regretted only by those who have no living thought to give forth, and whose prosy platitudes, however they might be tolerated, were just as useless in the past as now.

The true preacher of to-day feels it a great help to him in his work that his hearers are familiarised with many subjects of deep vital interest; and he may now adopt and cultivate a less formal style of expression and illustration. No change, however, can rob the preacher of the largest and noblest field of influence; and that which has always called into play the most truly prophetic power remains open, wide open, to the preacher as to no other. There is of a man thoroughly in earnest, and whose soul is aglow with the impulses of love and prayer, which has been felt in all ages, and to which the human heart is as accessible as ever.

Occasionally, a preacher is asked by his people to print a sermon, and he prints it; and then the people who were so enlightened and gladdened with it that they wanted it printed, say, "But how different this is!" Exactly so; of course it is. The minister is not there, the congregation is not there, the atmosphere is not there; the only thing the poor print can hold is the residue.

Why, even in the lower field of arousing men to an interest in political subjects, or to an active part in public questions and matters still more thoroughly taken up by the press, there is as much scope as ever for men animated by deep convictions, to make them subjects of spoken addresses to their fellow-men. Now, if newspaper, pamphlet, and book cannot be the substitute for the living voice on these subjects, still less can they be on the subject of religion—the highest, deepest, and most varied subject of human thought. And facts bear this out. Larger numbers congregate week by week to hear the great preachers of to-day than can be got together, even occasionally, to hear any politician, except a few of the very highest eminence.

No human book can appeal to the heart as man can. The preacher still remains the special and most effective agent for the arousing of personal interest in religion and for pressing home to the heart the truths of the mind and the dictates of the conscience. Certainly the history of the pulpit needs no apology; it is full of brilliancy and true greatness. The preacher may exert a power and wield an influence which will be greater than those of platform or press combined.

Dr. Bright in his "Lives of Three Great Fathers," says: "The three gifts which make a preacher in all times and countries are, the sympathy which can move and lift the hearers, the insight into spiritual facts which can present them as luminous realities, and the enthusiasm for a sacred cause which can fire the soul with a congenial devotion." It is true; and, oh, if only this sympathy, this spiritual insight, this enthusiasm could be taught and acquired at will, what a grand and glorious awakening our churches would realise! The preacher of to-day is face to face with on the part of men, in all ranks and shades of society.

Working-men are indifferent about God and religion, always full of lame excuses, and ready to blame anyone but themselves. The preacher of to-day ought not to be out of touch with those whom he seeks to save. It is still his to seek "by any means to save some."

At the same time, it is his duty to remember that spiritual emancipation is first and foremost. It is his privilege to hold aloft the lamp of revealed truth, and to devote his best efforts to the deepening of spiritual life. The rest will follow. The hunger of the Gentile heart is the hunger of the British heart—"Sir, we would Jesus." There is a dignity and sweetness and graciousness of spirit in the words of our Lord which holds men spellbound. The passion for righteousness is kindled when men are brought to a living Christ. The indifference of the times is not to be dispelled by the reiteration of traditional, theological phraseology about Christ. The living Christ, with fresh living thought about Him derived by a devout heart, and uttered in language simple and sincere, will "ease the burdened and cheer the cheerless." Let the preacher of the day and testify to the living presence and power of the Holy Ghost, and refuse to be drawn aside from religion to its clamorous and loud-voiced rivals; and though this may not sound exciting or novel yet it will prove to be all-sufficient for the deepest needs of humanity. Let the preacher be filled, not only with a stern belief, but with a magnificent hope, and keep steadily in view the vision of the spiritual life, and, above all, see in men—all men—depraved, sinful, the image of the Eternal.

Mr. and Mrs. Man Sukh Lal.

MANY readers will be glad to learn of the blessing which has continued to follow the anti-opium work of Mr. and Mrs. Man Sukh Lal in Scotland during the past winter. On Sabbath evenings especially the audiences have been large and overflowing. The climax was reached in Paisley lately, when over 2500 persons were packed into the Clark Hall.

A very encouraging feature has been the lengthy reports of the meetings given by the press in some places. These will reach a larger circle even than the meetings. Will your readers pray that this stream of interest may become a mighty river, whose volume shall help to sweep away the iniquitous traffic which has so long disgraced Britain's name, and hindered the Gospel in China?

GRANT JACKSON, Hon. Sec.

The Unchanging Saviour.

YESTERDAY, to-day, for ever,
Saviour, Thou art still the same,
Full of grace and changing never,
Ever worthy is thy name.

Earth and all its joys are fleeting,
Playing as the sunbeams play,
Often are our hearts repeating,
When shall dawn a brighter day?

Footsteps light are ever bounding,
In the sunshine to and fro,
Joyful are the echoes sounding,
As those footsteps come and go.

But the sunshine of life's morning,
And the sunny skies of June,
Give no permanent adorning,
Wintry tempests come full soon.

Longs my heart to see the rising
Of a sun that sets no more;
Mists, our peril here disguising,
Gather oft life's pathway o'er.

Thine is an unchanging glory,
Brighter than the noonday sun;
Passing wondrous is the story
Of the victory Thou hast won.

Though our faith may fail or falter,
Till our eyes thy glory see,
Naught thy love divine can alter
As we fix our hopes on Thee!

Ere the silver cord shall sever,
On my heart inscribe thy name;
Yesterday, to-day, for ever,
Saviour, Thou art still the same!

WM. KITCHING.

Walton Park, Clevedon.

The Company for selling liquor on the Gothenburg system at Bergen had a narrow escape last week. This town, with its 60,000 inhabitants, is the second town of Norway. 14,172 voted against the company, 14,590 voted for it or did not vote. Non-voters are reckoned as though they vote "yes." The agitation was very animated. In Christiania, where there is no contest, the company recently distributed £23,000 net profit for the year 1895.

Letters from S. Africa.—12.

THE DAY OF REST.

IN Cape Town the Seventh-day Adventists are actively propagating their doctrine, the tendency of which is to rob man of the Sabbath which God made for him, and to leave him without a day of rest, either first or seventh. I saw this to be actually the case at a town in America a few years ago.

A remedy, however, has been propounded which is as bad as the disease. It is summarily expressed as follows:—

"In Gen. ii., where we have the first mention of the Sabbath, nothing is said about the Sabbath being given to man. We have simply a record of what God did, but nothing about God giving it to man. We have no record in the whole book of Genesis of the day being observed by any man; we have not the word 'Sabbath' used anywhere in that book except in the second and third verses of the chapter already referred to; and amongst all the sins that are mentioned in the first book of the Bible not a word is said about the breaking of the Sabbath."

But this would surely prove too much. If Gen. ii. 2, 3 does not imply that the Sabbath was given to man, to what period does the Lord refer when He says, "The Sabbath was made for man; not man for the Sabbath"? Surely God gave the Sabbath to man when He rested on the seventh day and sanctified it. It is certainly more probable, to say the least, that Adam, and Abel, and Seth and his God-fearing seed, kept it, than that they did not. True, it was not set forth as a commandment, but given as a blessing. Nevertheless, gifts and privileges bestowed by God may not be disregarded. When a king confers an honour or a privilege, the subject is not at liberty to decline it.

The contention of the Seventh-day Sabbatarian is a retrogression from the Gospel to the Law, and genders to bondage. The Law itself confessed that perfection could not come by it. If there had been a law given that could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the Law; but if righteousness come by law, then Christ died in vain. Thus Jeremiah asks, "Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? Then may ye also do good who are accustomed to evil." Man could no more cleanse himself from sin by law than the Ethiopian could change his skin, or the leopard his spots. The Law was weak and powerless, through the spirit of disobedience innate in the flesh; and, therefore, as a covenant of works it has been absolutely and for ever abrogated.

The Law pointed beyond itself to something better than itself. Its number of completeness is seven, the number of the first creation and its rest. But it tells of an eighth day, the resurrection day, the day after the Sabbath, the first day of the week, on which Jesus rose from the dead and brought in everlasting righteousness. The sheaf of first-fruits of harvest, type of Christ the First-fruits of Resurrection (Lev. xxiii. 9-21; 1 Cor. xv. 20, 23), was to be waved before the Lord on the morrow after the sabbath; and counting from that morrow after the sabbath, "seven sabbaths shall be complete, even unto the morrow after the sabbath shall ye number fifty days." The seven of the old creation and of the Law multiplied by itself— $7 \times 7 = 49$. But on the morrow after the exhausted sabbatism of the First Creation and of Law, the risen Christ, glorified at the right hand of the Father, and glorified by the patient faith of his waiting people on earth, inaugurated the New Creation by the outpouring of the promised Spirit on the newborn and united Church. Therefore $7 \times 7 + 1$, the day beyond 49, is the Day of Pentecost—the first day of the Church's week—the Lord's Day.

The day of the resurrection of our Lord, the First-fruits of them that slept, and the day of Pentecost, the birthday of the Church of the New Covenant, which was also a first-fruits (Lev. xxiii. 17; Jas. i. 18; Rev. xiv. 4), both testify that the first day of the week has appropriately and necessarily replaced the seventh-day Sabbath; and, as an historical fact, it has been so accepted and so observed throughout these eighteen hundred years.

The rest of the original Sabbath had been broken by human sin; that sabbath, and all the sabbaths under the law, were a shadow of things to come, but the body is of Christ (Col. ii. 16, 17), in whose finished work God found a perfect and everlasting rest. How utterly incongruous it would have been for the children of the New Age to have continued to keep the shadow of the broken Sabbath of the old creation, and to have disregarded the day commemorative of the true rest which cannot be broken—the Lord's Day, the resurrection day.

The foregoing principle applies also to the great sabbatic year, the Year of Jubilee. The Law in this again witnessed that it made nothing perfect. Not the forty-ninth year, but the year beyond—the fiftieth year—was the Year of Jubilee. And that time of coming blessing, which was foreshadowed in the Year of Jubilee, is not of the Law, which made nothing perfect, but is of the Gospel, which perfects everything in the resurrection glory of the New Creation in Christ Jesus.

The competition is so fierce in the rush and haste to be rich of these last days, that honesty and truth, human kindness and the fear of God, are increasingly laid aside as impedimenta. A weekly day of rest is already considered to be a drag on the wheels of business, an interference with the course of pleasure. It is monstrous that Christian men should play into the hands of the enemy, by teaching, as Seventh-day Sabbatarians teach, that the rest of the resurrection day—the observance of the first day of the week as having superseded the seventh day—is the Mark of the Beast! Whether this is ignorance or blasphemy, or both, it is deadly mischief to the bodies and souls of men. With regard to those who teach these things, I wish to say nothing censorious, but it does seem that they are in line with those of whom the Apostle warned the Ephesians, "Yea, of your own selves shall men arise, teaching perverse things, to draw away disciples after them."

On the other hand, those who oppose the Seventh-day Sabbatarians by asserting that the Sabbath was never given to the Gentiles, appear to contradict the declaration of our Lord that the Sabbath was made for man, and the general testimony of mankind that a weekly day of rest is a physical, mental, and moral necessity to the well-being of the race. It would be a disastrous sign of the times if Evangelical Christians, while enjoying the day of spiritual rest themselves, were to deny that God had ever given it, even as a day of physical and mental rest, to the world at large; and thus, while asserting their own freedom from legal bondage to the Sabbath, were to hand over the toiling multitudes to the worse bondage of a week without a Sabbath, a monotony of toil unrelieved and unrefreshed by a day of rest.

How It is Done.

A FRIEND of the writer was speaking one day to the late Prebendary Gordon Calthrop on the subject of the new heart, or new birth.

"I cannot imagine a man who has indulged in all kinds of sin, or any sin, all his life, becoming pure and fit to call himself a Christian. How is it done?" he asked.

Mr. Calthrop looked at him with a beautiful, patient smile. "Jesus Christ does it," he replied, simply, "by the alchemy of his love, which changes the original elements into opposites. Have you ever observed 'the expulsive power of a new affection'—how a boy who has cherished his old knife will fling it away and forget it, for a new and a better one? That is a poor simile; but when a man lets Jesus into his heart, all else suffers expulsion; it must go, and that is how it is done!"

Rev. E. P. Hammond in Canada.

IT has been my privilege to spend a part of five winters in Canada and Manitoba, holding evangelistic meetings. They have been held in Montreal, Quebec, Toronto, London, St. Catherine's, Belleville, Peterboro', Hamilton, Chatham, Galt, Blenheim, Dundas, Paris, Winnipeg, Emerson, and numerous smaller places. In several of these localities we have held a second series of meetings, several years intervening. It has been especially pleasant, after an interval of fifteen or twenty years, to hear men and women tell of their conversion years before when they were children. Some who were converted in Montreal more than thirty years ago are preachers of the Gospel as ministers, missionaries, or evangelists. Last winter, in Chatham, Ont., one forenoon was given to those who related their experience, either as young converts or Christian workers in the meetings held there seventeen years before.

The keeper of a large saloon in Montreal attended the meetings in order to ridicule them. But he went once too often, and was stricken under deep conviction of sin. The Christians gathered around him, talked and prayed with him. He asked them to go home with him. They went to a room over his saloon that had been known as a gambling den. The police had fixed upon that very night to make a raid upon the place. Supposing that this well-known room was occupied by gamblers, they burst in upon them. To their surprise, they found themselves in the company of people rejoicing over the conversion of Mr. Miller, the proprietor of the saloon. The next morning he gathered his employés, and ordered them to roll the casks of liquor into the street, and pour out their contents. This was thoroughly done in the presence of a crowd of witnesses.

After seventeen years, I was again holding a series of meetings in Montreal, and I found that converted saloon-keeper an officer of one of the churches. After he had related his experience, his pastor arose and testified that he had since lived a consistent Christian life.

Brantford was a place of only ten or twelve thousand, yet the drill shed was filled night after night with from five to six thousand people. Many came from the neighbouring towns. After I left the pastors continued the meetings with an audience of about 5000 for three weeks. At the Round House on the Grand Trunk R.R. was an amateur theatre in which many of the employés gave entertainments. Among them was a man by the name of Stevens, the comedian of the company. He attended the meetings in the drill shed to caricature them. One day he came into our morning prayer-meeting direct from the smoky workshop. He rose and said, "I have attended these meetings only to ridicule them, but last night I saw myself a lost sinner justly condemned to divine punishment. But I have left my work this morning to ask you to pray for me, and to tell me what I shall do to be saved." We told him of Jesus and his love. He believed, and was saved. He afterwards went with me to London, Ont., and there related his experience to a great audience. I was glad to find, while holding meetings in Brantford last winter, that Mr. Stevens has been a consistent Christian ever since.

The meetings in Ridgeway, Ont., during the past winter were delightful. For nearly six months preparations had been in progress. The influence of the work in Chatham seventeen years ago and again last winter had done much to prepare the way. Much united prayer had been offered for an immediate blessing. At the first Sunday afternoon meeting a large number professed conversion. Very soon the work reached all classes. Every minister in the place was enthusiastic in the movement. So deep was the interest that it was impossible to vacate the crowded buildings till midnight. During the two weeks, 435 signed the covenant cards, not expressing the wish that they desired to become Christians, but the belief that they had found Christ to be their precious Saviour, promising with God's help to love and serve Him.

Facts like these should encourage believers everywhere in the assurance that if they unite in earnest prayer and use the appointed means for the conviction and conversion of sinners, these will be led to rejoice in his love, and, by the transforming power of the Holy Ghost, to live a new life of faith and obedience.

Martyrdom in Armenia.

THE storm of destruction which broke upon Diarbekir, November 1, 1895, was not confined to that city, but spread over most of the province. The Kurds rose up for the slaughter and plunder of the Christians, saying that the Sultan had issued an imperial order to that effect. In the city of Diarbekir, over 1500 shops were sacked and burned, many houses plundered, and hundreds of Christians slain, while in the province more than 200 towns and villages were plundered, some of them burned, and many of the inhabitants killed. Six villages in which there were Protestant communities have been destroyed, two churches and five schools broken up, four ministers and two teachers slain, the people stripped of everything and scattered abroad, while the destruction of property is beyond computation.

On Saturday evening, November 2, the inhabitants of Kutterbul, just across the Tigris, east of Diarbekir, took refuge from the Kurds in the large stone church of the Jacobite Syrians, to which they had already moved their household goods. Fugitives from three other villages, which had been attacked the day before, had also taken refuge here, so the church was packed with goods and people. That night the Kurds, with some men from Diarbekir, surrounded the church, and began to shoot into the high, narrow windows by which it is lighted.

Aboosh Yacobe, pastor of the Protestant Church of the village, was the first one struck, but his wound was not serious, and he kept on his feet, giving such comfort as he could to his distressed companions. Seeing little effect from their efforts to dislodge the people and get at the booty, about midnight the Kurds took up part of the vaulted stone roof, and, first throwing in firebrands through the opening, then poured down kerosene on the blaze, at the same time firing into the defenceless crowd of men, women, and children. A frantic rush was made for the door, but it was locked, and could be opened with the key only from the outside. As is the case with most of the old churches, in order to prevent their desecration by being used as stables for horses, the door was very small, only some 4½ feet high by 2½ feet wide. After much effort it was broken down, and the stifled, scorched, sorrow-stricken crowd poured out from the narrow egress only to meet a deadly shower of bullets from the surrounding Kurds.

Among the crowd was Jourjis Khathershaw, a graduate from the Protestant Theological Seminary of Mardin in 1861, for some years pastor of the church in Mosul, lately engaged in Evangelical work in Egypt, from whence he had recently come to visit relatives. As he came out, he was at once recognised by his beard and intelligent face as one of the clergy, and was seized, thrown down and clubbed. One of the books which had been scattered about by the marauders was thrust into his mouth, and he was mockingly called upon to read the church service. Firebrands were then thrown upon him, and, restored to partial consciousness by the pain, he began to crawl away; he was again clubbed, drawn back, and burned to ashes.

The next to suffer was Pastor Hanoosh Melkie, of Karabash, three miles east of Kutterbul, a classmate of Pastor Jourjis, an earnest worker, and especially efficient as an evangelist. He was ordained and installed pastor of the Karabash church at the time of its organisation, but had resigned, and was expecting a call from the church in Sert, which was then on the way to him. Kurds attacked the village on Saturday afternoon, November 2, but were repulsed, and that night most of the unarmed villagers took refuge in the large dove-cotes around the outskirts of the village. Having received large reinforcements during the night, the Kurds renewed the attack at daybreak on Sunday, in spite of a cold driving rain which had set in; and getting possession of the village towards noon, began their horrible work of pillage, burning, and slaughter.

As soon as Pastor Hanoosh, in the dove-cotes, where with his family and many others he had taken refuge, knew that the village was taken, he tried to open a small door opposite the one at which the Kurds were already forcing an entrance. Before he could get it open they broke in and he was the first to meet them. Judging from his beard that he was the priest of the village, they supposed he of course would have a large sum of money with him. He had only some bread, and taking a loaf from his bosom he gave it to one of them. This enraged them, yet they would have spared him had he lifted but one finger in token of acceptance of Islam. Refusing to do this, he was struck down with a sword and killed before the eyes of his wife and children. His body was stripped and his family plundered.

The third to fall was Hanna Sehda, son of one of the first pastors, a member of the last theological class, and a preacher of much promise. After graduating in 1890, he ministered for a time to the Sert Church, of which his father had formerly been for a long time pastor. He refused its urgent and oft repeated calls to become its pastor, and had been for only a few months with the Karabash church, which liked him much, and had just built a parsonage for him. That Sabbath morning he led his wife, a graduate of the Girls' High School, and their three little children out of the dove-cote, and fled to a village half an hour away, which had already been plundered, and where they thought they might be safe for a time. Benumbed with the cold and rain, they were glad to find in one of the vacant houses a supply of fuel, cowdung mixed with straw, made up into large cakes. Here they were joined by Pastor Hanoosh's widow and children and others. Towards sunset a roving band of Kurds came upon them as they were grouped around the fire, and stripped them of most of what was still left them.

Later another band came, and enraged at finding nothing left for them to plunder, turned upon the men. They, seeing that the Kurds meant to kill them, rushed out and made their escape in the growing darkness, though fired upon. Hanna had taken his two little boys with him, but finding that he could not get away with them, he let go their hands and made off. Already faint with hunger, and having been stripped of nearly all his clothing, he soon became stiff with cold and could make but slow progress. So he was soon overtaken by Kurds, to whom he refused to yield by accepting Islam to save his life. When he was last seen by one of his church members as he looked back in his flight, he was extending his arms to ward off the sword blows which hewed him down, after which a gun was discharged into his body. A few days after, one of his congregation, compelled by Moslems to go to the village where he was killed, saw that his body had been burned. His baby girl and youngest boy died that night from exposure, while the elder boy and his fair-looking mother were led away into captivity, from which, however, they were recovered later, and are now at her father's house.

The fourth victim was Pastor Aboosh, of Kutterbul, already mentioned as the first one wounded in the church on the Saturday night before the roof was broken in. He escaped through the broken door, and though thrust at with a dagger as he passed out, made off in the darkness and climbed a tree, in which he stayed till near morning. Then he got down stealthily, and made his way to a house in which cut straw was stored, where he stayed hidden until Monday noon, when he felt sufficiently revived to go out in search of his scattered family. He found them in a deserted bath not far from their own house, his wife uninjured, one child killed, a married daughter lying in a corner fatally wounded in attempting to protect her husband, who was killed, the eldest son severely wounded, while a younger daughter had been carried away captive. They passed Monday night caring for the wounded daughter, mourning over the captivity of the younger one, and praying for deliverance from further woes.

On Tuesday a roving band of Kurds went through the village to see if anything was still left to plunder, and finally coming to the yard of the bath-house, began to abuse some of the pastor's congregation who had gathered there, as it was in a more protected place than most. The pastor overhearing them went out to try to persuade them to cease from further barbarities towards those who had already suffered so much. Perceiving that he was a "spiritual head," as the clergy are called, the Kurds at once called on him to renounce his faith for Islam. He fixed a steady gaze upon them, but said nothing. "Ha!" said one, "see how the Kafir (infidel), still holds stoutly to his faith." Another said to him, "Just raise one finger [this is accepted by them as a confession of one God and Mohammed his prophet] and you will not be harmed." Instantly he calmly replied, "I shall never raise my finger." Immediately a Kurd near him made a thrust at him with a straight dagger, while another a little farther away shot him right in the presence of his flock. His firm faith, and bold confession of it in the presence of death, was the weightiest sermon they had ever heard from his lips. He was the most scholarly and refined among all the Protestant preachers of the region. He came of an educated priestly family, and his grandfather was the author of a grammatical work in ancient Syriac. A sermon preached in Kutterbul, years ago, from the text, "Son, go work in my vineyard," was the means of his conversion, and of bringing him later into the ministry. Soon after graduating from the theological seminary, he became pastor of a church in his native village, Kutterbul, and during his pastorate had erected a beautiful little chapel, the finest in our field, now alas! used as a sheepfold, while the adjoining school-building has been burned. Out of his congregation of 161 souls, ninety-eight went with him into eternity, and of the sixty-three remaining, eighteen of them wounded, most are scattered, some we know not where.

Half of the Protestant pastors have fallen, "not accepting deliverance"; half of the churches are scattered, one third of the out-stations are destroyed. But God still reigns (Psalm ii.). He is faithful and true, and his promises sure. Pray with us that the desolate places may speedily be rebuilt, that his Church, purified and quickened by this tempest of persecution, may apply itself with fresh faith and zeal to his work, and that He will shortly accomplish his purposes of grace for this land.

As a Little Child.—3.

Who giveth us all things richly to enjoy.—1 Tim. vi. 17.

Two little brothers of three and four were standing by their mother, looking out of the drawing-room window at a beautiful sunset. Even while they looked, its loveliness began to fade; when one little, curly, golden head was suddenly bowed, and an earnest whisper came, "Please God, let it stay a long time!"

Later the same evening, the tiring boy of three was lisping his prayers at his mother's knee, when a new clause was added:

"Thank 'oo, kind God, for that bootiful red sunset!"

More than one practical lesson is suggested by this simple little incident. Are we at all times in a receptive mood to recognise with glad appreciation the good things of God when they come to us; and, while rejoicing in the gift, to remember the beneficent Giver from whom we receive it?

"WHAT DO THESE HEBREWS HERE?"—1 Sam. xxix. 3.

IT was a very natural remark. The Philistines were going into battle with the Hebrew king and his troops, and it was very anomalous that a strong body of Hebrews should be forming part of the Philistine array. They had no business to be there. The annoyance of the chief captains and lords that surrounded Achish was natural enough. For long, probably, it had been smouldering; now it broke out into flame.

It is very terrible when the children of the world have a higher sense of Christian propriety and fitness than Christians themselves, and say to one another, "What do these Hebrews here?" The word "Hebrew" means one that has passed over—a separatist. The death of our Lord Jesus was intended to make all his followers separatists. The appeal of his cross to us all is, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate." Too often, however, that call is unheeded, and, for fear of man, we mingle with the ranks of the enemies of our Lord.

If Christians attend the theatre; if Sunday-school teachers, elders or deacons of a church, are found participating in the pleasures of the ungodly; if the young Christian man is found loosely consorting with the card-players of the smoking-room of an ocean steamer—may not the sneer go round, "What do these Hebrews here?" "What doest thou here, Elijah?" is the remonstrance of God. "What do these Hebrews here?" that of the world.

"DAVID ENCOURAGED HIMSELF IN THE LORD HIS GOD."—1 Sam. xxx. 6.

His God! Doubtless the chronicler heard him say repeatedly, as he was so fond of saying, "My God, my God." "I will say unto God; my rock, why hast Thou forsaken me?" Though he had seriously compromised God's cause, by the failure of his faith, by consorting with Achish and the Philistines, by a tortuous and treacherous policy, yet God was still his God; and, in the supreme crisis which had overtaken him, he naturally betook himself to the covert of those loving wings.

He encouraged himself.—He would go back on the promises of forgiveness and succour, which had so often cheered him in similar straits. He would remember that he had been brought through worse trials than this, and surely He who had helped him against Goliath and Saul would not fail him against the Amalekites. Besides, he had probably left his dear ones in the protection of the encamping angel; and though his faith might be tried, it could not be entirely disappointed. In this way he encouraged himself. All around was tumult and fear, but in God peace and rest brooded, as swans on a tranquil lake. His men might speak of stoning him, his heart be greatly distressed for wives and children, his life be in jeopardy, but God was a very present help. "Why art thou cast down, and disquieted, O my soul? Hope thou in God." In similar circumstances, let us have resort to similar sources of comfort; hide in God; and encourage ourselves in Him.

"WHEN THE INHABITANTS OF JABESH-GILEAD HEARD OF THAT WHICH THE PHILISTINES HAD DONE TO SAUL, ALL THE VALIANT MEN..."—1 Sam. xxxi. 11-12.

This was a noble and generous act. At the beginning of his reign, in the early dawn of youthful promise and prowess, when he was the darling of the nation, Saul had interposed to deliver their beleaguered city. And now, as the awful tidings of his defeat and suicide spread like fire through the country, the men whom he had succoured did a strong and chivalrous deed in rescuing his remains from dishonour. They could not help him, but they could save his honour.

Are we careful enough of the honour and name of our dear Lord? He has done for us spiritually all that Saul did for Jabesh-Gilead, and more. He has delivered our soul from death, our eyes from tears, and our feet from falling. Let us be swift to maintain the honour of his name among those who are so apt at making it their scorn.

It was well that these men did not wait for others to act. Had they done so, the body of Saul might have rotted piecemeal on the walls of the temple at Bethshan. If they had left this act of reparation for Abner, or Ish-bosheth, it would never have been done. There is no order of precedence, when a wrong has to be righted, or a friend vindicated. The man who is next must act. Let us strike into the fray, and count that our opportunity is warrant enough.

WEDNESDAY, April 15.

"SAUL AND JONATHAN WERE LOVELY AND PLEASANT IN THEIR LIVES."—2 Sam. i. 23.

It was very lovely and pleasant of David to say so. He had no hesitation, of course, in saying this of his beloved Jonathan; but he might have been excused for omitting Saul from the graceful and generous epithets he heaped on the kindred soul of his friend. But death had obliterated the sad, dark memories of recent days, and had transported the Psalmist across the dream of years to Saul as he was when he was first introduced to him. All that could be said in praise of the first Hebrew King was crowded into these glowing lines—the courage, martial prowess, swiftness to aid those who required help, his pleasantness and courtesy in address.

This is the love of God, which He breathes into the hearts of his children. They become perfect in love, as He is. They love their enemies, bless those who curse them, and pray for all who despitefully use and persecute them. Is such love ours? Do we forbear from thinking evil? Do we look on the virtues as well as the failures of our friends? Do we cast the mantle of forgiveness over the injuries done to us, and dwell tenderly on the excellencies of our foes? Such is the love which never fails, but endures when faith has turned to fruition, and hope has realised its dreams.

We need most of all a baptism of love. A piece of clay will become fragrant if placed in continuity to attar of roses. Let us keep very near Jesus till we begin to love as He.

THURSDAY, April 16.

"THE MEN OF JUDAH CAME, AND THERE THEY ANOINTED DAVID KING."—2 Sam. ii. 4.

Thus was David anointed a second time. Hitherto he had been the leader of a troop, now he became king of his own tribe: and his kingdom clustered around the ancient city of Hebron.

Typically, we learn that our blessed Lord will be acknowledged king of his own people, the Jews, before He is accepted by the world at large. Now, his kingdom is in mystery, it is in the Adullam stage. Men are gathering to Him from all quarters, but as yet the world does not recognise it or them. Ere long, the Jews will recognise Him as king, and then we may begin to expect an enthronement over the populations of the globe.

Experimentally we are taught, that as each new department of our life unfolds, we should give Christ a fresh coronation. The attitude, which we took up years ago, of complete consecration, must be applied perpetually to each fresh development of experience. Was He king in the cave, then be sure to acknowledge Him as such, now that you are called from obscurity into the glare of noon. Whenever God says, by the circumstances of your life, Go up; always kneel at the feet of Jesus, saying, "Lord, in the very little I found my joy and strength in serving Thee only, and now amid the greater responsibility and publicity of my life, I desire to be thy earnest, simple-minded, whole-hearted follower."

FRIDAY, April 17.

"THERE WAS LONG WAR BETWEEN THE HOUSE OF SAUL AND THE HOUSE OF DAVID; BUT DAVID WAXED STRONGER AND STRONGER, AND THE HOUSE OF SAUL WAXED WEAKER AND WEAKER."—2 Sam. iii. 1.

The war between the flesh and Spirit is long, but the end is sure. As the Baptist said of Jesus, so must the flesh say of the Spirit, He must increase, I must decrease. Sometimes, in the long strain of the war, our spirit dies down. Will the bugle never cease to ring out its alarm? Will the assaults never come to an end? When shall we be able to lay aside sword and breastplate, and to enter the land of rest? Oh to be able to say with the Apostle, "I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith!"

Yet take heart. The assaults diminish in frequency and strength in proportion as they are faithfully resisted. Each time you resist successfully you will find it easier to resist. The strength of the vanquished foe enters the vanquisher.

Moreover, ultimate victory is secured. It makes a great difference to the soldier, when he belongs to an All-Victorious Legion, and serves under a captain that never lost a fight. And there can be no doubt as to the issue in your heart or mine. "He must reign till He has put all enemies under his feet."

At any moment, we may look for the sudden collapse of a great portion of the confederacy of evil, which has so long menaced us; as when Abner suddenly came to Hebron to give in his adhesion to David. What a huge piece of cliff fell that day into the sea! Expect the sudden collapse of evils which have long troubled you.

SATURDAY, April 18.

"AS THE LORD LIVETH, WHO HATH REDEEMED MY SOUL OUT OF ALL ADVERSITY."—2 Sam. iv. 9.

It was the midday of David's life, and, looking back, he saw how good the Lord had been to him. Step by step God had brought him up out of a horrible pit, and from the miry clay, setting him upon a rock, and establishing his goings. What need was there, then, that men should interfere to hasten the unfolding of the Divine purposes? It had been his life-long habit to wait. Whatever he needed he looked to God to supply. Whatever difficulties blocked his path, he looked to God to remove. Whatever men stood in his way he looked to God to deal with them. Twice in the wilderness he refused to take Saul's life. He had executed the Amalekite because he claimed to have slain Saul on Gilboa. And, in pursuance of the same policy, he could have no complicity in the act of the murderers of Ish-bosheth, even though they made his way clear to the throne of Israel.

Let God redeem thee out of all thine adversities. Do not lose heart or hope. Do not put forth thy hand to snatch at any position or deliverance by an act which might afterwards cause thee shame or sorrow. Trust in the Lord, and do good. He shall cause thee to inherit the land. He will promote thee in due time, and give thee to see thy desire upon thine enemies. He who redeemed thy soul by his most precious blood, cannot fail thee, however long He may tarry. Remember that He ever lives, and loves, and reigns.

St. Thomas.—A lady subscriber, writing from this West Indian port, says: I am about to open a "Door of Hope," especially for sailors. At times there are many ships and men-of-war in our port, and on every hand the seamen are met with drinking saloons. A helping hand must be given to these brethren. I hope to be able to get from time to time some religious literature and tracts at a low rate.

Learning to Walk.

YOU don't remember learning to walk, do you, children? It was so long ago that you have forgotten all the terrors and the tumbles! But you have watched mother while she gave baby his first lesson in walking, and you have yourself, perhaps, helped to teach him. How does mother teach? She sets baby up against the wall, holds out her arms in front of him, and says, "Come, baby! Come to mother!" Then baby tries to come, and very likely tumbles down all in a heap. But next time, he does better, and by-and-by he gets proud of his cleverness, and tries to walk all by himself? But it takes a long time before he learns to run about quite safely, does it not?

Now, just as our feet have to learn to walk steadily and safely along the streets and roads of our native town, so we all need to learn to walk in God's ways. And as mother teaches baby to walk, so God our Father in heaven will teach us to walk in his ways, which are the ways of right-doing. Let us see what the Bible says about this.

(1) It tells us that we must all learn to walk in God's ways (see Jeremiah xii. ; Deut. x.).

(2) It tells us that God will teach us how to walk in his ways (Ps. xxv. ; Ex. xviii.).

(3) It tells us what the ways of God are, in which we must walk.

WALK UPRIGHTLY.

"He that walketh uprightly walketh surely" (Proverbs x.).

When I was quite a little girl, and was staying at a seaside town in Wales, my father one day took me out walking with him. By and by we had to go down a steep bit of cliff. I wanted to stoop, and to catch hold of the grasses and plants to keep myself from falling, but my father said, "No, Gracie! walk uprightly, and you will not slip!" Then he took my hand, and with his help I walked uprightly and safely. So we must walk uprightly in God's ways. We must never stoop to do a mean or a cowardly thing.

But I could not have walked uprightly down that steep place if my father had not held my hand. Neither can we walk uprightly in God's ways unless He holds our hand, and helps us. There is a short prayer in the Psalms which just suits my little story: "Hold Thou me up, and I shall be safe" (Psalm cxix.). If we walk uprightly all our lives long, we shall enter heaven at last, for we are told that those who walk uprightly shall dwell in God's holy hill (Psalm xv.).

WALK CIRCUMSPECTLY (EPH. V.).

There is a long word for you! Let us cut it in two, in the middle, and make two words of it.

The first half of the word means "round about," and the second half means "looking." Put the two together again, and the one long word means "looking round about." We tread God's paths carefully, looking round us as we walk. Why? Because Satan, our great enemy, is always setting traps and snares for us. He wants to make us fall into sin. So we have to look very carefully all round about us as we walk, for fear of catching our feet in these traps and tumbling down. And if we do tumble down, we shall get the white robe of righteousness which Jesus gives to all who walk in his ways, so sadly torn and soiled. If you have read the Pilgrim's Progress you will perhaps remember how Christian and Hopeful once fell into the net which was laid for them by the Flatterer. "Wherefore there they lay crying for some time, for they could not get themselves out." And there they lay until the Shining One came and set them free.

WALK HUMBLY (MICAH vi.).

A little girl was starting off to school on a snowy morning. "Molly," called her father, "you had better wait for me, dear! The roads are very slippery, and I am afraid you will fall." But Molly was in a hurry, and did not wish to wait. "I shall be all right, father," she said, "I shan't fall." But before she reached the school Molly had two or three bad tumbles. Her dress was soaked with the snow, and her hands were scratched. Meeting a little friend at the school-house door, she said, "How did you manage to get here, Carrie? Didn't you tumble down?" "Oh no," said Carrie, "I did not tumble down; my big brother brought me all the way, and he held me up." And now Molly wished that she had let her father bring her to school. Molly was proud; she thought she could walk by herself, and so she got a fall.

"Those who walk in pride God is able to abase (or bring down)" (Dan. iv.), whilst those who hold his hand are always safe.

WALK AS HE WALKED (1 John ii.)—Our Lord Jesus Christ has gone over all the way before us, and we must follow in his steps (Deut. xiii. ; 1 Pet. ii.).

Look in your Bibles, and see if you can find any more texts about walking in God's ways, and then ask Him to help you to "walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory" (1. Thess. ii.). GRACE WINTER.

A Puzzle.

My first is in childhood, but not in age;
My second in hero, but not in sage;
My third in diamond, but not in gold;
My fourth in marble, hard and cold;
My fifth in faith, that will endure;
My sixth in truth, steadfast and sure;
My seventh in joy, but not in glee;
My whole, though last of sisters three,
Ranks always in the first degree.

Died at His Post.

A SHORT time back the engine-driver of a train near Montreal saw a large dog on the track. He was barking furiously. The engine-driver blew the whistle but he did not stir, and, crouching low, he was struck by the locomotive and killed. There was a bit of white muslin on the locomotive, and it attracted the attention of the engine-driver, who stopped the train and went back. There lay the dead dog and a dead child, which had wandered upon the track and had gone to sleep. The dog had tried to stop the train, and died at his post.

I wonder how many boys and girls who read this sad little story are as faithful in doing their duty as that poor dog. I am sure you admire him very much, dear old fellow; but I am afraid that sometimes you are very easily frightened off doing something you ought to do if it seems a bit difficult—even your lessons or home duties. Hard work will never kill you. Remember what God said to Joshua, "Be strong and of a good courage." UNCLE TOM.

Killing the Dragon.

A LITTLE boy, four years old, was much impressed by the story of "St. George and the Dragon," which his mother had been reading to him and his sister, and the next day he said to his father:

"Father, I want to be a saint."

"Very well, John," said his father; "you may be a saint if you choose, but you will find it very hard work."

"I don't mind," replied John. "I want to be a saint, and fight a dragon. I am sure I could kill one!" "So you shall, my boy." "But when can I be one?" persisted the child. "You can begin to-day," said his father. "But where is the dragon?" "I will tell you when he comes out." So the boy ran off contentedly to play with his sister.

In the course of the day some presents came for the two children. John's was a book, and his sister Catharine's a beautiful doll. Now John was too young to care for a book, but he dearly loved dolls; and when he found that his sister had what he considered a much nicer present than his own, he threw himself on the floor in a passion of tears.

His father, who happened to be there, said quietly: "Now, John, the dragon is out."

The child stopped crying, but said nothing. That evening, however, when he bade his father good night, he whispered, "Papa, I am very glad Catharine has the doll. I did kill the dragon!"

The Good We Do.

The good we do with motives true
Will never quite be lost;
For somewhere in time's distant blue
We gain more than it cost.
And oft I think a strange surprise
Will meet us, as we gain
Some diadem that hidden lies,
From deeds we thought in vain.

Oh toiler in a weary land,
Work on with cheerful face;
And sow the seed with lavish hand,
With all the gentle grace
That marks a brave yet loving soul,
A soul of royal birth,
And golden harvests shall unfold
Your own bright blessed earth.

An Evangelic Settlement.

A SINGULARLY interesting experiment is being made in grimy and poverty-stricken Walworth. Some of the methods may seem daring and unconventional, but the whole movement is well worth study as a genuine and practical effort to deal with the pitiful indifference to religion prevailing amongst the labouring classes. Lock's Fields Meeting House was in the early part of this century a famous chapel, crowded by the well-to-do, attracted by the ministry of Rev. George Clayton. Subsequently the district changed, the wealthy went farther afield, the poor thronged in, until there are now more than 115,000 human beings populating less than a square mile; and the new-comers kept aloof from the old meeting-house. Thus the chapel was well-nigh deserted. Various unavailing efforts were made to resuscitate the work, but the place remained empty; while the hosts of poor around were dying without God.

So matters stood about a year ago when Mr. F. Herbert Stead was led to undertake the work on a new basis; his idea being to form a Settlement of earnest men and women who should live among the poor; and seek to win them by practical help and fellowship in every-day affairs. Touched by the forsaken condition of the great masses around, Mr. and Mrs. Stead resolved to seek to meet their deepest and sorest need, by proving themselves in true sympathy with the difficulty and despair of common life; to bring them the help they best understand, in order to win a way for the mightier message of which they know so little. The question these workers sought to ask themselves was, How may we best represent the life of Christ among the people? While the Gospel must be spoken, men and women must be made to feel that behind it is the impetus of Christian hearts in real sympathy with them. This discloses the secret of the operations, however varied, now going on. The leaders believe that it is Christ's work, and they are trying to do it as He would have it done.

The outcome of a year's service on these lines has been that many are beginning to understand that religion has to do with them, that it concerns and controls every department of life. Strong evidence of such results has been afforded at the Watchnight service, and on some other occasions when men have voluntarily borne testimony to their changed views in regard to Christ, and to real and happy change in their lives and homes.

The Settlement centres in "Robert Browning Hall," and the name is thus explained. In the old chapel the Browning family worshipped for many years, and in it Robert Browning was christened. The old records, which I have had the privilege of examining, attest these facts, and also show that Dr. Robert Moffat, on his visits to England, was in fellowship there. This interesting association with Browning gives the clue to the name chosen. The adjoining hall, also in constant use, is named, after the minister I have referred to, Clayton Hall.

The manifold operations in these two halls include an Adult School for men on Sunday mornings, and conducted on lines familiar to many. The P.S.A. is also proving very successful, having now over 300 members, who form a true brotherhood, marked by freedom, practical helpfulness, and deepening devoutness. The addresses, as elsewhere, deal with many themes, but find their true inwardness in the presentation of the highest truths.

The women have their analogous meeting on Tuesday afternoons, under the anagram P.T.A. The ladies who devote themselves to this service feel highly encouraged by its marked results in life

The weekday engagements include meetings in connection with temperance, thrift, social Bible study, cookery, and ambulance classes, intellectual improvement, and recreation; also clubs of various kinds. Two "poor men's lawyers" see freely at certain hours any who have need of advice. In short, numberless agencies of a helpful kind are in constant operation. Nor are the children overlooked. Several members of the staff devote themselves specially to their interest in Sunday-school, children's service, band of hope, boys' brigade, musical drill, and so on, while one lady has a special class for deaf children. Mr. Main, amongst others, has devoted himself peculiarly to the children; and the cost of most of the happy treats provided for them has been met by himself. The workers feel that a glimpse of nature's delights is of great value to such classes, and hence, in the season, camps are formed for adults, boys, and girls; and every effort is made to afford as many as possible a real change.

In view of the influence thus gained, it may be asked: Is there a possibility of some sordid motive? Plainly put, Is there such a thing as pauperisation by gifts? There is not. This is felt to be a danger and is sedulously avoided. In extreme cases help has been given, but mostly work is made or found, as when the men were set to work cleaning up the place, and were thus allowed to earn the money. Friends who at times have invited parties to their grounds have observed that poor as the guests seemed, none of them have ever hinted poverty or asked for alms. There is a real heroism in the philosophic answer to personal inquiries, "Well, sir, things is bad, sure enough, but they might be worse!"

Of course the Settlement needs funds, although, as the warden says, "We do the work God has set us to do, believing He will provide the means." Still the means must come through the sympathy of the Lord's stewards. One cherished idea is to transform the old decayed burying-ground behind the chapel into a place where the poor could resort in the summer evenings; but this means cost. Meanwhile the work goes on bravely, the workers are full of hope that thus they bring the light of life into many dark hearts and minds. So doing, in a poor and pitiful district, they merit the sympathy and support of all who understand the condition of the thousands who occupy such densely-populated areas of poverty, squalor, and neglect.

The warden may be addressed Mr. F. Herbert Stead, 82, Camberwell-road, S.E.

Bank Holiday with the Sailors.—Monday was a busy day at the Strangers' Rest for Sailors, George-street, Ratcliff-highway. Between 200 and 300 sailors, Swedish, German, English, presented themselves. Mr. Isaac was well supported by a number of ladies and gentlemen in administering to the enjoyment of the guests. After tea, Deputy Surgeon-General Partidge gave his object-lesson on "Light in Darkness," illustrated with numerous small and large lamps. The doctor's lecture and illustrations were much appreciated and evidently understood by the sailors.

Death of Richard Weaver.

ANOTHER veteran evangelist has finished his earthly course and "passed over to the other side." There will be deep and genuine sorrow in many a heart and home throughout our land at the news of Richard Weaver's death. We have received from Mr. Bewley F. Weaver, one of the sons of the deceased evangelist, the following account of his closing hours:—

After a short but acute illness of about three days' duration, broncho-pneumonia supervened. Our beloved father very rapidly sank, and died from failure of the heart on Easter Sunday morning. His tremendous exertion long years ago had told heavily upon him during the past few years. Often as he been given up by the doctors; as often he has been raised again to declare the good news of salvation.

On Tuesday, last week, he was forced to make to his bed, but no immediate danger was feared. Thursday saw a great change. Early on Saturday morning he had a further relapse. In the evening it was seen that the end was not far off. All his family were gathered around him excepting his oldest daughter (Mrs. Hardwicke), who was detained through illness of her child. A few tried friends gathered with us.

Early on Saturday evening he could only speak with the greatest difficulty. After one of us had prayed, he began to speak with great unction and wonderful voice. The following are some of the messages from his lips: Many times he shouted, "Victory through the blood of the Lamb"; "The peace of God, which passeth all understanding." Asked if he could see, he replied, "Yes, the Lord is my light." "If you sing," he said, "at my funeral, let it be:—

In evil long I took delight,
Unawed by shame and fear;
Till a new object met my sight,
And stopped my wild career.

"If you put anything on my tombstone, let it be, 'A great sinner saved by great grace.'"

Continuing, he said: "I wish the doctor would tell me when the chariot is coming. By-and-by I shall drink at the fountain. Oh! what a blessing to have Christ! I go to my Father and to your Father.

On Christ, the solid Rock, I stand.
All other ground is sinking sand!

"Come, Lord Jesus, and take me to Thyself. Living or dying, I belong to Christ. All's right. All's well.

What is this that steals upon my frame—Is it death?
Which soon will quench this vital flame—Is it death?

If this be death, I soon shall be
From every sin and sorrow free;
I shall the King of glory see. All is well."

Turning to my brother Frank and myself, he said, "Stick to Christ; stick to the cross. Many young men imitate great preachers. One talent used for Christ is worth a thousand imitations." Then he continued: "What a grand thing Christ is!

Above all the rest this note shall swell,
My Jesus hath done all things well.

"Christ is all in all to me. I can do nothing; I can only trust now. My prize is a view. Easter Sunday with the Lord!"

After this he suffered most acutely. His breathing was agonising to hear. He could not speak plainly, but was quite conscious to within three minutes of death. The one word upon his lips seemed to be "Home." Once he said, "Oh that I had a voice to shout the praises of my Lord!" We asked him again, "Have you much pain?" "Yes, but it is only old Nature struggling." At a quarter past eleven on Easter Sunday morning he prayed, "How long, O Lord, wait I for Thee?" "There's a light in the valley." These were his last audible words. His prayer was soon answered. At 11.20 he was taken with one of the fits which troubled him so much twenty-five years ago. He had not had one for twenty years. The paroxysm was soon gone, and there was a glorious calm. His face was heavenly; I have stood by dozens of death beds, but never have I seen such a beautiful expression. He fell back on my arm and was gone.

Our hearts are broken. A better father never lived. But we sorrow not as those without hope. Let us work while it is called to-day, for soon the night will come when no man can work.

The mortal remains of the departed warrior were to be interred in Ardwick Cemetery Manchester, yesterday (Wednesday). In our next issue we hope to give some account of the funeral.

Rev. Dr. Bruce, late of Persia, has accepted the important charge of St. Nicholas, Durham, vacant by the removal of Rev. H. E. Fox to London.

Rev. Alexander Mackay, Free Church minister of Glen-Urquhart, Inverness-shire, will be the preacher at the bi-monthly Gaelic service in Craven Church, Russell-street, Covent Garden, next Sunday afternoon.

The Presbytery of New York lately passed a series of strong temperance resolutions, one being to the effect "that immediate efforts be made to sustain the policy of suitable scientific temperance instruction in the public schools." The declarations conclude with the words:—"The Church must hold the foremost place in this conflict (with intemperance). It is her natural right and recognised duty. No wide and permanent success can be expected until the ministers of the Gospel are everywhere and unmistakably prominent in fighting indifference, arousing and guiding public sentiment, and making manifest the power of the pulpit in marshalling the forces of righteousness against this universal and desolating foe of the Church and of mankind."

A Little Honey.

IN the days of Jacob, when the famine was sore in the land of Canaan, the old patriarch had to send his ten sons down into Egypt to buy corn. Their journey was prosperous, but the governor kept Simeon, bidding the men to bring their youngest brother Benjamin next time they came. On their return the nine told Jacob all that had happened to them, and how they found their money put back again into their sacks. Time passed on, and when all the food was gone it was necessary for another journey to be taken, but Jacob did not like to part with his youngest son. However, the pressure of the famine was so great that he was reluctantly compelled to consent.

Hunger is a hard master, and it forced poor old Jacob to yield to the Governor's demand that Benjamin should go down into Egypt. But he was determined to act honestly, and wished his sons to take a handsome present of good things and a little honey in order that they might show no ill feeling, and dispose of the heart of the ruler to show kindness, little knowing who he was (Gen. xlii. 11).

Now there was some worldly wisdom, and much common sense, in trying to make the best of this trouble. This homely piece of advice may be useful to us all; when we have a disagreeable duty to do it is often well to take "a little honey" with us, and we may follow this example in a larger and higher way.

The honey, the sons of Jacob were to take, was not a rare gift. It was a simple common produce; there was plenty of it, in fact the land of Canaan was said to "flow with milk and honey." But it would mean a kindly feeling. So we may learn a good lesson, that it is well for us in life's journey to take with us something that will help to sweeten hardships.

When we are going to drive a bargain or do business let us take something beyond the money. If we have to do with people we think hard or unkind, who seem exacting, do not let us forget "the honey." We can all take a smile with us and a word of thanks. If we go into a shop and buy anything we can be grateful to those who serve us. First let us pay for all we have, for Paul says, "Owe no man anything except to love one another"; but more, let us take a kind spirit and a pleasant word.

When we have any disagreeable work let us try and be prepared beforehand, take all that is necessary, but something more, and if possible let it be the sweetest thing we have. A little kindness and goodwill goes a long way in softening rough natures. Little things do much to help or injure. If at any time we are going to see someone we don't like, or think they have not treated us as nicely as they might have done, remember not to leave the honey at home; it may help more than we know to bring about a better feeling. A little gratitude or civility does not cost much, but it keeps life sweet. A touch of oil in a stiff lock soon makes it go smoothly. For want of a little grease in the wheel the axle caught fire. Friends have sometimes parted for life when a few words of love would have locked their hearts together in closer union.

"A little honey" is the sign of much blessing. It is like the white flag of truce or the olive-branch of peace, or like oil on troubled waters, or the soft answer that turns away wrath. It tends to make the hard things easier, the rough ways gentle, and unpleasant things sweet.

It may be we take "a little honey" with us, but it does not at first make all our way to prosper; yet after many days, if the heart is right and the motive good, we shall find, in God's own time and way, no gracious doing or gift of love is cast away by Him. And so it turned out in the story of old. By-and-by the men who took the presents and the honey found their lost brother and Jacob his missing son, and all a new home with peace and plenty. It will only be at the last great day, when all secret things shall be known, that we shall see what the honey-carriers and givers of cups of cold water have really done in the name of Jesus.

Confessing Jesus Christ.

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

WHEN Jesus Christ came among men on his Divine mission, He acted upon them somewhat as a magnet acts when it is drawn through a vessel filled with steel filings and sand. The grains of sand are undisturbed; the grains of metal attach themselves to the magnet, and form a shining mass around it. Christ drew unto Himself penitent and believing souls, who formed a distinct, separate body of men and women; they were identified with Christ, and united to Christ by the indwelling of his Spirit. This body of converted people compose the Christian Church, whatever denominational "ear-mark" each person may bear.

From the start Jesus Christ demanded an open acknowledgment of himself as Saviour and Lord. "Whosoever shall confess Me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven." That word "confession" is a very deep and far-reaching one. It refers first to the heart, then to the lips, and then to the daily life. Whoever would be saved must embrace Christ in the heart; that signifies conversion. Next he must acknowledge Him with the lips; this is what is usually styled a "profession of faith." Above all, those who make this open confession are expected to honour Christ by obedience to his commandments; this is vital Christianity. To all those who honestly make open confession of Him our Saviour makes exceeding great and precious promises of help and supporting grace. A very simple and yet a most significant and solemn step is this public confession of Jesus Christ; it is to be weighed by its meaning. It is a very short and simple process for me to write my name at the foot of a note for 1000 dollars; but it seals my obligation to pay that sum on a certain day. The brief monosyllables, "I will," spoken at the marriage altar, signify the solemn vow of a life-long love and mutual devotion. And when a person sincerely trusts Christ, and loves Christ, and desires to follow Christ, then the open confession of Christ is the most natural and significant method of showing gratitude, loyalty, and obedience to his authority. To such persons the Master saith, "Ye are my witnesses."

"Can I serve Christ just as well without enrolling myself publicly among his followers?" To this question, so often asked, we would answer No! All the isolated patriots in our land never would have won its independence; an organised army alone could do it. Christ's visible "kingdom" is the organised body of his followers, with its officers and its ordinances. You can serve Him best, not as a "guerilla," but as an enlisted and equipped soldier. You need the sympathy, the watchful care, the household life of the Church. More than all, you need to obey the direct injunction of the Master to confess Him before the world. There are many halting, irresolute people who have a secret faith in Christ—not very strong, but sadly needing to be strengthened. They may be Christians, but the world is not allowed to know it. They carry dark lanterns, and assuredly do not "let their light shine before men." There is nothing manly or womanly in such clandestine attempts to steal quietly along toward heaven without letting anybody overhear your footsteps. Far be it from us to say that no one can be saved who does not join a church; but we do say that every day spent by a genuine convert outside the Church of Christ is almost a day lost. He loses that sense of responsibility which is a stimulating force to do right, and a restraining force from doing wrong; he loses the best opportunities to do good; he loses in self-respect, and if he is kept back by cowardice, he loses the approbation of Him who has declared, "Whosoever shall be ashamed of Me before men, of him will I be ashamed." When Jesus Christ gives conversion, He demands confession.

Perhaps some one of my readers may say, "I am not good enough to make a public confession, and not strong enough to keep such a vow if I made it." To this I would reply that self-distrust is a great deal better than self-confidence. Whatever of goodness you have is from Him; thank Him for what you have and seek for more. Schools and academies are not opened for the well-educated; they are opened for the ignorant who are desirous to learn. Christ's church is not an assemblage of matured believers; it is a school for souls, and the best requisites for admission are an honest, humble, teachable spirit, a hunger after Christ, and a sincere desire to do his will. Whatever the Holy Spirit presses you to do, promptly do it. A sincere, heartfelt promise to serve Christ is always conditional on his infinitely greater promise to help you. I admit that you are not strong enough in yourself to keep the solemn vows involved in a public confession of Christ. But that loving Shepherd who knoweth his humblest sheep by name, when He saith, "Follow Me," also saith, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

Perhaps this article may fall under the eye of many persons who may be raising these vital questions with themselves: "What is it to be a real Christian?" "Am I prepared to take the great step of confessing Christ by uniting with a Christian church?" My own habit, during a ministry of almost half a century, has been to explain as clearly as possible the nature of saving faith as the act of laying hold on Jesus Christ. I have usually put before those who propose to unite with the church a few simple questions, of which the most important are these: Have you seen yourself to be a sinner against God? Have you not only repented of your sin and sought forgiveness, but are you resisting temptations to sin, and praying to be delivered from the power of evil? Do you trust Jesus Christ as your atoning Saviour? Have you surrendered your heart to Jesus Christ, and are you willing to follow him whithersoever He may lead you? Is it your solemn purpose to cleave to Him as your guide to the end of life? In order to maintain a Christian life, do you make it a matter of conscience to pray fervently for strength, and do you read God's inspired Word as your rule of faith and practice? Are you willing to give your Saviour the best you have of time, talents, substance, and influence?

These questions seem to reach the roots. They embrace the two core-ideas of Bible religion, which are to hate sin and turn from it, to love Christ and follow Him. A hearty "Yes" to these questions proves that there is a genuine spiritual life in the soul; it may be feeble, but if it is strengthened by prayer and practice, you may yet become the full-grown man in Christ Jesus. Do not despise the day of small things, nor be content with small things. Conversion and confession are not the finish; they are only the start. They are not the "harvest," but only the planting. Pray do not enter a church as a "parlour car" to transport you to heaven. Like the Master when He was on earth, you must go on foot; there will be some rough roads to travel and some steep hills to climb, some head winds to face, and many poor creatures will need your helping hand. And "Our Beloved" will be with you on the road, and you may walk in the light of his countenance all the way. At present, your best confession to Jesus Christ will be:—

To Thee I come, a sinner poor,
And ask admission at thy door.
But where Thou art, Lord, I would be;
Jesus! oh, let me go with Thee!

Home of Industry.

ANOTHER band from our busy hive left us for Canada last week. It was the seventieth party of children from the Home of Industry—boys and girls, of a variety of ages. Some of them were recommended to us by those who knew their need. Others found their way to us through hearing of the bright prospects of those to whom we had given a start in life in Canada, when left homeless by a father's or mother's death.

Eight from among the number went out because they had either a brother or a sister already doing well there. A middle-aged couple were permitted to accompany the party, whose three boys we had emigrated, and who had, after a comparatively short time, succeeded so well as to enable them to provide a home for their parents for the remainder of their days.

Means to train the children, outfit them, and pay the shippers' bills, whilst sustaining a Home in Canada to watch over each individually, have been sent sufficient to meet every requirement. Strength has been given to the workers for the journey, their bright testimony from off Moville filling our hearts with thanksgiving to the Divine Lover of needy little ones. Our prayers follow them, rejoicing that a home in that land of plenty awaits them.

Our training Home is again ready to be filled, and we are seeking to rescue and to sow the good seed in young hearts. Our widows are making another stock of shirts; socks are being knitted by thrifty hands in spare moments. Our faith rests in the Lord, that the empty nests will be filled, and all that is necessary provided, while we continue doing all in our power to win each one to become a lamb within his fold. We ask the prayers of those who love the sorrowful little ones without home and friends.

Dr. Baedeker's Travels.

DEAR SIR,—After an absence of nine months I have once more returned to England. Praising God for his many proofs of loving care, I am also bound to express my gratitude for the many prayers which have been offered on my behalf. I have been kept in perfect health, and have been able, without any hindrance, to sow the precious seed of the Gospel wherever I have gone, the doors being opened more widely than ever before. Praise the Lord who "openeth and no man shutteth."

My visit to the banished brethren, the Stundists, has been successful, and their needs have been attended to without hindrance. Their conditions have not undergone any changes for the better; in some cases their treatment is worse than before. As there are many sects in Russia of people who have dissented from the Greek (Orthodox) Church, not on Scriptural grounds, the Stundists are by the civil authorities frequently classed with them. Thus they are unjustly accused of rejecting the Czar's authority; whereas they are in truth the most loyal subjects, but on conscientious ground refuse to worship pictures and to accept the forgiveness of their sins from the priests. They take their stand on the Word of God in the New Testament, they suffer martyrdom for no other cause; those who know them freely acknowledge that they are the best of citizens, and the most sober and God-fearing men and women. Whilst they suffer in their painful banishment they cease not to offer prayer for the Czar and his counsellors, and they confidently look for liberty for the Gospel to be granted shortly. Surely they have a strong claim on the continued prayer and practical sympathy of the whole Church of God.

Very probably I shall shortly visit Hungary once more, and thence I may go as far as Bucharest and Constantinople to see what can be done for some of my Armenian friends, who have had a narrow escape in the late massacre at Erzeroom. Any help which may be entrusted to me for them shall have due attention.

I desire a continuance in prayer for myself on this new departure.—Yours sincerely,

F. W. BAEDERER.

King David and His Psalms.

By REV. J. STORJOHANN, CHRISTIANIA.

PSALMS FROM THE TIME OF THE FAMINE.

IT was only in the third year that the cause of the famine was revealed to David, when he made inquiry of Jehovah (2 Sam. xxi. 1). After the first bad year had elapsed, and again a Passover had come round, when the first-fruits of the corn, the first ripe ears of barley, were to be carried to the Temple, it became clear to everyone that another year of bad crops was upon the country; and the people required a voice of warning and encouragement. It was hard to keep the Passover with another failure of harvest in view. The honey, which at other times the bees used to store in the rifts of the rocks, could not be expected now that the fields offered no food for them. It was Asaph, that patriotic singer, who improved the occasion to teach the people how it behoved them all the more to keep a cheerful Passover; and to learn from the Passover in Egypt, and from the story of Massah-Meribah (Ex. xvii. 7), which happened soon after the exodus from Egypt, when the people were in want of rain and water, how the feast was to be kept, and on what conditions God Himself promised to relieve their distress.

PSALM LXXXI.

For the Chief Musician; set to the Gittith,
A Psalm of Asaph.

PART I.

1. Sing aloud unto God our strength,
Make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob,
2. Take up a psalm, and strike the timbrel,
The pleasant harp with the psaltery.
- 2.
3. Blow the trumpet in the new moon,
At the full moon, on our solemn feast day,
4. For this is a statute for Israel, an ordinance of Jacob's God,
5. A testimony He appointed in Joseph, when he went out.

3.

- Over the land of Egypt I heard
A speech which I knew not:
6. "I removed his shoulder from the burden,
His hands shall be freed from the basket."

PART II.

1.

7. In trouble thou didst call,
Then did I deliver Thee,
I answered thee in the secret place of thunder,
I proved thee at the waters of Meribah.

8. Hear my people, and I will testify unto thee,
O Israel, if thou wouldst hearken unto me;
9. There shall be no strange god in thee,
Neither shalt thou worship any strange god.

3.

10. I, I am Jehovah thy God,
Who brought thee up from the land of Egypt;
Open thy mouth wide,
And then I will fill it.

PART III.

11. But my people hearkened not to my voice,
And Israel did not yield to me,
12. Then I let them go in the stubbornness of their heart,
That they might walk in their own counsels.

13. Oh, that my people would hearken unto me,
That Israel would walk in my ways;
14. I would soon subdue their enemies,
And turn my hand against their adversaries.

3.

15. The haters of Jehovah would come feigning to him,
And their time (of disaster) should endure for ever.
16. Then He would feed him with the fat of wheat,
And with honey from the rock would I satisfy thee.

PART I.—The psalm begins with an exhortation addressed to the people (1), the Levites, the devotional singers and musicians (2), and finally to the priests, to keep a happy and joyful Passover. The priests were to blow the trumpets in honour of the chief feast of Israel. According to Divine law, the great deliverance from Egypt was to be remembered; the people throughout the land of Egypt suddenly became aware of a language they had never heard before. God's words of deliverance (6) are perhaps a quotation from an old familiar song, which would explain the experience of deliverance being made in the first person: "I heard a language that I understood not." Thus, too, the words, "through the land of Egypt," which I have placed in the second line of (5), instead of, as usual, in the first line, will be easily understood by Ex. v. 12, "So the people were scattered abroad throughout all the land of Egypt, to gather stubble instead of straw." In this way the words of deliverance (Ex. vi. 5) were heard throughout the land of Egypt, "And I have also heard the groaning of the children of Israel whom the Egyptians keep in bondage."

PART II.—The Lord expostulates with Israel; speaks of how, when they prayed, He delivered them, answered them, and testified to them. The case is the same in the present distress, and rain and water are again needed as in Meribah (7): "Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it." If there were famine and hungry mouths, yet was the Lord ready, when Israel should open its mouth in prayer, to fill that mouth with food (7-10). If the voice of God was not listened to, the temptation, in the circumstances, was great to turn to the false gods; even, perhaps, to those of the Philistines, the gods of the stranger,* which had now abundance of corn, while the Israelites, without knowing the reason, saw themselves deserted by God, and left to a second year of famine.

PART III.—Because the people—"my people" is the tender expression—would not listen, God was constrained to give them up, so that they died in the wilderness; now, if the people,—again "my people"—will hear and walk in God's ways, their need will soon have an end: the enemy, the Philistines, will be humbled; and God's hand, which now lies heavy on the people, will be turned against the enemy, so that they must "submit" themselves to Israel. These prophetic words, reminding us of the prediction in Deut. xxxiii. 29, were literally fulfilled in the Philistine war, which is proved, both in Psa. xviii. 44, and lvi. 3, where exactly the same words are used. Hatred of Jehovah was to have an end, and famine and distress no longer to be found. The finest wheat was to be grown, and as a consequence thereof abundance of honey to stream down from the rifts in the rocks. The words in Deut. xxxii. 13, 14 were to be fulfilled.

The song is sung on a Gittith, a Philistine harp from Gath, which also seems to intimate that it is the conquest of the Philistines, which is to be sung prophetically, with the premises that Israel will do penance. It is significant, too, that the Psalter contains such a psalm of warning and instruction for use at a time of famine and warfare. There is, indeed, sure to be a use for it.

But could David be silent at such a time of distress? Doubtless it is he who unites his speech of warning to that of Asaph, in

PSALM XCV.

1. Come, let us sing unto Jehovah;
Let us shout unto the rock of our salvation;
2. Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving;
Let us shout unto Him with psalms.

PART I.

3. For Jehovah is a great God
And a great King above all gods;
4. In his hands are the deep places of the earth;
The heights of the mountains are his also;

* The "strange god," or the god of the stranger, reminds us exactly of "the sons of the stranger," by which the Philistines were called, Psalms cxliv. 7; xviii. 44.

5. The sea is his and He made it,
And his hands formed the dry land.

6. Come, let us worship and bow down;
Let us kneel before Jehovah, our maker;
7. For He, He is our God, and we—
The people of his pasture and the sheep of his hand.

PART II.

8. To-day, oh, that ye would hear his voice!
Harden not your heart, as at Meribah,
As in the day of Massah in the wilderness,
9. When your fathers tempted me,
Proved me, but also saw my work;
10. Forty years long was I grieved with a generation.

2.

- Then I said, it is a people that do err in their heart,
And they have not known my ways,
11. So that I swore in my wrath,
Surely they shall not enter into my rest.

This Psalm resembles in a remarkable manner that of Asaph (lxxxi.). There is nothing to prevent its being by David, as the Septuagint designates it, and as is confirmed by the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews (iv. 7).* And why should the obduracy of the people at Massah and Meribah be quoted just here as a warning to the people, if they were not in similar need—in need, namely, of water—through scarcity of rain, by which arose a famine of three years' duration (2 Sam. xxi. 1)? And if the people during these years were compelled to suffer hardship at the hands of the encroaching Philistines, those, on the contrary, were denied a share in the promised rest which the Lord was constrained to refuse because they hardened their hearts.

In such circumstances, where the temptation to idolatry was making itself felt, an energetic appeal to give Jehovah his praise and honour as the King above all gods, and who, as the Creator, has everything in his hand, was necessary. Above everything, the children of Israel were to feel themselves God's people, as the flock of the Lord; and as such, to beware of the dangers of obduracy, which lie so near in the bitter times of famine. This was to be effected by listening to the voice of the Lord from the sanctuary, which speaks to those who come to worship, and which emphasizes the present day as the day of grace, when help is still ready for those who listen to the Word.

As this Psalm is an earnest warning to the Israelites against hardening their hearts and falling from Jehovah, as they really did in David's time, especially after the Philistine war, so is the same warning again taken up in the Epistle to the Hebrews, to the Jewish Christians, who were in danger of relapsing, and of being hardened by the deceitfulness of sin, in the days of tribulation before the Jewish war with the Romans. The rest in Canaan (11) is the anti-type to the rest of the heavenly Canaan, which is still in reserve for God's people (Heb. iv. 9). The Psalm is therewith dedicated by the Epistle to the Hebrews as the great word of God for every day of relapse among the communities of the New Covenant, and is thus also a Psalm specially applicable to our own times.

Southwark.—The Southwark Band of Hope Union has been having a series of lectures by Mr. W. N. Edwards on "The Chemical and Physiological Aspects of Temperance." The course has proved rich in valuable instruction, providing young workers with a store of solid information for future use.

* It has been thought that the Epistle to the Hebrews, which invariably quotes the words of the Old Testament after the Septuagint (where the Psalm is supposed to be by David), only admits the words to be by David as belonging to the Davidic psalter in a wider sense. But this is only a makeshift. The best reason which, supposing it is not by David, can be shown for the occasion of the Psalm, is Hezekiah's appeal to the people for an act of penance, which was also sent to the remnant of Israel with the prayerful exhortation: "Harden not your necks" (2 Chron. xxx. 8, marg., Comp. Psa. xcvi. 8). But that the famine period under David suits better seems incontrovertible. That appeal, then, of Hezekiah's to the people was the occasion why the Psalm was included in the Hezekiah collection of Psalms as a word of warning suited to that time.

THE EVANGELIST.

The Way of Salvation.*

HOLY Scripture, which tells us that at the creation "God saw all that He had made, and behold it was very good," tells us, shortly after, of the fall of man into sin, and the corruption of his nature which followed. And we have evidence that, from that time to this, this degenerate condition has continued. Pain, sickness, sorrow, and death, which prove the imperfect condition of things existing in the world, remind us continually that things are not as an all-perfect and all-good God would have them be. And this prepares us for those revelations which the Bible furnishes respecting our recovery, our restoration, our salvation.

If we turn to Isa. liii., and read of the universal lapse and transgression of mankind—"All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way"—we also read of the provision for our salvation already made in the Divine purpose—"The Lord hath laid upon Him the iniquity of us all. He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with his stripes we are healed." It was not, however, till some hundreds of years after this that "God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons." The Gospel histories tell us of his miraculous birth, his being heralded by the promised forerunner, his ministry of mercy, and his voluntary yielding of Himself to the death of the Cross on our behalf.

It may be, however, that your conscience has slumbered, and that you have little painful sense of sin; so that, not being sensible of your need, you are not concerned about the provision made to meet it. John B. Gough writes:—"A young man once said to me, 'I do not think I am a sinner.' I asked him if he would be willing that his mother or sister should know all he had done, or said, or thought—all his notions and desires. After a moment, he said, 'No, indeed; I should not like to have them know. No, not for the world.' Then, said I, 'Can you dare to say, in the presence of a holy God, who knows every thought of your heart, "I do not commit sin"?' No one can thoughtfully read the second and third chapters of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans without coming to the conclusion that "all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God," and that one great design of Divine teaching is that "every mouth may be stopped, and all the world become guilty before God."

Excluded is my every boast,
My glory swallowed up in shame.
Guilty I stand before thy face,
On me I feel thy wrath abide:

'Tis just the sentence should take place,
'Tis just—but oh! thy Son hath died.

Do you ask how we obtain the benefits of Christ's atoning death? Let me endeavour to show you the way of salvation. Two things are made known to us as necessary on our part—repentance and faith. When the people, with troubled consciences, on the Day of Pentecost, said, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" the answer was, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." The Apostles would only baptize them on their profession of faith in Jesus Christ; so repentance and faith were required. St. Paul speaks of his ministry at Ephesus as "testifying both to the Jews and also to the Greeks repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ."

Upon the foundation of Christ's atonement, "let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and He will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon." "For God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Repentance towards God, faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ, leading to obedience to God's holy will, and an earnest pursuit of holiness, constitute the course which conducts to glory. There shall in nowise enter into the heavenly city "anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie; but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." There is no back way; we must be washed, and sanctified, and justified here, or we must be excluded.

THE LOVE OF GOD.

God's love to man precedes any deserving on the part of man. The only form of love of which this is true in human relations is the parental. We do not love our children because they are worthy of it; we love them simply because they are our children. They may be wayward, disobedient, prodigal, yet we love them. So God loves men. He does not await our return to Him, nor demand qualities that call forth his affection. His arms are ever open to the prodigal to return to his bosom; nay, He is as it were out on the wild moor, in the gloaming, in the dark, in the midnight, seeking the lost sheep. We cannot imagine similes more apt, illustrations more striking, parables more exquisite than those in which Jesus Christ enforces this element of the Gospel. They leave no loop-hole for any man to doubt God's love to him, however bad he may have been. "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us."

THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST.

God... now commandeth all men everywhere to repent. God our Saviour will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth. For there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the Man Christ Jesus, who gave Himself a ransom for all.

The Lord is... not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation.

How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation? He, therefore, that rejecteth [margin], rejecteth not man, but God.

Be zealous, therefore, and repent. Acts xvii. 30; 1 Tim. ii. 3-6; 2 Peter iii. 9; 2 Cor. vi. 2; Heb. ii. 3; 1 Thes. iv. 8; Rev. iii. 19.

Theatre Employees at Tea.

ON Good Friday the seventeenth annual gathering of employees connected with the various theatres and music halls in the East of London took place at Bishopsgate-street Chapel. A sumptuous tea was provided in the school room. Some 800 persons sat down.

After tea a meeting was held in the chapel. Mr. J. H. Lydall, the chairman, said he had received a letter from Sir George Williams asking him to take his place, as he felt it prudent to husband his strength; the May meetings would soon be coming on, and therefore he had left London. He and Lady Williams sent kindly greetings to all. The pastor of Bishopsgate Chapel, Rev. Thos. Grear, explained that the reason they were not at the Shoreditch Town Hall as usual, was that the building was engaged beforehand, so could not be had, and in the emergency the friends of Bishopsgate-street Chapel came to the rescue. The rev. gentleman then spoke a few words of counsel. Mr. Henry Thorne gave an interesting account of his conversion. Addresses were also given by Mr. Chadwick, Mr. H. Ehrlich, Mr. Goodenough, and others.

The meeting was arranged under the auspices of the Committee for Special Religious Services in Theatres and Halls.

Free Church National Council.—Mr. Evan Spicer has consented to become one of the treasurers of the committee, and to act as chairman of the finance sub-committee. Mr. Macdonald, of Manchester, who has rendered very valuable service as acting treasurer, has resigned that position, and become a member of the committee, as it is now necessary for the acting treasurer to be resident in London. Mr. Geo. Cadbury will act as the treasurer of that portion of the fund which is used to assist different districts in securing local organising secretaries.

Medical Mission in Old Cairo.

THE Church Missionary Society has for several years carried on a Medical Mission in Old Cairo, chiefly among the poorer classes. There is a small hospital containing ten beds, superintended by a duly qualified English nurse. The chief part of the work is among the out-patients at the dispensary, which is open five days a week in the Salamik (guard-house) of an old palace. Here from early morning often till late in the afternoon two doctors, English and Syrian, with their native assistants, are engaged in attending the sick and suffering.

Since 1892 there has been a daily average attendance of over 100, and during the past two years, of which a careful record has been kept, 10,849 persons have been treated, while 1,007 operations have been performed. The patients come from all parts of the country even from as far as Suez, Assouan, Kafr-Zayat, Tantah, and Zagazig, although of course the largest number are from Old Cairo and the neighbourhood. In 1894, 421 districts and villages were represented by the patients. In consequence of the large number of women attending the dispensary, the committee are sending out a lady doctor this year in addition to the present staff.

The Gospel of the love of God in Christ is daily preached, both at the bedside in the Hospital and to the crowds of out-patients at the Dispensary. In the waiting-rooms of the latter an English lady and a Bible-woman sit for hours each day among the women, reading the Bible and telling them its sweet and saving truths, while a native catechist does a similar work among the men. Many of the patients also are visited in their homes, and so the good work begun at the Dispensary is patiently followed up.

The work is carried on under great difficulties, for the Hospital is both inadequate and insanitary, and the whole accommodation of the Mission is costly and uncertain. The committee of the C.M.S. have given a grant for the purchase of a site, and for building houses for the doctors and lady workers, but a further sum of at least £2700 is needed for building the Hospital and Dispensary.

Communications may be addressed to Mr. H. G. Malaher, 20, Compton-terrace, Upper-street, Islington, N.

Dr. Pierson.

GREATLY have we been refreshed by the short visit Dr. Pierson has paid to Bath. During Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday last week he held five meetings. They were in our largest public hall, and although the time was the worst for getting an audience, being Passion Week, when services were held in all the churches, yet many more gathered than we expected, and the hall was three parts filled.

All the addresses were most helpful, but especially those on the victory over sin and the presence and power of the Holy Ghost. With new light the truth flashed before us that whereas Christ in his personal presence was at the right hand of God in the place of power and authority, yet as really in his spiritual presence was He with the individual believer, so that we can speak to Him here and now, as though we actually saw Him, and thus He becomes very real to us moment by moment. May God abundantly bless his servant in this important ministry of quickening the spiritual life of believers.

G. E. T.

Dr. Pierson also conducted a series of services in Exeter from March 26-29. On Thursday, April 2, at four in the afternoon, he preached in Raleigh Chapel, Brixton Hill, and in the evening at Cornwall-road Chapel, Brixton. On Good Friday, at eleven o'clock, Croydon Tabernacle was crowded when he preached from Heb. iii. 1.

House of Rest, Finchley-road.—The Pillar Room was crowded to excess last Friday afternoon. Dr. Montague Miller gave a short address on Gal. iii. 9, "Blessed with faithful Abraham." The Countess Schimmelmänn spoke of the difference in the two disciples, Peter and John; one a type of belief and goodwill, the other of love. Mere belief in Christ avails little unless the heart be filled with love. The Countess gave a short sketch of the mission work carried on by her among the fishermen of the Baltic and the sailors of various ports.

Children's Scripture Union.

THE members and friends of this Union for the prayerful reading of the Holy Scriptures held on Wednesday week two large meetings in Exeter Hall. In the afternoon Rev. E. A. Stuart presided. After praise, prayer, and the reading of the portion for the day—

Mr. T. B. BISHOP (hon. sec.) made a statement as to the work of the Union. Looking back on the story of the past seventeen years, since the starting of the C.S.U., he felt profoundly thankful that God should have touched so many young hearts to read and ponder his Word. During the present year more Scripture cards have been issued than in any former year. Some 550,000 English cards and seventy to eighty thousand foreign cards have been issued. Moreover, in connection with these there have been many tokens of God's blessing and favour.

As to publications, a department of increasing importance in these days when readers are multiplying in all lands, and when thousands will read the printed who never hear the spoken words, the speaker referred to the remarkable acceptance of, and blessing attending, "Our Own Magazine." During the past year the Children's Special Service Mission has issued, including cards, hymn-sheets, leaflets, magazines, and so on, about six and a-half millions in English, and about two and a-half in other languages. The profit on the sales has paid the expenses of the gratuitous distribution, while the balance has been handed to the foreign literature fund. The various other operations carried on by the C.S.S.M. and the C.S.U. at home and abroad have been fully and clearly shown in recent "Occasional Papers" issued by the Mission, and hence, said Mr. Bishop, details were unnecessary. Special reference was, however, made to the appointment of Mr. Bernard Herklots, B.A., Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, as a Children's Missionary for India. Evidence has appeared that there is abundant scope for such a worker, indeed there is room for hundreds. Having already spent some years in India, and being an enthusiast in the work of the Mission, Mr. Herklots seems peculiarly adapted for this service, on which he will, it is hoped, enter in October.

The chairman, Rev. E. A. STUART, gave an address, as suitable to the season, on the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ. The first grand truth centred around the cross is that Jesus Christ died for our sins, that He died, the just for the unjust, to bring us to God. But while firmly holding by the atoning aspect of the cross, it is right also to consider its other aspect, in which Christ is seen as our example. This phase the speaker developed in the course of an exposition of Luke ix. 23; Matt. xvi. 24; Mark x. 21; Luke xiv. 27, and Luke xliii. 26.

Rev. G. H. C. MACGREGOR, addressing his hearers as fellow-workers with God, called attention to the summons, 1. Chron. xxix. 5, "Who is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?" In building the temple many forms of labour were needed; so in building God's spiritual temple, different kinds of workers are demanded. There is the quarrying, the gathering in, the evangelistic service; but there is also much work in polishing, preparing, and fitting the living stones for the niches they are expected to fill. Further, there are needed the builders in, the organisers. But the great thing for all is that they should be willing workers—an attribute on which the Word of God lays great emphasis. God will have no unwilling servants. Next individual workers are imperative; as well as those who are strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus, that is, men and women of intense conviction and mighty faith. Such as these God is ready to use, and has promised to bless.

Mr. E. T. M. DENNES epitomised in a brief address the results of his examination of some 2000 reports sent in by local secretaries. Generally speaking, the tone of these reports is most gratifying, showing that the definite aim is to win the children to Christ, and to kindle a love for the Word of God. Illustrations were given of the earnest spirit animating branches and members. Another interesting point shown in these reports is the care taken by secretaries to make sure if their members really and regularly read their portion. Curious sidelights were thrown on the working of the C.S.U. by reference to foreign members, branches among special classes, and fresh and novel meetings for specific objects.

Mr. B. HERKLOTS, who is shortly going to India, followed with a brief address on the Union as a union for prayer. After giving a cheering account of progress in the North of England, where he has been working, he closed with a stirring exhortation to personal and definite service.

Mr. J. R. NAYLOR spoke vigorously on confessing the Lord Jesus Christ before comrades and companions, and on the joy of realising that we are workers with Christ, serving in His glorious strength and fellowship, and thus discovering Him as our joy, peace, and perfect satisfaction.

Springtide Gladness.

GLAD spring is here, the peeping flowers
Are lifting up their gaze,
And tinkling bells sweet music make
Along the woodside ways.

It brings all bright things in its train,
And o'er the dale and hill
Full many a glad, wild song I hear,
And many a soft low thrill.

How welcome is the light of spring,
Replacing winter's gloom;
But there's a gift more glorious still
Than even springtide's bloom.

It beareth up through daily toil,
It makes the spirit whole;
It is the gladness Jesus gives,
His springtide in the soul.

Bloom of the lily of the vale,
And heaven's eternal rose;
And every other grace is found
Upspringing where it grows.

Had we not known in cloudy days,
When all is dark to view,
How sweetly, as a glad surprise,
There breaks his tenderest blue?

His tenderest blue, his warmest light,
For ever just and mild,
They never, never fail to break
O'er each confiding child.

Then let us in our Lord rejoice,
And all his love believe,
And, like the waking earth, prepare
His blessing to receive.

Bethnal Green Free Library.—The twentieth annual meeting of the supporters of this institution, which is something more than a library, was recently held at Grosvenor House. Rev. C. J. Ridgway was in the chair. In their report for the past year, the committee were able to point with satisfaction to an increase in the funds, in the number of books presented, and in the number of readers. Over 800 books had been presented, and the lectures and classes had been well attended. The number of readers registered was 50,746 (an increase of nearly 4000), and the number attending the lectures and classes 12,000.—Daily News.

Kensal Town Medical Mission.—The work throughout the year has gone forward steadily, and again there is an increase in the number of attendances. Much blessing has attended the work. In one case a mother nursed two years ago has during the last few months attended the mothers' meeting and accepted Christ as her Saviour, the seed sown has sprung up after many days, and her face now shines with the joy of the Lord. In two other cases, through the conversion of the mother during this time of sickness, the husbands have been won for Christ. At the Home of Rest, Herne Bay, eighty-nine visitors have enjoyed the sea air and change. The hon. sec. is Miss E. C. Thompson, 'The Cottage, Gospel Mission, Kensal-road, W.

Evangelising in Peru.

WE have returned from a month's evangelising on the coast, with the special object of scattering the Scriptures. The journey covered a distance of over 160 miles, mostly on horseback. With increasing interest we journeyed from town to town, and scattered over 480 Bibles, Testaments, and portions. We gave away many tracts and spoke for the first time to many of the Saviour.

The people, although in a low and degraded condition, generally welcomed us, and eagerly listened to the Gospel message. Many of these poor oppressed people live huddled together in miserable huts. The lambos or wayside inns where the traveller must stop, are miserable, dirty dens, generally owned by Chinese.

With encouragements and disappointments we visited several towns and villages in the large and fertile valley of Cañete. In Pueblo Nuevo the priest failed in his attempt to have us arrested; we continued our visiting unmolested. From Cerro Azal we took deck passage to Pisco, the port of a large cotton and wine centre. At the beginning of the work there we had a long discussion with a Dominican and several friars, but of all men they are the most hopeless.

After scattering many Scriptures in this port we went on by train to Ica, the capital of the department, with a population of over 8000. A good mission-station could be opened here. It is easily reached, connected to the coast by rail, has a good situation, healthy climate, and is on the highway to the interior of the Southern Peru.

How one's soul is fired by the fierce idolatry in Peru, by Rome's blasphemous worship, greatness, wealth, temples, images, priests, and deluded people. The first blow has been struck by the scattering of the living Word, and the mission work already begun.

Our friends will be glad to hear that the work is about to be resumed at Cuzco. The Government has indemnified us, but refuses to guarantee protection. Of course a mere indemnity does not go to the root of the evil, but it is certainly a moral victory of the highest form for Protestant missionaries in a country so intolerant. We ask that the work may be prayerfully remembered, and that souls may be saved. H. ROBERT STARK.

Bethel Santal Mission.

DEAR SIR,—We are grateful to God for help supplied during another camping season. We started from our station, "Bethlehem," on Nov. 15, en route to "Bethsaida," our fifth station, about twenty miles, S.E. We made a halt at three places, working in the surrounding villages and markets, where we preached the Gospel, gave a number of magic-lantern services on "The Life of Christ," to which large numbers of Hindoos and Santals came. We also used our musical instruments at the services, and in the villages. Our medicine chest did good service during the season, and Gospels and Testaments were sold and distributed in Bengali and Santali.

After a month's camp life I got malarial fever and sunstroke, which laid me up for a month. Again we began camping at a large "mela" (religious festival) at Dumka, where we remained about a week, and spoke to thousands about the love of God to sinful men (John iii. 16). We were joined here by Dr. McPhail and a band of preachers from the Free Church Mission. On our way home one of the preachers (Arjhun Manghi) was taken ill, and died in a few days, after a very blessed and happy life in the Master's service. Please pray for God's work among the Santals and India's millions.—Yours in Christ, W. BARLOW.

Bethel, via Jamtara, India, Feb. 29.

Howard-street Gospel Mission.—We have brought our free meals to a close for the season. We have fed over 7000 children with dinners and breakfasts, and over 800 unemployed men and their wives with meat soup suppers. Gospel meetings have followed these free meals. Some have decided for Christ, and several have signed the Gospel temperance pledge. J. SOAMES.

Father's New Smile.

SOME few years ago a gentleman got into a compartment of a train leaving Waverley Station, Edinburgh. As he sat down he looked about him, and said:—

"I see I've made a mistake—it is not a smoking carriage."

The only other occupant of the compartment, an American clergyman, replied: "Well, we can talk instead of your smoking, if you do not object."

And so they fell to. They touched upon the weather and nearly all the questions of the day, until, hearing a child cry in the next carriage, the smoker said to his companion: "You seem to be one of the real good sort. I wonder how you would have answered a question my little girl put to me this morning?"

"What was the question?" asked the clergyman.

"Well, she had been naughty, and what you call conscience had been speaking to her, when she put her hand into mine, and said, 'Father, dear, who made the sorry little think inside me?'"

"And what was your reply?" inquired the other, deeply interested.

"As I did not know I could not tell her, but said I would try and find out, and let her know."

Simply, briefly, and truly the clergyman explained that God had implanted conscience in the human breast as his monitor, but that even conscience, apart from Him, often went astray, or became blunted, or warped. "In fact," he concluded, "man, separated from God, is a failure." "Agreeing, for the time being, that you are right," said the gentleman, "how shall man become united to God? Is it not impossible?" This was the clergyman's opportunity; letting God speak through him, he explained how God sent his Son Jesus Christ to reconcile us to Him, and how He saves us from our sins.

"And do you believe and rejoice in all this?" the gentleman asked. "Assuredly; it is what I live, and work, and hope by," was the answer. "I believe you, and I thank you," said the other; "but I am not equal to the demands of anything so far above me as this religion."

Here they had to part, and the clergyman, as he shook the other's hand, said:—

"So you think, and rightly. But Christ is the source of supply for such demands, and in Him you become a 'new creation.' Farewell."

A year later the gentleman traveller was in New York, and seeing in his hotel a framed list of the principal churches of the city of Brooklyn, he thought he would spend the Sunday morning in one of them. He wanted to see what American churches were like, "and I shall please Cissy (his little girl), 'if I tell her something of what I hear; religious little soul she is!'" He spoke to the hotel clerk on the subject of churches, who gave it as his opinion that they were all pretty much alike, but that the Rev. — had stayed in that very hotel, and "a better man I don't want to meet," said he, "though he is a clergyman."

To this man's church Mr. S— went. What was his intense surprise to see, in the minister, the parson who had been his companion in the Edinburgh train a year before! The sermon was from the words, "Behold, I will do a new thing" (Isa. xlii. 19), and "Behold, I make all things new" (Rev. xxi. 5). The preacher spoke of the Spirit of God reaching forth to the souls of men, and recreating them by the power of his love in Jesus Christ. He set forth how that man had strayed from God (Isa. liii. 6), and wandered in sin, and how that the voice of Jesus arrested him, and compelled him to turn to Him for salvation, pardon, and a new and true heart.

"That is," continued the preacher, "if he be sick of himself, his sins, and his wandering, and does not harden himself against his Father." It was a very simple sermon, but through it God touched and turned at least one heart that day. Before it was ended, Mr. S— was wholly decided to yield himself to Him, to walk in his ways, and to become, like his own little Cissy, a child before Him. He was too shy to go and see the preacher before leaving New York, but he wrote and told him how blessed he had been in hearing him, and how he now understood and believed the truths which had before been only as so many wild dreams to him.

"Oh, my dear daddy," cried little Cissy when Mr. S— reached home, "you've been and found such a lovely smile for me while you've been away! Tell me all about it," which imperious command he proceeded to obey in this wise. "Cissy, daddy had a new heart given him while he was in America. He found his own so bad, and so full of sin, that when the preacher-man said God wanted to give him a new one, he believed it at once, and asked Jesus Christ to take away the old, bad heart, and to give daddy one which the Saviour was to fill and to keep always. Does Cissy understand now where the smile comes from?"

"Yes, daddy, I fink it must come from God, because it is so nice, and so new," and father told her she was quite right—it was so.

He turned his back upon his old self, his old unbelief, his old habits, his old life, and realised what was meant by God when He said, "Behold, I make all things new." Speaking to a friend he put it thus:—"Life seems an eternity of love to me now, where before I was afraid to think of tomorrow. Nothing is now the same. 'Old things are passed away, all things are become new.'"

And Cissy is such a happy, trusting little Christian. "Father's new smile," as she called it, helped her to understand God's love to her, and who made the "sorry little think inside" her.

Oroomiah, Persia.

DEAR SIR,—A farewell prayer meeting was held last Saturday afternoon, at Miss Barclay's, Urie House, Tranton-street, Bermondsey, when Simon Gauja and Lazar Pera were affectionately commended to the safe keeping and guidance of God on their return to their home in North-West Persia. These two intelligent young Nestorians, formerly orphan children in Deacon Abraham's Orphanage at Oroomiah, were sent over to England five years ago; and, under the fostering Christian care of Mr. Tasker, of Andover, have been thoroughly trained, the one in carpentering, and the other in ironwork, so as to fit them for manufacturing in their own country all kinds of agricultural implements, and teaching some of their young fellow-countrymen to pursue similar industries. They have recently endeared themselves to many of the poor of Bermondsey, in connection with Miss Barclay's Mission, in preaching the free and full Gospel of the grace of God; and in this work they are blessedly equipped by intelligent knowledge of the Word of God and the teaching of the Holy Spirit. They leave England on Wednesday next. Prayer is asked on their behalf.

To enable them better to support themselves whilst engaged in the ministry of the Word in and around Oroomiah, and in carrying on their training of others, it is desirable to purchase for them a vineyard (for the production not of wine but of raisins), which would probably cost about £100. Towards this object contributions will be received by Miss Barclay.

By-and-by, as the way opens up, it would greatly help this native industrial mission if a small steamer could be placed upon the great salt lake of Urmi, which is about sixty miles in length. Such a steamer would be an immense boon to the people of that region, both for purposes of locomotion, and for conveyance of produce. Miss Barclay, or Mrs. Tasker, of Andover, will be happy to give further particulars if desired.—Yours sincerely,

E. MATHIESON.

The Sultan and Armenia.

INFORMATION has reached the daily Press from a trustworthy source that an Imperial iradé, directing the closing of the Christian missions in Asiatic Turkey and the expulsion of the missionaries, has been signed by the Sultan. The iradé is said to be directed against both Catholic and Protestant clergy, who, by their unremitting labours, have kept nineteen relief depôts in active operation. The reasons for its issue are obvious. For twenty years the presence of educated European gentlemen in constant correspondence with the civilised world has rendered it difficult for the Sultan and his agents to throw the veil of secrecy over their proceedings in the interior. The British people have done more than any other nation in Europe in sending out money, and it is at the agents of the Armenian Relief Fund that the iradé is presumably aimed.

Replying to the representations made by the United States Chargé d'Affaires, both the Grand Vizier and the Minister for Foreign Affairs declared that they had received no intelligence regarding the expulsion from Bitlis of Mr. Knapp, the American missionary, and promised to telegraph for information. The fact is, that Mr. Knapp has already arrived at Diarbekir, four days' journey from Bitlis, on the road from Alexandretta. It appears that the local authorities wished to expel him surreptitiously.

Mission Homes, Paris.

As to the winter work of these Homes (77, Avenue Wagram), Miss R. Mouncey writes from the London office, 22a, Queen's-road, Bayswater, that the varied operations have been actively carried on. Much blessing attends the men's Bible-class. The soup kitchen has done valued work. All sorts of people have been helped and comforted, from the highly educated man to the poor neglected child. Many have listened with gladness to the preaching of the Gospel.

The weekly meetings for mothers, the clothing club, Band of Hope, Sunday-school, etc., have all been well sustained. Help is needed to maintain the various departments of work at the Homes and Orphanage.

Christian Endeavour.

INDIANS of the West are organised into the Dakota C.E. Union.

The Lone Star State now boasts a Christian Endeavour Society in its state prison at Huntsville.

Norway was the latest country to admit Christian Endeavour. There is now a society at Christiania.

Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, is calling attention to "Picket Duty" as a method by which Endeavourers can serve Christ and the Church. It is, that volunteers be found to stand at the door of the Church to which they belong on Sunday evenings, and invite passers-by to enter and hear the word of life.

The North-Eastern C.E. Union recently held a convention at Newcastle. Three years ago the Union started with eight societies; now it has forty-five, with a membership of 2156. Miss Townsend, in a paper on "Thorough Endeavourers," struck a high keynote, while Rev. J. Rorke showed that enthusiasm for Christ is the secret of it all.

Dr. Maclaren has sent "a word of greeting" to the members of the Y.P.S.C.E., and in so doing bears witness to the value of the movement. He has learned from experience to prize it as one of the best agencies in connection with his own congregation in Manchester. While urging the societies to keep in close touch with their churches, yet he utters a word of caution against the tendency of "the meetings to become emotional and the remarks scrappy and disjointed." He is very anxious for the study of the Scriptures to be intelligent as well as loving, for if the educational aim of the weekly meeting be lost sight of, the obligation on all the members to take active part in it may become a great evil. When it is remembered that there are now upwards of 3400 branches in Great Britain it will be seen how important an agency for good may be found in these societies, especially if the danger which Dr. Maclaren points out is carefully avoided.

Letters to the Editor.

THE ARMENIAN MARTYRS.

DEAR SIR,—May we ask you to give publicity to a suggestion that the service recently held at St. James's Hall in commemoration of the Armenian martyrs should be followed by similar services in all our churches and chapels on Sunday evening, April 26, or on some other convenient Sunday? However difficult the diplomatic situation may be in regard to Armenia, we are at one in our sympathy for the persecuted, and in our reverent gratitude for the faith and constancy of the martyrs. And we have our own lessons to learn of loyalty, of firmness, and of unworldliness. The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church, and the example of these heroic men, women, and children—ordinary Christians with religion like our own—who when the pinch came were found ready, may give a higher tone to our daily Christian life, and encourage us to believe that, in the hour of peril, the faith of the English churches, which often seems to us so powerless, would not be found wanting.

These services would give an opportunity for contributions in aid of the suffering, and we are authorised to say that if churches like to send up offerings to the Information (Armenian) Bureau, 3, Arundel-street, Strand, London, W.C., they will be received by Lady Henry Somerset, Rev. Dr. Paton, and Mr. Percy Bunting, who will apply them in their best discretion in aid of (1) the existing agencies for relief of the Armenians, (2) the aid of destitute fugitives from persecution, and (3) the expenses of spreading information as to the Armenian cause.

The form of service used at St. James's Hall may be obtained at the Bureau.—We are, yours faithfully,

"NOT AT HOME."

DEAR SIR,—I can sympathise with a servant's scruples of conscience, but at the same time I think they are needless. If her mistress required her to say she was "out," it would be a different thing, but "at home" and "not at home" are as much recognised formulas as the words "Dear Sir," and "Your obedient Servant," which no one would demur at.

A lady writes on her visiting card "At home Mondays," and it means she is then ready to receive visitors. She is "not at home" when she is not prepared to receive them, and everyone in the higher circles of society perfectly understands the phrase. It is used for politeness and not for deception, and therefore need not trouble the conscience of a servant.

I should like to add that as a Christian mistress I would rather be misunderstood by an acquaintance than put a stumbling-block in the way of my servants, and so I never expect them to use a phrase which they (from want of worldly knowledge) may misunderstand. At the same time I should consider a servant very foolish to stand out against a worldly mistress in what, when explained, she ought to see is but a usage of society.—Yours faithfully,

G. T.

THE YOUNG MAN AND HIS MINISTER.

DEAR SIR,—In response to the invitation in your issue of 26th ult., I would respectfully submit the following suggestions to ministers, etc.:

1st. In dealing with young men let the spiritual teacher divest himself for the time being of all ecclesiasticism, so as not to obtrude his office.

2nd. Let him not adopt an ex cathedra style, nor patronising attitude or phraseology.

3rd. Multiply as many points of contact with the young man as possible in his intellectual and social, and even in his professional, tastes where possible.

4th. Do not treat his doubts or difficulties lightly, as trivial, or "fads," or become impatient.

5th. Treat the case on the broadest lines possible without compromising any principle or truth.

6th. Never allow the young man to suspect that you are prejudiced, prepossessed, or partial in dealing with him.

7th. Above and below all—the foundation and topstone of all intercourse and dealing with such young men and women—there must be the true love and sympathy of Jesus. This is necessary to inspire confidence.

Many pastors, who have never had doubts and difficulties, can hardly persuade themselves that such doubts are very serious in others. Hence they treat them with indifference, or of such non-importance as to require very little time or attention, and some treat such cases with a bluntness and harshness as only tend to increase the reserve and deepen the estrangement already existing between pastor and people.—Yours faithfully,

J. J. M.

Temperance Notes.

MISS AGNES SLACK, honorary secretary of the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union, is holding meetings in Ireland.

At Helston, on Friday, March 27, Mrs. John Ripley gave her lecture on "Unappreciated People" in the Wesleyan Chapel to a good audience.

At the annual meeting of the Congregational Band of Hope, Beckenham, held in the Lecture Hall, Mr. W. A. Beney presiding, Mr. Sharp read the report, which gave an interesting record of work.

Miss Willard and Miss Gordon will arrive in England the beginning of May, and expect to attend the meetings in connection with the National Council of the British Women's Temperance Association, to be held in London in June.

A large and influential meeting of the Manchester branches of the Young Abstinents' Union was held at the Town Hall last week. The Lady Mayoress took the chair, and speeches were made by Canon Hicks, Mrs. Hughes, Mr. Fred Smith, and others.

The King Edward Gospel Temperance Society, Spitalfields, received a few nights ago a visit from Mr. Geo. Garlick, who was for some years "van missionary" of the C.E.T.S. A large gathering of members fully appreciated his lecture, entitled "Four Summers in a Mission Van."

The Swansea magistrates were occupied a whole day with the prosecutions of members of four clubs in the town. The defendants were charged with selling without an Excise licence certain quantities of intoxicating drinks, etc., in contravention of the licensing laws. Those found guilty were heavily fined.

The annual meeting of the Chester Diocesan Branch of the Church of England Temperance Society was held in the Crewe Town Hall on Monday week. In the unavoidable absence of the Duke of Westminster, who had been announced to preside, the chair was occupied by Rev. G. J. Howson, vicar of Christ Church.

A great temperance demonstration took place last week in the Ulster Hall, Belfast, under the presidency of the Bishop of Down. There was a very large attendance, and addresses of much practical interest and importance were delivered by General Geary, C.B., commanding the Northern District, and Mr. F. Eardley Wilmot, R.N.

The "Male Nurses' Temperance Co-operation" sends out, according to The Lancet, only total abstainers. This is of itself, if not an absolute, at all events a fair guarantee for steadiness and trustworthiness during an engagement, for it removes one cause of complaint which used to be somewhat common with regard to male nurses.

In connection with the annual Wesleyan temperance demonstration in Birmingham a sermon was preached in Charles-street Chapel by Rev. F. L. Wiseman, of Birmingham Central Mission. A convention was held on Thursday afternoon, under the presidency of Alderman Arrowsmith, of Burslem; and on the same evening a great public meeting took place in the Victoria Hall.

Miss Frances Willard has recently concluded a tour in the Southern States of America, where, accompanied by Miss Anna Gordon, she has visited in all fifty towns and twenty states. The work of the National Women's Christian Temperance Union will be greatly strengthened by this undertaking. Miss Willard's health has not suffered by this arduous task. She says that everywhere they met with most kind receptions and excellent results.

The East London Observer reports a stirring sermon preached by Canon Wilberforce in the parish church, Bromley-by-Bow, at a service for men, from the following text:—Proverbs xxiv. 11 and 12: "If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, and those that are ready to be slain. If thou sayest, behold, we knew it not; doth not He that pondereth the heart consider it? and He that keepeth thy soul, doth not He know it? and shall not He render every man according to his works?" The Canon concluded by placing before his audience the benefits, as a personal protection and an example to others, of the total abstinence pledge.

The Y.M.C.A.

A NEW Association has been formed at Sydenham.

Dr. Pierson was the principal speaker at the recent successful annual meeting of the Exeter Association. Returns to hand from the Malta and Jaffa Associations speak of quiet but progressive work having been accomplished during the past year.

The Scottish National Executive have appointed as their travelling secretaries Messrs. William Wright, of Lockerbie, and Andrew Bell, of Leith.

The Königsberg Association is planning the construction of a building which will serve for the Association quarters, as well as for a board and lodging-house for young men.

A week of very successful special services was concluded on March 29 in connection with the King's Lynn Y.M.C.A. Friends of all denominations, ministerial and lay, helped in conducting the gatherings, which it is believed have had a greatly reviving effect upon the younger members of the institution.

The first report of the Rome Association tells of considerable development; 110 names are inscribed on the roll, of which eighty-six are active members, and twenty-four associates. An encouraging fact is the numerous attendance at the evening classes, which bring about 100 young men in direct contact with the Association.

The usual Good Friday meeting held at Stafford Rooms, Edgware-road, again attracted a large attendance of men. Dr. Gladstone presided, and addresses were given by Revs. W. P. Legg, W. A. Wilson, Morley Wright, G. D. Macgregor, H. E. Stone, J. C. Carlile, and Mr. Russell Hurditch. A deeply earnest tone prevailed throughout the service. In the evening a very interesting and well-attended missionary meeting was held.

Dr. Karl Fries, general secretary, Stockholm, writes:—"The work here is a cause of great satisfaction to us. The Lord has abundantly blessed us. The number of new members for January and February exceeds that for the same months of last year. The Central Association now numbers 950, the southern branch 250, and the two boys' branches, which are united, about 200. In the southern branch meetings have been started for working men. These meetings are well attended."

During the past half-year the North-Eastern District Union has rendered very useful service to several Associations in Northumberland, Durham, and North Yorkshire. At two Associations, Evangelistic services have been conducted for a period of eight days. To another, conductors for a Bible-class have been supplied fortnightly for three months, and in twenty instances deputations have been sent to take part in Association meetings. Within the same period two Associations have been saved from collapse.

The Y.W.C.A.

THE Wilmington, Delaware Branch, recently held their first anniversary meeting at the Opera House.

The first of an interesting series of lectures was given at the Whitehaven Institute by the Hon. Sec., Mrs. Bragg, to an appreciative audience, the subject being "Candles."

Rev. J. Sloan, of Glasgow, delivered an address at the Exchange Lecture Hall, Blackburn, in connection with the Y.W.C.A., on March 24. There was a large attendance.

The New York Y.W.C.A. recently held a large meeting at Carnegie Hall to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of its founding. Many of the clergy and other prominent men of the city were present.

The annual meeting of the Derby Association was held in the Temperance Hall; Mrs. Jebb in the chair. Miss Parker Brown gave an address showing the advantages of membership. Miss Standfield also gave an earnest address on "Decision for Christ."

Canon Quirk, Rector of Bath, presided at the annual meeting of the Bath Institute, held on March 27. There was a large gathering of members and friends. The report stated that the good work of the home in connection with the Association has been greatly appreciated.

Rev. L. Marks said that in the early days of the Church's history women were organised in their work, and were very much in earnest. There was no reason why the moral religious questions of today could not be settled by the young women now as then. Rev. T. J. Mason also spoke of the help and benefits derived from the Association.

The annual meeting of the Boscombe Association was held on March 23, presided over by Rev. S. A. Selwyn. There are 300 members on the books, and the average attendance at the two weekly Bible classes nearly eighty. £426 is already secured towards the first part of the proposed new building, which, it is hoped, will be ready in June.

THE LOST FOUND.—Luke xv. 11-24.

GOLDEN TEXT (verse 10).

THE occasion of this and the two preceding parables was the fact declared in verse 1, and the complaint of the Pharisees and Scribes in verse 2. All three parables are designed to teach that what was spoken by the Pharisees as a reproach exactly described the work of Jesus. Of course He welcomed sinners—how else could He be a Saviour? A touching story was recently told by Mr. Black, superintendent of the Infectious Hospital, Aston, Birmingham. A little fellow, who had once been an inmate, and found his wretched home a sad contrast to the care he had received in the hospital, was found before the entrance crying. "He wanted to come in," he said. "But," said Mr. Black, "You cannot come in unless you have the scarlet fever." Innocently the boy asked, "Please, sir, how can I get it?" If the Pharisees had known themselves, they would have known that they had the sin that needed the forgiveness of the Saviour. It is for the sin-stricken that Jesus has come (v. 31, 32). He does not deny the statement of his enemies; He accepts it, and glories in it. In effect, He says, "Yes, I do receive sinners. My attitude towards them is that of a shepherd towards a lost sheep; that of a woman towards a lost piece of silver; that of a father towards a lost son." With the last of these our lesson deals.

Our interpretation of the parable is guided by two things; first, that the younger son is the type of every unconverted sinner; and secondly, that the father represents the readiness of Jesus to receive and pardon all who come to Him. The story of the young man may be told in four parts.

1. Leaving home (12, 13). He was not driven away, he went by his own choice. He wearied of home restraints, wanted what he thought was liberty to do his own will, and thought he could do better for himself if he could take control of his own life. It is a sad testimony to the alienation of his heart from his father that the only thing he valued was his "portion"—a third of his father's property (Deut. xxi. 17); and that soon after receiving it he departed. Why did not the father detain him by force? Because his unwilling presence in the home would be misery to himself and to his father.

Upon how much a lad turns his back when he goes away from home! From love, and true fellowship, and purest joys. Remember that sinning is departing from God, and this is leaving home!

2. Away from home (13-16). The "far country" was some distant city affording every opportunity for selfish and vicious indulgence. To us it means forgetfulness of God (Eph. ii. 13).

His life away from home is characterised by four things:—Waste (13). Life and its opportunities that might be used for our highest interests and for God are squandered upon present gratification. Want (14). For after self-indulgence comes "a famine." The heart craves for something the far-off country cannot give (Jer. ii. 13). Slavery (15), and of the most degrading kind to a Jew. With self as his guide he has pursued liberty, and this is where it has led him! To this sin always leads. A youth is free to refuse the first glass—the first appeal to gamble—but before long his freedom is gone. He drinks and gambles because he must. There is no slavery equal to that of sin. Solitariness (16). Where are his friends now? He must have had many companions in his days of luxury and vice. All are gone like swallows when summer is over. No lasting friendships can be formed in a life of wrong-doing. There is but one "Friend that sticketh closer than a brother." To forsake Him is to be friendless in the hour of our deepest need.

3. Returning home (17-20).—The repentance is marked by four steps, which, in some degree, are found in every similar case. Reflection (17); conviction (18); resolve: "I will arise" (18); and action (20), "He arose." Don't stop short of the last. Many have reached the third, but their resolve has led to nothing. Say not only "Jesus, I will," but, "Jesus, I do trust Thee."

4. Welcomed Home (20-24).—Describe the scene, and then remember that it is only a picture of the joy with which Jesus welcomes returning sinners. He responds to the first movement of a soul towards Him (see Psa. xxxii. 5). His door is not only unlatched, or ajar; it is wide open to every returning wanderer. He saves fully. The prodigal left out the last clause of his intended prayer (compare 19 and 21). How could he ask to be a servant when he was already welcomed as a son? The return is the occasion of great festivity of which we are told that it "began" (24), but never that it ended. This joy is unending (see Golden Text).

Personalia.

Mrs. J. K. Barney, of America, has closed her second series of meetings in England, having spoken during her visit over 200 times. She was given a farewell service at the B.W.T.A. headquarters, Victoria-street, where Lady Henry Somerset and others spoke most appreciatively of her work. Mrs. Barney is now on her way to America, where she will at once resume her prison work to which she has long been devoted.

General Neal Dow, the well-known Prohibitionist, who recently celebrated his ninety-second birthday, is reported to be in a remarkably vigorous condition. His mental powers have not yet felt the touch of age, and during the late municipal campaign in Boston he wrote a series of articles in which he assailed those to whom he was opposed with all his old vigour. He keeps up his correspondence with temperance workers all over the world, and writes much for publication.

Lady Osborne Morgan has for many years been an active worker in connection with the Welsh poor in London, and one evening last week she gave another exemplification of her sympathies with the Welsh Auxiliary of the London City Mission by a lecture in aid of the mission funds. The gathering took place at King's Weigh House Lecture Hall, Thomas-street, Oxford-street, under the presidency of Mrs. Henry Richard, another well-known worker on behalf of poor Welsh women in the metropolis.

Evangelistic Notes.

Sevenoaks.—Mr. W. R. Lane has concluded a five days' mission at the Baptist Church here. All the meetings were well attended and many were led into the kingdom.

Moor Common.—Mr. Hugh C. Wallace (of the Evangelisation Society) has concluded a seven days' mission at the Mission Hall here. The meetings were of an interesting and encouraging kind.

Liversedge.—Mr. Sidney Vivian, London, has concluded a three weeks' special mission at the Methodist Free Church, Hightown. The spiritual life of the church has been quickened, believers have been built up, and several have confessed Jesus as their Saviour.

Bristol.—Mr. M. H. Kennedy, of Southport, concluded a successful fortnight's mission, in Mount Zion Chapel, on Friday week. The services were well attended, and the plain, practical Gospel addresses of the evangelist reached both the heads and the hearts of the congregation.

Shandon, Yoker, N.B.—Mr. James Lyall has closed a mission in this thriving suburb of Glasgow. Large gatherings have been held in the Shandon Mission-hall, and on Sunday evenings in the Town-hall, Clydebank. The message faithfully delivered has reached many hearts, leading many to Christ.

Torpoint.—A three weeks' Mission has been conducted at the Congregational Church here by Mr. Frank Tarrant, of the Evangelization Society. The Mission proved a blessing to many; some have been quickened who had grown cold in the Master's service. The young people attended in good numbers, and several professed decision. The church as a whole has had a time of refreshing. A. G. H.

Denver, Col.—Mr. John Currie has been holding revival services here in the Judson Baptist church. Large congregations have attended his preaching. His plain practical preaching, quaint wit, and striking illustrations never fail to hold the profound attention of his hearers. Some men and women have professed conversion. The spirituality of the church has deepened, and a knowledge of the Bible much increased.

Aberfeldy, N.B.—Mr. D. M. Bayne has concluded a series of meetings extending over a fortnight. The three ministers of the town co-operated. A considerable number are believed to have passed from death to life, and believers testify to much blessing received. Mr. Bayne met with the children at an early hour, and spoke to them from the Pilgrim's Progress and the little Hebrew Maid, illustrated by lime-light views. Mr. Bayne has very special aptitude for children's meetings.—T. G. I.

Great Yarmouth.—Mr. W. R. Lane recently conducted a Gospel mission at the Congregational Church (pastors Revs. A. Leggatt and S. R. Laver). The meetings were well attended, at the last three the church being crowded to its utmost capacity. Many were quickened in their spiritual life and a considerable number confessed Christ. The ministers heartily co-operated, and rejoice to see signs of spiritual blessing, as the weekly prayer meetings have since been well attended and full of fervour.

Upper Norwood.—A mission has been held in the Congregational Church, St. Alban's-road, S.E., by Mr. Newton Jones. The services in the Sunday morning, afternoon, and evening, also the meetings during the week were well attended, and from the first to the close of the mission it was evident that the Lord was present. On Wednesday, early closing night in this locality, the place was crowded by young people and many were convicted and compelled to flee to Christ. The last night was a time of great blessing both to young and old. Large numbers of children professed to yield to the Saviour. At the closing meeting for adults sinners were converted, and some of God's children broken down, and many were drawn nearer to himself.

Rev. F. C. Spurr will hold missions at Burnley (April 12-26), Walsall (May 2-16), Cardiff (May 31-June 7), Newport, Mon. (June 8-14).

Obituary.

MR. JAMES CONNELLAN.

MANY who know the good work being done by Rev. Thomas Connellan will sympathise with him in the loss of his father, who passed away at Riverside, Geelvagh. For seventy-six years he had been a devout Roman Catholic, but in latter days the persecutions of his son shook his confidence in Romanism, and at length through the pleadings of his son he was led to the Saviour, in whom he died calmly trusting.

MISS M. A. COOMBES.

The Baptist church at Woodstock has sustained a severe loss in the death of Miss M. A. Coombes, one of its most liberal and active members. Rev. C. Duxbury, the pastor, in his funeral sermon said, that Miss Mary Ann Coombes had from a child the fear of God, being trained by her pious mother. For many years she had been a consistent member with the Baptist Church, and her home has been the home of many of God's servants. She was an ardent lover of Christian missions, and many an hour's work was given to help the funds of the Baptist Mission, and many a missionary was by herself and her sister hospitably entertained.

MR. F. T. PIERSON.

This useful evangelist, of whose labours in the Gospel many of our American contemporaries have been giving glowing accounts, has been called home with startling solemnity in the midst of a busy evangelistic campaign at Oelwein, Iowa. It is feared that overstrain had much to do with his sudden call. He had closed a large and much blessed mission at Augusta, in which the strain must have been great, and going on to Oelwein, started at once with three meetings. On the Sunday he had five large gatherings, on Monday he was fevered and ill, and in a few days he passed away. Thus has a bright and promising career been cut off, as man would judge, prematurely, though well we know that our Father makes no mistakes. Sympathy will be felt for Mr. Pierson's young wife thus suddenly left to mourn.

Irish Notes.

THE members of the Christian Endeavour Society in Cork have undertaken to support a native evangelist in mid-China in connection with Methodist Mission.

The Dublin University Fuh-Kien Mission, which has already sent three missionaries into the field, has at present three graduates preparing for mission work, and the ladies' auxiliary also, which has sent out two lady missionaries, has a third in training.

There will be considerably over 200 of a net increase in the church membership of the Belfast Methodist District this year. There are also seventeen candidates for the Methodist ministry offering this year, being the largest number that ever before offered in any one year in this country.

Drink and Athletics.—The relation of drink to athletics is being more clearly defined, as the art of "training" is more closely and practically studied. The chief trainer of the New York Athletic Club declares, "We regard the use of alcoholic drinks as injurious to one's health, and to his success as an athlete." Mr. G. F. Reinhardt, the trainer, says: "The best men don't drink. The moderate drinker cannot last. He does not have the endurance." The same testimony is borne by Mr. V. Wood, the great Australian trainer, and by other competent judges. As these men judge the question from the purely physical point of view, it is clear that their results are unbiased and worthy of serious consideration. It would be well for many of our amateur athletes to remember them. It is saddening, however, to consider how hard the fallacy dies, that because stimulants have a temporary uplifting effect, they are good for those about to undergo a severe strain. Physically, morally, and spiritually, drink hurts and debases the constitution, and unfits it for great efforts for the prizes of earth as well as heaven.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WE commend to the notice of pastors of churches and others the scheme described on p. 23 for aiding the funds of missionary societies. People do not know what they can do till they try, and nothing succeeds like success.

"That stabbing truth," Sir Thomas Browne calls the words of James in chapter i. 26. "This man's religion is vain." He who does not control his tongue, no matter how good he may appear to be, has a religion which is vain. It is only a form, an emptiness, and the owner of it is a self-deluded man. The "stabbing" power of the Bible is one of its remarkable characteristics; its single words, its short sentences, its casual phrases, its unexpected parentheses, ere ever you know, have pierced "to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit," and have discerned the thoughts and intents of the heart; the reader feels that all in him is naked and opened to the eyes of Him who penned that book. When it "stabs" us in some tender part, we may be sure that it has found out either a sore or a weakness against which we shall do well to be on our guard.

One of the great mysteries of religion is that we know so little of the life that lies beyond the grave. The fact of the blessedness of the dead "who die in the Lord," is clearly revealed; but the conditions of their future existence is only dimly suggested. We often yearn for more information, more light, but the curtain that hangs over the great world of spirits is never shot through with light from the other side. There must be a reason for this. God must have a Divine purpose in thus keeping us in the twilight of our present condition. It may be that it is because if we knew more, we should not be able to meet so well the practical demands of the life that now is. If we knew all, we should not retain the sense of proportion in our circumstances and duties. Too much light is as bad as too little. The glory must be veiled to be truly seen.

There are some troubles sent to us that God expects us to bear patiently till He lifts the burden from our shoulders. There are others He expects us to resist and master, and turn to practical use. Against the first we must not rebel, to the second we must not submit. How are we to distinguish between these? By treating our troubles at first as if they were removable. No man has a right to say "God wills it so," till he has done his best to master his misfortune. Many troubles cease when we cease to nurse them. Many are due to the strain we suffer from when God would carry us the right way and we insist on going the wrong way. If rightly used, the inevitable sorrows of life are the soil out of which the fairest flowers of Christian experience grow. And when rightly met and mastered, the avoidable sorrows are the finest source of discipline for the soul.

The Olympic games have been celebrated, after a lapse of fifteen centuries, as an international affair. In olden times they were one of the chief means of realising the unity of the Greek race, and were strongly impregnated with the highest religious sentiment of the times, such as it was. So far as is known they were quite free from the gambling elements which are the bane of modern sports. In this we have something to learn from this ancient institution. There is nothing immoral in the idea of physical contests and feats of skill; it is the low associations and practices that have somehow been joined with them in modern times that have brought the whole matter into disrepute. It would be a boon beyond price if Christian principles and sentiments could be firmly linked with all trials of skill. They might then become real means of physical advancement and health, as well as of innocent pleasure. "A sound mind in a sound body" is an ideal well worthy of cultivation.

It is probably from the Olympian games that Paul draws his splendid illustration in 1 Cor. ix. 24-27, when he points to the contrast between the physical and spiritual objects of attainment, and shows the unspeakable superiority of the latter over the former. We are to run so that we may attain, as did the runners in the races. We must show ourselves temperate in all things, as athletes are bound to do in order to excel. In physical contests one only of the competitors could gain the prize; but all who persevere in the heavenly race can be sure of their reward. The reward of the wrestlers and runners was a corruptible crown of wild olive; the Christian's reward is an incorruptible crown. If men can do so much in order to gain so little in this life, what ought we not be willing to do in view of the unspeakable glory that awaits the spiritual victor? "Bodily exercise" indeed "profiteth for a little; but godliness is profitable for all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come," (1 Tim. iv. 8).

A case which has been recently before the public with regard to exaggerated statements suggests one or two reflections. There can be no doubt that the warm and sanguine temperament of some persons does make them honestly believe that they see a great many things which persons of calmer mind do not see. How they can swell fifty persons present at a meeting into eighty or a hundred is undoubtedly a puzzle; they surely must dispense with counting, and take to guessing. In any calling in life strict accuracy should be practised, because it is only truthfulness. To give an exaggerated view of Christian work is specially blameworthy, and is sure, sooner or later, to be overtaken with exposure and condemnation, with the result of bringing serious reproach on the name of Christ.

The foremost home topic is the Education Bill. Its opponents have been riddling it with criticisms, and its friends praising it for all it gives them, but regretting that it does not give them a little more. Both are agreed that it puts the education of children, which is paid for out of public money, into the hands of ecclesiastics, and thus makes it an ecclesiastical question. Not the education of the child, but the putting him under a certain church influence, is the object aimed at. If the mere appearance of such a bill has caused such intense feeling, one wonders what would be its effect if carried out in every parish in the land. It could not fail, we believe, to create animosity and bitterness beyond anything that has been felt since the Reformation, or since the passing of the Act of Uniformity. It is a revival, in a modern form, of the old struggle for priestly domination over the minds of the English people. Unless it is either defeated or amended into a quite different thing, we have bad days in store.

The English Churchman writes on the Education Bill in a strain which permits the hope that Nonconformists and a large section of Churchmen may join in a successful effort to defeat the Romanising provisions of the bill. The article is against the suppression of Board Schools, because they have been a barrier against priestism, and the Bible has had a paramount position in them. It has a fear that in fighting the bill Nonconformists may use the question for party purposes, but we do not believe they will; they have never made education a party question, but always a national one. One of their chief objections to the present bill is that it is sectional and sectarian. We have misread every utterance from them if they would not do as the English Churchman does—take their stand upon "the principles of giving to the people the direct control of schools provided at their cost, and of retaining the Bible as the one and only authorised basis of religious instruction."

The Pope and three Romish cardinals have combined to appeal to the English people on the subject of arbitration. When the people of this country were alive to the true character of the Papacy, and when Europe had felt what tyranny and cruelty were associated with its temporal power, such messages would not have been so patiently received. The occupants of the Papal throne have not in past days been averse to war. When the extermination of Protestants has required the use of the sword, there has been no reluctance to draw it. We should require some guarantee that a return of temporal power, which seems to be rapidly advancing, would not be marked by a repetition of the foul deeds of the past. If the cardinals and the Pope speak as individuals, we welcome their attempt to aid us in getting rid of the horrors of war; but if they speak as representing the great apostasy which claims to be the Church of Christ, then we repudiate their proffered help, and only regret that the dignitaries of the Church of England have allowed themselves to be thus forestalled.

We confess to having a greater dread of the Papacy than we have of war; for the Papacy seems to us to embrace every evil, spiritual and temporal, war among the rest, when it can serve the interests of "Holy Church." History cannot be unwritten, and we cannot be blind to its lessons. It warns us that every public movement of Rome should be regarded with suspicion. In this country she clamours for liberty of worship, and for public money to teach her own doctrines in day-schools. In what country where Rome is in power does she allow to other churches any liberty at all? To every individual, whatever his religious conviction, we would show charity; but charity to the Romish Church as a system is misplaced; as well may we cherish a viper to our bosom.

The Vienna correspondent of The Speaker has sent home two letters on militarism which ought to be a warning against the tendency there is to put our trust in armies and navies. One point alone ought to show us that, if we attempt to be a military people, we shall decline in physique, and in the mere animal vigour which is necessary to be a leading nation. He says that statistics show a steady increase yearly of the percentage of rejections as physically unfit, particularly of the young men from the big towns. The causes of this he finds in excessive hours of labour, low wages, insufficient nourishment, "and the horrid immorality so rampant in the large cities in Austria." In one manufacturing town in Northern Bohemia only twenty-six per thousand of the recruits summoned were fit for service. Admitting these things to be true, they show that our best defence is right living, living in the fear of God, who will judge every nation that "makes provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof."

In the death of Mr. James Ashcroft Noble journalism has lost one of its most honourable and high-minded exponents. He was one of the few critics who stood out manfully and fearlessly against the stream of French nastiness which has impregnated much current literature. His writings were always keyed to a high note of moral excellence, and his taste was unfailingly pure and noble. We can ill spare such critics, who are faithful to a high ideal of their work, and put their highest convictions into their anonymous as well as their signed contributions. A movement had been set going to relieve him from the strain of circumstances which had lately been on him; the sums contributed and promised being now to be devoted to a pension-fund for his widow and family. He was only fifty-three at the time of his death.

An active crusade is being carried on in the parish of St. Anne's, Soho, against the immoral night-clubs which infest that region. During the last two years, thanks to the self-sacrificing devotion of one or two inhabitants, as many as forty disorderly houses have been closed in the neighbourhood. When put in force, the existing law is adequate to deal with these dens of infamy, and the district has been practically cleared of them. But against the night-clubs that have taken their place there is at present no effective remedy. They are mainly kept by foreigners, who exploit them for their own gain, and who have no sense whatever of public decency. The leaders of the crusade are agitating for parliamentary action to secure compulsory registration, satisfactory proofs of bona fide membership, and a law making it impossible for any person to start such a club for the sale of excisable liquors for his own profit.

It is high time that publicity were given to the evil against which this remedy is being sought, and that public opinion be roused into earnest action. It is stated that there is scarcely a night-club which is not also a gambling house, at which large stakes are played for, and of which the profits are often enormous; and still worse evils are rampant. The police never act except when forced on by the vestry and by private individuals, and this is a troublesome and expensive matter. Since these clubs were started, the streets in the early hours of the morning are filled with shameful scenes and noises. But until the law is amended the evil cannot be suppressed. The chief amendment needed is to make the landlords responsible for the evils to which they become parties by letting their houses for this purpose. There is no public movement more worthy of energetic advocacy. "The sight of means to do ill deeds, makes ill deeds done."

Lady Cook has been writing with force in a recent article in The Echo on the stubborn fallacy that trade is undignified and labour a reproach. This distinction, she says, is not indigenous to this country, but was imported hither from the Continent, being the result of an inflated military pride. Whether this is so or not, it is certain that it has taken a deep root in present English Society, and has had disastrous consequences even in the Church of Christ, where frequently we find lines of division between those who belong to the professional and "leisure" classes, and those who earn their living by some honest trade. Nothing needs to be more practically emphasised than the fact that we are all brethren in Christ; that there are no bond or free, no high or low grades among the fellowship of the saints. There the only distinction that should hold is that between higher and lower spiritual attainments, and in this case the highest are those who are least conscious of their superiority.

Bishop Thoburn writes to The Christian Advocate saying that the Methodist Episcopal Church is close on a missionary crisis. The crisis has indeed already made itself felt in some foreign fields, and will soon be felt in all. It is largely the result of success, and "yet it none the less threatens ruin to our foreign missionary work, unless dealt with speedily and effectually." It seems that four missionary families on furlough from Southern Asia have been told not to return, and nine other families are to be retired from the work. It is also proposed to discontinue one of the missions in China, while other mission fields will share the same fate unless the churches put forth more strength, i.e., give more liberally. "The cost of the mission work has been reduced one half, while its success has been increased fourfold." The broad truth is that the development of missionary work all over the world demands a new standard of giving on the part of the churches; it is the Divine antidote to the love of money which threatens them with such serious evils, and should be accepted with gratitude.

Englishmen may well blush for shame when they read the opinion which Prince Albert of Monaco has of them. He believes that the spirit of gambling is inherent in men, and must have an outlet provided for it, especially in the case of the English people, who constitute the largest proportion of the visitors to the Casino. On the other hand, it is found that there is less disposition to "plunge" than formerly; that men fix a limit beyond which they will not go in risking loss. Yet the man who can afford to risk £1000 at the tables sets a temptation to his clerk to risk £10 in a humbler game, the loss of which may mean trouble, or theft, or both.

The dreadful discoveries of murdered infants in the Thames, near Reading, bring to light a terribly dark side of modern life. The evidence points to a deliberate system of baby-farming culminating in child-murder on an extensive scale. Children whose advent is unwelcome and dangerous to their parents' reputation have presumably been sent to be "taken care of"—that is, disposed of in a manner least likely to lead to detection. How far the evil has been carried on, and what further discoveries will be made in the course of the trial of the persons arrested on suspicion, it is impossible to say as yet. Enough is known to reveal a horrible and inhuman state of things. The social evil unfolds its darkest side in such revelations. The difficulty of sinning without detection leads to frantic efforts at concealment, in which the best human instincts are violated. The whole subject illustrates forcibly the tendency of one sin to lead to another, and the difficulty of extricating oneself from the fatal chain of evil-doing when once in the grip of the first link. "God is not mocked; whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

Letter from Rev. Andrew Murray.

MY DEAR SIR,—Mr. Morgan has written from Johannesburg, telling me of what he has said in his letter home of the need of prayer, and suggesting that I should invite Christians to unite on behalf of this country that peace may be restored.

I do so most gladly for more than one reason. It is a privilege to be reminded of the place of power God has given us before Him as priests and intercessors. Scripture teaches that even kings and rulers who knew not God may be blessed on the prayer of God's saints. A thoughtful writer on the Acts has pointed out how remarkable it is that the great world-power—the Roman Empire—which had given over Christ to be crucified, had slain James, had cast Peter into prison at Jerusalem and Paul at Philippi, all at once became the helper and servant of Christ's kingdom in conveying Paul to Rome. He asks the question what the reason of the change may be, and reminds us that there can be but one answer. Within that empire a new power had been called into existence. The churches Paul had formed were praying for him, and even Rome had to become his protector and guide. As believers lay aside everything that can separate them, and become conscious of their power to claim God's power over the hearts of kings, answer will be given.

South Africa is but a small country, with a white population of not much above half a million. But it has already been shown how large are the political interests centred in it, and how easily a fire kindled here, and a small spark, might extend to Europe. I cordially endorse Mr. Morgan's suggestion, inviting Christians to make special supplication for South Africa, that God would so guide the hearts of all in power, who have a voice in our affairs, that righteousness may be done, that the minds of men be led to peace and unity, and that the settlement of our troubles may actually be made to work for the extension of His kingdom. Let us turn our hearts heavenward in desire and faith—it will not be in vain. And may God Himself graciously breathe in us the Spirit of prayer.—Yours most faithfully,

ANDREW MURRAY.

Wellington, S. Africa, March 23.

Prayer Pleas.

IN earnest importunate prayer we have to fill our mouth with arguments, we have to wrestle like Jacob, we have to practise the ingenuity of the Syrophenician woman. We must find something in God upon which we can lay hold that we may reason, and remonstrate with Him even, as in his wondrous condescension He invites us to do. It is a high as well as a holy labour in which we engage when we seek to move Him who moves all things.

When in this spirit we enter into our closet and shut the door, we may remind him:—

1. That his own Word calls Him by this name, "He that hears prayer" (Ps. lxxv. 2). This is an ascription of an attribute, a character, a quality. When it is said, "the Lord is good," that means that goodness is a characteristic of his, a quality, an attribute. Or when in like manner it is said "the Lord is merciful," it is meant that mercy is his habit, his nature, a quality of his being. Equally so when we learn that God hears prayer, we understand by this that to hear prayer is his nature, as it is, if we may with reverence say it, the nature of the bird to sing, the flower to bloom, or the river to run.

We say of a physician that it is his business to heal the sick; of a soldier to fight the battles of his country; or of a teacher to teach; so we may say of God, He hears prayer. It would be absurd to call a man a physician who was neither qualified to heal nor ever answered the call of the sick. It would be absurd to call a man a soldier who never appeared in the ranks, or to call one a teacher who never taught. So equally, since this name is given to God, He must hear prayer, otherwise the name would be a delusion and a snare.

But more than this. The physician is one who has by study become a physician. Once he was not a physician, and he may, for that matter, again cease to be one. But it is not so with God. His attributes are not acquisitions, not arts which He has learned, not something He has won. They are on the contrary the qualities, the characteristics of his being, of his nature. There are some things which God cannot do. He cannot lie. He cannot deny Himself (Titus i. 2; 2 Tim. ii. 13). So there are some things that God cannot but do. He cannot but be true to his name, his nature. He cannot but be "the Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth." He cannot indeed change his dispensations, but He cannot change Himself. Hence, if to hear prayer is one of his attributes, He can no more cease to hear prayer, or fail to hear prayer, than He can deny Himself, than He could cease to be holy, or just, or merciful, or even omnipotent, omniscient, infinite in power and in glory.

When we say of God, this is his nature, that is equivalent to saying this is his oath. He swears by Himself. His oath reveals his inmost being. The Aaronic priests were made without an oath, and therefore were a temporary dispensation; their service was a temporary arrangement. But Christ, "this with an oath," therefore a priest for ever. That is to say, the priesthood of Christ is the fruit of his nature, and therefore an eternal arrangement. So, in like manner, we have God's oath, since it is his nature to hear prayer. Here surely is an altar horn to which we may cling with the certainty that we cannot cling to it in vain. The persevering suppliant must succeed since God is God, and, being the God He is, He must be true to his name, as He who heareth prayer, and to whom all flesh must come. "What would He do for his great name?"

2.—We may again remind God, and strengthen our own faith by pleading the name of Christ. We know well that in ourselves we are "wretched and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked," and consequently cannot claim anything from God on our own account. But He hath given us the name of Christ. This is our warrant, our plea, our sure and all-prevailing plea.

What do we understand by the name of Christ? We understand all that Christ is, and all that He has. We understand his person, his work, his offices as our redeemer. How precious is this name! Yea, it is preciousness itself (1 Peter ii. 7). It is "unspeakable riches." He is an "unspeakable gift."

But more than this, the coin which is current, and which alone has a present purchasing power, is not only gold, but it is stamped with the image and superscription of the sovereign. It must be acknowledged throughout the dominions of the sovereign. And so the name of Christ is not only precious in itself, pure gold, but it is the divinely appointed medium of commerce between earth and heaven. The name of Christ might be precious in itself, and yet be an unaccepted plea. We might offer something, valuable to the seller in exchange for his goods, but which he might lawfully refuse. However valuable, if it was not the current coin he would be entitled to reject it. But this name is both infinitely precious in itself, and it is the ordained, the appointed medium of commerce. It hath upon it the image and superscription of God.

It is plain, therefore, that were God to reject prayer offered up in the name of Christ, He would throw contempt upon the person and work of his own Son; and He would reject his own appointed medium of intercourse between earth and heaven.

It is possible for us yet to say that, though God hears prayer, He may not hear us because our prayers proceed from such unclean and unbelieving lips. Where does the emphasis lie? Are we heard because our lips are clean and believing?

Does the seller part with his goods across the counter only because the would-be buyer is richly attired? No, the buyer may be clothed in rags, that matters nothing so long as he can produce a well-filled purse. We may feel, indeed, when we present ourselves before God that we are in ourselves only clothed in rags; true, but we have the name of Christ; that is our well-filled purse; that is our plea. And though we ask with faltering lips because of unbelief, we may yet be sure of success because we plead the name of Christ. Let us then possess ourselves of the name of Christ. That is God's gift to us, and to be appropriated by our faith. Then we possess the key to God's storehouse; the door is ever open to us, and what good thing—subject of course, to such conditions as those laid down in Ps. lxxxiv. 11, Jas. iv. 3, 1 John v. 14, and other passages—can be denied us?

3. Of the third plea we need scarcely write, it is so familiar—that which is implied in the prayer: "Do as thou hast said,"—the word, the promise of God. Can God break his word? Can he go back from his promise? The thought is blasphemous. If we have his promise we have the thing promised, even as the bank note means the gold. Let us have faith in God; He is the Rock, He cannot fail us.

THE LATE Mrs. Rundle-Charles.

EVERY word will be of value to many, relating to our beloved friend, Mrs. Rundle-Charles, immediately before her "translation" into the presence of Our Father, and the "thousand welcomes sweet." Her death was entirely unexpected, even to those immediately about her. Though she had been poorly for a little while, she saw her friends, and was as large-hearted and interesting as ever; taking walks about Hampstead Heath, and three days before the end being out driving.

It was on Wednesday evening, March 25, that I called to hear about her. She sent for me to come upstairs, and I found her lying down in her room in the lovely glow of the setting sun. She was rejoicing in its beauty, and showed me that she could also see its reflection in a mirror at the side of her room. She inquired lovingly about some of our party just gone abroad, and liked to hear about their start; then, in answer to questions, spoke of "how comfortable" she was, except when the pain troubled her, and caused a feeling of sickness, also preferring to be alone, when ailing, with her "devoted" household, though several of her dear ones were ready to come to her.

She went on to speak of her last book (revisions of and additions to "Christian Life in Song") and of her relief in having "handed it over" and having no further care about it. The subject led her on, and she touched in her beautiful way upon the power of hymns, and the vast increase of their number—of some of them (least expected) penetrating even into our cathedrals. She mentioned also lovingly the name of the authoress of the hymn, "There were ninety-and-nine," and delighted in telling that it had lately been sung during some special service at Lambeth Palace Chapel. She detained me in her enjoyment of her theme, though I feared to tire her.

Two evenings later I again enjoyed the inspiration of her company, and little imagined it was for the last time on earth! Half reclining on her couch near her sunset window, I remember vividly the noble and beautiful expression of her face. Though suffering pain at intervals, she quite burst forth about "the lovely thoughts which had been given her that morning" on the words, "Father into thy hands I commend my spirit." These thoughts were linked with a small picture she much loved, of the "tired dove resting in the patriarchal hands stretched out from the ark for it." The familiar tone of her tender and impressive words abide with me. "Into thy hands I commend my spirit," she repeated; and then went on, "not words, dear, for the end of life only, but for every day, and every need, always, and ever; specially for those to whom the sunshine of his face may seem for awhile darkened—always and continually."

Saturday morning (March 28) found her weakened by a night of increased suffering, and by early afternoon all became aware that her strength was ebbing fast. She had sent for her friend, Miss Davidson, of "Friedenheim" (The Home for the Dying), and others dear to her gathered around. With her hand clasped in Miss Davidson's she lay with closed eyes, apparently unconscious of any earthly presence. As the afternoon wore on to 4.25, when her spirit passed away, the sounds were distinctly caught from her lips of the following sentences from her own translation from "St. Patrick's Hymn": "To-day—the Power of God preserve me."—"The eye of God watch over me."—"Christ be with me."—"Christ before me."—"Christ after me."

Letters from S. Africa.—13.

GENADENDAL.

I HAD intended to insert the following reply of Sir George Grey to a farewell letter from the Moravian Missionaries when he was leaving Cape Colony in 1859. Now that it is the fashion to decry missions to the coloured races, it is instructive to see what this able statesman thought:—

[COPY.]

Government House, Cape Town,
Aug. 8, 1859.

Dear and Reverend Sirs,—Your farewell address has just reached me. As you truly say, God has been very good to me in South Africa, and specially in giving me so many excellent and worthy co-adjutors to further and assist my earnest efforts to promote his service here. May I ever remember this, his Divine goodness, in my efforts to perform my duties elsewhere.

I have indeed done my best for the interests of your missions and people, looking for no reward from you, but your affection and prayers; these can follow Lady Grey and myself wherever we go. Let such be the case as you promise me, and sometimes, hereafter, let yourself and your people remember him, who was not only the Governor of your country, but your friend and well-wisher, as he will continue to be.

AMERICAN MISSIONS.

While at Durban I visited Amanzimtoti, the oldest mission station in South Africa of the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions. The name signifies "Sweet Waters," and is derived from a small river which flows through this part of Natal. The name of the station has been changed to Adams, in memory of one of the earliest missionaries; but the more euphonious original name is generally retained. Neither has Groutville been able to supersede Umvoti, nor Lindley to supplant Inanda. The original names of these stations give one an idea of the beautiful sounds of the Zulu tongue, which seems, like Italian, a language for poetry and song.

I went one day by rail to Isipingo, and was driven thence five miles along the highway, and five miles across country to Amanzimtoti (not Amanzim-toti), where I was kindly entertained by Rev. C. W. Kilbon, theological tutor, and Mrs. Kilbon. I have before me a photograph giving a general view of the station, showing the church, training home for boys, school-house, rescue-home for girls, hospital medical mission, and operating room, the homes of the missionaries, and (in the distance) those of the Christian natives.

The session had scarcely begun, and there was not much work in progress. But it is evident that a mission of this kind planted in the midst of them, gives the heathen the idea of a Christian home, and is, so far, an education of itself. It may be true generally that there is need also of more personal visitation of the kraals, more individual conversation with the people. It is an axiom that we cannot lead others to believe in Jesus, until first they believe in us. We must gain their confidence and their affection. Then they will believe what we tell them of the Lord, and this takes time. This is certainly the method of these and other missions.

One of the noteworthy features is the rescue of girls who run away from their kraals, sometimes to escape being sold for wives to men whom they dislike; sometimes because they wish to learn to read or to wear European clothing; sometimes because they desire to become Christians. The missionaries give them shelter and food. When parents or friends come after the girls they are allowed to see them, and to use any persuasion they please; if the girls are willing to go back, the missionaries use no effort to detain them. But they will not allow relatives to use violence, or to remove them against their will.

At Amanzimtoti I saw two men who had come after a girl who had sought refuge with Miss Ireland, [346] the superintendent of the rescue work; but the superintendent of the mission being absent, they could not see the girl that day.

At Inanda, a mother in heathen dress came after her girl, who, however, kept hid away out of the house from the missionaries and her mother. It was touching to see the mother's futile attempts to find her. Perhaps she herself might be willing for her girl to be taught, but was forced by the husband to seek to get her back, for a girl is worth from ten to twenty head of cattle.

One girl was claimed by the father, accompanied by a policeman, armed with a magistrate's order. The girl was taken before the magistrate, who ordered her back to her father. She was sorely beaten, and ran away again. The same process repeated, and she again escaped. This time she was not given up. There are many romantic and pathetic incidents.

Miss Jacob has obliged me with the following reminiscences of our visit to Lindley, in the district of Inanda:—

Pleasant memories of our sojourn in Natal are associated with a three days' visit to Inanda, one of the stations of the America Mission to the Zulus. Leaving Durban on the afternoon of February 14th, rather more than an hour's run by rail brought us to Duff's Road Station, where we found a buggy, drawn by four bullocks, waiting to take us on to Lindley, as the station is now to be known, after the missionary who founded it and long laboured there.

The settlement is one of several centres of work amongst the Zulus carried on by the American Board of Missions, and as is the case in three or four other stations in Natal, one of its leading features is a large seminary, where the four lady missionaries in residence find their chief sphere of labour, all being engaged in teaching. The school had just been reopened after the summer vacation, and about 114 Zulu girls had reassembled, several there for the first time, and some still in the native blanket, as the dress is not given for some days after arrival in case the girl should wish to return to her home.

The morning after our arrival we assembled with the girls at family worship, and Mr. Morgan spoke to them, the native teacher interpreting. Then we went through the class-rooms, and were much interested in noting the different stages of advancement which the girls had attained. The paramount object in these schools is to teach the pupils thoroughly to master their own language, that they may as soon as possible be able to read their own Bible and be quite at home in it. Then they learn English, and are carefully grounded in the earlier standards of our English schools. Singing and the tonic-sol-fa systems and needlework are well taught, and the girls are trained in laundry work.

In the same grounds as the seminary and Mission House is the home of Mr. Pixley, the missionary in charge of the station, who for forty years has been working in Natal amongst the Zulus; his wife is an invalid, one of his daughters is engaged at Amanzimtoti, and another, while living at home, helps also in the school.

Apart from the school is the general mission work of the station, which is quite a large one, with a good church and both Sunday and day-schools. Then there are neighbouring kraals to be visited and services to be held at more distant ones. There is a native evangelist who comes on Sundays to hold the service for the girls in the large school-room of the seminary, as there would not be room for all in the church, where there is already a good congregation. On Sunday, after the school, the morning service, held in the church, which Mr. Pixley conducted as usual, and Mr. Morgan preached from the Invitation of Matthew xi. 28, 29, the native schoolmaster interpreting. In the afternoon service, conducted in the same way, Mr. Bunker, who with his wife and child are staying pro tem. at the mission house, having come down from the station in Gazarland, preached again by interpretation to as large a congregation as in the morning, and at the close of the service there was an opportunity given for any who were anxious and would like to be remembered in prayer, to express it; one or two did so, and a short address was given by Mr. Pixley.

In the evening we accompanied the party from the mission home to Mr. Pixley's house, where we had a quiet hour together of reading and prayer.

The memory of our visit will remain with us; we thank God for the privilege of insight to the work carried on by his children in this interesting part of the mission field, and for the hallowed intercourse of those few days.

The enforcement on the natives of the law against polygamy would be an untold blessing to themselves, and would effect a revolution of a deep and lasting character.

One of the rights reserved to England in the convention of 1884 relates to the protection of the natives. It should be remembered that the section of the Reformed Dutch Church to which President Kruger belongs—the "Doppers"—makes much more of the Old Testament line of things than of the New Testament—has no sympathy with the natives, believing the coloured races under the curse of Canaan, whose destiny and doom it is to be hewers of wood and drawers of water, under the lash, for the benefit of the more fortunate white man. They regard them as animals, and treat them so, for be it noted that there is no recognition of marriage in the Transvaal between coloured men and women. A Kaffir cannot there have his lawful wife, for the Transvaal Government refuses to such a relationship a legal status.

The conviction deepens in my mind that God has a controversy with this land, throughout its length and breadth, on account of its treatment of the native races. They are the Lazarus at the rich man's gate. Nay, more, they are not only full of neglected sores, but of sores caused by repression. The old Dives was negative, the new one is positive.

Not that this is always so. The actual treatment of the natives is in many cases better than the terms in which they are spoken of. People who have loudly repeated the current opinion in England about the coloured races, warmly espouse their cause when they first come here, but in a few months they accept the adverse views current around them, and their opinion is worth as little in one case as in the other, for at home and abroad they only say ditto to what others say. They are actuated by sentiment at home, and by selfishness out here. There is no principle in it, no fear of God, nor comfort of the Holy Ghost.

But there are Christians of different calibre. I am writing now at Leeuw Mills, in the Orange Free State, the property of Messrs. John Newberry and Co., where coloured and uncoloured, black and white, are treated as fellow-creatures, made in the image of God, without sentimentality on the one hand, and without serfdom on the other. The unreasoning denunciation of the natives and the unreasonable antipathy to colour as colour, is proved to be as unjust to the natives as it is disadvantageous to the whites.

The Summer Land.

THE storm clouds rest on the hills of snow,

The sleet drifts over the plain,
The coast is shrouded in blinding spray,
From the wild and wintry main.

Will the beautiful springtime ne'er return?

And the glorious sunny day
When the young leaves dance with the maiden flowers
To the music the wild birds play?

In the wintry deserts of sin and death,
When the storms of conscience roll;
When prayer goes up to a heaven of brass
And comes back to an iron scul?

"For the heart," we cry, "is there not a rest?
No ray from a cloudless sun?
No second birth for a dying soul?
No heaven on earth begun?"

Yes; summer will come to the wintry world,
And God to the waiting heart;
And the long-sought kingdom of God will come,
And the reign of sin depart.

We arise, for our sins are washed away;
We believe at our Lord's command;
And we walk in the light of life with Him
To the endless summer land.

Regulated Vice in Geneva.

IN a letter to the friends of repeal in this country an esteemed correspondent gives a vivid picture of the course of events at Geneva on Sunday, March 22, when by a large majority on a popular vote, the regulation of vice was confirmed. The writer says:—

I have been called to witness a dark page in the history of human life. It is painful to me to have to record it; but its lessons are needful and solemn, and I wish I had a voice to reach to the end of the civilised world, that those lessons might be heard. How many years we have had the hard task imposed on us of trying to show people—good people—the horrible principles embodied in the State regulation of vice, and the results which must necessarily follow; and they would not, will not, believe us. You already know the result of the popular vote—we had 4068, as against 8300, a crushing defeat. I must presently explain how the people were misled by the Government; so that this cannot be quite truly said to be the verdict of the people, though to all the world it seems so. It will be, and is, a great triumph for our adversaries everywhere. I am glad that the gates of this inferno were thrown open, and that the results of a hundred years of Government organised and protected vice have been for once fully revealed.

Sunday morning—the voting day—rose brilliantly, a blue sky without a cloud, and the most brilliant sunshine. I went to an early service in a Free church where most of our friends go. They sent me a message to speak a few words. There was great life in that morning service, at the end of which most of us had the Sacrament together, in almost absolute silence. I should rather have liked that we had all received it standing, with a drawn sword in one hand, as the old crusaders did. The spirit of war, however, was there, as well as the Master's benediction, "My peace give I unto you." A dozen or more of our bravest men were absent from that service because they had to preside from 8 a.m. to 6 or 7 p.m. at the different "urns" (polling places), a man of each side had to be present at each, and as the Abolitionist gentlemen were comparatively few, the best of them had to stay all day at that post.

When the result of the poll was known, the leading "tenanciers," with their banners and following, forced their way into the Church of the Fusterie, at the entrance of which the final result of the voting had been made known; and then began scenes and processions which had been organised beforehand. It is a pain to write of it; but it is well that the worst should be known, well that the Genevese should have had the awful revelation of the vileness of what they had been harbouring in their midst. You may know, perhaps, that every house of debauchery under Government sanction and protection is obliged to hang up a red lamp over the door, as a guide to visitors. So that now, and especially since Sunday night, that powerful institution which rules Geneva is designated as the "Lampe Rouge."

They had organised processions in case of a victory, with designs and red lamps. They marched through the whole city, a mass of devilry and obscenity which I suppose could hardly be seen anywhere else except perhaps in Paris. Soldiers had been posted all about the Fusterie, but, nevertheless, the red lamps rushed into the church and marched round it inside, locking the gendarmerie out. The latter could not even succeed in forcing their way round the outside of the church, so dense was the crowd. Inside, it seems, the red lamps held a sort of service to the devil, tramping, swearing, and singing songs of the utmost blasphemy and obscenity. They sang a hymn which is often sung at meetings or street preachings here, addressed to the Holy Spirit, beginning,

"Source divine of light and life" (in French), and they turned it into a hymn of praise of the "Red lamps"—"Divine source" to them of all they find most agreeable! They had a banner, on two poles, with the names in large letters of *de Meuron and the "Bon Dieu," and a red lamp hanging over both names. They cursed and hissed and howled at the names of God and de Meuron. "A bas le Bon Dieu! A bas de Meuron!" "Vive la Lampe Rouge"! They also parodied a hymn which spoke of the Saviour on the cross in a way too awful to speak of, and the indecencies were on a par with the blasphemies.

Having "consecrated" the red lamps in the large church, they went on to all the other churches and filled the air in front of each with their blasphemies. Then branches of the procession went running to the different places which they hated most, and where they hoped to find some abolitionists. They went first to the Young Men's Christian Association, but they had an avant-courier in the person of one of our scouts, who ran faster and told that the "red lamps" were coming, so that all the men assembled had just time to get out and disperse, and only windows were left to be battered in. They went to our Federation office, but it was locked up and all dark. So through the long hours devilry reigned in the city, which on that early Sunday morning had looked so fair. It was an open and impudent saturnalia, flaring its own shame before the eyes of all.

This revelation of the source and nature of the opposition to us, and of the fruit, "after its kind," which State protection of vice brings forth, was necessary, and has begun already to bring about a reaction. Most of all, it has opened the eyes of all the good men, pastors, etc., to the moral pestilence in the midst of which they have been living for several generations. It is profoundly humiliating to the proud Genevese; for they are a very proud people, and they feel it all the more coming just before their great exhibition, and because they are being taunted and exulted over by the press of France and other countries. The most respectable journal of Switzerland, the Bund, of Berne, has a very grave and good article about the Sunday's vote and horrors, saying they are a disgrace to the whole of Switzerland.

Now to explain, in a degree, the great majority against us. If the question had been, "Do you desire the abolition or the maintenance of the maisons tolérées?" every man, woman, and boy would have understood, because the maisons tolérées are as much in evidence and known as the Cathedral or market-place. But the regulationist majority on the Grand Conseil invented the double question in order, no doubt, to perplex the people. Our friends in the Grand Conseil opposed it with all their might for several days, but in vain. The questions put before the electors were: (1) "Do you approve of the projet de loi d'initiative? Yes or no." (2) "Do you approve of the projet de loi of the Government? Yes or no." You can see what a throwing of dust in their eyes this was. Working men were honestly asking, "What does it mean?"

and during the past five weeks our party were not allowed to hold meetings to instruct the people. Every meeting was broken up by the Lampes Rouges, and finally every hall and room was closed against us by a police order. Attempting to speak in the streets or roads, our friends were stoned and assaulted and silenced by noise. Freedom of public meeting and freedom of speech no longer exist in Geneva. If we had had those liberties, it is believed that we might have had a majority of votes. Working women told us that their husbands were good men, but meant to abstain from voting altogether because they did not clearly understand the questions. Many hundreds abstained. Then the Genevois had worked hard to tell the people that we had deeply injured La Patrie, and troubled Geneva, and spoiled the prospects of the exhibition, and that all the agitators were paid by an English lady who had been sent from London with hundreds of pounds in her pocket. The poor people were misled by this kind of stuff. When one considers all these traps and deceptions put before them, to say nothing of the drink, one almost wonders that there were found 4000 who voted for abolition!

I have many good things still to report, which we should never have known of but for this appeal to the whole people—so many unexpected adhesions, and, above all, such brave and right action on the part of young men at the University, and even boys in schools.

Winter in the Alps.

O MIGHTY God, all wise, all beautiful,
To-day Thou hast before mine eyes displayed
A vision so stupendous, so sublime,
So beautiful in form and colour all,
That only to behold was ecstasy.

I stood amid the towering Alpine peaks,
Before me rose the far-famed Wetterhorn,
Like a gigantic fortress reaching heaven.
Its summit was suffused with amber light,
While on its rugged walls the snow lay thick,
And lower down the forests stood in form
Of serried ranks—a great protecting host.
The outline of the mountain bold and clear
Cut through the sky, and at its side was seen
The flaming crimson, stretching thousand miles.
Further away towards the east it changed;
A sapphire blue mingled with ruby light,
And decked with burnished copper-tinted clouds,
Outspread in forms fantastic as their hues.

Beyond, behold! another tint of blue,
Brighter than cobalt artist ever used.
And then between those further peaks which rise,
Like pinnacles of some cathedral vast,
Is formed a lake, of tint so exquisite
One might divine that God had now decreed
To make a colour that should far surpass
Ought that the eye of man had ever seen,
Or minds imaginéd.

What was that tint so indescribable?
The only thing that might recall its shade,
A turquoise radiant with light, and then
Transparent as the stream in Paradise
Wherein the seraphs dip their glowing wings!
I stood, I marvelled, and I worshipped
Th' eternal source of beauty, light, and truth.
What is this glory, whence this loveliness,
All this strange beauty spread o'er earth and heaven?
'Tis but the lower fringe of his great robe
Whose beauty fills the universe, whose name
Is God!

Is here no teaching for the soul? no truth?
Christ is earth's Light. He is our sun, and He Doth beautify and glorify our life.
And oh! the time shall come when He shall be
A Light to all the World—to all our race.
Darkness of sin, and gloom of Death shall pass,
The night that still on Jew and heathen rests
Shall pass, and He, the Sun of Righteousness,
Shall flood the whole of our poor sin-curs'd world
With light and glory, and the universe
Shall then rejoice with greater joy than at Creation's birth.

Factory Girls' Country Holiday Fund.—The eighth annual report says:—"We are able to give a week or fortnight's holiday to many girls who otherwise would never get beyond their work-rooms, their narrow streets and London skies, girls, many of them, still growing, who, but for this little change once a year, would develop into weak and fragile women. In 1895 we sent away 180 more girls than in 1894. Our receipts amounted to £868 13s. 1½d., the expenses being £850 15s. 2d. For this expenditure we were able to send away 874 girls and women, whose individual holidays represented in the aggregate 1440 weeks. But although it is a satisfactory feature that we were able to send away the number of girls mentioned, what an infinitesimal proportion this figure bears to the whole class of factory girls employed in London." The hon. secretary of the Fund is Miss Canney, St. Peter's Rectory, Saffron Hill, E.C.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

"AND DAVID TOOK HIM MORE WIVES OUT OF JERUSALEM."—2 Sam. v. 13.

THIS is rather disappointing! According to the notions of the surrounding nations, the greatness of a monarch was gauged by the extent of his harem. But the law of Moses put severe restraint on the multiplication of wives, "that his heart turn not away" (Deut. xvii. 17). It seems as though the soul of David sank into sensual indulgence and luxuriance. It lost much of its early hardihood and strength in consequence, and at this period of his life those seeds were sown, which in after years brought forth such a plentiful and terrible harvest of anguish, murder, and impurity in his family.

Few of us realise how much our character owes to the stern discipline to which God subjects us. The only way to keep us healthy and vigorous is to send us many a nipping frost, many a keen northern blast. The bleak hillside breeds stronger natures than the warm sheltered valley. The difference between Anglo-Saxon and Negro is largely wrought by temperature and soil. The campaign, with its strain on every power of endurance, trains better soldiers than the barracks. As David was a stronger, better man, when hunted like a coney in the rocks of Engedi, so are we braced to a nobler life, when all things seem against us.

Few of us can be trusted with unbroken happiness. God is compelled to withhold what the flesh craves. But where prosperity has shone on your path, be very careful not to abuse it. Consider it as indicating God's loving trust in you. He would rather read his lesson in sunshine than in storm. But walk carefully and humbly, looking to Him for daily grace, and never relaxing the girdle about the loin.

"THEY SET THE ARK OF GOD UPON A NEW CART."—2 Sam. vi. 3.

This was their mistake. The Divine directions were explicit that the ark of the living God must be carried on the shoulders of living men. The holy things were indeed carefully veiled in their blue cloths, before the sons of Kohath might lift and carry them. There would have been no stumbling of oxen, no swaying of the Ark to falling, no need for Uzzah to reach out his hand, if only this simple direction had been obeyed. This breaking forth of God was to recall men to simple absolute obedience to the rules and regulations that had been so explicitly laid down in the Levitical code. It could not fall into disuse without grave loss to the entire people. Better that one life should be sacrificed for disobedience than that the whole nation should be impoverished for the relaxation of that ancient law.

We are fond of bringing new carts to God. At every birthday we build the new cart of good resolution, and place thereon the Ark of God. We will be different, and on our fresh endeavours the Lord of Hosts shall ride; but we must drive, and if needs be, steady the Ark. But it is not long before the oxen stumble, and Uzzah our driver is smitten to the dust of death.

God wants, not new carts, but the living shoulders of consecrated men. We must live for Him, surrendering ourselves to his service; not driving, but being driven; not conducting, but being impelled; not imposing our thoughts on Him, but being willing to submit ourselves absolutely to Him. There is no need to fear God, if only we obey Him, and discover the laws by which we may approach and serve Him. Then the power which otherwise flames out to destroy will become the useful servant of our faith.

"DO AS THOU HAST SAID."—2 Sam. vii. 23.

This is the voice of a childlike faith.

Note what led to these words.—Nathan had just [843] unfolded to the King all the purposes of God's heart towards him. That He would establish his throne, and deliver him from his enemies, and set up his dynasty to succeed him, this and much else. David's heart was full of joy and gladness; he knew that God would not run back from his word, but He felt none the less the duty of claiming the fulfilments of these guarantees. So it is with all the promises of God, though they are Yea and Amen in Christ, it is requisite for us to put our hand on them, and plead them before God, to claim their fulfilment with appropriating faith; and to say, "Do as Thou hast said."

Notice the attitude in which David uttered these words. "He sat before the Lord." Was not this the position of rest and trust? On another occasion, he lay all night upon the earth (xii. 16), in an agony of prayer, because not sure of God's purpose, and hoping to turn God by the extremity of his anguish. But there is a marvellous alteration in the tone of our prayer, so soon as we can base it on the declared purposes of God. We enter into his rest, we put ourselves in the current of his purposes, we sit before the Lord.

Mark the blessedness of communion with God. It is as a man talks with his friend. We are not required always to kneel when we pray, or to say over a certain form of words, we can sit and talk with God, catching up his words as they fall on our hearts, and reflecting them back on Him in praise, and prayer, and happy converse. All true prayer originates in the declarations of God's love, to each of which we answer, Do as Thou hast said.

"THE SILVER AND GOLD HE HAD DEDICATED OF ALL NATIONS WHICH HE HAD SUBDUED."—2 Sam. viii. 11.

David might not build the temple, but he was bent on making provision for it. Indeed, Solomon had never been able to do as he did, unless his father had gathered these stores of gold and silver. Thus other men labour, and we enter into their labours, but the accomplished building is credited by God to each. He does not forget David when Solomon's temple stands complete. The reward is proportioned to each man's service, according to his work.

It is a glorious thing when we not only defeat our foes, but get spoils out of their overthrow, which we can use for the service of God and man. It is as possible for us as for David. Out of our failures temptations, mistakes, let us get the power of helping and directing others. In death Jesus won the keys of death and Hades.

But the main lesson of this chapter is the foreshadowing of God's purpose, that Gentiles should contribute to the building of his temple. What was literally true in the case of the temple of Solomon, is spiritually true of the heavenly temple, the Church. From every nation, and kindred, people and tongue, souls are being gathered, who form a spiritual house, a holy temple in the Lord. The whole world is destined to contribute to that structure, which is being prepared secretly and mystically, but shall ere long be manifested in its full glory. It is very interesting to get this suggestion amid the chronicles of a nation so exclusive and haughty as the Jews.

"THOU SHALT EAT BREAD AT MY TABLE CONTINUALLY."—2 Sam. ix. 7.

Four times in this chapter we are told of the lame man eating bread at the royal table. But what are these facts recorded and repeated for, save to accentuate the infinite blessings which come to us through the divine love?

Mephibosheth had done nothing to merit the royal favour. Not a word is said of his being well-favoured and attractive. So far from that, he was lame on both his feet, and probably a sickly invalid. In his own judgment he was worthless as a dead dog. His state was impoverished, no deed of prowess could win David's notice, he was almost entirely at the mercy of his servant. In these things there are many analogies to our own condition in the sight of God. We are lame indeed; and, so far as we are concerned, it is as unlikely as possible that we should ever win the Divine regard, or sit at his table among his sons.

But between David and Jonathan a covenant had been struck, which had provided for the children of the ill-fated Jonathan (1 Sam. x. 14, 15, 16). It was because of this sacred obligation that Mephibosheth fared as he did. Look away, child of God, to the covenant struck between God and thy representative, the Son of his love. It is idle of thee to seek to propitiate the Divine favour, or earn a seat at his table, but if thou art willing to identify thyself with thy Lord, and to shelter thyself in Him by the living union of faith, as a son with a father, then the provisions of that covenant between Father and Son shall be extended to thee; and because of God's love to Jesus thou shalt sit at the Divine table, and be regarded as one of the heirs of the great King.

"THE LORD DO THAT WHICH SEEMETH HIM GOOD."—2 Sam. x. 12.

Israel was arrayed against overwhelming odds. To human sight it must have appeared very improbable that Joab would be able to hold his own. However, he made the best arrangements he could, exhorted his men to be of good courage and do their utmost, and then piously left the issue to the God of battles.

There are times in all lives when the case seems desperate. How can we meet with 10,000 him who cometh against us with 20,000! Heart and flesh fail. What resource is there then save in the flight of the lonely man to the only God? It is for God to act, since the help of man is vain.

In your personal straits. When patience is exhausted, when the last handful is taken from the barrel, when complicated trials meet and hem you in, when the iron gate and the keepers before the door appear to render escape impossible, then look up, God is marching with reinforcements to your aid.

In your work and war for God in the world. We too often act and speak as if success were to be won by the forces that we may be able to bring into the field, whereas God asks us for nothing more than fidelity and the right disposition of such forces as we can command; He will do all the rest.

In your outlook on the conflict between good and evil. It is quite true that there appears to be an infinite disparity between the one and the other. But there are other forces in the field than appear. When the enemy comes in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord lifts up the standard. "There is none like unto the God of Jeshurun, who rideth upon the heaven to thy help."

"DAVID TARRIED STILL AT JERUSALEM."—2 Sam. xi. 1.

Ah! fatal dalliance in the arms of sensual ease! It led to David's undoing. It was the time of the year when kings generally went forth to the fight, and in earlier days David would never have thought of leaving to Joab or others the strain and stress of conflict when there were hard knocks to give and take. Indeed, on more than one occasion his followers had remonstrated against his exposing the Light of Israel to the risks of the battlefield. But now he sends Joab and his mighty men to fight against Ammon, while he tarries securely at Jerusalem. In this fatal lethargy he betrays the deterioration of his soul. Already the walls were broken down, and entrance into the citadel was easy. We are not surprised to learn that as he sauntered lazily on his palace roof in the sultry afternoon he was swept away before the rush of sudden passion, and took the poor man's ewe lamb to satisfy the vagrant, hungry impulse which suddenly came to him.

Beware of hours of ease! Rest is necessary; times of recruiting and renewal must come to us all; but there must be no neglect of known duty, no handing over to others of what we might and could do ourselves, no tarrying behind the march of the troops when we should go forth with them to the battle. Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation. Be most on guard when not actively engaged against the enemy. One unlocked gate may admit the foe to the citadel of the life, and rob you of peace for all after days.

The Prize Winners.

IT is with both pride and pleasure that I place before my young friends the results of the Prize Competition. As you may imagine, it has been no small task to examine all the papers; but I daresay you will reply it was no small task to you to prepare them! That I can quite believe, for they have been splendidly done, and show a vast amount of hard work and careful study. Even the little folks in Division I. have quite surpassed my expectations, and it is evident that all have put into practice the various lessons of diligence and perseverance learned during the quarter.

I am very glad so many obtained marks enough to get a prize. It would, of course, have been better still if all had done so, but I hope that those who have not succeeded now will do better next time.

UNCLE TOM.

Playing "Hide and Seek."

(1 Sam. x. 21-23.; Jer. xiii. 4, 5.)

CHILDREN often do in games what older folks do in real life. In play you imitate your elders. Many games are only but playfulimitations of real work done by men and women. Thus, you may become all the better fitted by-and-by for the serious duties of life, by being engaged in those innocent and lively amusements in which you now delight.

You all know the game of "Hide and Seek." Some of you, no doubt, have often hidden a thimble so that others may find it; or have joined others in trying to find what someone else has carefully hidden. How anxious you are, if you have to hide anything, to put it where no one can find it, and you use all the brains you possess in order to find a convenient niche. Then you call upon the other children to come and find it, and how intensely interested you are in their movements! By-and-by, when it is found, what excitement there is, and what joy among those who have found it! In all this there is the love of discovery, which as you get on in life you will find will grow upon you. What you do now in your play you will do later on in the eager pursuits of life.

Now, this game of "Hide and Seek" is a very old one. I feel certain it has been played in almost every land and in all ages. My belief is that children have always played in their games what they have seen their elders do in life. In ancient days people had often to hide themselves, or their treasures, from others, and children were not likely to overlook this. Indeed, the story of our race begins with hiding. No sooner did Adam and Eve disobey God than they hid themselves among the trees of the garden. Most of you know what such hiding means. There is not much game or joy about that. When you have done anything wrong you hide your face, and run out of sight; and it is well—indeed, it is only right that you should.

There are other instances spoken of in the Old Testament. Moses was hid by his parents, three months, because he was a goodly child—hid from Pharaoh, and from all those who would take away his life. Again, the spies who went to Jericho were hidden by Rahab, who covered them over with stalks of flax. Then there is the case of Saul hiding himself and, later on, of David hiding himself from Saul.

Then, again, Jeremiah tells how he hid, not himself, but the girdle which the Lord had bidden him hide. He hid it in a hole of the rock, and so hid it that no one but himself could find it.

So, right through the Old Testament, you will find in actual life some very real and earnest hiding, as well as very eager search on the part of others for that which had been hidden.

Many things that were so real in the lives of other folks, the children imitated in their play—for children were the same then as now. Why, wherever older people keep shops and buy and sell, children are sure to have a game at shop-keeping! So with regard to most things that children see grown-up people do. They mimic everything in their games. Thus, in those days when men used to hide themselves, or some precious treasure they owned, from their pursuers, children were wont to imitate this hiding and seeking in their games. If they ever heard, for instance, about Saul, the son of Kish, hiding himself among the stuff, they would be sure to try to do the same; or, if they heard of Jeremiah hiding his girdle, some of them would be sure to try the same experiment.

Now this desire to hide is not necessarily wrong. There is a power given to us to keep to ourselves certain thoughts and purposes, and I think we ought to use that power within reason—not unwisely or selfishly, so as to be reserved in manner when we ought to speak out. But there are secrets which we ought to keep, and purposes pure and good which we ought to cherish in silence.

On the other hand, it is noble to seek after many things until we find them. The love for finding is beneath most of the activities of men and women. In cities and towns like London or Brighton, you find men and women rushing to and fro, eagerly and anxiously, apparently with scarcely a minute to spare. Every one is in search of something, if it be only his daily bread. How many thousands are each day eagerly in pursuit of success. They want to find out the secret of getting on. Thus, from morning to night they are hard at work. Now, the little games in which they have been engaged as children have only prepared the way for every earnest and honourable search. This game, therefore, has its uses in after life.

It is well that children should play. You should be encouraged to do so within limits. It is well that you should use your ingenuity in either trying to hide yourself—without running into danger—or by concealing anything that is given you to hide, in order that the ingenuity of other little boys and girls may be used in trying to find it out. God has given you a brain to use, and, before it is used in hard work, He would have you use it in eager play.

Besides, God Himself hides most things from us in order that we may by diligent search find them out. Every kind of knowledge is at first hidden from us, and can only be found by much seeking. The treasures with which God has made the earth rich are as a rule to be found in unexpected places, and can only be got by hard work. The coal that burns brightly on our hearth has not been got without much thought and labour. Indeed, men and women were thousands of years before they found it out. Many other good things which we have to-day, and which our forefathers had not, have had to be sought for patiently for hundreds of years. God hid them, so to speak, in order that men might use all their powers to find them out, and that they might be better for the very exercise, even when, for the time being, they have not found what they sought. All the wealth with which God has blessed us, in minerals and other treasures, has had to be found out by man. God has shut it up in his coffers, and placed his keys in certain places. If we only look diligently for these we shall find them, and shall be able to open the locks one by one. That is what men have been doing in all ages.

Again, you cannot learn your lessons without hard work, and the lesson that requires the greatest effort to grasp is the lesson worth learning most; so that you boys and girls cannot become scholars, or be fitted for life, without earnest seeking after knowledge and experience.

Last of all, spiritual things must be eagerly sought. "Those who seek Me early," says God, "shall find Me," and "Seek and ye shall find." Even this Book we cannot understand all at once—there is not one of us who does understand it all—we only gradually get to know the meaning of the truths it contains. We have to dig in them as for precious things. "Search the Scriptures." The word "search" means "to dig deep"—dig down as men dig for precious minerals. If you do this in the study of this grand Book, it will repay you gloriously. You will learn more of what Christ has to give in his great love; you will also receive all needful strength to do your duty; and all the guidance you require so as to walk the right path. Jesus would have us seek for Him as the wise men and the shepherds sought Him, and He would have us seek diligently for those things which He can give us, and which will profit us most when found.

So, then, life is a time of search. God, in one sense, has just placed things out of sight, in order that we may use all our powers and opportunities to find them out. And how happy are we when we find them, all the happier for the effort we have made. There is nothing like the joy of finding—a lost sheep, a lost coin, a lost friend. I trust that throughout life you will seek earnestly the things which are above, where Christ is seated at the right hand of God.

P.S.A. Conference, Birmingham.

IN Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham, on Tuesday week, the National Conference of the Pleasant Sunday Afternoon Movement was held. Mr. JOHN BLACKHAM, of West Bromwich, presided. Beginning in the customary P.S.A. way, there were three minutes of hymn-singing, three of prayer, and three of Scripture-reading. The prayer was offered by Miss HEARN, better known as "Marianne Farningham."

Rev. J. SELICKS, of Leamington, opened a discussion on the women's branch of the P.S.A. Miss GORE (Leamington) testified with joy to the good that had been done. Rev. G. TYPE, of Birmingham, speaking as a recent convert, who formerly had "persecuted the church," said that he now had a P.S.A. membership of 600, and an attendance of 700 or 800 every Sunday.

Mrs. DYSON, of Ramsgate, whose principal work was done in Wakefield, gave a thoughtful and inspiring address. They had felt yearnings for the multitudes who were scattered like sheep without a shepherd, like ripe corn waiting for the harvest, and they were trying to gather the sheep into the fold and the ripe corn into the garner. Of the women particularly she wished to speak. Round about the churches there is a multitude of women bound to them by close ties, who, however, were only at rare intervals to be found within the churches. The life of those women for the most part consisted of a round of ceaseless toil. Often they had to eke out uncertain wages by washing and charring. They seldom got out, they seldom read newspapers, they seldom met their friends. The abounding joy they ought to get from the love of children was lost altogether in the sense of care. The effect of that upon the character of the women was one of three kinds. If she was of strong nature, well brought up, and struggling to keep together a respectable and prosperous home, she grew too often cold, hard, and bitter. If of a tender mould she became reserved and silent, adding lack of sympathy to her other burdens, becoming apathetic and indifferent. Or, in the third case, she sunk into degradation and began to drink and gamble, sometimes even to lose her very womanhood and become a thing of shame. For generations they had been trying to reach these women, but always with a sense of futility and inadequacy. They had longed to find a larger way, and such an opening came to them suddenly from the example of the men's P.S.A. The conviction passed like a flash through the women, that they were entitled to one hour in every week, in which, if they could get the work done, and take baby with them, and be sure to get back in time to get supper ready, the husband or son might consent to sit by the fire and see that nothing happened to the house or the children. That hour they spent in a great gathering known by the letters P.S.A. They felt the thrill of a larger life and a larger sympathy. They got a vision into larger lives. Only those who had seen the simple enjoyment of the women, their child-like self-abandonment, and knew the sacrifices they made to be present, could understand the great and good work the movement was accomplishing.

Dealing next with the possibilities of the movement, Mrs. Dyson placed in the forefront the fact that they were putting heart and hope and energy into the down-hearted and the distressed, and kindling the flame of dormant aspiration. Then there were immense educational possibilities. Freed from all conventions, speaking as one woman to another woman, and with a perfect candour, they could teach much about household economy, questions of health, sanitation, and sick-nursing, and they could lay bare the terrors of drunkenness and impurity, of uncleanness, and of child neglect

They could nerve their hearers to what might result in the purification of whole neighbourhoods by the formation of a healthy public opinion. Speaking formally of correlative branches of the work, Mrs. Dyson advised them that in their visiting there should be no touch of professionalism or patronage, indeed no obvious charity or kindness, but a spirit of pure friendliness.

Miss FARNINGHAM said she was one of those who prayed God to speed the movement on. It was just what the world and Church needed to-day.

Rev. J. O. WEST, vicar of St. Matthew's, Birmingham, spoke of "Some important spiritual needs and aspects of the movement." As a worker in one of the poorest parishes of Birmingham, he expressed his personal indebtedness to the P.S.A. movement.

Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN, Councillor Bisseker, and the chairman also spoke.

At the afternoon session, a letter from Rev. F. B. MEYER was read, in which he said that if he could have been with them he would have urged an increased endeavour to emphasise the spiritual element of the movement, and the suitability of this agency for bringing the working classes and the ministry in closer contact. An address was delivered by Councillor PRICE LEWIS, of Wolverhampton, who said that he was never more struck with the need for P.S.A.'s than when he walked through the streets on the Sundays preceding Bank Holidays, and saw thousands of men crowding to holiday race meetings. The race meetings were amongst Wolverhampton's worst curses. Rev. E. GOULD, of Leamington, argued for the title of brotherhood for the movement. Councillor STEWBRIDGE, of Birmingham, showed how the P.S.A. was doing a work that had never been done before, and advocated a still closer association between the P.S.A. and the Sunday-school.

The Chairman remarked that the movement was to a great extent dependent upon the influence of good women, and called upon Mrs. Dyson and Miss Farningham to speak. Rev. A. C. FERRIMAN, of Bradford, pleaded for a mutual sympathy between the local church and its own P.S.A., but said that would not come so long as the church members were accused of being proud and hypocritical, and so long as the P.S.A. gave the critics any ground for saying they were selfish pleasure-seekers, who only met together for secular entertainment. The meeting was thrown open to general discussion.

In the evening Mr. GEORGE MÜLLER, of the Bristol Orphanage, preached to a large congregation in Carr's-lane Chapel from the words, "Ask, and ye shall receive." His earnest exhortations were illustrated with personal experiences of answers to prayer.

Police Orphanage, Redhill.—The annual meeting and distribution of prizes was recently held. The chair was taken by Colonel H. Macgregor, C.B. The report stated that there were now twenty-six orphans supported by the home, nineteen boys and seven girls, of ages varying from five to fourteen. All are being trained for usefulness in after life. In most cases the fathers of these children had met with their death through accident, or injuries received whilst in the performance of their duty. Capt. G. R. B. Drummond, Chief Constable of West Sussex, spoke a few kindly words expressing the value which all in the police should feel for such an institution. The Countess of Chichester addressed the children and presented the prizes, which had been given by different members of the committee. The Orphanage is entirely supported by voluntary contributions.

Finsbury Park Rescue and Preventive Association.—In reviewing the work of the past ten years, the report for 1895 says: "We were the first to prosecute the owners of bad houses under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885. We have from time to time readily placed all information in our possession at the disposal of the local authorities. While we feel there is, in view of the awful condition of the streets, a great deal more to be done, we desire to place on record our own opinion that all has been done possible, with our limited forces, for the cause of purity in North London. Our efforts to enlist the co-operation of the police are now rewarded by their hearty assistance; in some cases they have themselves (as they should) volunteered the information." Alpha House, 45, Hanley-road, N., has extended help in some very sad cases to wronged and deserted girls. The hon. sec. of the work is Mr. T. Fish, 32, Lancaster-road, N.

THE LATE General G. G. Anderson.

GRACE, though not hereditary, is often found in families through successive generations. General Anderson, who has lately gone to his rest and reward, was for many years a faithful witness for Christ in India and Britain, and he had a happy place among relatives preceding him and following him in the way of life. His father, the late General W. C. Anderson, R.A., was a distinguished officer at Waterloo, and, what is better, an eminent Christian. He is remembered by many as Colonel Commandant of the Royal Horse Artillery at Woolwich, and as having a prominent place in the Evangelical Alliance. Before the days of Keswick, the late Duchess of Gordon had great gatherings at Huntly, at which the General was invited to preside.

GEORGE, the subject of this sketch, born at Portobello, near Edinburgh, on Christmas Eve, 1822, was the second of seven sons, six of whom entered the Army, and three attained the rank of General. George was a bright youth, for he got his commission when only sixteen years of age. Soon after he was sent to India, and ere he was twenty he passed through trials that made his survival marvellous. In 1842 he was sent to the hills on sick leave. He was still in fever when he started for Simla, by palanquin dak, the only way then of travelling in those parts. The country was very unsettled, and at sunset he was attacked by twelve dacoits.

The palki-bearers at once fled. The young officer shot down the first man with his revolver, and was drawing the trigger for the second when a thrust from a long spear missed him, but disabled the revolver. The dacoits then closed on him, and inflicted eleven wounds, four of them in places endangering life. He bled and fainted, and the robbers, thinking that they had killed him, stripped him, and left him for dead. They carried off palanquin and everything. There he lay all night. In the morning he was found by a mounted patrol, laid on a charpoy, and carried to Ludhiana, then the frontier station. It took two days and two nights in the hot winds, which added dangers to the sorely-wounded young man. His only surviving brother writes: "No other man I have met, or heard of, could have pulled through such treatment; but his life was spared, and health restored eventually." Some would say that his having been found in the morning was the merest chance, but it may well be regarded as a fruitful providential interposition—"The Lord had need of him."

The present writer was intimately acquainted with General G. G. Anderson for twenty years, but he is indebted to others, and especially his brother, Captain R. E. Anderson, for glimpses of his early career in India. The brothers were together, officers in the same regiment, and occupying one tent during the Punjab Campaign in 1848-50. Lieutenant George was genial, warm-hearted, and chivalrous. He was more than moral, though not decidedly Christian then; he had a leaning to religion, and advised younger officers, who preferred the messroom, to attend the voluntary services. Long before his conversion the Spirit was striving with him.

In 1852 Captain Anderson took furlough, and came to his father's house at Woolwich. In 1853 he married Annette Charlotte, youngest daughter of Robert and Lady Mildred Uniacke, of Woodhouse, county Waterford, by whom he had two sons and four daughters. Mrs. Anderson finely balanced her husband's genial, impulsive, and energetic character by her gentleness, and "the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit."

The exact date of the Major's conversion is not known. It must have been in 1860 or earlier. The means of leading him into clear light was a sermon of the late Mr. Spurgeon on "Look unto Me, and be ye saved." The Major surrendered himself to the Lord "spirit, and soul, and body," and showed that Christian decision which ever after was a feature of his character.

After a variety of services, ending with an important appointment at Allahabad as a colonel, he retired in 1875 to Dehra Dun. His official duties were now few, and so he was free as well as ready for every good work in the beautiful Dun, and in the hot seasons at Mussoorie. At this sanatorium he found congenial work among the soldiers at the dépôt, and in co-operating with Rev. J.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Maull & Fox, 1874, Piccadilly, W.)

Gelson Gregson and other ministers of the Union Church, and Brigade-Surgeon R. Pringle, M.D. At both places he arranged for a supply of Christian literature, an eminently important work in India.

In 1879 he returned to England, and in 1881 became major-general. At Blackheath he often preached in the open-air, and exercised there, as well as elsewhere, a remarkable gift for dealing with souls individually. He had seals of this ministry. He was an Elder of the Presbyterian Church, and a director of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society. To the last he took a deep interest in this society, which sends evangelists to many places in India where there is neither church nor chapel, neither minister nor missionary.

At Eastbourne and Plumstead the General's whole-hearted Christianity won the regard of ministers and Christian people, and his earnestness for winning souls had its reward. His love for the Word of God was wonderful. He rose at six in the morning for the study of his well-marked Bible and quiet communion with God. This explains his long-sustained Christian consistency and usefulness.

In 1891 General Anderson married Kate, youngest daughter of the late Mr. James Russell, of Horton Court Lodge, Kent. This lady, after her conversion in 1875, began Christian work on a small scale. It grew until it expanded into the Cage-lane Mission, Plumstead, with its large hall. In this work General Anderson found a congenial sphere of action. A great part of his time was spent in a small summer-house in prayer and conversing with inquirers. He said to a Christian worker: "You cannot do me a greater favour than to bring men and women to me to speak to them about their souls."

A severe chill brought on the illness that terminated his earthly life. On November 27, 1895, devout men and women were at the Eastbourne Cemetery, where the esteemed friend and pastor of the deceased (Rev. H. C. Wilson) conducted the funeral service.

Soldier of Christ, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ.
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy.

The Cage Lane Mission.

THE anniversary of this well-known mission hall, held on Thursday evening, was well attended, and accompanied by much interest. The general sympathy felt for the devoted founder, Mrs. Anderson, in her bereavement found generous and hearty expression on all hands. Sir ROBERT PHAYRE presided.

The report, read by Col. ST. QUINTIN, opened with graceful and touching reference to the loss sustained by the death of General Anderson, who had for five years devoted himself to the Mission. The work of the past year is described as rich in tokens of blessing. The evangelistic services have been largely attended and full of interest. The various auxiliary agencies have gone on steadily and usefully. During the winter much was done in the way of relieving distress. The Sunday-school has a thousand children under the care of fifty teachers. Many letters have been received from young people in service testifying to the fact of having been led to Christ in Cage-lane Mission Hall. The Bible-woman continues her valuable and resultful labours from house to house, seeking constantly the good of the bodies and souls of the people around. One very interesting case is mentioned in illustration of many such. Reference is made to the temperance and similar operations; and an urgent plea is made for further help in view of the teeming masses populating this growing district, regardless and reckless of their spiritual interests, and left largely without any to care for their souls. Amongst these the mission-hall occupies a commanding position. It is open every night of the week; and every legitimate effort is made to reach the people, hence it merits support as a thorough-going and live mission centre.

Mr. T. A. DENNY made happy reference to the new well-constructed and commodious hall, so considerable an improvement on the old and somewhat awkward place.

Mr. A. BAYNES felt that no one could listen to the story of the work without thanking God for such a centre of light and hope. From his long experience as a chaplain, the speaker recalled case after case to show the deplorably friendless and hopeless condition of thousands, and the absolute necessity of such missions as these, which reach out a helping hand to those who have lost heart, and are ready to perish.

Mr. JOHN WOOD addressed a few ringing and rousing words to Christians who are, or who ought to be, workers for God. He would have all such ponder the direct question, "How much owest thou unto my Lord?" It is a question we can never answer fully. He gave us all we have and are; He gave his Son for us, his choicest and best for our sakes. Does not all this demand whole-souled and unreserved consecration to any service to which He may call us?

Funeral of Richard Weaver.

IT was not a wealthy crowd that followed the mortal remains of the sturdy old veteran to their last resting-place in Ardwick Cemetery, Manchester; but it was rich in sympathy and love. It began to gather long before the arrival of the cortege from Alderley Edge, where Richard had his home. A few stragglers might have been drawn in by a sense of curiosity, but even among bonnetless women, who evidently had not come from far, there were not wanting tokens of respect, and even mourning. Had some of them (one was tempted to ask) heard the Gospel from his lips to saving purpose?

The day (Wednesday, the 8th inst.) was fine but cloudy, so that no inconvenience was felt from either cold or sun; and but for the short notice of his death no doubt hundreds more, especially from a distance, would have gathered round his grave. As it was, the throng was considerable, and it was to be noticed how large a proportion were men.

All his sons were there, manfully battling between deep emotion and the necessity of managing the arrangements; but it was a sore struggle. Among the companions in labour of many years, there were present Joshua Poole, now very frail and infirm, one of the last links remaining of the evangelistic activities of thirty years ago; the mother and wife of the late Henry Moorhouse, one of Richard Weaver's earliest converts; Mr. John Latham; while the fellow-workers of later years were very numerous represented.

IN THE CHAPEL.

In the absence of Dr. Barnardo, who was to have conducted the funeral service, but unfortunately missed his train, the sad duty fell to the lot of Rev. JOHN ROBERTSON, of Glasgow. In the cemetery chapel the proceedings commenced with the hymn

In the Christian's home in glory
There remains a land of rest

—a memory of the old revival days in which, as Mr. Robertson afterwards expressed it, Weaver "burst out upon the nation as a brand kindled by God." It was sung with a degree of heartiness seldom heard at such a time—sung indeed as Richard himself would have sung it, and have had it sung, could he have been present in life instead of death. And some of the tear-stained faces looked brighter as the hopeful refrain rang out—

There is rest for the weary,
There is rest for you.

We are not accustomed to such singing at our sad, solemn southern funerals; but on this occasion at least our brethren further north were true to their faith, to "sorrow not as they that have no hope." The triumph so manifest at their brother's death seemed imparted to them in this and succeeding hymns. In the reading of the Scripture, too, while breathless silence reigned during the more solemn passages, it seemed as if the tension was too great, and suddenly the audience spontaneously joined the minister with one voice in repeating, "Thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ"; so also in the later words, "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

Then, in well chosen words Mr. Robertson thus traced some of the events in the evangelist's life:—

"Our hearts are stricken to-day. Before us lies the precious dust of one of the most honoured servants of the Lord Jesus Christ in this half-century; honoured by the Master in having committed to him, more than to any other in our generation, the work of calling sinners to repentance and conversion at the Cross of the Crucified. Richard Weaver was a brand kindled by God Himself, and the flame lit up with the atoning love of Christ the hearts of hundreds of thousands of his fellow-sinners.

"Perhaps it is meet that a Scotsman should have crossed the border to lay a wreath of Scottish blue-bells on the coffin of Richard Weaver; for though he belonged to you English people, and loved his native England, his heart was peculiarly knit to the 'land of the mountain and the flood.' It was in Scotland that some of the most marvellous results of Richard Weaver's preaching were seen; and it was in Scotland that the Holy Ghost confirmed the Word with signs following to an extent that thrilled our staid and solemn country into unwonted hallelujahs. Richard Weaver's hymns flew like wildfire on the wings of the wind, and our grave psalm-singing Covenanters had to open their mouths in the infectious harmony of those new Gospel melodies of his. God was with him, and he is now with God.

"I have thought it remarkable, and designed of God, that Richard Weaver's last sermon in Scotland should have been in the very scene of his old triumphs in preaching the Gospel of Christ—the City Hall of Glasgow, where my congregation now gathers. Thousands on that occasion thronged round him, and listened to some of the most thrilling utterances that ever fell from mortal lips, commending the love and grace of his Saviour. Will any that were present at that last meeting of the veteran revivalist—for revivalist he was to the end—forget his words when he summoned from the spirit land Abraham and Jacob, David and Isaiah, and all the saints of old, Luther and Calvin, and John Knox, Wesley and Whitefield, McCheyne and Chalmers, to bear testimony to the sufficiency in life and in death of the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ? It was over again the old fervour of the great revival time of 1859-60, and gave some of us that were but bairns at that wonderful time a kind of idea of what Richard Weaver and that great revival were.

"God tried him and tested him beyond most, and he stood the test, and came forth as gold. His hair as I knew him was driven white; not so much with the snows of age and the coming eternity, as from the blanching of the pain and travail of sadness and sorrow, and, I will say, the unmerited neglect and cruelty he passed through. But all is over now; 'There is rest for the weary,' and he has found it in the bosom of his God.

"We commend the bereaved widow and family of him who has gone to God for his own consolation, and as we commit the dust of his servant to the tomb to wait his promise of resurrection, do we not hear the voice say to all of us, 'Be ye also ready, for ye know not the day nor the hour when the Son of Man shall come?' Let us be in earnest, for eternity will soon be upon us, and opportunity will have gone."

AT THE GRAVE.

The four bearers of the coffin had each been converted under the evangelist's preaching. At the grave was sung, in response to his dying request, another of the old revival hymns—

In evil long I took delight,
Unawed by shame or fear.

Regret was expressed at the unavoidable absence in South Africa of Mr. R. Cope Morgan, for nearly forty years one of the most staunch and loyal friends, through evil and through good report, that Richard Weaver ever had, and author of his "Life." He was represented by his son, who gave an address from the words of Prov. xvii. 6, "Children's children are the crown of old men: and the glory of children are their fathers."

We live, he said, in days of keen competition, alike in the religious and the business world. In each there is a conflict of ways and means, of methods and ideas. Some desire the new; others say "The old is better." In the sad nature of things the younger succeeds the elder, and in the process is apt too hastily to assume its own superiority.

Like the "meeting of the waters," there comes a point at which the old river has received so many inflowing tributaries that its original existence is in danger of being forgotten; and, alas! it sometimes happens that in the fusion there is con-fusion, a noise and clamour, a ruffling of the surface, aforesaid so placid and so smooth. Yet this is only so when the stream is shallow and its bed stony. Given sufficient depth, and the new-comer merges with the old in still and noiseless calm, and in graceful concord they help each other on their way.

It is this thought of mutual aid and esteem between the older generation and the new of which the verse referred to speaks. It may be fitting that the elders should some day express appreciation of the generation arising after them. It would also be well if their appreciation were always deserved. But if "children's children" may become "the crown of old men"—a royal blessing on their heads—it is no less true that "the glory of children" should be "their fathers."

We hear much to-day of what is "new" in photography, journalism, criticism, evangelism, and what not, and gladly avail ourselves of all that is good in each. But as one of the younger generation he repudiated the assumption that everything new is of necessity the best, to the depreciation of all that has gone before; and expressed his gratitude to God for the blessed, holy, and fruitful lives of such "fathers in Israel" as the one whose loss we mourned.

Richard Weaver (he continued) belonged to the old school; he clung to old methods; but he believed in the old Bible, and stood upon the old Rock. His character knew no shoddy; he built on concrete, not on dust; and when much else will be burnt up his work will remain. Methods and expressions may change with changing years; but if the work of those who follow him is to abide it must be permeated with the old truth, and tell forth with equal fidelity the "old, old story of Jesus and his love." Elijah exclaimed in a petulant mood, "I am not better than my fathers!" and prayed that he might die. Let us, recognising the same fact, pray to live, that we may carry on the work in which the fathers lay down their lives. Be it ours, to trust as firmly, to pray as earnestly, to work as faithfully, to live as nobly, to die as triumphantly as our father, brother, friend, and comrade, who is now in the presence of the King.

After the singing of another favourite hymn—

Christ for me,

Mr. THOS. WINTLE, of Pontymoile, Mon., referred, in feeling terms, to the welcome visits paid by his departed friend to the colliers of South Wales. Often feeble in body, he was, nevertheless, ever ready to declare the message of the Master's love to a class of the community especially dear to his heart; and to aid Mr. Wintle in his strenuous endeavours to minister comfort to the souls and bodies of those in distress, through calamity or scarcity of work, with whom, alas, the district abounds. His last visit was in December. In fact, it was the last active effort in Gospel work that he undertook before his final illness. As the result, a large number, especially of young men and women, are rejoicing in a newly-found Saviour.

Mr. Robertson then committed the body to the grave with the following words:—

"At this open grave, I have been asked to conclude with a few words. The first time I ever heard of Richard Weaver was long ago, in connection with a hymn my mother, now in glory, sang to me:—

Come ye that fear the Lord
Unto me.
I've got something good to say
About the narrow way,
For Christ the other day
Saved my soul.

"Then the traditions of the great revival of 1859-60, in which Richard Weaver passed through Scotland like a flame of fire, were like a holy atmosphere about Scotch boys such as myself as we grew up. We never saw, but we heard and were glad, and have wistfully longed for that old time of the right hand of the Most High to return. When the annals of the spiritual movements from God on this poor earth of ours are written by the recording angels, one name will be inscribed as a messenger of Christ to our nation deeper than earthly historians seem inclined to inscribe it, and that name is Richard Weaver.

"Just as Wesley and Whitefield were used by God to call out his people from the darkness and unbelief of a degenerate Christendom, so half-way through this century God called Richard Weaver to summon his people from the surrounding chill and death of formality and indifference. No bishop's hands were on his head—the converted collier needed them not. The cross was where he stood and beckoned sinners to come with their guilt-laden hearts to where he had himself got peace and pardon. I never thought he would yet be in the providence of God at his own fireside, loved by the bairnies, listened to by my people, and listened to, as I said inside the chapel, by them in his very last sermon in Scotland, in the City Hall of Glasgow.

"The Evangelical succession has a truth that needs to be restored, for I am surprised to find it too much missing in the ordinary survey of what led up to the entrenched Evangelical position of our churches, that resulted from the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey from America in the seventies. Pioneers that do the most difficult work are apt to be lost sight of; perhaps even in this neglect pioneers may be like the Christ Himself, who came unto his own but his own received Him not. Let that link in the Evangelical succession be righteously restored. The link is Richard Weaver. We owe, indeed, under God, the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, to which so much is attributed, logically, historically, and directly to him whose body is about for a time to be enclosed in this grave in Manchester. Though it is not mentioned in the published 'Life of Henry Moorhouse,' it is the case that Moorhouse was converted to God through the instrumentality of Richard Weaver; and it was Moorhouse's teaching and contact with Mr. Moody that sent him over to this country to tell the old, old story with so great blessing from God, for which we will ever praise Him. But in justice let the historical link be realised, Richard Weaver was second to none, and far before many, in natural gifts as an evangelist, apart from the grace of Christ and the power of the Holy Ghost, without which all gifts are vain. The 1859-60 movement, on which like a ship on the inrolling wave he was borne, was weird in its unearthliness. It was God.

"But we will not speak of the servant so much as of the Master; we will not mention at this graveside the sinner saved, but the Saviour saving; we would commend Christ to you all. He whose tongue is silent would do this, we are sure. He is not dead; he sleepeth. Mr. Spurgeon told a company of us before he died that he believed that God would give him a pulpit somewhere in the immensities of eternity, and he would yet proclaim to listening worlds the story of the redemption of the sinner by the blood of the Son of God. Yes, and Richard Weaver will tell the story, too, to those celestial auditories throughout God's universe. The old theme will be the ever new with him, 'Unto Him that loveth us, loosed us from our sins in his own blood, unto Him be the glory.'

"We have sung around his last couch the hymn he requested the mourners to do, and we give God thanks that in his place his two sons proclaim as evangelists, in speech and in song, the Gospel their father spoke and sang so movingly and long. God comfort the bereaved. Their translated father told them to put on the tombstone that will be erected on this spot the words, 'A great sinner saved by great grace,' and Richard Weaver's last words on earth were:—

On Christ, the solid rock, I stand—
All other ground is sinking sand.

"Farewell, soldier of Jesus, fallen asleep; farewell, dear old Great-heart of the Evangel. And may the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with us all now and throughout eternity. Amen."

Thus rests, until "that day," "Undaunted Dick," as he was called in his unconverted days, and which sobriquet he lived up to to the end. A few days before his death he had said, "Ten doctors who gave me up and said my case was hopeless have all gone before me!" Again and again he was raised, as it were, from the gates of death, to speak to sinners of the love of God; and now, though dead, he yet speaks and lives for evermore.

MEMORIAL SERVICE IN LONDON.

It seemed but fitting that a Memorial Service should be held at the Noon Prayer Meeting, Aldersgate-street, where so often when in London our departed brother's ringing voice has been heard. Many who could not spare the time to attend the funeral in Manchester were glad to unite in such a service in London. Hence, on Monday, the hall was well filled with friends from far and near, who glorified God for the remarkable work He had enabled this veteran evangelist to do. Many were eager to bear testimony to the great things witnessed in past days. Early experiences with the veteran evangelist in Staffordshire, stirring scenes more than thirty years ago in Liverpool, and moving times in the Old Surrey Theatre, were referred to (bringing one brother to his feet to testify that he and many around him were fruits of these services); work in Leicester and at Dedham, and fruitful labours in Glasgow and Edinburgh were also recalled. Amongst those who spoke were Messrs. W. Greene, Golding, D. M. Cameron, R. Burn, W. Noble, R. Scott, G. E. Morgan, and P. S. Badenoch.

The two closing speakers were Rev. W. Stott and Dr. Barnardo. The former recalled early days with Richard Weaver and John Hambleton in the North, while the latter summarised admirably special points in Mr. Weaver's ministry. Few in these later and more conventional days can form an adequate conception of what it meant for such an evangelist as Mr. Weaver to come into an Irish town, and set it in a stir. He was an untutored man, but he was full of the Holy Ghost. He was certainly thoroughly unconventional; his tunes he picked up by the wayside. He was intensely original, and one of the most fearless of men. Put a stone wall before him, and if he felt God called him, crack he would go at it. True, there came a time when a dark cloud rested on his life. "I thoroughly investigated the whole matter, and was with him through it all. It seemed to me one of the most mysterious providences of God I have ever known—such a life of usefulness eclipsed so sadly. None of us can imagine how dark was the cloud which fell on his earnest soul. But how magnificently God brought him through! He went to the very district where the accusation had been made, and for twenty years, as town missionary, literally lived it down, until the falsity of the charge was confessed on the deathbed of the person who made it. God brought him out of the obscurity to do, in his closing years, a marvellous work. His old vigour and strength were gone, but his ministry was marvellously owned of God in these last days of a wonderful career."

Many may be glad to know that an excellent cabinet photograph of our departed brother may be had (price 1s. 6d.) of J. S. Dodington, 62, Upper-street, Islington, N.

Conventions in the Riviera, Rome, Egypt, and Palestine.

FROM A CORRESPONDENT.

IN these days of hurrying to and fro, it is good to know that God has laid it on the heart of some—especially of one—of his servants to think of wanderers in foreign lands, and also workers there. A series of Conventions for the deepening of spiritual life designed to reach both workers and visitors, has been held now for three years under the presidency of Rev. Francis Paynter, of Guildford. This spring the chain has been lengthened, and has reached over to the Holy Land, where God has granted special tokens of good.

The meetings began in the Riviera. Three or four days were spent at Nice, the meetings being held in a hall attached to the French Church. Some French and Italians were present, many English and Scotch, and an M.P., the representative of a Welsh constituency. At Cannes the Convention was in the German church, and people of that nationality and Russians mingled with French and English workers and visitors in their desire to seek deeper blessing from God. At Mentone the French Protestants opened their temple for the weekdays, and the Scotch pastor his pulpit for the Sunday. At San Remo, a lady to whom God had given "great largeness of heart," made the whole party her guests, and threw open the beautiful hall of her villa to all who would come to hear "things touching the King." The hall was crowded, seven ministers being amongst the company.

Time compelled the speakers to omit other Riviera towns, and even to pass Florence, but at Rome, "in the name of our God," they "set up their banners." The Y.M.C.A. hall was the place of meeting, and (as an old resident said), "the British colony at Rome was well represented" in the gatherings, which filled it twice a day for several days. There, as at most of the other towns, English and Scotch chaplains invited Mr. Paynter and his helpers (Rev. J. J. Luce and Rev. J. B. Figgis) to preach for them on the Sundays.

So far the work was on the lines of former years, but from this a new departure was taken in the extension of the services to Cairo, Alexandria, and Jerusalem. At Cairo they were distinctly services. Endeavours to obtain a large room in first one and then another hotel having been frustrated, Dean Butcher most kindly invited the chairman and Rev. Evan Hopkins (who had now taken the place of Mr. Luce) to take three quiet days in Christ Church, while the American missionaries invited Rev. W. Houghton (who had followed Rev. J. B. Figgis), to give addresses at their church, in the very heart of the city. A very blessed season was vouchsafed. Even in worldly Cairo goodly congregations of visitors gathered, while the workers were cheered exceedingly.

At Alexandria Rev. T. R. Lawrence gave the heartiest welcome to the Conventions in the Soldiers' and Sailors' Institute. There and in the English and Scotch National Churches, and also in the Seamen's Bethel, the voices of God's servants were heard speaking in power. It is believed that some soldiers and civilians found Christ. Two ladies from England who had prepared the work at Cairo followed it up at Alexandria; it is hoped that the blessing will abide yet for many days.

The crowning Convention of the series was that held at Jerusalem during the last week in March. The meetings were held in the Jewesses' Institution and the Sanatorium. Christian workers from Hebron, Bethlehem, Nazareth, and other places had come to seek the revival of their faith, and hope, and love. The ministers of all Protestant churches and teachers of all Protestant schools threw their energies into the movement, and the gatherings often filled the large hall. Both there and at Christ's Church the speakers preached to young and old, Jew and Gentile, on two Sundays, and the enthusiastic utterances at the praise meeting showed how greatly workers in this city of cities and country of countries appreciated the efforts made to cheer and teach and encourage them. The whole chain of meetings is one calling for deep thankfulness to the Most High God.

THE EVANGELIST.

"The Fire and the Viper."

DURING the time when the gracious work of God was going on in a village in which I was engaged in Christian work, there were not wanting many indications that the great enemy of souls was on the alert, and seeking in various ways to hinder the tide of blessing. At last he overshot the mark, and defeated his own purposes.

My husband was asked to speak a few closing words to a Bible-class of working-men, held by our hostess in her own dining-room. The class was composed mostly of Christians, but of an old-fashioned type, many of whom had not testified in any decided manner for their Lord. My husband was led to urge upon them the necessity and privilege of opening their lips in prayer and praise, concluding with the words, "I do not believe in dumb Christians." This seemed to have laid hold of one of the men. He had known the Lord for a long time, and seemed to have felt convicted of unfaithfulness in not having witnessed for his Master.

A few days after, the poor fellow's brain gave way, and he lost his reason. This created a great sensation in the village, and threatened seriously to affect the work, as the report went abroad that my husband had driven the poor fellow out of his mind by telling him that "he would be damned if he did not pray." It was hard to bear, especially to me, who knew how incapable was my (if anything, too gentle) husband, of giving utterance to anything so harsh and unkind; in addition to this, we both felt deeply tried at this attempt to discredit the work, and drive timid ones from the meetings.

At this crisis, a copy of a religious weekly came into my hands with an article by Rev. C. E. Fox, of Eaton Chapel. I only quote from memory, but the article dealt with Paul's shipwreck at Melita, and Mr. Fox remarked something as follows: "Be sure that if God uses you to kindle a fire, out of it will come the viper." It came with great force to my own soul, and I was led to say to my husband, "We have had the fire, now we have the viper; let us by faith shake it off; let us take right hold of God, and claim that out of this apparent evil shall come great good and glory to Him." Poor R— was taken to the asylum, and died shortly after; thus our faith was very sorely tested.

Two or three weeks slipped away, and a nephew of R—'s appeared upon the scene, a very simple, uneducated man, but who gave evidence of real spiritual life. At a meeting, thrown open for testimony, one evening, it was touching to see him stand up and face his friends and neighbours, and to hear him say, "Well, friends; I don't know as I need say much. You all know me. I used to think that I was too big a fool to serve God, but He has saved my soul."

Later he gave me privately the story of his conversion, prominent in which was the fact that it was mainly owing to his uncle's mental derangement and death. Given in his own words it was, as follows:—"I knew that my uncle would be fetched away in the infirmary van, and that it would have to pass along the road by the side of which I was at work. I dreaded to hear those wheels, and the thought would keep running in my mind, 'I belong to the same family, and I may go out of my mind. My uncle was a good Christian man, and I am not. What would become of me if I were in his position?' This led him finally to accept Christ as his Saviour, he attached himself to the Bible-class, before mentioned, and my friend took him in hand, teaching him to read and write, and instructing him in the Scriptures.

He proved an apt pupil, and in a little time became one of a band of open-air preachers, growing so steadily in the Divine life that in a year or two he was universally beloved, and regarded as, perhaps, the most deeply-taught and spiritually-minded Christian amongst the humble village folk. So much was this the case that he was often in request to visit the sick and dying, and his prayers have many a time been refreshing to my own soul. Thus did God hear our cry, and make what looked like a great disaster "work together for good" to us and his own glory.

THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST.

The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

And ye will not come to Me, that ye might have life.

Jesus said: I am the Bread of Life he that cometh to Me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on Me shall never thirst.

I am the Door; by Me if any man enter in, he shall be saved.

I am the Good Shepherd; the Good Shepherd giveth his life for the sheep.

I am the Light of the World; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.

Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.

Forward Movement, Belfast.

By Rev. H. M. WILLIAMSON, D.D.

IT is a hopeful sign of increasing life and coming blessing that in all branches of the evangelical church feelings of discontent with the present state of life and work are spreading, and with this earnest longings for fuller consecration to God, and like compassion for the souls of the perishing around them.

No doubt it is right and proper that wherever a church exists the members should meet and edify one another, and under pastors and teachers seek to advance in knowledge and holiness. But surely this is not the end for which churches exist! The church is the home in which the children are nourished and taught, to prepare them for the business of spiritual life. The church is the drill-ground where the members are trained and taught how to war, how to use the shield and the sword of the Spirit. The church is the headquarters from which the soldiers go forth to fight the Lord's battles and win fights for Prince Immanuel. The church, in a word, exists to be a witness for God and a worker together with Him in the inking of that kingdom which is "righteous and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost."

But all this has, in a great measure, been forgotten by almost all the Evangelical churches. They were regarded by the members as hospitals in which the sick were to be tended and fed—as assemblies in which they met to have their religious ideas increased or modified, and their emotions stirred weekly by one that had a pleasant voice and could play skilfully on the harp. Think of a family which lived just to sleep and awake, to dress and dine, to discuss and hear and tell, to comfort each other or quarrel as the case might be, and so week in and week out fritter away life! Think of a church that exists and meets just to sing and pray and hear, to feel happy if possible, to retire and discuss and admire or condemn the preacher's words and ways; meanwhile, perhaps, a few of the members called "workers" make some effort to tell the good news from heaven to a few of the multitude sitting in darkness that might be felt, or perhaps the church, under some strong appeal, agree to appoint an ill-paid deputy to do work for them in the slums of the city. Such has been, in the past, the history of very many churches. Thank God! many are awaking to see the utter selfishness and sin of all this, and begin to understand what the great end of their gathering together is, and the import of that word of the Master, "to every man his work."

The great problem of the hour is the problem of our cities, becoming in their thousands, every day, more and more alienated from even nominal Christianity, from the form and much more from the power of godliness, and are settling down into the fetid depth of drunkenness, gambling, and impurity. The churches by their spiritual apathy and disobedience to Christ's commands have made the problem. If it is ever to be solved they must do it, as they solved it of whom it is said, "They went everywhere preaching the Word."

As in all large cities, so in Belfast, increasing in population so rapidly, there are increasing thousands who are alienated from all the churches, or are at least sunk in spiritual indifference. A year ago our Methodist brethren built a very commodious hall and began attractive services on true Gospel lines. The effort has been owned of God and has, by his grace, proved very successful. In a still more crowded part of the city Rev. Henry Montgomery has inaugurated a work of similar kind, but on a more comprehensive basis, including a large hall for preaching the Gospel, and for meetings of all kinds that are attractive and elevating, and fitted to withdraw men from the dram-shop and saloon and gambling dens, and from scenes and places which demoralise and destroy both body and soul. To this are to be added a Medical Mission on Gospel lines and also a Training Home for slum workers and missionaries for the home and foreign field. He has regularly preached the Gospel, assisted by his band of helpers, in the adjoining streets for many months, and with many tokens of the Divine blessing. Last week he, with his congregation, composed almost wholly of working people, held a monster meeting in our great hall, to inaugurate this important work. Many friends who thank God for the work done by him in this part and who sympathise with him in this effort were also present. It was a grand sight to see him, with one thousand of his people, begin this work in the name of the Lord and looking to Him for help and guidance. It inaugurates a new departure and a true forward movement. It is only by such kinds of work that our cities can be reached and salted and saved. The work is a very heavy one, and one from which any man with weaker faith and zeal would shrink. He needs the prayers and sympathy and support of every one who has sympathy with Christ, as he beheld the city and wept over, and who with the same eyes is looking at our cities and would gather in his lost ones. If I had the ear of any of the Lord's stewards, to whom is given much, and whose hand is toward such work in our cities, I would say, help this brother who has undertaken this heavy responsibility, in the exercise of a daring faith, that free from "serving tables" he may get to the work he loves, and in which he has been greatly blessed, pointing men to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world.

Woman's Medical Mission, Ceylon.

THE Misses Leitch, of Ceylon, with the cordial approval of the committee of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission and the missionaries of the American Board's Mission in Ceylon, have transferred the Woman's Medical Mission in Ceylon from the care of the former to the care of the American Board.

The Misses Leitch have succeeded in finding two fully-qualified lady doctors, who seem to be in every way suitable for the work in Ceylon. These ladies have made application to the American Board, and if appointed they will go to Ceylon in October next to be at the head of the woman's work.

The Misses Leitch, feeling that the three institutions in the interests of which they have worked so long (the Jaffna College and these two Medical Missions) are now fairly established, have consented for a time to act as honorary collectors for the American Board. With other friends of the Board, they have been engaged in an earnest effort to wipe out the debt of the Board, which amounted to £23,000. This debt has now been cleared off. Misses Leitch have inaugurated a "Forward Movement," and are endeavouring to raise £20,000 to prevent the threatened reductions in the work of the American Board, and to strengthen and advance the work now being carried on.

Berlin Church Life.—2.

BUT what of the Rationalistic preaching, which is so associated with German theology? We would advise those who are susceptible of cold to avoid those churches, or they may experience Burns's sensations in Lamington Kirk:

As could a wind as ever blew,
A could kirk, and in't but few;
As could a minister's e'er spak,
Ye'se a' be het ere I come back.

Over a hundred years ago, Reinhard said, "Whoever wishes a name for learning must declare some book of the Bible not genuine." Happily that day is past. The people tired of secular subjects in the pulpit. The heart craved food, as well as the intellect, so they hailed a new order of things. Not for two hundred years have there been so many earnest and eloquent preachers as now, and where the preaching is simple, evangelical, and clear; there the people flock to the fulfilment of Christ's words, "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me."

The Stadt Mission is a living witness to the renewal of church life, and this practical work again reacts on the pulpit. Christian work has ever proved the best safeguard against Rationalism and infidelity, for all workers know that nothing short of an Almighty God and risen Saviour can raise the sunken mass of humanity.

Let us spend a Sabbath at Johannes Tisch, the head-quarters of this Stadt Mission, with its hospiz, where strangers can board, its book depôt, its rooms, where work is provided for discharged prisoners, etc. Here, also, is the "Sprech Zimmer" of Pastor Stoecker, who, to the great joy of all concerned, directs the whole. By eight o'clock 120 homeless men, poorly clad, are seated round a long table in a great cellar below. A ray of brightness lights the care-worn faces as the voice of praise and prayer arises, and hot coffee and bread is handed round by voluntary workers. By nine the people are streaming in to hear Herr Stoecker, whose work is as much valued here as in the Dome, officers in glittering uniform, with their aristocratic wives, rubbing shoulders with the most miserably clad. Before ten the chimes of Heilig Kreuz remind one that another vast audience waits outside. The narrow street is filled with companies of Dragoons, Uhlans, etc., with their officers, ready to fill the vacant theatre. Some who leave Johannes Tisch adjourn to service at Heilig Kreuz, for the parish would need eight or ten churches to hold the people. By half-past eleven the troops march off, to make room for the third congregation—a thousand Sunday scholars, whom a pastor addresses.

Children rarely go to church with their parents, so the pretty pictures of family life seen in English churches are unknown in Germany. Instead, they have "religion" taught in the schools, and go to children's services. On this June evening of 1891 was the first anniversary of the Young Women's Christian Association at five. The guests sat round long tables in the garden beneath the fine old trees, now almost a thing of the past, since the great tabernacle for Herr Stoecker is so rapidly rising. Pastors Stoecker, Braan, etc., spoke, and the lovely singing, with pauses for tea, coffee, and conversation, kept up the interest till nine o'clock.

Innumerable sewing meetings, bazaars, and amateur concerts are held to help the funds of the Stadt Mission, and in everything connected with its welfare their Majesties take the deepest interest. Tickets for the concerts are sold at dinner parties and balls in the highest quarters, and whoever wishes to see the élite of Berlin society should try to secure one.

Providing churches for the people is an object very dear to the hearts of the Emperor and Empress, and this is not easy, the new Dome costing nearly £100,000. If the Stadt Mission sometimes steals a city minister, she often supplies them. Superintendent Krückeberg, of the new Friedens Kirche, in memory of the Emperor Frederick, came from there, and there could be no better training for working such a parish. In 1891 the foundation stone of the Luther Church was laid by the Emperor in the presence of a brilliant assembly, including the veteran Marshal Moltke—the last Saturday of his life.

Before finishing, one word about the Sabbath, which Coleridge calls so much "holy land rescued from the dens of oppression and vain luxury." Germany has not yet rescued that little bit of land, but is striving to do so. The shops are shut during church hours, and on Monday Berlin has to do without its daily paper, but private parties, and water and "land partien" are too common. However, many now long to have the Sabbath for rest, so that they may not begin their work jaded on Monday morning.

Mrs. Baeyertz at King's Cross.

PRAYER was recently asked in the THE CHRISTIAN for blessing on a mission about to be held by this evangelist at Vernon Baptist Chapel. Your readers will now be glad to offer praise with us for the manifest answers we have to record.

Mrs. Baeyertz's first evening address to a full house was on the "Unpardonable sin." It was a searching time to saints and sinners and drew many to the inquiry room at the close of the meeting. The interest deepened from the commencement. All the addresses were listened to with the most deep and rapt attention, more especially those on the "Lord's Second Coming" and the "Great White Throne."

The address most looked forward to, however, was that on the "Passover." A number of Christians from other churches were present and were profoundly interested. Towards the close the addresses merged into the text "Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us." Tears were in many eyes as the speaker urged the claims of Christ upon all the unsaved present, and several, we have reason to believe, found peace in believing at the close. By a strange coincidence the address took place at the hour the Jews themselves were celebrating the Passover, and the Paschal Moon streamed in at the windows during the service.

The afternoon meetings were much blessed to Christians as Mrs. Baeyertz shed new light on many passages of God's Word. On the last day of the mission there were meetings at twelve, three, and eight, all of which were seasons of much power. There were special meetings for men and also for women, and though the numbers attending were disappointing they were not without results. We have every reason to thank God for his servant's visit, and many prayers will follow her in her future work.

Dr. Pierson.

A MISSION for the deepening of spiritual life was conducted by Dr. Pierson in Brighton, commencing on Easter Sunday and closing on Thursday, April 9. On the Sunday morning Dr. Pierson preached to a crowded congregation in Rev. J. B. Figgis's church, and in the afternoon and evening addressed great gatherings in the Dome. During the week services in the afternoon were held in Mr. Figgis's church, and on Tuesday evening at the Connaught Institute, Lewes-road, while the Hove Town Hall was used on Wednesday and Thursday evenings.

There were large attendances at most of the services, and many testified to blessing received through the addresses. Dr. Pierson left Brighton for Lewes, where meetings were held, on Friday afternoon in the Wesleyan chapel, and in the evening in the Corn Exchange.

Bolivia.—This South American Republic, four and a-half times the size of the United Kingdom, has not one settled missionary to 2,500,000 people! A young man who hopes to go to Bolivia about July, would be glad to speak on this needy field to any who are interested. The Mission represented is the South American Evangelical Mission. Address, John Linton, Y.M.C.A., Mount Pleasant, Liverpool.

Marvels of Creation.

THE following is an extract from the Higher Science Lectures by Prebendary Reynolds on Wednesday, 1.15 p.m., at SS. Anne and Agnes, Gresham-street, E.C.:—Creation means making the universe in its vastness within the infinitude of space. It was made, for all known mechanical principles indicate that the worlds are not everlasting. Advanced science not only speaks of worlds as physical, but as evidently showing mental purpose.

The worlds, constituted as science says they are, will not exist for ever, and as they are not everlasting in the future they cannot have been everlasting in the past; there must have been a beginning. The work in and by the worlds is the fruit of force; the vehicle of force is matter. Force never rests, matter is ever moving. Force vibrates in every atom like a pulse-throb of some wonderful life; and every world as a mass moves every moment to occupy another portion of the infinite.

Every atom is of triple nature, in its substance and two poles of forces: one positive, one negative, which attract their opposites, repulse their likes, so link or keep apart. Thus creation is wrought. God's wisdom guides, his Almightyness works for further displays of holiness, love and splendour. "As for the earth, it was without form and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep...and God said, Let there be light." Light, sound, electricity, magnetism, with many other wonders, are the product of energy acting on swift vibratory forces, giving a wavy motion to the ether of space and to the atmosphere of worlds. "The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." Science agrees that light is by the eternal power or energy.

The sun and stars are not light creators, but lamps, or light bearers, constituted even as kings are constituted, by crowning. By some vast process, we believe, the light in space was concentrated in the suns and stars. The firmament is the vast expanse containing the atmosphere, and is the measureless outspread ether between star and star, the spangled expanse which we call "the starry robe of God." Upon earth elements were at war during many ages, until the dawn of life. The small and early forms of life, without eyes, without hands, built structures more beautiful than our palaces.....Nature is a voice from the Infinite calling to a feast of beauty for ever.

Revival in the North.

AT the memorial service for the late Richard Weaver, in Aldersgate-street on Monday, some cheering news of revival in the extreme North of Scotland were given by Mr. Badenoch, of Mildmay. From letters by a Scotch correspondent he quoted as follows:—

"There seems to be a general spiritual impression over the North of Scotland. In Wick hundreds of men and women, chiefly from eighteen to thirty years of age, have apparently been converted. In one east-coast fishing village the boats have been beached for six weeks, and as the evangelist passes along the street, one and another beckons to him to come and talk about soul concerns. One rural village reports some thirty cases of decision; this is a sample of others. In a country parish the crowds flocking to hear were so large that the windows had to be taken out of the church, that those outside might hear."

"From another district a minister reports:—'Numbers of young and old have been brought in, and the work has by no means ceased...The times have been to us all very wonderful, and the 126th Psalm alone can give adequate expression to our feelings. What God has wrought is not yet fully known. From many places a similar message comes. If the people of God were to arise and pray, Scotland might once more experience a great revival.'

"The blessing in Stornoway appears to have begun at the Communion season, when Rev. J. McIntyre (successor of Dr. Andrew Bonar, Glasgow) had gone to assist Mr. Martin, the F. C. minister. They are to have an extra communion there soon, at which Mr. McIntyre promised to assist."

Letters to the Editor.

"THE YOUNG MAN AND HIS MINISTER."

DEAR SIR,—In answer to your request in THE CHRISTIAN, for some practical hints for the breaking down of the reserve which exists between ministers and young men, may I be allowed to submit the following:—

1. Will ministers be more willing to prove to young men that they would welcome any confidence that may be placed in them, than they do at present? Would it not be wise for the minister to come into more direct and personal touch with young men than is generally the case? If it is not possible for the minister to invite the young men of his church individually to tea, could he not invite them for a little quiet conversation in his own study?

2. Can he assure the young men of absolute privacy in all their communications in confidence? Why do young men come to evangelists, often on the last day of a mission, and pour out their difficulties and doubts to those who are almost strangers to them? Is it not that they feel sure that there is no fear of hearing anything again of what they divulge?

I am persuaded that if ministers will convince young men of their interest on their behalf personally, of manly capabilities of meeting their case honestly, and of absolute secrecy of all that is divulged, young men will be more willing to place confidence in their ministers than at present:—Yours faithfully, C. B. JOLLIFFE.

HOW TO KEEP ELDER SCHOLARS.

DEAR SIR,—My attention was drawn to the following sentences in your "Notes and Comments" for March 26:—

If only the vexed problem could be solved of how to retain the elder scholars at the time when they are most in danger of falling into sinful and worldly ways, and therefore most in need of spiritual help, the religious future of the country would be safe. But this is a problem that is so far satisfactorily solved in very few schools in the country. Here is the direction to which Sunday-school reformers should direct their earnest attention.

Fifteen years ago, Rev. F. E. Clark, D.D., was perplexed by this very same problem over in the United States of America, and he set to work, determined with God's help to solve it. The result was that widespread and highly-valued society known as the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour.

Just at the age when a young man or woman begins to feel "too old," to use their own expression, to attend Sunday-school any longer, the Christian Endeavour Society, formed entirely of young people, steps in, and with a kind handshake and cordial invitation opens the door for a new-comer.

If that new-comer be already a Christian, he soon finds an ample sphere of work, where he can bestow his energies and use his talents in the Master's service, instead of having to fold his hands and sit idly watching the older people, feeling he cannot venture to offer his services where his seniors are at work. If he is halting between two opinions, he is still heartily welcomed, and in a true C.E. Society there will be members who will rest neither day nor night pleading with God, and with Divinely-bestowed wisdom outwitting the devil, until that undecided one is "out-and-out" on the Lord's side.

Again, if the new-comer is avowedly not even interested in religious matters, but simply comes "because a friend is a regular attendant," or "because it will please So-and-So," still he is received with open arms, and many petitions will ascend to the throne of grace for him, and many a friendly word and warning will be given, and many a time he will be shielded from Satan's devices. And all the time more members who are working and praying for his salvation will know that every meeting he attends, words are spoken that, guided by the Holy Spirit, may strike home, and lead him in penitence to seek his long-rejected Saviour.

Surely this society meets the need expressed in the words quoted above, and if adopted by every place of Christian worship, and heartily upheld by pastor and people, there would be an end to a great deal of the half-heartedness and absolute indifference so noticeable now among the young people of our land.

The society already exists in all Evangelical denominations, and has been found equally useful by all; and those interested in it can only hope that the day is not far distant when the Christian Endeavour Society will be considered as necessary a part of a "living" church as the Sunday-school.

—Yours truly,
Caergwile, Wrexham.

C. P. SHARMAN.

DEAR SIR,—Seeing in the CHRISTIAN of March 26, the difficulty of keeping Sunday scholars in the Sunday-schools mentioned, I think I can give a part solution of the difficulty. It is that teachers for the elder scholars are not always provided. My eldest brother did not leave school until he was twenty-one, and then because he had no teacher. You may say he ought to have been a teacher himself, but age does not give grace, and if they are Christians, all do not feel called to teach.—Yours sincerely,
A SUNDAY SCHOLAR.

"THE PARENT AND THE CHILD."

DEAR SIR,—I have read with gratitude the letter of "A Mother" in THE CHRISTIAN of March 26, believing that the importance of very early training in the walk and habits of thought of a Christian cannot be over-estimated. Want of reverence, want of reality, mean failure in the very essence of prayer, as St. James teaches us forcibly; while joylessness and constraint close the child-heart, and give no idea whatever of the loving and tender pity of Him who loved us "even as a Father" from the foundation of the world.

Concurring in the practical suggestions of the parent's letter, may I add it was my experience in the care of children that the element of praise seems almost left out in the early teaching of many young minds. Surely worship, pure and simple, should come first, and be followed by the asking for personal needs, whatever the age of the petitioner? My thoughts travel back to a summer when the sunshine of heaven seemed poured into our home in the birth of a first child. Morning and night, standing by the cot, I used to take tiny hands between my own, and repeat softly, but oh, how earnestly, "Thank God for the baby!" and long before that baby could speak I would find the little hands put up ready, and a gathering smile of participation in an act which was felt to be one of love, though not intellectually apprehended. And so on through childhood, the short morning and evening "prayer time" was always made a real thing—never long, never hurried, never perfunctory—each one bringing before our God the blessings and the needs, the sins and the sorrows, too, of the day in its day. And though that parent and child can no longer kneel side by side, as in earlier days, there comes to me a tender greeting this blessed Easter time from a far-off heathen land, and the young missionary and healer whom the Lord has graciously sent into his wide foreign field writes, "Somehow I cannot feel far away from you!"

Dear sister mothers, never be more true, more humble, or more large-hearted than when you are training your sons and daughters. Train for the highest possible end; and, forgive my adding, never tire them with religion; the forced plant droops. Give them the joy of a consistent walk in the spirit, and you may safely leave results in Divine keeping.

ANOTHER MOTHER.

"NOT AT HOME."

DEAR SIR,—Referring to a letter which appeared in your columns, under date April 2, from "A Perplexed One," there can surely be but one answer. Either the master or mistress, as the case may be, is in at the time, or they are not; if they are in, then to say they are not can be no other than an untruth. No custom of society can alter the fact, and therefore can never make such a false statement to be any other than false. I know very well that some defend the practice on the ground that it is a recognised way of saying they cannot be seen, and so they try to regard it as not wrong because it is so recognised; while to say the master or mistress was engaged would, in fashionable society, be regarded as an insult. Surely it is no less, but a far greater, insult to tell the caller that the person inquired for is not in when all the time it is probably known they are in.

I had a case in point not long since. Being in town, I called to see a lady whose family and friends I had known for many years. A servant answered the bell, and in reply to my inquiry said her mistress was not in. I looked her straight in the face, and saw at once the girl had lied. I said, "Will you kindly give your mistress my name?" She obeyed, and as soon as my name was known, there was a rush to receive and welcome me. But I was disgusted as well as pained, as every right-minded person must be, and I did not fail to speak my disapproval.

"A Perplexed One" will be justified on every ground of truth and rightness to refuse to act or speak in such a way, and should she lose her place as a consequence, she will be a gainer in moral rectitude, in the approval of God, and the 'good opinion of all honest-minded people.—Yours very heartily,

W. ROWTON-PARKER.

Crowle, Doncaster.

SIR,—I never do, and never would, tell a servant to say "not at home" unless it is literally true. At the same time, in a certain set, the phrase is so well understood to be only the conventional form of refusing admittance, that I do not consider my friends who tell their servants to use it are guilty of deception.

My grand objection to the formula is, the burden it lays on an unsophisticated servant's conscience, who does not comprehend its conventional meaning.—Yours truly,
April 8, 1896.

E. L. D.

SIR,—I would strongly advise "A Perplexed One" to stick to the truth, under all circumstances, and leave the rest to the Lord. Let her tell her mistress respectfully that she cannot; her mistress must respect her for it, and she would know at the same time that if her servant would tell a lie for her she could not trust her on other matters, and would assuredly feel that she would also tell a lie for herself against her mistress. I was in the same position myself when young, and never would do it. I always said that my employer could not be seen; I was not asked to tell the lie again. The Lord says, "Him that honoureth Me I will honour." For forty-two years I can testify to this, and I have never found the Lord to forsake me at any time.

OMEGA.

DEAR SIR,—Would not some confusion be avoided if callers would distinguish between the expressions "not in" and "not at home?" The former has only one meaning; the latter has a distinctively technical significance. A servant who says her mistress is "not in" when she is, tells a lie; but that she is "not at home" means she cannot see callers.—Yours truly,

M. F.

Grafton House, Acton.—Rev. Charles Fisher writes:—"We have received into our training college two students. The one, Marcus Daniel, from Kurdistan, is learning the English language and studying theology. On finishing his course of instruction he wishes to return to his own people to labour among them, also the Syrians and Armenians. The other, Mr. Joel K. Mooshey, a Nestorian from Tabriz, Persia, was educated at the Presbyterian Missionary College, Oroomiah, and has been a medical student twelve months. He wishes to obtain a medical qualification, and to return home to work as a medical missionary. Mr. Roger Jones, of the Missionary Bureau, 186, Aldersgate-street, has kindly consented to receive subscriptions in aid of these cases."

Lepers at Jerusalem.—The twenty-fourth report of the Leper Home, situated near the city terminus of the railway from Jaffa, states that Mr. and Mrs. Schubert still sustain the office of house-father and house-mother. It is now four years since they entered on their arduous duties, and they have several devoted helpers. The report says:—"The staff are always ready and willing to tend and nurse the lepers. It is wonderful how love can lighten even such tasks, and make their feet swift to spring to the aid of their patients. The latter would be very lovable if all their characters corresponded to the significations of their Arabic names. Among the men we find Muhammed, the beloved of God; Mustapha, the chosen of God; Saïcht, the fortunate; Salem, or Suleiman, the peaceful; Hussein, the beautiful. Most of the women have euphonious names, too. There are Namé, the good; Heluwe, the sweet; and Halime, the gentle. They are often grateful, but sometimes their patient, faithful nurses have to bear with them. They make kindly allowance for the peevishness of these poor sufferers, and look upward for the help and approval to the great Master whom they serve by tending his lepers." The treasurer of the Home is: Mr. H. O. Essex, The Square, Fairfield, near Manchester.

Missionary Prayer Union.

THE quarterly services in connection with the Missionary Prayer Union were held on Sunday, April 11, in the West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth. The sermons were preached in the morning by the pastor (G. Wainwright), and in the evening by Rev. J. Ossian Davies. The report for the quarter was given at the afternoon meeting by Mr. Feller, the secretary of the union. It showed that there are now nearly eighty members, and that the amount contributed for the last quarter was about £22. The pastor read a letter from Mr. Hale, the missionary supported by the Prayer Union. A few new names were added to the roll for the ensuing quarter.

The scheme inaugurated by Mr. Wainwright some four years ago has had ample opportunity for proving its worth. The results flowing from it may be summed up thus:—A great increase of missionary interest and prayerfulness—a steady income sufficient for the support of a missionary; and a quickened spiritual life, which has told favourably upon every other department of Christian service. We have frequently called attention to this scheme, and are still convinced that its general adoption would do very much towards removing the chronic state of debt and difficulty under which our missionary societies groan. A zealous missionary pastor, willing to urge this matter on his people, at the risk of diminishing his own income, will find the scheme work with success. There are many church members able and willing to pray daily, and to give daily to missionary work. A little organisation in order to provide a card of membership, and a box in which to place their daily gifts, are easily supplied. Will not our pastors try to get the scheme adopted? Let it be remembered that a gift of a halfpenny a day means over 15s. a year. Many could give this who are now doing nothing beyond putting their small amount into the annual missionary collection. To secure the daily gifts and prayers of these would not only be a blessing to them, but would relieve our societies of difficulty.

A Mission at Bridlington.

A MISSION was taken lately by Miss Haddon in the Sailors' Bethel at Bridlington Quay, which was brought to a close on Monday, March 23. Though this was the most convenient undenominational building, the mission had no special reference to the sailors, and was a general effort in which all denominations cordially united. Bible readings were held in the different buildings connected with the churches and chapels in the town. Rev. S. W. Darwin Fox, Vicar of Christ Church, and Rev. J. Scilley, Baptist minister, took considerable part in the mission. There was throughout a solemn sense of the Lord's presence; a considerable number of people were dealt with, and gave evidence of having accepted for themselves the salvation which is in Christ.

One case of interest may be specially mentioned. One evening a number of the workers remained behind to have two hours' prayer. A man who was passing saw the lights, and made his way into the room, apparently indifferent, and half asleep, as some thought, half drunk; but after a time he spoke, and asked for prayer, saying that he was too great a sinner to be saved. For more than an hour he was dealt with, and after that came to all the services up to the present. He seems to be quite a changed man.

Miss Haddon came in great physical weakness, being only able to go from her bed to the meetings; but before the ten days were over she was able to go home thanking God for complete restoration to health.

A Licensing Laws Information Bureau.

AN important Conference, attended by a large number of representative people interested in securing proper enforcement of the existing licensing and kindred laws, concluded at Nottingham on Saturday. Papers were read by delegates from Liverpool, Lancaster, Nottingham, Dover, Bedford, and other places, and it was decided, in order to give effect to a widely-expressed desire, to organise a Licensing Laws Information Bureau, with the object of collecting and disseminating information as to the best means of securing such enforcement. It was also resolved that the Bureau should be in Nottingham, and Dr. Paton was elected President, and Mr. Rothera, Borough Coroner for Nottingham, secretary and solicitor.

The Y.M.C.A.

MR. C. L. CLARKE, formerly of Hammersmith, has accepted the post of assistant-secretary at Tunbridge Wells.

Mr. A. Stewart has been appointed general secretary of the Melbourne Association. He has held a similar position in connection with the Bendigo and Geelong Associations.

The annual meeting of the Jaffa Y.M.C.A. has just been held. The Association is small, but is doing a good work. The anniversary gathering was well attended, and was in all other respects very successful.

At the fourth annual meeting of the Walthamstow Association there was a good attendance, and the report stated that during the past year interest in the work had been fully maintained. The Bible-classes had been well attended; the membership had increased.

The sixteenth annual gathering of the Eastbourne Association, which was largely attended, took place in the Town Hall, and was presided over by the Mayor, supported by clergy and ministers of the town. An excellent report was read by the secretary, showing a year of successful work among the young men of Eastbourne, and a telling address was delivered by Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston.

On Friday evening last, at Aldersgate-street, the final members' conversation for the season was held in the reading-room. The family of Mr. John Lorimer, of Highbury-terrace, assisted by friends, provided a most recherché entertainment, consisting of instrumental music of a very high order, interspersed with singing and recitations. Master Arthur Lorimer, a youthful genius, contributed in a very sweet and artless way some very pretty songs, which were rapturously applauded. The evening's enjoyment was very appropriately brought to a close by family worship.

The Easter conference of representatives from the Y.M.C. Associations in the North-Eastern District Union was held at Darlington on Tuesday week. At the devotional meeting an address was delivered by Rev. F. W. Mortimer, vicar of Darlington, followed by short reports of work. In the afternoon the conference was resumed with the newly-elected president (Mr. C. S. Wilson) in the chair. An address was given by Mr. R. F. Drury on "The Work of the Volunteer Students' Movement and the British College Christian Union," and a paper on "Muscular Christianity," read by Mr. Jas. Wilson, the hon. treasurer, Darlington.

The annual conference of the Midland District Union of Young Men's Christian Associations was held on Easter Monday in the large hall of the Burton Y.M.C.A., at which delegates were present from all parts of the Midlands. The proceedings opened with a devotional meeting conducted by Rev. H. F. Walker, of the Congregational Church, High-street, at which a short address was given by Rev. R. H. Stacey, M.A., curate of Stapenhill. An hour later there was a reception of delegates and visitors by Alderman Lowe, president of the local Association. The report of Mr. F. C. Bennett, the travelling secretary, showed that in 1891 the membership of the district was 3195; 1892, 2939; 1893, 3806; 1894, 3895; 1895, 3896; an increase in three years of 641. Mr. J. Herbert Allcroft was re-elected president of the district, and Mr. H. Whitwell, Birmingham, hon. sec. Two papers were presented to the conference, the first by Mr. Henry Armstrong, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, on "Individual Responsibility of Members and Associates," the second by Mr. Robert Burn, of London, on "What is the best rule of membership for the Y.M.C.A.?" In the evening a public meeting was held in the Gymnasium Hall. Addresses were delivered by Mr. Armstrong, Mr. Whitwell, Mr. Bennett, and others.

Requests for Prayer.—For a lantern mission in Helensburgh, N.B., commencing on the 19th inst. conducted by Wm. Thomson, jun.—For a special mission, April 19-26, by Mr. Charles Edwards, in Surrey-square Mission, Old Kent-road. For a fortnight's mission in Portadown, N. Ireland, by W. J. H. Brealey, commencing May 3.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.—A series of special meetings for seamen, commencing with Good Friday and ending on April 10, has been held at this Society's headquarters in St. George-street, E. In addition to special evangelistic services, in which several Christian seamen assisted, there have been limelight illustrations of the late Mr. Spurgeon's "John Ploughman's Talk" by Rev. G. J. Hill; and the sacred cantata, "Under the Palms," by a choir of fifty voices. These gatherings have been well attended and greatly appreciated by the sailors, and have resulted in a number of pledges, and some conversions. Sailors' teas and special Easter gatherings have also been held at the Society's Sailors' Home at Fowey, Cornwall, Sailors' Rests at Whitehaven and Maryport, and elsewhere.

The Y.W.C.A.

A GYMNASTIC display was lately given by the members of the Finsbury Institute.

The Oxford Association report steady work, good results, and urge the need for a larger boarding-house.

On the 21st ult., the Woodbridge branch held a social evening, at which Mrs. Ratcliffe gave the address.

The New York Y.W.C.A. is appealing for £6000, to be known as the Anniversary Fund, to extend its work among the young women of the city.

At the annual social meeting of the Prestonpans Institute, Rev. P. R. Mackay took the chair, and Mrs. Thomson and Mr. Prentice gave addresses.

Miss Bartlett, who has for some years been matron of the Stanhope House Home, and secretary of the Blandford Y.W.C.A., was presented, on her retiring from her post, with a handsome testimonial.

The members of the Dundee Y.W.C.A. Bible-classes held their annual soirée on the 7th inst. Three hundred were present, presided over by Mr. Andrew Stephen, who gave a short address.

The Galashiels branch brought its session to a close with a social meeting in the Good Templars' Hall, which proved a great success. Eight of the members received badges for six years' attendances.

The annual social meeting of the Oban Y.W.C.A. was held on the 2nd inst. The hall was well attended. Mrs. Somerville occupied the chair. Lady Victoria Campbell gave a helpful and stimulating address.

The annual missionary meeting of the Rothesay Y.W.C.A. was held on the 2nd inst.; Rev. W. Galbraith presiding. Miss Alexander and Miss Crowther, who are receiving medical training in Edinburgh University, gave addresses.

The Free Church Y.W.C.A., Dufftown, held its annual social meeting the other evening; Rev. J. Russell presiding. The report showed an increase during the year in the number of members. Miss Ferguson of Kilmundy gave an interesting address.

The Y.W.C.A. Holiday Home, formed some years ago at Colwyn Bay, for the benefit of those engaged in Christian work, or in houses of business, has given place to a larger and more convenient house. Full particulars may be had from Miss Marston, Abergele-road, Colwyn Bay.

The second anniversary of the Y.W.C.A., Shaftesbury House, Burton-on-Trent, was celebrated by meetings at the Home on Tuesday, April 7. The report shows an increase in membership, attendances at Bible-classes well sustained, and many different agencies at work to help forward home and foreign missions. The present building, which was opened in April, 1894, is now free from debt. Colonel Seton Churchill spoke very earnestly on the spiritual aspect of the work. The evening meeting was presided over by the president, Mrs. Wardle, a very practical, helpful address being given by Mrs. Wodehouse.

Christian Endeavour.

THERE are now fifteen C.E. societies in and around Oxford.

The Southport and District Convention held an enthusiastic convention on Good Friday. Good progress was reported in many directions.

At the first C.E. Convention in Laos it transpired that nine of the missionaries present were supported by Endeavourers in England or America.

The Liverpool and District Union has a missionary committee of five ladies, whose efforts have resulted in many of the societies connected with the Union taking up foreign missions. Amongst these seven Baptist societies are now supporting Mr. C. J. Dodds, a missionary on the Congo.

A united meeting of the Undenominational and Presbyterian societies of Christian Endeavour was held in Caergwile on Friday, April 10. Rev. Owen Lloyd took the chair, and the meeting was addressed by Rev. John Roberts, of Chester, who spoke of the great good done by the Christian Endeavour Society all over the world. At the close of the meeting a copy of "The Christian Year" was presented by the Presbyterian Society to Miss Sharman, who is about to leave the village and go into training for the foreign field. The Undenominational Society had, at a previous meeting, presented her with a gold badge and photographic group of their members.

The Northfield Training School, having for its object the fitting of Christian women for successful and effective work in all forms of Christian service, closed its sixth year on March 26. Of the graduates two are ordained pastors of churches, seven are at work in foreign fields, six are preparing for foreign mission work, fifty are at work in home mission fields, and fifty more are increasing their preparation in other institutions.

Irish Notes.

DURING the past year the Hibernian Bible Society has granted for free distribution in Ireland 26,000 copies of the Bible, in whole or in part; and of these more than one third have been given to the various colportage societies. The total issue for the same period was over 41,000 copies.

The annual conference of the Irish Women's Temperance Union was held in Cork on April 7 and 8. There was a large attendance of delegates and other friends of the union, each of the four provinces of Ireland being represented. The secretary's and treasurer's report showed encouraging progress in the work of the union, twelve new branches having been added during this year.

The anniversaries of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society have been in progress throughout Ireland during the week. The deputation consisted of Revs. Henry Haigh, of the Mysore; T. A. Whitmore, of Madras; A. A. Thomas, of Negapatam; J. A. Goodman, of Manchester; F. W. Gostick, of Megapatam; E. Mortimer, of Bombay; and A. Triggs, of Ceylon. With these were united several Irish ministers; about 200 centres were visited. The meetings generally were largely attended and very successful.

Scottish Notes.

Mrs. MOUNTFORD has been delivering to large audiences a series of illustrated lectures in the Synod Hall, Edinburgh, on life in the Holy Land.

A memorial is being signed in Edinburgh to the magistrates and town council protesting against the Sabbath desecration involved in using the public parks for games on the Lord's Day.

The Baptist Union of Scotland has had its annual sessions at Dundee. The discussions were on present-day questions, and were vigorously sustained. Meetings were held for advocating temperance and missionary effort.

City Total Abstainers' Union.

THE eighteenth annual meeting of this Union was held on Friday evening, at the rooms of the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street. Mr. G. A. Hutchison was in the chair, supported by Mr. T. P. Whitaker, M.P., Mr. J. H. Raper, and other temperance advocates. At intervals musical selections were given by the Kingsdown Orphanage Choir. Mr. F. G. Toller gave some extracts from the report, which showed that additional warehouses in the City and outlying districts had been visited, meetings held in them, and occasional lectures given dealing with the chemistry of alcohol. The practice of introducing temperance drinks among the young people was slowly spreading. The chairman commented upon that gratifying fact, and referred to the time when the late Mr. Samuel Morley called together a private meeting of the heads of City firms to see what could be done towards breaking down the drinking habits that permeated the commercial life of the city in former times. An address by Mr. Whitaker on the commercial aspect of the temperance question followed.

Nestorian Orphanages.—Deacon Abraham writes from Oroomiah, Persia:—"With regard to our orphanages we have at present only thirty-five in the homes, of whom twelve are girls. We believe they are being drawn nearer to God; they behave much better, and love to join together in prayer to Him. We need very much the prayers of all Christian people for our work, as well as support by their contributions."

The Thorne Evangelistic Mission held its annual meeting on Friday evening, the 10th, at Exeter Hall. Sir G. Williams, the president, occupied the chair. Mr. Thorne gave an encouraging report of his work in the past year. The meeting was addressed by Rev. E. H. Pearce, Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., Rev. Thos. Hanger, Messrs. Herbert W. Taylor, J.P., and O. G. Poupard. A deficit in the year's income was very nearly defrayed, mainly by the liberality of the president.

Lamb and Flag Ragged Schools and Mission.—For fifty-two years this interesting work in Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, has been carried on for the evangelisation of a very needy community. The neighbourhood is one of the poorest in London, and the operations of the mission extend to young and old. The latest report states that the Gospel services on Sunday are attended by some 800 people, and the weekly mothers' meeting by 150. The mission performs a ministry of mercy in various ways. Communications respecting the work should be addressed to Mr. George Kirk, 1A, Paternoster-row.

Temperance Notes.

REV. L. M. ISITT is about to return to New Zealand after a nine months' visit to England.

It is stated that the Protestant orphans of Meath, Cork, Derry, Killaloe, and Down are total abstainers.

The drink bill of the members of the House of Commons, according to the latest returns, amounted to £6,500 in five months.

The local vestry has called upon the authorities to suppress the night clubs and disorderly houses in Soho, which are mostly kept by foreigners.

Mr. Chamberlain has under consideration a draft liquor law which prohibits the sale of intoxicants to the natives in Matabeleland and Mashonaland.

The National Temperance Federation has reaffirmed its adhesion to the Direct Popular Veto and its opposition to compensation and municipal licensing.

During the recent troubles in Johannesburg, one of the first acts of the officials was to close every saloon, compensate the owners for their stock, and then destroy the liquor by pouring it on the ground.

The London diocesan branch of the C.E.T.S., reports a membership of 30,000. Every London police-court, except the Mansion House, is now provided with a missionary. There is a Men's Home at Ealing, a Boys' Home at Bethnal-green, and a home for female inebriates.

The West London Open-air Temperance Mission held its anniversary meetings on Good Friday in Ladbroke-grove Chapel. In the afternoon a conference of workers discussed the plan of future work, after which about 200 sat down to tea. In the evening solos were given and short addresses delivered by veterans of the temperance cause.

Mrs. J. Duff Hewett, of Wellington, New Zealand, superintendent of the Women's Christian Temperance Union work among Maoris, reports progress in work among the aborigines. The Maori king, successor to Tawhiao, is in sympathy with the English of New Zealand and the temperance party, and has expressed pleasure at the fact that English women are showing an interest in their Maori sisters.

The agitation carried on by Mr. E. Tennyson Smith for the exclusion of liquor traffickers from membership and office in the Church has led to the formation of a new society called the "Temperance Ironsides"; its object being to bind Christian men and women together for the purification of the churches. A large number of members have already joined. It is Mr. Tennyson Smith's intention to form branches all over the country.

The Good Templar Grand Lodge held last week its twenty-seventh annual session in Southport, under the presidency of Councillor Malins. The delegates, drawn from all parts of England, exceed 600. The report showed that the adult membership is now 52,664, making, with the juniors, over 100,000 members. A reception was given to deputations from kindred societies. A public demonstration was held, under the presidency of the Mayor of Southport.

The law closing all drinking saloons in New York on Sunday was fully enforced for the first time last week. Under its provisions no restaurant-keeper is allowed to serve wine with dinner, and every saloon and restaurant, except hotels, is required to close from Saturday midnight until five o'clock on Monday morning. In private clubs it is forbidden that drink shall be served to members on Sundays, either with or without meals. A person is even forbidden to offer liquor in his own house to visitors.

The Bishop of London, in a letter to the clergy urging the observance of Temperance Sunday throughout his diocese on the 19th instant, wrote that the Church Society was now in a position in which it was likely to have more influence on legislation than ever before. Other associations for the same object were drawing nearer to them. There was no object which stirred the conscience of the masses so deeply and so immediately as that of temperance. The bishop closes by inviting the clergy to aid in this "great Christian battle."

The Central Association for Stopping the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday has issued a letter stating that the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday Bill is down for second reading on Wednesday, May 6. Never before has there been such a favourable opportunity of bringing the Bill before the House and getting it read a second time. The great majority of those who would be affected by a Sunday closing law have by means of petitions, canvasses of householders, public meetings, etc., expressed themselves in favour of an imperial measure of Sunday closing for the whole of England. If members of Parliament could only have this fact impressed upon them many votes would be won for the second reading. It is hoped that friends will write to their own M.P. (addressing the letter to him at the House of Commons, London, S.W.), urging him to vote for the Sunday Closing Bill on May 6,

April 26.

THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS.—Luke xvi. 19-31.

GOLDEN TEXT (verse 13).

THE Pharisees also, who were covetous" (14); it is this statement, following the warning of the Golden Text, that indicates the purpose of this parable. It was designed to correct the error of the Pharisees, who regarded their worldly prosperity as a sign of God's special favour; and to forewarn them of the doom to which their selfishness, and greed, and neglect of others would lead.

Explanation and application may be combined. The parable divides itself into two parts, one giving the contrast in this life; the other, the significant contrast beyond the grave.

I. In this life two persons are presented to us, in whom the two extremes of worldly prosperity and of deepest poverty and wretchedness appear. The contrast is first seen in their life (19-21), then in their death (22). Two things mark the magnificence of the rich man; first, his dress, and, secondly, his sumptuous living. "Purple" refers to the outer robe, often called the cloak. "Fine linen" refers to the under garment, or tunic. It was made from the Egyptian byssus, a flax which grew on the banks of the Nile. A garment of this material was sometimes sold for twice its weight in gold. "Dives" is simply the Latin word for rich man.

The poor man is named (20). "Lazarus" means God helps. By the unusual course of giving a name to a person mentioned in a parable, Jesus designs to teach us something concerning the character of the man. The "gate" (20) was at the entrance to the courts. The dogs licking his sores (21), is sometimes mentioned as an alleviation of his sufferings; it was more probably an aggravation of his misery.

The contrast extends also to the death of these two (22). Nothing is said of the funeral of the poor man. The body which no one owned, and no one claimed, was probably thrown into the ditch. The rich man "was buried," no doubt with a funeral befitting the magnificence of his life.

But there is a more important matter than earthly position. It is "the blessing of God which maketh rich, and addeth no sorrow therewith"; while riches may lead to men being "drowned in destruction and perdition" (1 Tim. vi. 9, 10). What is their character before God? Better be a saint in rags than a lost sinner living in greatest outward splendour.

II. The scene in the other world reverses the position of the two men. The torment of the rich man was not the result of his riches; nor the exaltation of Lazarus the result of his poverty. The sin is not in being rich, but in the abuse of riches. Neither is their proof of grace in being poor. Let this be made clear.

The figures used to represent the other world are not to be pressed too literally. Yet it is safe to say that they represent realities, and that no words are put into the lips of either the rich man or Abraham, which do not express a truth concerning the experience beyond the grave.

"Hell" (23), or Hades, is the unseen world of the dead, and includes Paradise, where Lazarus was seen in the place of honour with Abraham (22), (compare John xiii. 23), and Gehenna, where the torment of the rich man immediately began. "Father Abraham" (24), by this our Lord rebukes the Jews (see Matt. iii. 9). "Remember" (25), the faculty of memory seems to be perpetuated in the other world. "Sorrow's crown of sorrow is remembering happier things." "Thy good things," the good things which he had valued, and for which he had lived. (Recall Bunyan's picture of Passion and Patience.) "Gulf" (26). Would our Lord have used such a term if there had been any hope beyond the grave?

The important lesson of the parable is suggested by the later conversation (27-31). The words of the rich man (30) teach that the reason for entering into that place of torment for him and for his five brethren was not that they were rich, but that they did not "repent." The opinion put into the lips of the rich man (30) was evidently intended to rebuke the craving for extraordinary signs from heaven. Does it also suggest that even among the lost there are those who seek to excuse themselves? "If only such a miracle had been performed I would have repented." How mistaken was the opinion (31)! Not long after this, one did rise from the dead, bearing the very name of this poor man—did the Pharisees then believe? (See John xii. 10, 11.) Later still, Jesus rose from the dead—did they then believe? Men live and die unsaved, not for want of a better or more startling testimony, but from an unwillingness to believe.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE Chancellor of the Exchequer tells this year again the old story of extravagance and waste attendant on prosperity. Enormous quantities of wine drunk or used by successful business men, an enormous increase in the sale of beer, and an astounding increase in the use of tobacco, especially of cigarettes by boys. Sir M. Hicks-Beach believes that as much as a million pounds' worth of cigar and cigarette ends is thrown away annually; that is to say, the nation throws into the gutter, in this shape alone, four-fifths of the whole amount that is spent upon foreign missions. The refuse of extravagance, if added to our Christian treasury, would make us rich indeed. As for the millions spent on war material, one can hardly imagine such a sum ever being given to promote the coming of peace and goodwill.

Prosperity is as searching a touchstone as adversity to the reality of men's religious faith. Uzziah was "marvellously helped till he was strong, but when he was strong his heart was lifted up to his destruction." Some men's principles suffer eclipse on the way to success; the failure in other cases is not apparent till the goal is reached. Self-sufficiency and pride; hardness of heart against those less fortunate in the struggle of life; narrow class sympathies; a love of ease and indulgence; absorption in the comforts and thronging interests of this life to the exclusion of all thought of the other—these are a few of the pitfalls of success. In view of the rapidly-increasing prosperity of the country just now, as revealed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, it is time to bear these facts in mind. Every great nation that has come to grief in the past, has fallen a victim to luxury and ease. The worst periods of public morals in this country have mainly coincided with great waves of prosperity. It is only by the spread of spiritual religion right through the community that we shall escape the same fate.

So many hard and untrue things are said of missionaries, and sometimes by those who have sat at their tables and enjoyed their hospitality, that it is peculiarly refreshing to hear a traveller who tells a different story. Captain Younghusband, of the Indian Staff Corps, who has been travelling in Manchuria and other far-away places, testifies in his book, "The Heart of a Continent" (John Murray), that in North Manchuria he came upon a village which was entirely Christian. At the service on the Sunday he and his companion were much struck by "the really sincere and devout character of the converts." Having seen the noble men he has met with in the far interior of China, and realised the sacrifices they have made, he thinks that the hearts of all true Englishmen, and of all true Christian nations, "ought to go out to encouraging and helping those who have given up everything in this life to do good to others." We suspect that the nature of the reports given of missionaries and their work depends very much upon the nature of the reporter.

Every great truth is separated by only a short distance from a great error. Even the golden rule may be so handled as to become a fallacy. "Do to others as ye would have others do unto you" is only true when our ideas as to what we would have others do to us are right. A man seeing a thief steal, might let him go scot free, simply because he would like to be set free himself in similar circumstances. Literally this would be fulfilling the golden rule; in reality it would be a shocking violation of it. The law as uttered by our Lord must be taken in relation to his whole teaching. It presupposes that we are under the dominance of Christian principles and ideals already, and is then a working rule for their application. Through oblivion of this fact, there is no Christian precept more often misquoted or wrongly applied.

In dealing with the law of offences, our Lord puts the responsibility of making first advances towards reconciliation on the aggrieved party. There is a beautiful significance in this rule, though it is seldom acted upon by Christian people. If, as is often the case, each party consider himself the injured one, and the other the aggressor, either may be equally ready to move for an adjustment. If it were otherwise, each might hesitate to advance if such a step were an implied acknowledgment that he had been in the wrong; while, however, the offended person knows of his grievance, the one who has given offence may have done so unconsciously, or may be unaware of its extent, or may have entirely forgotten the circumstance. For these and for other deeper reasons, Jesus says, "If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault, between thee and him alone." If this were done systematically by all who profess to follow our Master, as it is done by a few, some deep resentments would be easily removed, many broken friendships would be quickly renewed, and the majority of differences between friends prevented. The practical wisdom of this precept of Jesus Christ is only equalled by its ideal justice.

The essence of religion from the human side is a sense of spiritual need. The animal, when well fed, and all its instincts are satisfied, is a creature for the time without a want. Because man is never satisfied, and has needs deeper than any earthly source of satisfaction can reach, he craves for God; in other words, he is religious. The first result of contact with the Divine Spirit is that this sense of need is quickened and deepened. Before we can receive the great gift, our capacity for it must be enlarged. The Gospel is the answer to this capacity for God. Its law is, "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." Both the hunger and thirst, and the banquet that is provided for them, are the work and gift of Christ. He awakens the cry, "Thou Son of David, have mercy upon me," and He grants the boon, "Thy faith hath made thee whole."

The decrease in church membership of the Wesleyan Methodist Church is a fact which all must lament. Explanations may be given of a satisfactory kind as relating to one district or another, but will they cover the whole case? Mining depression and emigration may account for the decrease in the West of England, but these causes do not touch Yorkshire, for instance, where the decrease has been going on for some years. It has been said that one reason may be found in a growing depreciation of the "class meeting." These gatherings necessarily depend largely upon the spirituality of the leader, as a man taught of the Spirit, and willing himself to be nothing that He may be all and in all. Where such is the case the meeting will not wane either in numbers or interest.

As a counterbalance there has been the success of the great mission centres, but even allowing for this, the total decrease of adult members is 2275, and of junior members 774. One fact perhaps to be remembered is, that England is one of the hardest countries in the world to evangelise, and increase of wealth and a growing love of comfort and pleasure make it harder every year. All the more need therefore to seek continually Divine grace. "Our sufficiency is of God."

The Duke of Argyll's new book on the "Philosophy of Belief" completes the series of works which began with the "Reign of Law" in 1866, and was continued in the "Unity of Nature," published in 1884. In the first he dealt with the question, How far the constitution of nature reveals a universal Mind and Will. In the second, dealing with the same question from a different point of view, he inquired into the competency of our human faculties to give us a true knowledge of the Universe. The third applies the conclusions arrived at in the two previous works "to an examination of the relation in which the great conception of Natural Law, when properly understood, stands to religion in general, and to Christian Theology in particular." There is thus a clear line of argument running through works separated by so many years of thought. The Duke, it is well known, occupies substantially an Evangelical position in his general conclusions. In the opinion of some critics, this final work stands first for freshness and vigour of thought, which is remarkable in view of the fact that he is now seventy-three years of age. It is, however, considerably longer and more difficult than its predecessors, which will militate against its general popularity.

In an interesting preface, the gifted author gives an autobiographical sketch of his religious development. His early training was entirely simple and uncontroversial, in connection with the usual teaching of the Established Church of Scotland. He awoke, however, to individual interest in religion, in the midst of a fierce controversy, which was a part of the general movement that finally ended in the disruption—that circling round the theological opinions of Dr. McLeod Campbell. This greatly stimulated his speculative reason, and made him precociously sensitive to the religious difficulties that usually beset older people. Meanwhile, the physical sciences had begun their modern development. These two facts gave the Duke's mind its bent, and his life has been engaged more or less continuously in dealing with and solving the relations between these departments of thought. He escaped the great wave of materialism which has swept over the world of science, largely, he thinks, through having never had a University training. But he has grappled earnestly with great problems, and this book brings to a fitting conclusion a mental history full of a devout and reverent search for truth.

"Candour in Biography" is a subject well handled by Mr. Wilfrid Ward in The New Review, his chief object being to determine how the faults and virtues of a character are to be so balanced in the story of his life as to give the true impression of what he was. As one line in an otherwise excellent likeness may give a sinister expression, and thus spoil the whole picture, so one quality in a character may be put out of due relation and proportion to the rest, and give a wrong idea of the man. A biography is a picture, not a collection of documents; it is a narrative illustrated by documents; and it is pre-supposed that the writer has gone through the documents, and sifted them, and kept only the really necessary portions for his purposes. Mr. Ward thinks that it is juster to the dead that the selection and description should be carried out on the principle of illustrating good qualities at the cost of giving insufficient space to bad, than of illustrating faults in such lengthy detail as to leave little space for anything else. Custom seems to be on that side. It should be remembered that the most honest attempt to reproduce a man in a book is only an attempt; it is not the man.

The Continent is ringing with the sad conclusion of the duel between Herr Kotze and Count Schröder at Berlin, which cost the latter his life. The conditions of the duel made it a mutual attempt at murder, for the combatants stood at only ten paces distant, and agreed to exchange shots till one of them was hors de combat. The tragic affair has deeply moved German Court circles, and the Court Chaplain has delivered a vigorous denunciation of the custom of duelling, which is a relic of mediæval methods in a state of society non-existent now. The death of a prominent member of the Emperor's personal following may hasten the abolition of the shameful practice. Stringent laws against it are already in existence, but in the atmosphere of German militarism they are practically inoperative. The Emperor alone has the power to crush duelling. Whether he is strong enough and wise enough to do so remains to be seen. Such customs are a disgrace to civilisation, to say nothing of Christianity.

There are some other mediæval superstitions that die hard. In spite of the spread of Protestantism, and education, and scientific habits of thought, the era of Romish pilgrimages does not seem to be over. A large party of the maimed and miserable has just passed through Paris on its way to the waters of the Pyrenean "miracle place." Roman Catholicism knows nothing of holding the true balance between faith and reason, and so either drives men into absolute unbelief, or chains them in the paralysing grip of spiritual slavery. It is only with an open Bible and an emancipated conscience that the human mind can come to its true healthy growth. "The truth shall make you free."

Might not Christians make more use of the secular press? If a man has a disagreeable experience of any kind, or if he has a crotchet to ventilate, he writes to the newspapers and it gets inserted. But thoughtful and able men, who can write a letter well, and concisely expressed, might thus communicate truths vital to the souls of men; and wise editors would be glad of copy superior in form and matter to the twaddle or fallacy which not infrequently occupies their correspondence columns.

Dr. Walmsley, Medical Superintendent of the Metropolitan District Idiot Asylum, has spoken some weighty words on the close relation between alcoholism and insanity. He says, speaking with the authority of an expert, that "our asylums scream with alcohol." Of acquired and inherited insanity, probably 75 per cent. is due to alcoholism. The brain-tissue is peculiarly susceptible to the poisonous and disorganising action of this drug, reducing the whole man from a higher to a lower plane of existence, sadly affecting the next generation, and unfitting them mentally, morally, and physically for the struggle of life. He pleads for the strenuous application and enforcing of measures for the reformation of drunkards, and the "limitation of the injuries they entail on themselves, on their families, and on generations yet unborn." There is clear need for this. There is still more need for the simple preventive measure of educating the community in the principles of voluntary abstinence.

A correspondent writes:—

With reference to a "Note" in your issue of April 9th regarding the recently appointed Licensing Commission, you take an unnecessarily gloomy view of the probable usefulness of the Commission. Both from the circumstances attending its initiation and from the constitution of its members it may be hoped that its intention and results will prove distinctly helpful to the cause of temperance. But its deliberations and recommendations will no doubt largely depend upon how far the temperance party of England are prepared to help in moulding and shaping its proceedings. If the friends of temperance are sincere, and thoroughly earnest to see something practical done in the direction of temperance, for the good of the people, they must be prepared cordially to co-operate and throw in their hearty sympathy and support.

The spread of gambling is often spoken of, but generally in such loose terms as to leave a vague impression on the mind; such vagueness is very effectually cleared away by the statistics of one case of a gambler convicted at the Liverpool Police-court. The offender was a very young man who had been seen by the police to make bets in the dinner hour of four days with as many as 374 men, 25 women, 83 boys, and 42 girls, total 524 persons. If that one place, worked by one man, contains so much of the gambling habit, it is alarming to think of the multiplication of it by hundreds and thousands of places. This at least is plain, that however good it may be to increase the wages and the purchasing power of the people, it is infinitely more important to teach them that they are responsible to God for the use of every penny they possess. Immorality is a worse plague than poverty.

The Westminster Gazette keeps up its fight for the platelayers, and will, no doubt, win sooner or later. The exposure of these men, in mending railways that are used by trains of all sorts, is something terrible to think of.

Especially is their peril great in tunnels which are filled with smoke and steam. How many people would keep their nerve for a week if they had to earn their bread on a road a few feet wide, crossed on both sides at short intervals by swift trains, and no look-out-man to warn them of the trains' approach? To the perils of the sea and of the mine must be added those of the railway, but whereas the two former often defy prudence and skill, the latter only require a look-out to each gang of platelayers. Humanity demands him.

A Tale Often Told.

FAR west in the co. of Kerry, Ireland, in her lowly hillside cabin, a poor woman lay, as she thought, dying. The setting sun shed its rays over the great side ocean beyond, here and there dotted with fishermen's crafts plying their nets and lines. The long ground-swells as they dashed through the caves of the great cliffs which line our western coasts, and rolled along the rocky beach, sounded inland in the calm of the evening like the roll of distant thunder.

The poor woman lay tossing and moaning on her "settle" bed by the peat fire; her little children were huddled together over the hearth crying, and her husband, who was a workman, sat at a table smoking his pipe, and looking straight before him, with the fixed gaze of one in great inward sorrow. Now and then some "neighbour" would call to make inquiries for the sick woman, and perhaps take a last farewell.

One of the sons of the gentleman in whose employment her husband was, who was returning to school the next day, came to see her and say good-bye. As she watched him through the open door going down the farm road to his father's house, she burst into tears at the thought that she "should never see Master W—— again," and fainted away. At this juncture two or three women came in, and finding her much worse, began to discuss audibly the funeral arrangements, "candles," etc., and to condescend with the children on their motherless condition (her husband had gone out). Suddenly after having tried to soothe the poor woman, they all commenced to weep bitterly, as if in an agony of grief. They had been striving to comfort her, but their springs of comfort were earthly, and they failed at this hour.

Wonderful to say, the poor woman recovered, and when her mistress asked her afterwards why those women were crying, and making her so much worse, she replied, "O ma'am, it was not death we were afraid of, but none of us knew where we were going to afterwards!"

This is a tale that is often told. Here, in these lovely hills, with their wind-blown heather, and the fresh ocean breeze, only man is dark and sorrowful—for they know not that Jesus said He went "to prepare a place for us," and that his precious blood has bought eternal life for the sinner. Should we not pray that God would break down the wall of prejudice to his own truth that has stood these centuries, and that his Word may have free course and be glorified, among these sorrowing, death-stricken ones, and that speedily, for Jesus' sake?

JOHN WILFRID M'CLURE.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor intends, we are informed, leaving China on May 2, and is expected home about the middle of June.

Woolwich.—Mr. E. P. Telford has concluded a twelve days' mission in connection with Parson's Hill Church. Although the men at the Arsenal have been working overtime, the congregations have been large and the interest great. Much power has been present, and the after meetings have been busy times of soul-winning. Many evidences are forthcoming of abundant result in the conversion of sinners.

The Soul's Garden.

My son, attend to my words; incline thine ears unto my sayings.....Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life.

OUR heart is the nearest and most valuable plot of ground we have. It may be always under our attention, can always be improved, and yields the surest and richest returns. The cultivation of the mind is important, in these days absolutely necessary; but the cultivation of the heart far exceeds it in worth both for this world and another. It is better to be pure in heart, loving, patient, thoughtful for others, cheerful, kind, than to be talented and highly educated.

Be good, sweet maid,
And let who will be clever.

In his matter of fact way Benjamin Franklin pointed out that the strongest thing about a man is his character. We look to what he is, as we believe him to be, not to what he says, or professes, or does. What he is measures his influence and determines his place. And what he is, is just the state of his heart. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he."

Our heart should be a garden of the Lord, in which He, our Beloved, delights to walk and to rest; it should be filled with all the flowers and fruits of the Spirit; it should have quiet resting-places where we hide away from the storms and troubles of life, and hold converse with our Saviour; it should have pools of purity, deep and clear, reflecting the brightness of heaven and the image of God; it should have wells of pity and compassion whose waters never fail; it should be free from every noxious weed and from every hurtful thing; the toads of jealousy, the vipers of hate, and the crawling snails of uncleanness should not be found there. In it there should be the pleasant music of joy and thanksgiving. The radiance of paradise should ever shine upon it.

In a quaint little picture called "The Soul's Garden," there is a figure of a lady walking in a garden and playing to herself the meanwhile some soft melody on an instrument; on every side are stately white lilies, the images of her own snowy whiteness; on the pathway lie the spade for cultivation and the watering-pot to refresh any fading plant. Happy is he who, like that lady, can turn into his own heart, as into a garden, for refreshment and quietness, because he keeps it so diligently from every evil thing, that he is not ashamed of it, nor afraid to meet God in it.

"My son, keep thy heart with all diligence." To do that, will not entail the neglect of anything else. To have a pure heart will be to have the issues of life safe. To have a pure heart will be to have a clear head, a strong will, a vigorous energy, a penetrating influence. To have a pure heart will be to have a pure life and a pure character.

Yes, "a pure character," as seen by the eye of God, but not necessarily as seen by men. Some of them might defame it, and might delight to do so, just because it is so pure. Some would fling a bag of soot on a field of snow, and besmirch a white marble statue with a scavenger's broom, and all to gratify a love for befouling things. God, who alone can give true purity of heart and life, can alone keep in honour and in safety from the breath of slander the work of his indwelling Spirit. He who makes a character noble is the only safe keeper of its reputation.

"Keep thy heart," it is all that a man can do, for his influence, his name, his reputation, his position, others greatly determine for him.

And he need not trouble about them, they are not himself. When someone called upon George Whitefield to defend himself against certain aspersions, he declined, because, he said, "God has given me something else to do than run all round the world setting myself right with everyone." Better be right with God, and see whether He cannot take care of us. If the heart has been kept, He will reveal its quality some time or other. As we have seen snow stained on the surface but white beneath, so will the inner truth shine forth when there is truth to shine. We know on one of the Surrey hills a modest little home with an old-fashioned garden which is stocked with sweet-smelling plants and flowers, and whenever the gate is opened the scents wander forth on the air. God can open a pure heart by trouble or by opportunity of service, and scatter its sweetness all around. Men will say—"God walks in that garden." J. P. G.

From Easter to Pentecost.

UNTIL the Resurrection the Twelve were disciples; after the Resurrection they were apostles. Before the Resurrection they were learners; after the Resurrection they were teachers. Before the Resurrection they doubted, their hearts were hardened, they did not understand the Scriptures; after the Resurrection they were endowed with the Holy Ghost, they received tongues of flame, and power from on high, they went everywhere preaching the Word.

Shall it be enough for us that we fast in our Lent, and burden our churches with their glad Easter flowers, and then shall we forget the outpouring of Pentecost? Before this time believers should have humbled themselves before God: they should have prayed for the revival of his work; they should have sought and begun to receive the blessings into their own hearts; now let them open their hands to receive the blessing, if it has not already come in the conversion of souls unto Christ.

The great revival of the first Christian Pentecost seems very wonderful to us; but it is not wonderful. It was according to the ordering of that spiritual nature which still rules. When the twelve Apostles and the believers about them, men and women, were full of joy and faith, and were with one accord in one place, and told the story of Christ and his resurrection to souls that could not deny it, then the conversion of thousands was to be expected. All that was needed was, with the Holy Spirit helping them, to speak, to speak, to dare to speak and tell of the love, and death, and resurrection of Christ, and declare that good news of remission of sins.

The same is all that is necessary now. Now put in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe. Pastor, Sunday-school teacher, parent, the time is far spent; Christ is arisen; will you let the season pass by? Now, if ever, let the Church work for results. Now run and speak to that young man. Now, after your Sunday evening meeting, after your weekly prayer-meeting, let believers testify by rising in their seats, or by lifting their hands, that they wish to seek more fully the grace of God, and then give those who are not yet numbered with the Church, but who wish the prayers of God's people, a chance to let it be known in the same way. And seek them, find out who they are; for God's Spirit may be abroad when you cannot see it, and souls made tender by its influences may be only waiting your encouragement and direction. Alas! the unbelief of those who are the successors of the Apostles! We do not take the promise that is ready for us, and seek and expect the harvest that is ready. Christian believers, put in the sickle! Pentecost is at hand!—N. Y. Independent.

Foreign Missions.—No doubt the best and the easiest method to collect money for Christian objects is to secure small sums often. The penny-a-week system is about the best, and we hear that it has taken well in the parts of Wales that have been visited by Rev. T. Evans, missionary from India. All missionary societies would do well to adopt this feasible system as much as possible, while one penny a week is not a burden to anyone—a few thousand names would soon amount to hundreds of pounds.

As a Little Child.—4.

SOME five years ago a little girl of four was playing on the doorstep of her home in Dover. Just beneath was a small area, and the bars by the step being too wide apart she fell down, and was taken up dead. As it was in my parish I heard of the mother's great sorrow, and the same afternoon I called to see her. The child lay on the bed, and looked as if she were in a beautiful sleep. I spoke to the mother a few words of comfort, and rejoiced to find that she was one who knew where to turn when trouble came. By-and-by she looked at the little girl and said, "That little one led me to Jesus."

I asked her what she meant, and how one so young could have proved such a blessing to her. Then she told me all about it. Though she had known but little of the way of salvation, she felt it was her duty to teach the child as far as she was able. She seemed to have taught the little one many short texts, and also something of the "old, old story" of Christ's life. But the child put to her so many simple questions, and asked her so much about Jesus, that it became quite a means of grace to the mother. It led her earnestly to pray and to believe in the Lord Jesus, so that the little scholar virtually became the teacher, and the mother found true and lasting peace. GEORGE EVERARD.

A little girl, whose heart was rejoicing in her newly-found Saviour, was having a pleasant chat with her mother's friend, when she suddenly looked up and said very earnestly: "Miss —, do you know Jesus?" "Oh, yes," said her friend, "I have known Him this long time." "Yes," said the child; "but I mean do you know Him to speak to Him?" This time the answer did not come so quickly, and the Holy Spirit sent the simple question home, and a heart that knew little of personal intercourse with its Saviour felt its full force, and awoke to see how far below its privileges it was living. The result was that Miss — sought and found nearer communion with her God, and became one of his most earnest and devoted servants. And in that "knowledge of our Lord and Saviour," so often put before us in the Word, as the true means of growth in grace and of power in service, are there not many degrees, just as there are in our knowledge of those around us? Of one we say, "We know a good deal about them, but have never met them personally"; of another "We met them once, but have not kept up the acquaintance"; a third we only greet in a passing way, but of a fourth we say, "They are my dearest friends, I can speak to them of my hopes, my joys, my sorrows; in fact, of whatever interests me, and I am always sure of a kindly sympathy; and more than that, I have proved them to be as true as steel." And just to think it is possible to possess just such a Friend as this in our Lord Jesus Christ! Is it not enough to fill the heart with untold joy? E. P.

English and French Coasting Mission.

THE mission steamer Good News has lately returned to England after three-and-a-half months in the north of France. Mr. Brading, who now has charge of the French branch, which is worked from the Mission House at Deauville-sur-mer in Normandy, has been on board, and conducted the meetings with the help so kindly given by the different pasteurs at the places visited.

The winter's work started at Deauville (Trouville), where a great impetus to the work at the hall was given, and blessing has followed. Fécamp, Honfleur, Rouen, Elbeuf-on-Seine, and Cherbourg were successively visited, and everywhere welcome was accorded to the little steamer. The work is mostly amongst Roman Catholics, but in some of the places the Protestants came and were much blessed; at Cherbourg specially, where there was much lethargy, there has been quite a stir.

This is a small mission, but very far-reaching. The steamer is now at Gosport, waiting for the cloud-pillar to move, in order to go forth with its message of salvation on the English coast. Much prayer is asked for this work. Communications may be addressed to Mrs. Cook, 47, Stoke-road, Gosport, Hants.

Letters from S. Africa.—14.

THE PRESENT CRISIS.

THIS land is in unrest, anxiety, and commotion. It is fervently to be hoped that there will be no war between English and Dutch. It would be an unpardonable crime on the part of either of these Powers deliberately to precipitate it. The grievances of the Uitlanders, though real and pressing, are infinitesimal and transitory compared with the horrors of a civil war, which might embroil all the European nations.

It is not to be supposed that either Government would rashly assume the awful responsibility of an appeal to arms; but as Chicago was set ablaze by a row in a stable kicking over a kerosene lamp, so some clumsy, or reckless, or violent incident or accident might lead to hostilities which would shake the world. A few years must, in the nature of things, settle matters now in dispute in the Transvaal. Humanly speaking, the English-speaking people must advance. We are in the rapids of time. Steam and electricity carry us along, whether we will or no. True, the Niagara roars beyond (see Rev. xviii.), but no obstruction can avail to stay the rushing river of commerce, or the mad hurry to be rich. Since writing so far, I find that the Spectator has shown that in a few years the Progressives will, in all probability, have so increased in number and influence, that it will be impossible for the Government to withhold from them any reasonable and just demands. But let those who fear God, and believe his Word, remember that the prophecy of Ezekiel xxvii., concerning Tyre and its commerce, became history long ago; and that the kindred prophecy concerning the polity symbolised by that great city, Babylon, in its commercial character, will as surely come to pass. It is of Commercial Babylon, with her merchandise of gold and silver, and precious stones. . . . and bodies and souls of men, that the voice from heaven says:—

"Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. . . . The merchants of these things, who were made rich by her, shall stand afar off for the fear of her torment, weeping and wailing, and saying, Alas, alas! that great city, that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls! For in one hour so great riches is come to nought."

These words have a new significance, with the gold mines of the Randt in vivid remembrance and the diamond fields of Kimberley beneath my eyes.

MANY OF THE NEWSPAPERS

are an unmitigated evil, keeping up the irritation. Scares are got up by untruthful paragraphs for the purpose of raising or depressing the price of shares; and the boasted liberty of the Press, which would be a safety-valve in the hands of true and honest men, becomes a mischievous licence under the manipulation of men who are paid to write untruths.

It is said that the letters and articles in Dutch and Anglo-Dutch papers are more violent than the English. For instance, a man and a brother of the Boer persuasion expressed the conviction in print that Africa would have no peace until all the English were shot or drowned. But papers which publish such insane effusions, whether they issue from one side or the other, are far more to be blamed than the maniacs who write them. The editor who does so, is the madman who throws about fire, even though it be only for sport—or pay. He acts like a criminal innatic, and under a strong and righteous Government, his liberty to do mischief should be taken from him. Personally, I have met with unvarying courtesy as well from Dutch as English. Undoubtedly the great majority desire to live at peace, and to cultivate good relations with each other; and it is sheer wickedness to give a factitious importance to the screams of a lunatic at large, by putting them into a so-called organ of public opinion.

Some say the Boers think they have beaten England twice, and can do it again, and that they must be undeceived. But no Christian would advocate war on such a plea. The more serious aspect of the case seems to be that the Transvaal Government is taking advantage of the Jameson raid, with which the Imperial Government had nothing to do, to reopen the question of the Convention of 1884, when Lord Derby gave up the main provisions of the Convention of 1881; and the South African Republic now wants the little then retained to be given up also, which, politically speaking, England cannot do.

Easter Sunday is set apart in the Orange Free State for and for deliverance from the ravaging locusts, etc. But, while we pray, let us bear the rod and Him who hath appointed it. All South Africa is complaining that this has been so far a most exceptional and disastrous year. Unless God has changed the method of his government, we must perceive that his judgments are abroad. But instead of disputing whether the drought, the locusts, the rinderpest, and other calamities, are judgments of God, and if they be, theorising or generalising as to who have deserved them, let us each ask ourselves, How many thousands or millions of locusts fall to my share? How much have I contributed to the sin which has called for the drought, or to the conditions which have caused other calamities? Then there will be humiliation and confession as well as prayer, and a rending of hearts and not of garments; and then will the Lord be jealous for his land, and pity his people, and fulfil his promise, "I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, and the cankerworm, and the caterpillar, and the palmerworm, my great army which I sent among you."

For locust or drought or rinderpest or any other kind of calamity is as nothing compared with being let alone of God. "Ephraim is joined to idols: let him alone." Nothing is so terrible as to be given up of God: "God gave them up to uncleanness through the lusts of their own hearts." "God gave them up unto vile affections." "And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them up to a reprobate mind." Has England advanced or retrograded beyond the Dutch, in that nothing seems capable of inducing her to set apart a day of national thanksgiving for benefits received, or of humbling herself because of judgments suffered?

The rising of the Matabele is a new and alarming element in the present condition of affairs.

I heard before I came here an incident showing how who rests himself on God, can possess his soul in peace. He was one of the earliest holders of a claim in the diamond mines. When the consolidation of the various companies was about to take place, he was in England. He received a cablegram from a relative acting as his agent here, stating that an agreement between the negotiators, upon which he had relied, had been broken. "Every man has his price," and the one upon whom the interests of our friend depended had been bought. He did not reply to the cable, and his anxious agent sent another message. He received it in London as he was walking up Cornhill, and cabled in reply "Psalm xxxvii." On its arrival every available code-book was examined, but no clue could be found. There was no mention of "Psalm" or "xxxvii." The agent, knowing the importance of the matter, was on his way to the telegraph office to get the message repeated, lest there should have been a mistake in transmission. Then it occurred to him, from the character of his relative, that he would be very likely to get his directions from his guide-book, the Bible. He therefore returned home, and referred to Psalm xxxvii., and as soon as he read the first verse "Fret not thyself because of evil-doers, neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity"—he comprehended the situation perfectly. The whole psalm seemed to have been written in anticipation of the occasion.

The circumstance got wind, and was much talked about. Those who had Bibles referred to Psalm xxxvii.; those who had not, procured copies, and eagerly read the psalm. The Bible had never excited so much interest before in diamond circles. The cablegram is preserved by the agent, and the fact that quietness and confidence were the strength of the Christian shareholder is not forgotten in the diamond town.

R. COPE MORGAN.

Kimberley, March 30, 1896.

Mr. Aitken in New York.

THE New York Churchman devotes considerable space to Mr. Aitken's visit to that city in the week March 16-21, giving special prominence to his noon-day services for business men. Our contemporary says:—

"The noon-day services at old Trinity last week have again demonstrated the fact that New York men are willing to leave their work in the busiest of days to listen to the plain preaching of the Gospel. Whenever such men as Mr. Aitken, Phillips Brooks, or Knox-Little have come to preach at Trinity, the walls of the church have looked down upon a congregation of earnest, eager, men—men who have known life in its busiest and most varied aspects. Men of intellect, men of affairs, men in vigorous youth, join in the brief prayers, sing the strong hymns, and listen to the simple presentation of truth with keen profit and enjoyment.

"Mr. Aitken, in whom the men of New York showed a special interest when he led the Advent Mission in this city ten years ago, has been equally successful in bringing them into contact with the facts of the spiritual life on his recent visit. In spite of the fact that some of the days of Mr. Aitken's stay in New York were captured by the worst winds and storms of the season, the congregations crowded every available spot of standing room at each service, and the impressive sight of such a body of men was an inspiration. Mr. Aitken presented the moral duties of life in their relation to spiritual growth, always impressing his hearers with the necessity of an immediate choice of a present Saviour, in order that the moral and spiritual life might be possible, and contrasting the loss and ruin involved in the rejection of the Divine message with the happiness of obedience and acceptance. When the work of the missionary is so thoroughly in accord with the principles and customs of the Church as is that of the superintendent of the Church of England Parochial Missions Society, or of the missionaries of the American Society, the local Churches do well to welcome them and to bid them God-speed as they go on their way.

"The underlying theme of the addresses of the week at the Trinity Church noon-day services was the incident, and the events connected therewith, of the calling of Zaccheus, the publican, to be a disciple of our Lord."

The Bible and the Blind.—Sunday, May 3, being the fortieth anniversary of the Day of Special Prayer and Thanksgiving on behalf of the Blind, will be observed by friends who take an interest in Dr. Moon's system of embossed reading (now in 476 languages and dialects), and in the establishing of home-teaching societies and free lending libraries for the blind at home and abroad. Miss Moon, of 104, Queen's-road, Brighton, has issued a call to praise and prayer, asking that pastors will seek to interest their congregations on behalf of the sightless.

The Situation in Madagascar.

PRESENT POSITION AND PROSPECTS OF CHRISTIAN WORK.

IT may be not uninteresting to those who watch with anxiety the influence of political changes upon missionary effort to hear a few particulars as to the position of our work in Madagascar at the present time. Everyone knows that on the last day of September, 1895, the French expeditionary force, after a long and most hazardous march of five or six months from the north-west coast, reached the capital, Antananarivo, and occupied it, after a few hours' bombardment.

Many prophecies of evil had been made. We were told that, long before the French force reached the interior, the Malagasy would break out into open rebellion, and that no European's life would be safe; that the Prime Minister would be hurled from power, and that the Queen would be deposed. Further, we were assured that upon the arrival of the French troops they would be allowed several days' license for looting and plundering, so that again all Europeans, especially the English, would be in great peril, and that, therefore, all missionaries ought to leave the city, while every foreign woman and child ought to be sent out of the country. Many of us, however, declined to leave our people and our work, and did not see it right to force our wives and daughters to leave against their will.

The result justified our faith in God's protecting care over us and our work. None of the terrible things so confidently prophesied came to pass. The native Government retained its authority up to the hour of the entry of the French into the capital; no word of insult was ever heard by any one of us either in the city or its neighbourhood; the French troops were perfectly under discipline, and no disorder of any kind took place; and on the day following their entrance a brisk trade was going on between the Malagasy and their conquerors. In a few days' time perfect confidence was restored, and large numbers of the women and children came back to the city, finding that there was nothing to be dreaded from the new masters of the country. The behaviour of the French soldiers has, indeed, been admirable, and great praise is due to General Duchesne for the humane way in which the war was conducted from first to last.

It will hardly be believed that our school and college work was continued up to the Tuesday before the French occupation of the capital, and was resumed just a fortnight after that event. Congregations met, although in very small numbers, in all our city churches on the Sunday following the occupation, and after about a month they had almost resumed their usual size. The country congregations were a little longer in regaining confidence; but the news soon spread, and by the end of the year a large number of these also were meeting as usual; so that at the beginning of January schools and classes and other work had, in the majority of cases, been recommenced.

Of course, the political upheaval, including the downfall of the Prime Minister and his family, produced, for some weeks, a great disturbance of the people's minds, especially in the distant and more ignorant country places. In many villages there was a distinct return to heathenism, and recourse was had to charms and divination and actual setting up of idols. The churches were, in many of these places, almost deserted, except by a faithful few. Most of us in charge of country districts took special tours among our people for the purpose of reassuring them, and giving encouragement to persevere in attendance on worship and in sending their children to school. But there was little cause for wonder at this reversion to old superstitions on the part of many, when we remember the small amount of light and teaching a large proportion of them have yet had. Living in scattered homesteads and solitary hamlets, as numbers of the country people do, it is most difficult to give them a thorough Christian teaching and training. The wonder really is that there was not a more wholesale return to idolatry.

The saddest feature in this revival of superstition was the outbreak of a rebellion in the west, about a day's journey from the capital, about two months after the French occupation, and the murder of Mr. and Mrs. W. Johnson, of the Friends' Mission at Arivonimamo, and their little girl, as well as of several Malagasy, by the populace, and the destruction of many native churches.

More recently, since the return of the Roman Catholic priests and their co-workers, new difficulties have arisen, and many of the people have been led to believe that they must now become Romanists, since the French have conquered the country. This idea has been industriously spread abroad. With large numbers of the Malagasy the word "French" is synonymous with "Catholic," and "English" with "Protestant," and it is not wonderful that with ignorant and timid people, the dominant idea is not, Which is the religion? but, Which is to be the stronger? and as they think Romanism is the French religion, therefore it will be safest for them to be of that religion. Doubtless there are many difficulties looming ahead of us in the near future from this quarter, and great efforts are being made to get hold of the children from our schools, and the young people from our congregations. Our brethren in the southern province are feeling this already, and also our Norwegian friends in Central Madagascar. We have reason to be thankful that General Duchesne gave at once the fullest assurances of religious liberty, and the same has been done by the Resident-General, M. Laroche, who has also promised to issue a proclamation on the subject.

We cannot be sufficiently thankful that M. Laroche is a Protestant, and will therefore, we feel sure, fully carry out the agreement between England and France as to religious freedom. Many others of the leading French officials are also liberal and enlightened men, in full accord with their chief on this point.

During the past month we have been happy to welcome among us two French Protestant pastors as delegates from the Paris Missionary Society, viz., Pastor H. Lauga and Pastor and Professor J. H. Kruger. These gentlemen have come to see the work of our Mission here, and to consult with us as to the best way in which French Protestants can take part in the evangelisation of Madagascar. They have already commenced a French Protestant service in the city, and we hope they will be able to send us missionaries to take up higher education in the capital and do other valuable work.

The French occupation of the country has already effected some change in the outward appearance of things, and Antananarivo now presents a somewhat different aspect to what it did before the war. The French are everywhere making the Malagasy repair the roads, and they are certainly now much improved all over the city. Stone gutters are made on each side of the roads, and in many places bridges of massive timber are placed over hollows and gullies. In all directions out of the town the roads are also being levelled and improved. About the streets one continually meets long lines of mules being taken outside the town to drink water, or laden with stores for some of the military depôts. At every few yards we meet soldiers—Frenchmen, in white uniforms and helmets; swarthy Algerians, in baggy breeches; or black negroes, with blue jackets and red fez, from the Congo or the Soudan. Officers are being carried about in palanquins; and there seem more people than ever in Antananarivo: miners coming to prospect for gold, traders to open new business, and others to see what advantage can be made out of the new state of things. Prices are naturally rising for most commodities, and it is increasingly difficult to find bearers and servants. French money, of smaller size than the dollar or 5-franc piece, viz., francs and 20-centime pieces, as well as copper money, is coming largely into use, and will probably in time take the place of the "cut-money" and scales for weighing it, to the great saving of time and trouble.

Of course, there are attendant evils, which seem inseparable from the presence of a large number of soldiers of whatever nationality. There is, we fear, a great increase of drinking among the Malagasy, as well as of licentiousness, and there is now much Sunday trading in the capital—a thing which had not been known here for the last twenty-five years. The Resident-General has, however, already struck a blow at one of the chief blots on the Malagasy civilisation, and has stopped the public sale of slaves in the markets. We may hope that other measures may eventually be taken so that slavery itself may gradually come to an end.

On the whole, although there are many discouragements arising from the time-serving character of the Malagasy and their want of moral backbone and courage in doing right, as well as difficulties arising from religious differences, as already pointed out, there are also many cheering features in the new order of things. The French authorities are trying to promote justice and religious equality, and the people seem to have quietly acquiesced in the new political arrangements of the country. It goes without saying that all Protestant missionaries loyally accept the new régime, and will work heartily with those now in power in the island to promote in every way the well-being of the Malagasy. In doing this we ask the continued sympathy and prayer and help of the Christian Churches of Britain.

A MADAGASCAR MISSIONARY.

Antananarivo, March 11.

A Redeemed Malagasy Slave.

MRS. PEILL (L.M.S.) writes:—"Those of your readers who so generously contributed about three years ago to redeem our young friend Jefferson Jamaria from bondage, that he might receive a training for the ministry in the London Missionary Society's college, Antananarivo, will be glad to hear something of his progress and welfare.

"It is a real joy to add I have nothing but good to say of him. He has so far fully justified our hopes and expectations, having kept at the head of all his classes, and proved an earnest and eloquent preacher. From the first he has had the unspeakable blessing of a guarded and happy home with Mr. Sharnan, one of the tutors at the college, and his devoted and admirable wife. But, zealous student though he is, he has not given up his hardy country habits, and almost every week walks the twelve to fourteen miles from town here, on Saturday, to preach either at one or two of the Ambohimanga churches, or not unfrequently in some of the villages over the high mountains to the north, returning to town on Monday, thus walking barefoot from thirty to forty miles over rough roads in the three days.

"It might be a help to him spiritually, and increase his usefulness as a missionary to his own countrymen afterwards, to visit England at the end of his college course next year.

"He himself ardently desires this, and he had been making the desire a matter of prayer before ever I spoke with him on the subject. The surplus money from his sister's redemption would cover the cost of his journey by land and sea, and leave something over towards outfit, etc. He would be able to travel to the coast on foot, and as a third-class passenger on the steamer."

Ramsgate.—At a meeting of the Sailors and Smack Boys' Homes, on Tuesday week, Rev. F. W. Carpenter in the chair, Mr. William C. Rose was elected secretary to both Institutions. The work of the Homes is earnestly commended to the kindly sympathy and help of all those who take an interest in the well-being of the British sailor. The secretary is Mr. W. C. Rose, 19, Townley-street, Ramsgate.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, April 26.

"AND DAVID GATHERED ALL THE PEOPLE TOGETHER, AND WENT UP TO RABBAH, AND FOUGHT AGAINST IT, AND TOOK IT."—2 Sam. xii. 29.

VICTORY might seem to have been for ever forfeited after so great a fall. We could not have been surprised had we been told that from this time onward the course of David's conquests had stayed. And yet this thought would be a misconception of God's dealings with the penitent. Where there is true contrition, confession, and faith, He not only forgives, but restores; He not only restores to the enjoyment of his favour, but reinstates in opportunities of usefulness. So Jesus not only met the apostle who had denied Him, and put him back into the old position of happy fellowship, but gave him a commission to feed his sheep and lambs.

We have sometimes met backsliders who have doubted the possibility of their forgiveness, or, if they have realised this, they have never dared to hope that they could ever be what they had been. And so long as faith refuses to believe in the perfect work of God's love, it must inevitably take a back seat. Let us seek for such an entire faith in God's forgiving and restoring love as to dare to believe that we are put again into the old place, and allowed to anticipate the same victories as aforesaid.

Directly David said, "I have sinned," in the flash of a moment Nathan said, "The Lord hath put away thy sin"; and when Joab sent tidings that Rabbah was about to fall, David was permitted the honour of its final capture, though it had been associated so closely with Uriah's death. Where sin abounds grace super-abounds, and reigns through righteousness. Dare to believe this.

MONDAY, April 27.

"THEN THE KING AROSE, AND TOOK HIS GARMENTS, AND LAY ON THE EARTH."—2 Sam. xiii. 31.

Throughout the incidents of this chapter, the soul of David touched the bottom of the sea of anguish and remorse. The circumstances narrated were in themselves sad enough, but there was a bitterer element in them for David, because he knew that they were the harvest of which his own sin was the seed. Here began to be fulfilled the sentence of God through Nathan, "The sword shall never depart from thine house."

He had broken up the peace of another's home, and peace had quitted his home, never to return. He had defiled the purity of Uriah's wife, and the purity of his own daughter had been trampled under foot. He had smitten Uriah, and now Absalom had murdered Amnon. Through those awful hours when the entire fate of the whole of his family seemed trembling in the balance, he drank to the dregs the cup of bitterness.

Sin resembles the Australian weed, which when once it is sown in the waters will spread with such rapidity as to spoil their beauty, and choke their flow. We must distinguish between the penal and natural results. The penal were borne by Christ for us all, and are remitted for evermore; but the natural remain even to forgiven penitents as they did to David, though God's grace may transmute them into blessings, and cause pearls to grow where before there had been gaping wounds. Ask God to take the natural consequences of your sins, and to make them means of grace and ennoblement.

TUESDAY, April 28.

"YET DOETH HE DEVISE MEANS THAT HIS BANISHED BE NOT EXPELLED FROM HIM."—2 Sam. xiv. 14.

The means that David devised were really inadequate. He allowed his heart to dictate to his royal sense of justice and rectitude, and permitted Absalom to return to his country and home without one word of confession, one symptom of penitence.

The king was overmastered by the father, and the result was disastrous. It shook the respect of his people, undermined the foundations of just government, slackened the bands of every family in the land, and confirmed Absalom in his wilful and obstinate career. What! said he to himself, does my father bid me come back without conditions? Does he demand no confession or reparation, then he condones my sin.

Let parents be warned. If your children disobey, and violate the rules of your home, you have no right to treat them as you did before, until they have owned their sin. You must insist on penitence, confession, and reparation, though it take hours or days of suffering and pleading to bring it about.

Into what relief does David's mistake throw God's way of forgiveness and salvation? Had He acted as David, and as so many wish us to believe, He would have reinstated the human family in the Paradise of his love without waiting for the work of the Mediator, or the confession of the prodigal. By the arbitrary exercise of his sovereign will He might have wiped out the record of our sins without our concurrence. It would have been to the irreparable undoing of man. Hence it behoved Christ to suffer, and to make an atonement for our sins, and by his Spirit to bring us to penitence and confession.

WEDNESDAY, April 29.

"HERE AM I, LET HIM DO AS SEEMETH GOOD UNTO HIM."—2 Sam. xv. 26.

There is the patience of hope. We love to gird ourselves in the vehemence of our self-will, to go where we choose, to rule the lives of others; but as the years pass and our pride is humbled, the sinews of our strength slackened, and the radiance of early prospects overcast, we are willing to hand ourselves over to our Father, as Isaac to Abraham, saying, "Behold, here am I, let Him do as seemeth good unto Him."

It was thus that Jesus spoke to his Father, "I come to do Thy will, O my God." It was thus that the maiden who was blessed above women, answered the angel's message. It was thus that Paul avowed his willingness to live or die, as the Lord might choose.

God is ever working upon us through circumstances, and, as in the present case, sometimes He overrules the plottings of wicked men to fulfil his Divine purpose. His will is sometimes brought to us in a cup which a Judas holds to our lips. How blessed to be able to say as we go forth to meet our Father's will, Behold, here am I! and to look beyond the plottings and machinations of our enemies to One who loves us infinitely. Whatever He permits must be good. Good, if driven as an exile from our home; good, if exposed to the revilings of a Shimei; good, if the heart breaks in bitter tears. All must be good which the good Lord permits or appoints. Thou art in his hands, and He will bring thee again, and show thee the city and his habitation.

THURSDAY, April 30.

"THE KING AND ALL THE PEOPLE THAT WERE WITH HIM CAME WEARY, AND REFRESHED THEMSELVES THERE."—2 Sam. xvi. 14.

A great weariness falls often on our souls. We are wearied because of the greatness of our way, and inclined to say there is no hope. Memory tires us, perpetually casting up the record of past unfaithfulness and transgression. The bitter way of the natural consequences of sin is toilsome and difficult to the feet. We faint before the averted eye of former friends and the pitiless criticism of foes. Longings for a vanished past, for life and love, for purity and peace, grind heavily in the soul. Our king has known something of human weariness, though not from all the sources that cause it in his subjects.

But amid the presence of our weariness the voice of God may be heard saying, "This is the rest wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest, and this is the refreshing." There is rest for weary souls beneath the shadow of the cross, in the sight of which the burden rolls away. There is rest and refreshment as we sit in the banqueting house of Christ's manifested and realised affection. There is refreshment as we eat of his flesh and drink of his blood, as we yield our will to his, as we sit with Him in heavenly places.

There is no hill difficulty without its arbour; no desert without its oasis; no sultry heat without its shadow of a great rock; no weariness without its pillow; no intolerable sorrow without its solace; no weariness without its refreshment; no failure of man without a very present help in God.

FRIDAY, May 1.

"ARISE, AND PASS QUICKLY OVER THE WATER." 2 Sam. xvii. 21.

The water of Jordan may serve as an illustration for our position. Our David has passed over the waters of death, and in doing so has taken us with Him. There is a sense in which in the morning light of Easter Day all who believed passed over with Him, so that "by the morning light there lacked not one of them that was not gone over Jordan."

We all hold the doctrine of substitution. Do we sufficiently realise that of identification? Not only did Jesus die for us, but we died with and in Him. In Him, as the true Noah's Ark, the whole Church passed over the Jordan of death from the old world to the new. There are some who do not understand that in the purpose of God we are already standing on resurrection ground. Across the water we can hear the murmur of the world, and detect its corruption, but we are the inheritors of the world in which there is neither death nor corruption nor the dominion of sin. When a man realises this he no longer braces himself up to meet death, because he knows that in the person of Christ he has left it behind for ever.

What is true, however, in God's purpose should be the aim and goal of our daily striving. To us there comes the unceasing call, "Arise, and go over Jordan." There is always a thither and a hither side for every experience and act. We may always do as the world does, this is to stay on the death side. We may always do as Christ does, this is to pass over to the risen and living side. Reckon that you have died and mortify the deeds of your body.

SATURDAY, May 2.

WHEREFORE WILT THOU RUN, SEEING THOU WILT HAVE NO REWARD? . . . COME WHAT MAY, SAID HE, LET ME RUN.—2 Sam. xviii. 22, 23, R.V.

How often the question of reward comes into our calculation, and influences our acts! It is one of the taunts of the world that men are paid to do good, even as Satan said of Job, "Doth Job serve God for nought?" The privilege of being allowed to serve should suffice us; yet "God is not unrighteous to forget your work and labour of love."

In the case before us the tidings were already on the way by the mouth of a speedy messenger, Cush, who, if any reward were to be had would be the recipient of it. But Ahimaaz longed to render service to his king, regardless of recompense; and, though both he and Cush misinterpreted the heart of David, yet their motives would seem to have been pure.

It is a useful lesson for all to learn, that even though the reward belong to another, or there be no reward at all, we should ever be willing to run to serve the King. "Come what may"—let us run.

The Cherubim (Ezek. i.) "went every one straight forward; whither the spirit was to go they went; they turned not when they went. They ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning."

Note further, Cush was a servant sent; Ahimaaz was a volunteer. The love of his heart lent wings to his feet, and speeding past his fellow, he came first into David's presence. The willing heart will always outstrip the one who runs only from a sense of duty.

THE CHILDREN'S PAGE.

Reginald Radcliffe.

I HAVE been reading the "Recollections" of this noble evangelist. When he was quite a young man he worked in a Ragged School. Most of you know little of the difficulties of such work. You cannot imagine how ignorant some of the poor boys and girls who live in our great cities are concerning Jesus Christ and his love to them; and you would hardly believe how rude and impudent some children are when kind friends gather them together to teach them for Jesus' sake.

Why, I have seen both ladies and gentlemen pelted with orange-peel and nut-shells by their scholars; and I have known fireworks to be let off in certain class-rooms, and crackers to be bounding about the floor when earnest teachers have been trying to instruct the urchins gathered around them. One would not be surprised at such behaviour in heathen countries; but in England we do look for better things, do we not? However, I speak of experiences during the last four years; probably the work was rougher still when Mr. Radcliffe laboured at the "Old Swan," in Liverpool, nearly fifty years ago.

When he saw how evil were the ways of his scholars, he was convinced of the need of his labours, and prayed to God on their behalf. So earnest were his prayers for these poor children that the workers never forgot the manner in which he poured out his soul at the prayer meetings, and how he expected his prayers to be answered. This was the secret of his success in all the work he did for God throughout his busy life; and God will honour us if we honour Him by always taking Him at his word, and expecting Him to fulfil his promises to us.

Mr. Radcliffe on one occasion was invited to Aberdeen to preach the Gospel; and his friend hoped to secure a large building for the purpose and to gather large audiences to listen to him. However, he had to content himself with a small mission room, and a few children to speak to. But he was not disappointed, for he trusted in God, and felt sure that God had some good reason in bringing the children to hear him. And so it proved, for many of his little hearers were converted to God through his messages; and their change of heart was seen in the nursery and school. Besides, the parents were so struck with the altered behaviour of the children, that they also came to hear Mr. Radcliffe, and before long he had crowds to preach to, and many earnest workers to assist him. And many helpers were needed; for a great number were led to see themselves as sinners, and Jesus as their Saviour, and some felt so unhappy on account of their sins that they needed to be helped by those who knew the comfort and peace which Jesus gives to his followers.

And so Mr. Radcliffe began to feel that the children were his special charge; and I rejoice to think that in some of his crowded meetings in the churches he reserved the best places for his youthful hearers. So you see, my young friends, that although you may sometimes feel that you are useless, God may commence a very important work through you, as He did at Aberdeen; for to-day there are men and women in various parts of the world who were led to Jesus at the meetings which were really commenced amongst children!

At some meetings in London little children were seen in tears, some crying very bitterly because they felt they were sinners; others were radiant with joy because they had come to the Saviour. One little girl was seen with her arm round the neck of one still younger, speaking of the sweet love of the Saviour whom she had very lately found. Boys and girls alike gathered in clusters around someone able to lead them, eagerly catching the words of life, which fell from the lips of the teacher.

So wherever Mr. Radcliffe went, whether at home or abroad, he did not forget the children. They were attracted to him by his beaming countenance, and they delighted to hear the Gospel from his lips. I have never seen him that I know of, but I have got to love him, nevertheless, through the stirring account Mrs. Radcliffe has given us of his labours for Jesus; and more so, perhaps, on account of his being so much like his Master in seeking the welfare of the boys and girls, who are very dear to my own heart. I pray that among the young readers of THE CHRISTIAN there may arise many who shall do as grand a work for the Saviour as Reginald Radcliffe.

What the Spring Teaches Us.—1.

IS it not lovely to go into the garden or along a country lane in this beautiful springtime? Everything seems so bright and pleasant, the trees are covered with blossom, the banks are filled with primroses, and the air with the warbling of the birds. I am sure you must enjoy all these beautiful gifts of God, and I hope you think of the poor little children in crowded cities like London, and Manchester, and Liverpool, who have no pretty garden to go into, and live too far away from the green fields to see and hear any of the joys which make the spring such a happy time of year to many.

In the Song of Solomon (ii. 11, 12) the spring is thus described:—"For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; and the time of the singing of birds is come."

In the Eastern countries of which the Bible speaks the rain only comes at certain times of the year, so that the people there are able to say more surely than we in England can that when the "winter is past" the rain is "over and gone." I daresay you think you would rather have it like that here, but if you lived in those lands for a year or two you would be very glad to get back again to dear old England, because it is terribly trying to have month after month of very hot weather every day. I expect sometimes on a broiling summer day you are very glad to come in out of the sun and rest in a cool room; and after a week or two of heat you welcome a shower of rain. So that I am sure you would not really like to exchange our climate for a whole year for that of the Holy Land.

Does not this teach us that we can never anywhere have quite all we want? I think it would be a very funny world if we could. Why, just fancy it, even in your own family, with you wanting one thing and your brother wanting exactly the opposite, and another wanting something else quite different from either of you! I don't think you would be very happy together after all.

Whenever you feel discontented, remember there are many other children very much worse off than you, who would give anything to change places with you even for a single day. There are other lessons the spring teach you, but they will keep till next week.

Personal Paragraphs.

I forgot to say last week that the interesting talk upon "Hide and Seek" was by Rev. David Davies, of Brighton, a warm children's friend.

A gentleman, in a very kind letter, points out what I have noticed myself—that I seem to have a great many more nieces than nephews. Of course, I don't want fewer of the former, but I want lots more of the latter. Now, boys, don't be shy. Let me see how many of you can do the questions as well as the girls.

I must ask my young friends to ascertain more accurately how many stamps their letters require, as they are frequently underpaid. Will the following kindly enclose in their next letters the amounts placed against their names, which I have had to pay:—Jessie Pook, 1d.; Catherine Bailey, 1d.; Emily Bridgewater 1d.; Mabel Berney, 2d.; Jessie Bone, 2d.; Annie Baxter, 1d.; Nellie Dowsett, 2d.

E. W. DE RUSSET.—You are quite right. I hope we shall soon see an improvement. NORMAN BRABY.—I am glad you are going to try the "Bible Searcher." I hope you will soon be quite strong and well again. LAVINIA BARNES.—How nice it is to be where you are so happy. Pray for other children who are not so well looked after, and thank God for your home and friends. ANNIE TODD.—Try and have the "Bible Searcher" sent up at school. It seems such a pity to give it up when you have been doing so well. EDITH HASKINS.—I am so pleased to adopt you into my big family. MABEL FURLONG.—I should like to do what you ask, perhaps, at some future time. HELEN BECKETT.—By all means send in your answers. I am afraid that after September you will be too old to compete for a prize, but never mind that. E. MARION NELSON.—I will bear your suggestion in mind. FAN TROTTER.—That's right: "Try, try again." GERTIE SCOTT.—The more you search the Bible the more you will get to love it, and it will be such a help to you as you grow up. DAISY MARRETT.—Thank you very much for the flowers. I have given them to a sick child, who was as pleased as I was to receive them. EDITH and MAUDE TYSON.—There is no special advantage in appearing in the "first list"; so do not post on Sunday.

A Christian must not be like Hezekiah's sun that went backward, or like Joshua's sun that stood still, but like David's sun that rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race.

The Authority of Scripture.

By Mr. JAMES WRIGHT, BRISTOL.

WHEN we speak of the authority of the Holy Scriptures we do not refer to any claim set up on behalf of these writings by any mere man individually, or by any number of men calling themselves a church or council, synod, assembly, or any other name; but we refer to the claim which the Holy Scriptures themselves assert.

I. We maintain that the Holy Scriptures—i.e., the collection which is commonly known as “the canonical books of the Old and New Testaments”—do assert a claim, not to influence only, but absolutely to control and rule the thoughts and actions of men in relation to God. I refer to Psalms xix. and cxix. in proof.

II. We maintain that this authority of the Holy Scriptures has continued, and will continue, from generation to generation, permanent and unimpaired, and this for two reasons:—

1. Because to the Divine Author of these Holy Scriptures all the future of time was present when He inspired holy men to write them. Unlike human law-givers, who can legislate only for their own ages, and whose laws, therefore, become more or less antiquated and obsolete as time goes on, “The Word of the Lord endureth for ever” (1 Pet. i. 25, in which Isaiah xl. 8 is quoted and endorsed).

2. Because the Holy Scriptures are the vehicle and instrument of the Living God, the Holy Ghost. Herein lies the infinite contrast between “the Scriptures of Truth” and the so-called “Sacred Books” of any and every false religion. The latter are only the mental legacies of men who, by superior force of intellect or will, raised themselves above the mental level of their generation. They are simply the recorded thoughts and imaginations of human creatures that have “returned to their dust,” and whose “thoughts” in “that very day perished,” so far as their own purpose and power to disseminate their thoughts is concerned. Whereas, the Holy Scriptures are “God-breathed”—the product of the energy of the Spirit of God, who still, to-day and evermore, liveth, and who is the present-day Interpreter and Quickener (i.e., impartor of life) to his own written words. So Christ said, “The words that I speak unto you, are spirit and life.”

Recognising this truth, we can understand why the Apostle Paul, in view of the corruption and schisms which would appear in the Church “after his departing,” could so confidently commend the elders of the church at Ephesus “to God (the Holy Ghost) and the Word of his grace;” and again, why the Apostle John, in view of the concentration, in one personal Anti-Christ, of all the anti-Christian errors that “already” abounded, could confidently trust his “little children” to encounter that awful embodiment of evil, because they had received the two-fold gift: (a) The truth—the Word; (b) The unction or anointing—the Holy Spirit (1 John ii. 20, 21, 24).

III. We further maintain that the authority of the Holy Scriptures forms the highest and final appeal for the settlement of spiritual truth. This claim of Scripture itself is asserted in such passages as Isa. viii. 20: “To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.”

IV. Further, the authority of Scripture is universal. Accordingly, the declaration of God’s will in Psalms xlix. is thus prefaced (verses 1, 2): “Hear this, all ye people; give ear, all ye inhabitants of the world.” Also in Psalms l. 1: “The mighty God, even the Lord, hath spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof.”

But it may be objected—the assertion of a claim of authority is one thing; the exercise of it is another. Do the Scriptures really exercise authority?

We answer—every claim to exercise authority presupposes two ways in which the claim may be treated. (1) It may be acknowledged and submitted to; or (2) It may be ignored and resisted. The Holy Scriptures fully recognise the opposition with which their claim to universal authority will be met.

In Ezek. ii. and iii. Jehovah commands the prophet four times to proclaim his words to Israel, “Whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear.” In sending out his Apostles, the Lord Jesus instructs them how they should act when the message was rejected. The Lord Jesus told some who listened to his words, “Ye therefore hear them not, because ye are not of God.” And the Apostle John, echoing his Master’s words, says, “He that is of God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us.”

But, whether acknowledged and submitted to, or ignored and resisted, the authority of Holy Scripture will be exercised, and sooner or later publicly manifested. In relation to the first class, the Scriptures are “able to make wise unto salvation through faith in Christ Jesus.” The message they contain and bring is the power of God unto salvation. All who believe—the happy recipients of salvation—testify with one consent—“Of his own will begat He us by the Word of truth.” In relation to the second class, namely, the despisers of the authority of the Holy Scriptures, that solemnly awful threatening of the Lord Jesus will find its fulfilment: “He that rejecteth Me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day” (John xii. 48).

If I am addressing any rejectors of the authority of Holy Scriptures, let me entreat them to ponder this solemn warning. If you leave this world ignoring the authority of the Scriptures, you have not done with them. “Be sure your sin will find you out” in the last day. Receive the Word of Jesus now, and receive Him, that you may become sons of God.

A Pilot’s Mission.

WHILST spending a few days at Newport, Mon., I became very much interested in the work of the Dolphin-street Cottage Mission. The good brother responsible for this work is John Adams, a Channel pilot. The Lord has laid it upon his heart to be a spiritual pilot to neglected souls out in the dark ocean of sin and unbelief, and right nobly does he seek to guide them into the harbour of rest and peace through believing.

Mr. Adams began this work in 1893. He purchased a house, converted the upper rooms into a mission-room, and gave the lower rooms to a caretaker, free of rent. Invitations were sent out; many who never went to hear the Gospel came, and some confessed Jesus. In the winter time considerable destitution prevailed in the neighbourhood, and a soup-kitchen and a ladies’ sewing-class were organised. The poor people were thus convinced that they were the subjects of genuine sympathy, and listened the more readily to the Divine message. Mr. Adams had so far made no appeal for help, but the good work arrested the attention of several, and money, provisions, clothing, etc., were sent unsolicited. Since then he has published a plain unvarnished story of his work. Every fraction received is fully accounted for.

The work is a heavy tax upon Mr. Adams, as his means are limited, and he has some time felt the burden pressing heavily, as he had to be so much at sea. Surely this is a case where help will be gladly rendered by his fellow-Christians. Mr. Adams’ address is Channel View, Newport, Mon.

J. CALVIN THOMAS.

The Opium Iniquity.

THERE is danger lest we should tamely accept the outcome of the late Royal Commission, and imagine that for the present, at least, duty calls for no further effort towards the suppression of our opium trade with China. We are particularly thankful, therefore, that Rev. F. B. Meyer convened a meeting on the subject at his church in Westminster Bridge-road, last Thursday evening. There was a strong platform, and the speaking was worthy of a greater audience, but the weather proved unfavourable.

In opening the proceedings, Mr. Meyer said that on such a subject the Church of Christ, as the embodiment of the conscience of England, ought to speak out clearly and forcefully. It was his hope that leading churches throughout the country would convene similar meetings, and swell the wave of protest against the evil traffic. We have been lifting our hands in pious horror at the Turkish atrocities in Armenia. Let us look at home, and consider how many Chinamen are being continually done to death through our national action in supplying them with the fatal drug. Do not our recent troubles in so many parts of the world show that God is having a controversy with us as a people, for having abused our sacred trust towards other nations?

Two weighty voices were next heard—those of Mr. Joshua Rowntree and Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., who moved and seconded a long resolution, impeaching the proceedings of the recent Commission and the action of the Indian Government in relation to it. We need not go over what is now painfully familiar ground, but the utterances of these two staunch advocates for righteousness were such as to awaken deep moral indignation at the unfair methods of the Indian Government in the collection or suppression of evidence, and at the inconsequence of the majority report of the Commission.

Another resolution dealing with the evil effects of the use of opium, and calling for the prohibition of its export to China, was powerfully presented by Dr. Maxwell, and supported by Rev. G. Warren, Wesleyan Missionary for China. Dr. Maxwell referred to the ominous fact of the poppy blight in India during the last eight consecutive years, as an indication that God is providentially interposing in this business. In a letter written to the chairman by Mr. B. Broomhall, there were some most impressive statements. He said:—

“If Christian ministers throughout the kingdom, without waiting for the action of any society, would arrange to have this question brought before their people, the connection of our country with this dishonourable trade would soon be brought to an end. As a crime against the human race, and as a dishonour to our country, I know of nothing to equal our opium trade. It surpasses slavery in the depth of the degradation that it involves; it exceeds the evil of intemperance in our own land, in the number of its victims, and the irretrievableness of their ruin.”

We sincerely hope that Mr. Broomhall’s suggestion will be widely adopted, and that influential Christian churches in all parts of the country will join in the protest that ought to go forth against the continuance of our national complicity in this grievous iniquity.

Dr. Cuyler's Jubilee.

HIS REVIEW OF FIFTY YEARS.

THE fiftieth anniversary of the ordination to the ministry of Rev. Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler was celebrated at the Lafayette-avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, on Easter Sunday morning. Dr. Cuyler preached to an immense congregation. He reviewed his work in the pulpit, and the story served as a preface to his discourse, which was entitled "The Angels at the Sepulchre." Dr. Cuyler's preliminary remarks were as follow:—

To me this is peculiarly a golden day, for it completes a happy half-century in the ministry of the glorious Gospel of salvation. Before I announce my Easter text, suffer me to allude briefly to some salient points in my life work. Nowhere could I do it more freely than in this dear old pulpit, which was so long to me a watch tower over the best and kindest of flocks. Fifty years ago, during the first week of April, 1846, I was licensed to preach by the Second Presbytery of Philadelphia. It met in the old stone church that stands on the historic battleground of Germantown. Four weeks afterward, with the diploma of Princeton Theological Seminary in my trunk, and a considerable supply of sound Princeton theology in my head, I started, at four o'clock in the morning, for Wyoming valley, in Northern Pennsylvania. For a few months I preached in that beautiful and classic valley, while the pastor of the Kingston Church went away to recruit his shattered health. My audience was made up of intelligent, God-fearing farmers—men whose talk was not of bullocks, but of the Bible. The sweet fragrance of the clover-fields regaled me on my parochial rides through the verdant valley.

By October I received a call from the little Presbyterian church of Burlington, N.J. My congregation was small, and mostly composed of shoemakers, coachmen, gardeners, and plain folk—just the best sort of material for a young beginner. I aimed my sermons at the coachmen and gardeners, and by that style of gunnery reached the whole of my little congregation. One thing I soon discovered, and that was that the half-dozen highly cultured families in the parish relished simple, spiritual, and earnest sermons quite as much as the gardeners and the shoemakers. The Gospel of Christianity is not a delicate dainty for the fastidious few, or a difficult enigma for acute intellects alone to solve. It is God's simple bread of life for the hungering masses of humanity. There is no greater delusion than the idea that highly-educated parishioners hanker after severely intellectual or abstruse preaching. My eminent Philadelphia lawyer once said to me: "I don't come to church to have my brains taxed. I come to have my heart and life made better. The two prime essentials to me are simplicity in presenting the Gospel, and downright blood earnestness." That sentiment, from so high an authority, gave me a world of encouragement. Simple Bible truth, made red-hot with love, is what this sin-plagued world most needs. "Preaching up to this age," is a thin pretext to cover a vast deal of arid philosophizing in the pulpit. My first year's work was very disheartening as to results, and I was foolish enough to think about "fleeing away to Tarshish." My Master mercifully headed me off by a powerful revival, which began suddenly in a little prayer-meeting, and such a wonderful descent of the Holy Spirit I have never seen surpassed in all my half-century ministry. I learned more practical theology during those six weeks than I had learned during any six months in the seminary.

My next call was to become the first pastor of the newly-organised third Presbyterian Church of Trenton, N.J. The walls of that sanctuary that I helped to rear stand to-day four square to all the winds of heaven. The church within these walls lives with undiminished vigour, although I have outlived every elder, deacon, and trustee who was on my working staff during that pleasant pastorate. A sweet halo of romance still lingers over that Trenton ministry, for on a certain Sabbath morning there appeared in my congregation one whom a kind Providence had predestinated to be the joy and pride of my heart and home, and the clear-eyed, sagacious, and unselfish counsellor in every emergency of my life.

From Trenton that same providential hand led me to the next stage of my life work, in the good old Reformed Dutch Church in Market-street, New York. As a descendant from a Holland ancestry, I am glad to have spent seven happy years in a church that bore the ancient motto of William the Silent's commonwealth on its escutcheon, and I seldom cross yonder bridge without a grateful look at the short, stumpy tower of the venerable edifice. What swarms of young men filled those galleries on Sunday evenings, many of whom have since filled high positions in the commercial and religious history of New York. The glorious revival of 1858, in which I laboured daily for six months, made those old walls ring with resounding praise. It was a short journey, but a most eventful one, that brought me across the river in April, 1860, to become the first installed pastor of this beloved church. I need not occupy one precious moment now in recounting the story of my thirty years' pastorate here. That story has been told here more than once, and has been preserved in two printed volumes which you have kindly issued. As I look now into your faces, I can say, as the old pastor at Ephesus said to his flock, "I take you to record this day, that I shunned not to declare unto you all the counsel of God." What has been the net outcome of my fifty years' ministry, even with all its imperfections on its head? As far as I can tabulate it in cold figures, the record is as follows:—

I have preached about five thousand sermons and made pastoral visits innumerable. I have delivered a vast number of public addresses on behalf of missions, Sunday-schools, Young Men's Christian Associations, and negro emancipation, and total abstinence, and the suppression of the iniquitous drink traffic, and various other moral reforms. During the forty-three years spent in a pastorate I received two thousand four hundred and twenty persons into church-membership on confession of their faith in Christ. Seventy-four tracts from my pen have been issued by the American Tract Society, the National Temperance Society, and other boards of publication. I have written fifteen books, of which six are translated into the Swedish and two into the Dutch language. As far as spiritual results are concerned, I reckon my widest work has been the publication of about four thousand articles for the religious newspapers, which have taken the wings of the morning and flown to the uttermost parts of the earth. It would be within bounds to say that these articles have reached a circulation of over two hundred millions of copies. By careful husbandry of such physical strength as God has given me I have never spent one of these more than twenty-five hundred Sabbaths on a bed of sickness, and as the great clock of time booms out to-day the last note of fifty years, I am not too deaf to hear the solemn and the not unwelcome sound.

I have now given you briefly the condensed record of the ministry which I must soon carry up and lay at my blessed Master's feet. Fervently do I thank my God for that faithful widowed mother who dedicated me to this ministry, in my cradle, and who was more than pastor or church or Sabbath-school to me in my childhood. Fervently do I thank God for having been rooted and grounded in the sound theology formulated in the Westminster Confession. That anchor has never dragged. Fervently, too, do I thank God for giving me such a sublimely glorious Gospel to preach, such an all sufficient doctrine of atoning blood to proclaim, such precious promises of his Holy Spirit's presence, and such verifications of this self-evidencing Book. No gales of any so-called "higher criticism" have ever blown high enough to ruffle a single feather of my faith in the perfect inspiration, the perfect infallibility, and the perfect authority of the only Bible which our Heavenly Father has given to his children. Devout scholarship, however searching and fearless, from Martin Luther to MacLaren and Bishop Lightfoot, has never dislodged a single stone in the massive and magnificent bulwark which Moses began to build, and which the Seer of Patmos completed. As for the arrogant, irreverent, and bitterly hostile criticism which has taken on such airs, much of it is sheer conjecture, much of it is self-contradictory, much of it is refuted hypothesis, and when all these have been subtracted there is not enough left to stop the hole which a mouse nibbles in your wainscot.

I have aimed to make my preaching thoroughly tonic, and to keep abreast with the times and with the majestic marchings of God's Providence toward the full redemption of the human race. Fervently also do I thank my Master for the privileges of having comforted some sorrowing hearts and cheered some shadowed homes, and helped some burdened ones to carry their heavy loads, and guided some children and young men and maidens into the only path that leads heavenward. Above all, I rejoice to have led some immortal souls to the cross of the crucified Son of God. My humble testimony is that the highest glory of the ministry is to exalt the Cross of Calvary, and the highest joy of life is to sweeten and strengthen the lives and to save the souls of our fellow-creatures. To serve Him gives such delight that to-day I would not stoop to pick up a monarch's crown.

Stundism in Russia.—An Odessa correspondent states:—The South Russian Press is again urging the Government to take speedy measures to prevent the growth of Stundism in the southern and western provinces. It is stated that this great movement among the peasants has not been destroyed by the severe enactments directed against it, that the efforts of its leaders have been only diverted into secret channels, and that unless instant steps are taken to counteract it the movement is certain to spread to the large towns, and to Great Russia, where it will be almost impossible to grapple with it.

The-Congo Balolo Mission.

THIS Mission having completed seven years of service, the friends and supporters assembled in Exeter Hall on Tuesday last to praise God for the progress made, and to devise means for further extension. Lord OVERTOUN presided, and many earnest supporters of the work were among the audience which filled the large hall. The missionaries present included representatives of all the societies at work on the Congo, namely, the English Baptists, the American Baptists, the Congo-Balolo, and the International Missionary Alliance. In connection with the last-named, an American Institution, twenty-four new missionaries are about to leave for work in Central Africa. Among the friends whose absence was regretted was Dr. Gratian Guinness, who was detained in Edinburgh through the dangerous illness of a relative.

In the devotional service with which the meeting opened, Revs. G. H. C. Macgregor and F. B. Meyer took part. The Chairman's address was full of sympathy with mission work. After speaking of the needs of the Dark Continent, and the way in which, during the past generation, they have been pressed upon the attention of Christian people, he referred to the many doors at present wide open and waiting for the entrance of the messengers of the Gospel. He saw tokens of a bright future. The lives that have been laid down in Africa are God's assurance that, from the seed sown there will spring up, not many days hence, a plentiful harvest. Urging greater interest in missionary literature, his lordship pointed out that the reports issued by the various mission agencies contain stories and information that should be more generally read by Christian people. In conclusion, he called attention to Psalms ii. 8, "Ask of Me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." If addressed to Christ, these words also appeal to those who are united with Him; and to-day the words come to each of us, "Ask of Me, and I will give," etc. While praying for God's kingdom to come, we should, realising the steady tread of men and women down to darkness and death, earnestly put our hands to the promotion of missionary enterprise.

REV. CHARLES HARVEY, who for sixteen years has laboured in Central Africa, at first in connection with the old Livingstone Mission, and latterly in connection with the American Baptists, described some of the joys and sorrows of his work. Experience had assured him that, even among barbarians, nothing ought to precede or take the place of the Gospel. Education, industrial training, medical care, and civilisation are all very good; but these were not the prime object of missionary enterprise. Christianity will lead to these, and provide them in their best form. When he arrived on the Congo he was told to devote himself to the instruction of the people in gardening and thrift; he was also told that it would be useless to expect in the present generation any fruit of Gospel teaching. With his own eyes, however, he had seen that, by the power of God, the Gospel can convert men who have been the vilest and most degraded heathens. He warned his hearers against entertaining the idea that the work has been adequately taken up in Africa. There are scores of nations accessible to the Gospel, and traders and others with worldly interests are going in among them. He appealed for more missionaries, saying that there is room for the active operation of more societies than the few which already exist.

DR. HARRY GUINNESS

followed with a brief sketch of the work, illustrated by limelight views. Pictures of brutalised natives showed the need of Africa; and other pictures, presenting mission stations, and portraits of workers, afforded some idea of the work that has been done. There was no element of entertainment in the proceedings; solemn facts and fervent appeals arrested attention and caused many searchings of heart. The woes of Africa did not monopolise the story; God has given signal blessing where the Gospel has been preached. Only a limited region was described; and, in conclusion, having shown how little, comparatively, has been effected, Dr. Guinness appealed for funds to open a station on the Juapa River. Slips of paper were distributed among the audience, and the amounts promised came to a total of £750. Moreover, £111 was collected; and it is hoped that additional sums will be sent to Harley House, so as to justify the proposed extension. Two Congo lads were on the platform, and one of them performed on some native drums, showing how the various calls and alarms are made to the tribesmen, and how "music" is produced, as an accompaniment to dancing, on festive occasions.

An earnest address followed by Rev. W. Y. FULLERTON, of Leicester, whose interest in the work may be judged from the fact that the church over which he presides has six missionaries in Africa, with a seventh preparing to go out. Giving to God's cause was eulogised, and commended on various grounds. God gave his Son for the work of redemption; Christ gave Himself to save men. "It is more blessed to give than to receive," was the text of the address, which was a fitting ending to an enthusiastic meeting.

The Gospel in Russia.

A SAILOR, converted some time ago in the Welcome Home, Ratcliff Highway, and now witnessing for Christ in a remote part of the Russian Empire, writes as follows. Many will be deeply interested in his humble efforts, in these isolated people, and in the fact he mentions as to abiding fruit from one address delivered fifteen years ago:—

"The Lord is enabling me to glorify Him in this strange and dark land. The people are hungry and thirsty to hear the Gospel, but the way is full of difficulties. Police, priests, Satan, are all doing their utmost, but I am still alive, and have lifted up Christ every day, and He is saving souls. I have seen more than one interesting case of conversion. I visited an old and sick merchant, who had been a great sinner and Sabbath-breaker. I read the Word and prayed with him, and God awakened a longing after Christ. One day came a policeman, and examined me and my papers, desiring to know all about me. I told him to come next day and see my work, so he came with his horse and sleigh, and we went to see the old man, who, as we entered the door, cried out, 'You myn of God, I have been waiting for you day and night. Have you more to say about the sinner's friend, Jesus?' I went on my knees, and asked God to give us something. I then read from the Word, and explained it, closing with prayer for the sick man and the police-officer. That man is now saved, and at present I have perfect liberty to go from house to house and preach the Word. But the priests are more to be feared than the police. Still I visit some 200 houses, and hold several small meetings. Invitations come from other towns, but as yet I feel I must stay here.

"There are several of God's children in this district, but they are secret, and dare not come out. Most of them have received the Word from English travellers. Dr. Baedeker preached here some fifteen years ago, only once, but souls were saved, and are still testifying to the keeping power; and this is a marvel, considering their isolated and persecuted position, with no one to teach them. Hence I sow the seed in great hope. Pray for these lonely disciples, and for the poor dark people, who so greatly need the Gospel."

The Home of Industry.

THE monthly workers' meeting, held on Wednesday week, at this busy centre of loving, faithful service, was largely attended. Miss MACPHERSON presented, in opening, some facts as to the home work. One of her leading thoughts was to show how the really necessitous poor have to be sought out in their little homes by ministering women, patient to win their confidence, and willing to supply their need. Special reference was also made to the blessing granted during the last three months in Bird Fair. The faithful band who maintain a Gospel testimony in the East-end Lord's Day saturnalia are sometimes sadly few in number, but God is bringing out fresh witnesses from the people themselves. Some of the most hopeless characters have been won to Christ. It was deeply interesting to learn that the pugilist whose conversion under the arch in Bird Fair was recorded some time ago, has been blessed to seven of his own relations. Our sister called for earnest and constant prayer for this and all genuine evangelisation among the careless and indifferent.

Praise was also rendered for the safe arrival of the seventieth party of young emigrants in Canada. This band of seventy boys and girls went out under the charge of Mr. James Merry, who, to prevent a threatened breakdown in his voice, has been ordered to rest awhile from public speaking.

Rev. F. B. MEYER gave an address on Phil. iii. 12, 13, in which the apostle is speaking not as the founder of great churches, or the writer of inspired Epistles, which shall last as long as the world endures, but as a fellow believer, a man of like passions with ourselves. In this passage he regards his conversion as an arrest—an arrest with a definite purpose. How many never discover that Jesus Christ has a purpose in their lives; has redeemed them for his own definite aim. If they be willing and obedient, this will unfold as they move forward in four ways: an inward impulse, the advice of godly counsellors, the teaching of the Word of God, and the circumstances of daily life. While fully and implicitly believing in the truth of imputed righteousness as our justification, Mr. Meyer urged the importance of knowing more of the imparted righteousness. We have to learn not only substitution that Christ died for us; but also identification that we died with Him and in Him. This apprehended, we will surely seek to be wholly his, to be out-and-out for Him, to be anointed with the unction of the Holy Ghost, so that, forgetting the things behind, we may press forward to the things that are before, that He may perform in us all that He apprehended us for.

"My Bible."

DEAR SIR,—I have just received THE CHRISTIAN of March 19, and read with such pleasure the article on "My Bible." My heart fully entered into and appreciated the thoughts expressed by the writer. It is certainly not a book read by all Christians, because most do not know how to read, and only open it here and there now and then.

I have the great privilege to educate my own children, and morning, noon, and night we have the joy of reading aloud by turn God's Word, thus going through the whole Bible in a year. When in joy it is the only book where I can find expression to my inmost feelings, and in sorrow bring comfort to my soul.

I must thank you for THE CHRISTIAN, which contains so many helpful thoughts. We are delighted with the "Children's Page."—Yours in the Lord,
MARIE SJÖSTRÖM.

THE EVANGELIST.

"Not Heads, but Souls."

WHILE conducting a series of nightly evangelistic meetings in a colonial town some time ago, we thought of trying some afternoon meetings as well, so we intimated one such as an experiment. The result seemed rather discouraging at the outset, the total number in attendance being five—four ladies and one gentleman. The local minister, taking me to one side, suggested dismissing the few people, saying that he did not think it worth while expending the energy necessary to conducting the meeting for so few people. Replying to him, however, that long ago the Lord had taught me that "THOUGH A LITTLE THING MAY BE A LITTLE THING, FAITHFULNESS IN LITTLE THINGS IS A VERY GREAT THING," I went on with the meeting.

Three of the ladies present had driven in from the country, some miles, and had intended returning home immediately afterwards; but, as subsequent events proved, they had been so taken hold of by the Spirit of the Lord that they decided to remain for the evening meeting. At that meeting we had the joy of seeing all three at the penitent form.

Two days later my host informed me that a gentleman had called to see me. On going into the sitting-room, I found it was the gentleman who had made one of my congregation of five, and he immediately expressed his desire to know how he could be saved.

Two or three weeks after leaving the place, I received a letter from a local Christian gentleman, telling me of the sudden and unexpected death of the lady whose presence completed the number of five in that afternoon meeting. On her death-bed she had given clear and definite testimony of the change occasioned in her heart and life by the words spoken that day.

Frequently, since then, when I have had to speak in small meetings, or have found myself in discouraging circumstances, the recollection of the above incident has been a great means of cheer to me; so I pass it on for the help and encouragement of those who may be tempted at times to think their opportunities are few or limited as compared with others. Though God in his goodness permitted me to know of the sequel in the lives of all the people mentioned, may it not be that there is often much similar result from our witnessing which does not come to our knowledge, but which shall be found after many days, when we shall hear the Master say: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." THE GOSPEL OF JESUS. CHRIST.

Ho! Everyone that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come!

Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink.

Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into Everlasting Life.

I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely.

Let him that is athirst come, and whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.

Isa. lv. 1. John vii. 37. John iv. 14. Rev. xxi. 6. Rev. xxii. 17.

The Religious Tract Society.—In connection with the ninety-seventh anniversary, Rev. Sir Emilius Laurie, Bart., preached on Sunday morning, in St. John's, Paddington, on behalf of its missionary operations. The preacher, who was for upwards of twenty years the vicar of this church, as Rev. Emilius Bayley, was succeeded by Rev. Gilbert Karney. The subject of the discourse was the parable of the seed growing secretly, and the inherent vitality of the Word of God was effectively illustrated and enforced. The self-evidencing character of the Gospel may be regarded as its greatest evidential value in times of the most acute criticism. Reverting to the R.T.S., he said its one work was to bear witness for Christ, as shown in the Christian vitality of its tracts and books, and the other ways in which it circulated Christian truth both at home and abroad.

Mission to French Priests.

ONE of the greatest encouragements in the work of evangelisation in France arises at present from the conversion of priests, who leave the Church of Rome to become "obedient to the faith." This is a recurrence of what was witnessed, to the great joy of the disciples, in the primitive Church at Jerusalem (Acts vi. 7). "This 'faith,' when it has taken hold of a heart, is stronger than all the considerations which might tend to keep men of education and thought in a system of error. These new brethren 'esteem the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt' (Heb. xi. 26), and they bring to us a real strength, not only by reason of personal worth, intellectual, oratorical, etc., but by their exemplary courage and display of zeal. Several of them are already engaged in evangelistic work, notably in the south-west, in the neighbourhood of La Rochelle and Bordeaux. In August last I gave some account of the new Reformation, which is now in course of manifestation.

The Lord gives blessed fruit to the labour of these converts, who are now preaching with ardour and power the pure Gospel of grace and of free salvation. Others, with a view to similar work, are going through a preparatory course in the theological schools, notably in the excellent Faculty of Neuchâtel, celebrated for the faithful teaching of Professor Godet. Thus does God answer, magnificently, our prayers that He will "send forth labourers into his harvest." He draws from the sides of "the great mountain, which is to become a plain" (Zech. iv. 7), defaced stones, which, when cut and polished, He uses in the construction of the new temple, spiritual and true, of our Divine Zerubabel. Such a token of the work of the Spirit in the "Body of Christ," which is the Church, should interest Christians beyond the confines of France. I think our brethren in England, Scotland, and Ireland will be happy to share our joy, and to hear further particulars of the progress of the kingdom of God.

Professor L. J. Bertrand, director-treasurer of the Œuvre des Prêtres, who is already well-known to your readers, is about to visit Great Britain*, with a delegation of the committee of the Mission, for the purpose of addressing meetings and collecting such gifts as the Lord may put it into the hearts of his servants to devote to this enterprise. He will be accompanied by the Abbé Bourrier, until lately vicar of one of the parishes of Marseilles, who, on leaving the Roman Catholic Church, wrote to his bishop a letter, of which one cannot but admire the force and dignity (see THE CHRISTIAN, NOV. 14 last). A man of sound judgment and faith, of prayer and experience (he is forty-four years of age), we consider him one of the best recruits of recent days to the cause of the Gospel in France. He takes with him the Romish cassock he wore when he came to us in order to join our Mission. I trust that the political difficulties which have agitated our Foreign Offices will not stand in the way of sympathy for our work being shown by the Christians of Great Britain. EUG. REVEILLAUD.

Missionary Helps.

CROSSING over one of our most beautiful harbours last summer, and watching the fine, roomy yachts that lay at anchor, I was struck with the thought—Why cannot some one of the Lord's servants, gifted with ample means and a loving heart, make use of his yacht as a missionary agency? Would it not be a happy thing to invite a party of foreign missionaries at home on furlough to join in a cruise round our coast for a month, calling at the various ports and holding missionary and evangelistic services? The circumstances of many of our missionaries are very limited, and such a holiday in a fine summer such as we are looking for would be a splendid treat for their families, and would surely arouse fresh interest wherever the yacht might call. Is not this, or something like this, a privilege waiting for someone? A LOVER OF MISSIONS.

* We are glad to announce that Prof. Bertrand is now in England. He is accompanied by the Abbé Bourrier, and letters to him may be addressed, 21, Upper Woburn-place, W.C.

Protection of Young Girls.

THE Marquis of Lorne presided at the sixty-first annual meeting of the Princess Louise Home, held in St. James's Hall on Saturday last. There was a large and influential attendance. The institution has for its main object the rescuing of young girls from following a course of evil into which they may have been led. It also opens its doors to all young females who are in circumstances of danger. It has saved about sixteen hundred such girls, and has now 106 under its care at Norbiton. With such an object, and with such results, it cannot but commend itself to the sympathy and support of all.

The annual report, read by the secretary (Mr. Reginald Drake), showed that the income for the past year had amounted to £3161, exceeding the expenditure by £550. The committee have put forward a proposal for the erection of a new school-room and a new range of wash-houses, at an estimated cost of £2500. The chairman said that the project would certainly pay them back as a good investment, and at the same time be a very useful philanthropy.

Field-Marshal Sir LINTORN SIMMONS alluded to the marked success that has attended the working of the school connected with the Home. One of the girls had been so successful as to justify her being specially prepared with a view to her passing the examination for a Queen's Scholarship, by which, should she succeed, she would be recognised by Government as an assistant mistress, and take a good position in life. Some of the girls who had gone out of the institution as laundry maids had given such satisfaction that employers had been induced to increase their subscriptions to the Home. General Mercer, Archdeacon Baly, Rev. T. Waring, and C. H. Lake also spoke.

On God's Throne.

Rev. iii. 21.

1.

O GRACIOUS Lord, thy words are wonderful. They seem too high, these promises of thine, Too vast for Thee to give or us to take. How could we sit with Thee upon thy throne And reign with Thee in glory? Blessed Lord! Thou meanest all Thou say'st; and yet 'tis strange. We hoped to clasp thy blessed feet in heaven, Low-worshipping with tears of love and joy. A precious boon; enough for Thee to give.

2.

And yet, O Christ, we dare not limit Thee, Nor judge the largeness of thy heart of love By our heart's narrowness. It is not strange. Oh let us share thine own majestic thoughts As far as earthly may unearthly share! For surely not too great for Thee to give, Is even that "eternal weight of glory," And all that bliss ecstatic, measureless. For giving never doth impoverish Thee, And when Thou giv'st Thou giv'st right royally Selected gifts from thine unbounded store, Nor could thy heart be satisfied with less.

3.

And yet it seems too much for us to take. How could we bear the load?—we are but worms. Our being trembles at the immensity; The shrinking soul cries out. "O Lord, give less!"

4.

Yet, no; that fear is but mistrust of Thee, For Thou canst pour thy life into the soul, And fill our mortal being with a might Immortal. Thou canst make these eyes of flesh Undazzled gaze on radiance infinite, Streaming all cloudless from the eternal throne. Lord, we believe; help Thou our unbelief.

5.

Yet, O most loving Lord, hear one request. Ev'n when our feet have scaled the heights of heaven, Let the remembrance cleave unto the soul Of all the weakness, all the worthlessness, And all the errors of its life on earth— So, through the Sabbath of eternity, While the great ages roll in golden calm, The soul shall grow in meek humility, And still, as it clings close to Thyself, More deeply feel that all it has is thine!

A Splendid "P.S.A."

THE "Pleasant Sunday Afternoon" movement has come in for severe criticism in many quarters where apprehension has been felt lest it be only a respectable way of lowering the tone of the Lord's Day. But the fact is, the movement cannot be judged as a whole, for its character depends entirely on the individual leader in each individual place. Given a spiritually-minded man at the head, and that "P.S.A." will be thoroughly spiritual in its character and tone; the reverse being the case with a man of the opposite stamp. It has been proved over and over again that there is no indisposition on the part of the working-man to listen to the Gospel, when set forth in a clear and manly way, and this is the case with the P.S.A. held at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, E., under the genial and spiritual presidency of Dr. Barnardo. This branch is three years old, and on Monday night was en fête to celebrate the occasion. The report, read by Mr. W. R. Nicoll (co-vice-president with Mr. S. E. Burrow, both indefatigable workers), stated that the roll of members shows 1034 names—824 men and 260 women. It may be mentioned that the men and women on Sundays meet in separate halls, but on this occasion they were all present, and a noble show they made. Furthermore, the report declared, "success has not been purchased by any lowering of tone or unworthy methods. The Gospel character of the work has been steadily kept in view, the Gospel having been faithfully presented at every meeting, and several members have been won for Christ during the year."

The statistics of the report are noteworthy. A Visitation Committee looks up any member absent three Sundays in succession, 1450 visits having, from this and other causes, been made; but on the other hand, an unavoidable leakage goes on through removals; but there is compensation even in this, for many of those who go to live elsewhere take with them the good influences under which they have been brought. A Benevolent Fund has also a worthy place. Temperance is kept judiciously to the front. A "poor man's lawyer" generously gives his services when required; and last but not least there is the Book Fund, which is one of the most interesting features of the whole work. Each member pays 1d. a week; if not less than nine attendances are recorded in the quarter, and the payments are made up to 1s. 1d., the member receives a "first-class" book; seven attendances and payments made up to 1s. secure a "second-class" book. Thus 2975 books have been distributed during the year, representing no less a sum than £204 2s. 7d., besides forming a convenient check on the weekly attendance.

Our space forbids enlargement of this sketch of a work which is characterised by the same go-ahead spirit which pervades all branches of Dr. Barnardo's widespread endeavour. The anniversary meeting was thoroughly typical of the whole. Plenty of good music, and addresses clear with Gospel testimony, were the order of the evening, the speakers being Dr. Harry Guinness, Mr. George Morgan, Mr. G. R. Cairns (of Chicago), and, of course, the worthy Doctor himself.

"Welcome Mission," Portsmouth.—The anniversary services in connection with the opening of this Mission house and hall were held on Sunday and Monday, last week. Two praise meetings were led by Mr. Hogben, the director, on Sunday morning, and in the afternoon and evening Mr. William Baker, M.A., gave two addresses on "Egypt and the Way Out" and "The Wilderness and the Way Through." The day's service closed with a testimony meeting. On Monday, Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant gave two helpful Bible readings. The meeting in the afternoon was presided over by Rev. F. Baldey, of St. Simon's, and that in the evening by Captain Riley, of the King's Own Rifles. A large number of ministers in the town expressed their interest in the work, and Mr. Hogben stated that week by week during the past year evidences of the saving power of God had been given in the services and appealed for help to meet the expense of a tent and a series of summer efforts in the outlying and needy districts of the town. On Thursday, Rev. T. E. Warner, B.A., and members of St. Simon's Mission, conducted a most helpful Gospel temperance meeting, when one of our young blue-jackets came out boldly for Christ.

Mr. Hudson Taylor in India.

WE HAVE had the privilege of a ten days' visit from Mr. and Mrs. Hudson Taylor, who are now on their way back to China, really strengthened, I believe, by their visit to the Himalayas. Mr. Taylor spoke twice in the Union Church at Darjeeling (he had previously addressed several meetings in Calcutta, Benares, and Agra), but it was mainly for the purpose of conference with regard to the future of the Tibetan Mission Band that the visit was made.

Our four brethren from Kalimpong came over, and with the exception of Mrs. Mackenzie all the members of our party were present; and together we spent a week of most helpful and profitable conference, with Bible readings morning and evening, and business in the time between. It has now been arranged that the Tibetan Mission Band become associates of the China Inland Mission, and while retaining distinctive name, character, aim, and unity, the members agree to learn the Chinese language in addition to the Tibetan, and to act under the direction of the director and sub-director of the C.I.M. It is hoped that this arrangement will commend itself to the friends and supporters of this Tibetan Mission, and that our friends will understand that while securing the experience and wisdom of the leaders of the C.I.M. at home and abroad, the original aim of the mission to evangelise all Tibet as the way opens is in no way altered.

Mr. Hudson Taylor heartily concurred in this desire, and consented to this special C.I.M. Tibetan effort. Six of our brethren—Brothers Souttar, Neave, Lorransen, Moyes, Amundsen, and Johanson—are leaving Calcutta (D.V.) for Shanghai, March 22, and will spend six months at Ganking as a preliminary. Mr. and Mrs. Mackenzie will live with us here in Ghoom during the present year. Later, we hope to be able to move round to the China frontier of Tibet. So far as present arrangements go, Mr. Sharp retains his office as treasurer and secretary of the Mission, while my present position is also unaltered. Mr. Sharp has the benefit of the assistance of the C.I.M. London Council. Henceforth, contributions may be sent either to Mr. Sharp, or to the C.I.M. treasurer, Newington Green, London (marked for Tibetan Mission), while intending candidates may apply to either of the above, and will be passed by the C.I.M. Council, of which Mr. Sharp is a member.

We commend the above arrangement to the prayers of the Lord's people, and especially to those who have a close interest in Tibet. We ourselves are truly grateful to God for his guidance and help. While making the China border our basis of operations, we for the present retain Darjeeling. Our band will henceforth be known as the China Inland Mission Tibetan Band.

Union Hall Mission.

An interesting meeting was recently held at Union Hall. During the winter months a weekly class was established for teaching the blind to read and write. This class has been most encouraging, and the opportunity thus given has been used in seeking to press home the importance of eternal things. Last week about 120 blind men and women sat down to tea with their guides and their friends. Through the kindness of the master twenty blind inmates of the Marylebone Workhouse were allowed to attend.

After the meal Gospel addresses were given, and it was a sight long to be remembered to gaze upon the many sightless faces upturned to the speaker, and to mark the various expressions, some lit up with joy and peace, others seeming interested and enquiring, while yet others, and those happily but few, appeared indifferent and unconcerned.

It is hoped to continue these special gatherings from time to time as opportunities occur and funds permit.

The committee who are now carrying on the mission gratefully acknowledge the blessing God has given to their efforts during the past year, and they heartily invite all who are interested in the work to join them at the annual meeting to be held (D.V.) in the Hall, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road, on April 30, at 4 and 7 p.m.

C. STUART TURNER.

Mrs. Hilton's Crèche.

DEAR FRIENDS,—I am receiving many inquiries as to the future of the institutions founded by my late wife. With one accord all say, "The Institutions must go on." Many have promised to continue their interest and their contributions, but the way to arrange matters does not seem clear to me at the moment. I cry day and night that the Lord will open up some way, and I trust he will.

The work of the past has been a personal one. My dear wife's interest in and love for the poor and their children have been so wonderful that I can hardly expect to see her place filled. Yet the institutions, under wise Christian care and management, may continue to be an inestimable blessing. My hope and prayer is that some servant of the Lord, having the confidence of the Christian public, will have faith to take the institutions over as they stand. I should be glad to hear of such a one, who would, I am sure, be helped and blessed.

Failing this, I and my family will do our best to keep the institutions going for a little time till I can consult subscribers with a view of forming a committee to take them over. But something must be done promptly, as the responsibility is too great for me to bear.—Sincerely yours, JOHN HILTON.

Shore House, Shore-road, South Hackney.

In the presence of a very large company of sympathizing friends, the remains of the late Mrs. Hilton were interred on Tuesday last week, in the Friends' place of burial at Wanstead. It was extremely pathetic to see around the grave so many of the poor women from the East-end, who had been helped in their life-struggles by their departed friend. At the customary meeting for worship in the Friends' meeting house, before the interment, a touching address was given by one of the lady Friends; she made mention of Mrs. Hilton's loving and Christ-like ministry among the children and their relatives, and spoke words of hope and cheer to any present who might have fallen under the power of sin, and were desiring to be restored to God's conscious favour.

Alliance House, Blankenburg.

We look back with gratitude to the past winter, in which the Lord has given us much blessing in leading souls to Him. We had a full Sunday-school, and our meetings were well attended, particularly those in the scattered villages of the Thuringian Forest. We may also state that the prejudices against Alliance principles in Germany are gradually, though slowly, decreasing, and The Allianzblatt, the paper which we have edited since 1890, and by which we hope to promote these principles, shows a steady increase of readers.

In January we had the joy of a visit from our dear friend, Dr. Baedeker, and from May 1 to the end of June Pastor Jellinghaus intends being with us for the purpose of giving Bible-readings for Christian workers of both sexes. We should be glad if English Christians seeking rest and fellowship were to join us during the summer. The new railway line, passing through one of our lovely valleys, now makes it possible, by leaving London by the evening train, to reach us about the same hour in the evening of the following day.

Aged Blind at the Seaside.—The Homes for Aged Christian Blind Men and Women appeal for aid to establish a seaside permanent home for the blind, the partially blind, and those who work on their behalf. They are often called upon to deal with most painful and pathetic appeals from those who have just enough sight to exclude them from all charities for the blind, but who at the same time have not sufficient vision to in any way earn their own living. Southend-on-Sea is considered highly adapted for this purpose. It is easy of access. The travelling expense is but small. There is no change of trains; this is a great consideration for the blind. Steps are being taken to secure a freehold house in this most healthy and pleasant part, close to sea and stations, in every way suitable to the purpose for which it is required. The cost, including furniture, is anticipated to be about £1650. Towards this sum £742 has been paid, or promised. The committee are anxious to obtain the promises of those who sympathise in this movement, so that when all the arrangements are completed the home may be opened free of debt. The superintendents are Rev. Henry and Mrs. Bright, 77, Hanley-road, Crouch Hill, N.

The Military Church in Rome.

THE Military Church recently celebrated the twenty-third anniversary of its first observance of the Lord's Supper. This witness to the faith in Rome is a grand proof of the power of God, for the Roman priests are trying all in their power to draw away the soldiers. They send emissaries to the corners of the streets leading to our church, inducing the men to go to confession. It is true, also, that the war in Africa has robbed us of several hundreds of our brethren. In the fatal battle of Abba Carima many lost their lives who were with us at the Holy Supper last Christmas. In spite of all obstacles, the church goes on flourishing, and here in Rome, in face of the Vatican, the Gospel of Christ can be freely preached, and is heard with joy by those who are hungering and thirsting for the word of life.

Signor Filippini presented to the Lord the wants of humanity, and the president, Rev. H. J. Piggott, spoke of the liberation of the children of Israel from the bondage of Egypt on the night of the Paschal supper. Without describing these, and the beautiful hymns that were sung, I will briefly note my own feelings. Before I knew the truth there lodged in my heart intolerance, hatred, and pride. I thought God was indebted to me, rather than I to God; but now, since I have learnt the pure Gospel, and love to God and to my neighbour, I feel myself a new creature, and animated with true Christian zeal. I feel the necessity of making known to others what I have learnt myself.

We have all the same sacred obligation, and in this we do but imitate our beloved pastor, to make ourselves the centres of further Christian endeavour. The world may laugh at us, as it will, because we do not follow in the current of its ways, but it can never really harm us. Forward then, ever forward, and after our days of trial will come our triumph.

The service having been concluded with a hymn and the Benediction, Bibles were distributed to the new brethren. And now let us thank God, that even in this sad year of trial to Italy and our army, He has still been pleased to give us a new proof of His love, in that He has allowed us once more to celebrate with joy this our solemn feast day.

GIOVANNI ARAGONA, Sergeant.

Industrial Mission Effort, India.

I THINK nothing is plainer to old missionaries in this country than that something must be done to develop larger resources for mission work in India itself. The protracted difficulties into which the hard times have drawn most of the missionary societies of England and America, gives added emphasis to the need of Indian developments of some wise and promising sort. To me it has ever seemed a plain duty, that we should help our converts to some more productive condition, that they may be able to cope with coming responsibilities. If the productive ability of the heathen did not continually increase under the fostering care of British rule, it would not perhaps be so urgent, but would nevertheless be needful. The churches of America and England cannot always carry on the Christian work of India.

God has helped me at this place to develop to a very satisfactory state of productiveness a village, from which we now shall realise Rs. 2500 per annum for the Lord's work. This enterprise is not for the support of American missionaries, but for the support of Christian work among the heathen by native helpers. This with the contributions of the native Christian church of about Rs. 10 per head per annum, with the aid of some Christians here, gives about all the funds needed for the support of more than a dozen good preachers. Our need now here is for a few more valuable workers.

What God has done with and for us here we desire to do for a greater field east of us, known as Bastar State. We have the land and have made some commencement there, toward the development of such a station in the capital of Bastar as we have here. To develop those lands and build hospital, school, and missionary home, etc., will take not less than Rs. 25,000. But develop that enterprise and we shall have means for the support of an evangelising force for all time, equal to the needs of the 200,000 souls that now sit in heathen darkness within fifty miles of Jagdalpur.

Gospel Literature in China.

THE twentieth annual report of the Central China Religious Tract Society is in many respects cheering. Dr. Griffith John, whose heart and soul are in the work, has just completed his fortieth year of missionary toil in China. The introductory page of the report remarks: "From the very commencement of his missionary career Dr. John recognised the need of a cheap Christian literature as an essential adjunct to the labours of the preacher of the Gospel." The publications sold last year numbered 1,095,000, a larger total than in any previous year.

In the course of an address at the public meeting at Hankow, Dr. John said: "I feel thankful to God that the war between China and Japan has come to an end, and that this great empire is still entire. It is impossible to say what the future of China may be; but I for one am glad that the empire has not been broken up, and that another opportunity has been given to this great people to repent and reform. I feel thankful that God has given us to see that this war was not permitted to take place in vain. China's pride has been humbled, and China's sleep has been disturbed. We are hearing, in these days, of railway and other schemes, and of the introduction of innovations of various kinds."

"I am glad that God has given us to see that the riots of Szechwan, and the tragedy of Kucheng, have not been permitted to take place in vain. The degradation of the Szechwan Viceroy, and about twenty more officials, high and low, has wrought wonders. The riots did not affect our circulation. The importance of the work cannot be over-estimated. I believe that there are thousands, perhaps tens of thousands, of persons who are standing between the two kingdoms as a result of the reading of Christian books. In colportage work, everything depends upon the men employed.

"I think we ought to set about enlarging the catalogue of our publications, by printing and publishing some of the works which we now regard as standard. It is a great privilege to have anything to do with a society such as this is. I did feel inclined to despair more than once last year; I do not feel so now. The changed attitude of the officials, the renewed friendliness of the people, and the numerous signs of awakening, have rekindled my hopes for China. Let us not forget that the great need of China is the Gospel of Christ, and let us give this to the people in every possible way."

Mrs. Ginever's Homes.

THE latest report of Mrs. Ginever's Homes states that out of the large number of applications for admission last year, thirty-five were received. It is gratifying to read regarding the moral and spiritual results of the work:

"Among our children a quiet work of grace goes on; some of the elder girls love Christ, and say so, and their conduct is consistent with their profession. During Bible instruction, and at religious worship, their attention is marked, and their behaviour all that could be desired. No onlooker who understands the dewy freshness of the morning can mistake what hour of the day it is in the spiritual life of some of our children.

"But perhaps our greatest satisfaction is found in those who have left the Homes, and gone out into life to encounter the world. The value of home teaching, training, and influence is then tested. Fifty-seven of our girls have gone into service, nine of whom are respectably married and doing well, and five have become trained nurses at their own cost, and are now engaged in that most useful calling.

"Of the rest, one has been five, another six, and another ten years in the same situations; all bear excellent characters, and not a few have become consistent members of Christian churches. Whenever they have holidays or are out of situation we welcome them back to their old home in the Orphanage, and many gladly avail themselves of this privilege."

Copies of the report, and other information, may be had from the secretary, Mr. R. T. Smith, at the Kingsdown Orphanage, 18, Pemberton-road, Upper Holloway.

"Let the truth of God rule in our heads and the peace of God rule in our hearts."

The Monkey Temple.

A CLERGYMAN sent the present writer a description of the monkey temple at Benares the other day. He said:—

"The sights and sounds of this the Hindu city of salvation, are enough to appal the most hardened traveller. Benares, the sacred city, is a pit of filth and superstition of the grossest description. The famous monkey temple is one of the dirtiest places in which I have ever stood. The groups of chattering, eating, grinning, or screaming animals, are addressed by the pious worshippers, as though they were gods; the sight would be grotesque were it not so pitifully sad. I observed one man touch the wall, or a stone in the wall, and then turn round.

"Why did you do that?" I asked.

"Ah, I worship Kali," he said.

"Do you think that by doing that you obtain remission of sins?" I asked again.

"You are, perhaps, a sinner," said the man who was of high caste, "but I and mine cannot sin. Sins? Bah! in all my life I never sinned, nor have any of my family."

"He kept as far from me as he could while speaking, lest I should pollute or defile him, and I doubt if he would have answered me at all had I not been accompanied by a native gentleman whom he knew well."

The above needs no commentary. It simply provokes the question, Are we doing all we can for the souls of this benighted people, remembering that one of the titles of our own Queen is Empress of India? "Am I my brother's keeper?" "The Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men... But as touching brotherly love, ye need not that I write unto you; for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another... that ye may walk honestly to them that are without" (1 Thes. iii. 12; iv. 9-12).

Bible Study.

THE fourteenth annual meeting of the members of the International Bible Reading Association was held on Tuesday evening, April 14, in the Sunday-school Union Lecture Hall, Old Bailey. Dr. J. H. Gladstone presided.

Mr. Charles Waters (hon. sec.) presented a very favourable report. At the end of 1895, 550,000 English membership cards had been issued, showing an advance of 50,000 over the previous year. For the past six years the association has increased at the rate of 50,000 per annum. In the United Kingdom there are 5568 branches with 509,000 members; of these 909 branches, with 102,000 members, are in London. The remaining 76,000 members were located in fifty different countries.

Dr. Gladstone, Rev. W. G. Brockway, of Calcutta, Rev. A. J. Palmer, Folkestone; Mrs. J. G. Hauser, of India; and Rev. J. Tolefree Parr, gave interesting and appropriate addresses.

Sermon Lane Mission.

THE twenty-third annual meeting of this useful Mission was held on Tuesday week. The report referred to Mr. Dawes's resignation of the superintendence, and the acceptance of the post by Mr. E. C. Cuthbert. The work of the year was reported as full of encouragement. The Sunday Gospel services were largely attended. The house-to-house visitation had been well sustained. The Sunday schools have been carried on with vigour and success; while the temperance and similar efforts have given much encouragement. During the evening addresses were delivered by Mr. C. J. Cuthbertson, C.C., who presided; Mr. J. Benson, Miss Coles (R.S.U.), Revs. R. Berry, and J. E. Wakerley.

Dr. Pierson.—From April 14 to 16 services were held in Hastings for the deepening of spiritual life. The meetings were well attended, and the friends present represented many denominations. Dr. Pierson is to preach in the City Temple on the afternoon of Thursday, May 14. His discourse will be of a missionary character.

Armenian Martyrs' Memorial Services.—The suggestion that services in commemoration of the Armenian Martyrs would be held throughout the country is meeting with a very general response. Among the places where such services have already been arranged or are in contemplation, are Highgate, Plymouth, Nottingham, Stalybridge, Leeds, Colchester, King's Lynn, Whitby, Dorchester, Bury (Lancashire), Ryde, Preston, and Maidenhead.

The Y.M.C.A.

DR. SHANN presided on Thursday evening over the annual meeting of the Lowestoft Y.M.C.A. The Leeds Chronicle gives a fine picture of the new Y.M.C.A. buildings it is proposed to erect in Newcastle.

The annual conference of general secretaries has been arranged to be held from June 19 to 26, at Matlock.

The members of the Blackheath Y.M.C.A. met for their annual meeting on Monday week at the residence of Mr. Alexander Young.

The last of an interesting series of social meetings, which have been held during the winter months at Exeter Hall, took place on Friday evening, and was attended by a large number of young men.

The tenth annual meeting of the Shoreditch Association was held on Thursday afternoon, under the presidency of Sir George Williams, who was numerously and influentially supported; and a mass meeting for young men followed in the evening.

The Wolverhampton Association is doing an excellent work under the guidance of Mr. J. A. Roxburgh, and in the past few months especially, there have been evidences of very rich blessing; 150 youths are gathered every Sunday evening prior to a general evangelistic service.

A Jewish merchant in Bombay thinks so highly of the advantages offered by the Y.M.C.A. there, that he has given it a donation of 100 rupees, on condition that he is allowed to nominate as associates two young men belonging to his own community. This of course was gladly acceded to, as most of our larger associations have some Jews as associates.

On Wednesday evening the annual conference was held at Beckenham of the newly-formed South-East Metropolitan District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s, under the presidency of Mr. F. W. Lawrence. There was a good attendance of delegates, and the proceedings were of the heartiest and most encouraging character. The annual conference of the Associations in the Southern District was held the same day at Winchester.

The annual public meeting of the Devizes Association was held on April 15. The new president (Mr. W. E. Keeling) occupied the chair, and addresses were delivered by Messrs. W. H. Seagram, A. H. White, and J. C. Marsh. The Trowbridge Association sent a deputation of twenty members to encourage their brethren. The Association has carried on a good open-air work, and the clouds recently hanging over it appear to be dispersing.

The twenty-third annual meeting of the Southwark Y.M.C.A. was held on Tuesday, 14th inst., at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, under the presidency of Sir George Williams, who seemed in excellent health and spirits, and spoke very heartily of the work in Southwark. Mr. C. Woollard, the secretary, gave an abstract report, showing an addition of thirty new members, with a decrease of associates. £340 had been raised, meeting all liabilities. Special appeal was for more suitable premises to meet the pressing need of the work in South London.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., spoke in high praise of the Y.M.C.A. as a helper to the churches, and the special advantage it offered to young men coming from the country, and the need of such being sought out by the members within the first twenty-four hours of coming to London. Pastor Charles Spurgeon made a stirring appeal on the immediate surrender of the young men to King Jesus. Revs. J. Tolefree Parr and T. G. Gardiner likewise addressed the meeting.

A full and detailed programme of the forthcoming British Conference of Y.M.C.A.'s, June 16-19, has been issued. Special sermons will be preached by Revs. H. Montgomery, F. B. Meyer, and Archdeacon Sinclair. A men's demonstration against intemperance, gambling, and impurity will be addressed on the Wednesday evening by Dean Lefroy and Rev. F. B. Meyer. At the conference proper papers will be read by Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., and W. M. Oatts, Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas and Dr. H. B. Wilson on Biblical themes and study; by Messrs. R. McCann, J. H. Putterill, H. Whitwell, Robert Burn, J. A. Roxburgh, G. Wilson, and H. Armstrong on Association affairs; while Mr. Frank Anderson will speak on Missionary matters. The conference is expected to be one of great interest and importance.

Rev. F. B. Meyer resumed his Bible lectures on Saturday afternoon last, at three o'clock, at the Central Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street. Between one and two hundred young men listened with great interest to an exposition on "The Prodigal Son," which was given with great freshness. The subject for Saturday next is "The Rich Man and Lazarus;" and for the two following Saturdays "Faith" and "Lessons on Prayer," when the series close for the summer. On the Wednesday evenings in May, at 8 p.m., Rev. Charles Anderson Scott, of College Park Presbyterian Church, Willesden, has undertaken to give a series of Bible lectures, at Aldersgate-street, on "Personal Religion," with an opportunity for questions at the close of each lecture. They are open to all young men.

The twenty-eighth district conference of the Liverpool and North Wales District Union of Young Men's Christian Associations was held on Saturday at the Central Y.M.C.A., Mount Pleasant, Liverpool, and proved one of the most successful gatherings of the kind ever held by the union. At the afternoon conference, held under the presidency of Mr. W. Hind Smith, a number of subjects were treated in ten minutes' papers, fifteen minutes after each paper being apportioned for discussion. Mr. R. D. Thomas, of Bagilt, spoke of the "Y.M.C.A. in small towns," and while urging the necessity of establishing associations in small towns, held that their wider introduction into Wales would eradicate every trace of that narrow sectarian spirit which it was customary to associate with the Welsh. The conference concluded in the evening with a meeting in the large hall.

The Y.W.C.A.

INDIA AND CEYLON.

A Y.W.C.A. worker in India writes:—"The need for workers is so great, more and more the work in India deepens in interest in all its various branches." In each presidency town we have now an Association Home, and one in the hills; less than two years ago there was only one room in India with the familiar initials Y.W.C.A. over its door, now there are five!

Although there is no such outward sign of the Y.W.C.A. in the balmy island of Ceylon, its capital, Colombo, and some other towns are not without the Y.W.C.A. Any readers who were at Keswick will remember Sister Lucy's stirring words, and many little prayer meetings were held that God would burn her words into some hearts. A month or two later, Miss Gelson Gregson's offer to go was accepted, God having provided sufficient to start the work in Ceylon. Miss Gelson Gregson sailed in October last, and most encouraging reports are being received from her of the many openings in Colombo, where she has already started a Sunday class for young women in business and others. Miss Gregson endeavours to follow up the meetings by personal interviews during the week. At another place she has started a little drawing-room meeting in answer to an invitation from a member of the Y.W.C.A., who had collected the girls of the neighbourhood together.

Miss Gregson also tells of other members who have begun to learn Singalese, in order to help the number of young women, English and Singalese, scattered throughout the districts. The Hon. Mrs. Waller, correspondent for India, will be glad to communicate with any willing to go or help, and will meet them by appointment, or receive contributions.

Christian Endeavour.

In Guthrie, Okla., the C. E. society has been assisting in evangelistic services, and about seventy-five persons have united with the church.

Dr. F. E. Clark says:—"The Christian Endeavor Society is more and more in every land the world around developing a missionary spirit, and so long as any souls remain unsaved, missions cannot be a side issue or a dead issue."

A C.E. missionary committee in Kansas City, Mo., places upon the blackboard at each prayer meeting the name of one missionary who is specially remembered in the prayers of the society during the meeting, and by the members in their personal prayers during the week.

In East Liverpool, O., a prominent Christian Endeavour worker who was a teacher in the public schools was given her choice between ceasing to read the Bible at the opening of the day's exercises and discharge. She accepted the latter. She was not allowed to suffer because of her fidelity to principle, but was immediately appointed city missionary by one of the leading churches of the city. Meanwhile her courageous course precipitated a "Bible and anti-Bible" conflict upon the board and the city, in which the churches are taking an active part.

Men's Services, Hatcham.—On the third Sunday afternoon of each month an address to men is given at St. James's Church, by the vicar, Rev. W. H. Stone. Last Sunday he spoke to quite 1000 men of all ages, on "To-morrow." It was a grand sight to see these men listen with such such rapt attention to the preacher's earnest, soul-stirring words. These services have been conducted for more than two years, and do not show any signs of flagging.

Scottish Notes.

THE annual licensing courts were held in Scotland last week. In Dundee the number of licences was reduced by three, in Aberdeen by six fewer, and in Perth by two.

A monthly religious paper, to be called The Northern Evangelist, specially for the Highlands, is about to be started in Inverness. The publisher will be Mr. J. T. Melven.

The Boys' and Girls' Religious Association of Dundee has attained its semi-jubilee. It has thirty-one branches with an average total attendance of 4000 boys and girls. A three days' industrial exhibition has been held to commemorate the close of twenty-five years' work.

One of the oldest ministers in the Free Church passed away last Sabbath in the person of Dr. John Laird, of Cupar, an ex-moderator of the Church. Though in his eighty-fifth year he was enjoying fairly good health, and discharging up to the last a large share of the pastoral work of his congregation.

The spring conference of workers connected with various evangelistic missions in Glasgow was held in the Christian Institute on Saturday. Mr. J. W. Arthur and Professor Laidlaw spoke on "Abiding in Christ"; Mr. T. A. Boyd urged the duty of fellowship with all the brethren, and other friends contributed to the edification of those assembled.

The annual meeting of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society was held last week in the saloon of the Royal Hotel, Edinburgh, the Master of Polwarth presiding. The chairman commended the society to the generosity of those present. The secretary's report and the treasurer's statement were submitted, the latter showing that the revenue for the year had amounted to £1336, while the expenditure had been £1838. The income for the year had fallen below that of recent years. Sir William Muir moved the adoption of the report, which stated that, owing to the lack of funds, the society was unable to do all that it desired. He trusted that a vigorous effort would be made, and that instead of £1000 altogether it would be £1000 from every city.

Irish Notes.

THE Presbyterian Zenana Mission has appointed Dr. Sarah McMordie, Dr. Annie Gillespie, and Miss Elsie McMorde as missionaries to China.

Sligo, following the example of Arklow, has sent two street preachers to prison for seven days; but the matter is to be tried in the higher courts.

Three weeks' services for the promotion of holiness are being conducted in Donegal-road Primitive Methodist Church, Belfast, by Rev. Geo. Warner, of Nottingham.

The General Synod of the Church of Ireland was held in Dublin last week, under the presidency of the Primate, Dr. Alexander. He delivered a very able opening address, in which he argued in favour of the Protestant character of the Church, and against ceremonialism as being in any way Divinely appointed. The Synod was a very hearty and enthusiastic one, and its proceedings were marked by great unanimity and much earnestness.

Requests for Prayer.—For rich blessing at meetings held each Monday and Thursday, 8.15 a.m., in a Lancashire weaving mill.—For the conversion of a gentleman in bad health; and also for three careless young men, that they may be brought to Christ.—For special services in the Portobello and Westbourne Park Mission.—For a mission at Plymouth, to be conducted by Mr. J. J. Scroggie, commencing on April 26.—For blessing in connection with a mission, from April 26 to May 6, at Elwood-street, Highbury Vale, N., to be conducted by Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Alexander.—For blessing on a special mission at Longlands, Sidcup, now being conducted by Mr. Monro Collings.—For three months' Gospel services at the St. Just and Carnyorth Free Church, to be conducted by Mr. G. W. Clegg.

"An Inner Mission" (6d. C. H. Kelly) is the title given by Rev. David Roe, to a record, by pen and camera, of work done during the past eighteen months at Old Ford and Bow Common, under the auspices of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and with the encouragement of many others who sympathize with the enterprise. The work is carried on in the midst of a dense population, distributed in cheerless streets, with rows upon rows of houses showing but slight differences in size and appearance. To a large extent the houses have several tenants, in many cases several families. With the help of three "sisters" and many other devoted workers, Mr. Roe has accomplished a large amount of good in the district, of which a very readable account is given in the report. Further particulars may be had from Mr. Roe, 14, Mornington-road, Bow, E.

Obituary.

MRS. DARLING.

ON April 17, Mrs. Darling, of Regent Hotel, Edinburgh, fell asleep in Jesus. Her memory will be lovingly cherished by a wide circle of friends whose privilege it was to come into contact with one the sweetness and beauty of whose Christian character made a deep impression. Of her it might be said that she seemed to live next door to Heaven.

MRS. HUNTER.

On March 23, at Highfield Crescent, Rock Ferry, Mrs. E. B. Hunter passed from long suffering into that rest with Jesus for which she longed. She was the author of "Joe Witless, or the Call to Repentance," a book which has been read by thousands and has been useful to many. Infirm health prevented her from active public work, but not a few will miss the guiding ministrations which were given by her active mind and large loving heart from the retirement of her home.

REV. J. G. MURPHY, D.D.

The death is announced of Rev. James G. Murphy, D.D., formerly professor of Hebrew in the Presbyterian College, Belfast. Dr. Murphy was eighty-eight years of age, and a native of Comber, county Down. He was a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin. His only pastoral charge was in Ballyshannon, county Donegal, where he laboured from 1836 till 1841, when he was appointed head-master of the classical department of the Royal Academical Institution, Belfast. In 1847 he became professor of Hebrew for the Irish General Assembly, which office he filled until 1888, when he retired. The late Professor was the author of commentaries on several books of the Bible, and of other expository works. He also published a volume entitled "The Human Mind."

MR. WILLIAM HUGILL, WORKSOP.

A devoted servant of Christ has passed away in Mr. William Hugill, who fell asleep in Worksop, where he had laboured for fifty-six years. Gentle of disposition, retiring in manners, living almost out of the world, he had a large circle of friends, who loved him for his Christian character and modest mode of life. His first connection with Worksop, in 1840, was as the pastor of the Worksop body of Independents. He ministered at the old Independent Chapel in Westgate till 1850, when he resigned his charge on conscientious grounds, offering, however, to remain as the pastor of the cause without payment, trusting to the Scriptural promise and "the freewill offering of the saints"—in fact, "living by faith." For forty-six years Mr. Hugill held services at his residences, and at a building on the Lead Hill. During these years he made many warm friends, who appreciated him for his abilities and his keen insight into Scriptural matters. He was the author of "The Tabernacle: Its Literal Uses and Spiritual Application," and "The True Sanctuary: Its Priesthood and Ministries." For many years Mr. Hugill preached the Lord's second coming, and with this in view he always urged that Christianity was of little worth unless it influenced the daily life of its possessor.

MR. JOHN T. DORLAND.

Evangelical truth in general, and the Society of Friends in particular, have suffered a great and irreparable loss in the early removal of John T. Dorland. Born less than forty years ago in Canada, and giving himself in very early life to Christ, he was soon called to active service for Him, and became one of the ablest and most gifted speakers in the Dominion. Many are the proofs of his ministry, especially among young men in his native Canada, who are themselves to-day actively engaged in the Lord's work.

In the providence of God he was led to visit England and Ireland, and here also seals to our brother's ministry were manifold. He finally, a few years ago, settled in Willesden, London, and as an earnest, devoted evangelist, as secretary of the "Friends First Day School Association," and editor of One and All, has wielded an immense influence for good.

At the recent adult-school gathering in Bristol he took a very leading part. Having travelled in Bible lands more than once, his mind was furnished with a wealth of illustrations in the education of Scripture truth, and few men were able so eloquently and convincingly to deliver the Divine message. On Friday, April 10, though not feeling well, our dear friend went to Didsbury, Manchester, to fulfil an engagement, and was soon prostrated with pneumonia, and the unsuspected development of some heart trouble; notwithstanding the best medical skill, and most unremitting and loving care, he passed away early on Saturday morning last, leaving a widow and four children to deplore their terrible loss. The love of John J. Dorland for young men was warm and true, and was amply reciprocated by them. His life is itself a trumpet-call to them and to all to follow him as he followed Christ. He is "safe for evermore" but many are the sad hearts that now deplore his death. W. H.

DR. GASON, ROME.

Evangelical work in Rome has suffered a great loss by the death of Dr. Gason, one of the oldest English residents. He passed away peacefully on Sunday, April 12, and a funeral service was held on the following Wednesday in Trinity Church, which was erected principally through his efforts. This service was very largely attended by ministers and members of all denominations.

When I first became acquainted with Dr. Gason many years since, he, like many professional men, had little faith in native converts. The help he gave to the Medical Mission was a great blessing to him. The Italian Bible-woman who worked with him soon won his esteem, and when I asked him some time afterwards if he believed her to be really converted, he replied, "most undoubtedly."

His work in the Medical Missions, and in the small Protestant hospital, was thorough, and very self-sacrificing. While severe on any who seemed to be unworthy, he endeared himself to the hearts of many hundreds to whom he had been helpful in sickness.

As a member of the Church of England he was a staunch supporter of Evangelical doctrine, and it is by his untiring zeal that Gospel preaching was sustained, not only in Rome, but also at Pisa and the Bagni di Lucca.

His sympathy with Protestant missions in Rome was much appreciated, and the aid he gave to medical missions shows what valuable help can be rendered by professional men to missionary work on the Continent, even when that work is carried on by Christians of another persuasion.

The loss of Dr. Gason will be less felt in Rome if someone equally able and willing be raised up to render like service. We are grateful for such a life, so long preserved, and ask the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to unite in prayer for medical missions in Rome. Rome, 35, Piazza in Lucina. JAMES WALL.

Evangelistic Notes.

Spokane, Wash.—The Christian workers of Spokane have been drawn very close together by a soul-saving campaign. Under the direction of evangelists John H. Elliott and B. F. Butts, Christ has been held up that all men might know Him, and the churches are now receiving large accessions of members.

New York.—The Cooper Union meetings, held during the past three months, on Monday afternoons, are said to have resulted in the conversion of about 300 men. They have also stirred much interest among the pastors of this city and Brooklyn. Large numbers have attended the meetings and have carried the influence into their own churches.

Sible Hedingham, Essex.—Mr. Goudie has concluded an interesting ten days' mission in the old Baptist chapel. Every night large congregations assembled; the whole neighbourhood seemed moved. A wonderful work of grace has been accomplished. Many who were impressed were dealt with in the inquiry-room, and we trust they are now rejoicing in the Saviour.

Gipsy Smith has had a stirring time in Washington. An American contemporary says:—Not since the great Moody and Sankey meetings has any series of revival meetings attracted such general attention as those conducted at Metropolitan M.E. church by Mr. Smith, the singing Gipsy evangelist. The church is crowded every night, and many conversions have been made. Mr. Smith possesses in a marked degree that mysterious quality which we call "personal magnetism," for want of a better name, and which is so necessary in the make-up of a successful evangelist. He talks straight out, never over the heads of his hearers, and you feel that he is so much in earnest that you cannot withhold your attention.

Greengairs, N.B.—Mr. S. McKenzie, evangelist, has concluded a series of meetings in the little town of Greengairs, near Airdrie. The power of God was felt in such a remarkable manner during the first ten days that it was thought advisable to carry on the meetings some time longer. The meetings were continued night after night till Sabbath evening, April 12. During those four weeks our eyes have been seeing the wonderful works of God. Some notable sinners have been converted to God, and in some cases whole families have found their way to the Saviour. In the last nights of the mission Mr. McKenzie's daughter joined him and was a means of drawing still larger crowds by her solo singing.

JAMES ASHWOOD, Sec.

Erith.—Mr. W. R. Lane has held a nine days' mission at the Erith Baptist church. The services, which were brought to a close on Thursday last, have proved a season of blessing. The mission had been long anticipated, and much prayer had been offered. From the first meeting signs of the working of the Holy Spirit were very apparent, and the interest steadily grew until the closing meeting, when Mr. Lane told the story of his conversion. Over ninety anxious seekers have been conversed with at the close of the meetings, and in addition many backsliders have been restored and God's people greatly quickened and helped. A specially encouraging feature in the mission is the large number of young people who have been brought to decision. In several of the senior classes of the Sunday-school almost all the scholars have manifested anxiety about their spiritual condition. The workers are greatly encouraged and earnestly beg the prayers of God's people that they may be helped in shepherding the new converts. J. E. MARTIN.

Personalia.

Mrs. Weaver and the family desire warmly to thank many friends for their great kindness and sympathy in the time of bereavement.

Mr. Henry Spicer has been elected to the treasurership of the Congregational Fund Board, in succession to the late Mr. Thomas Scrutton.

Pastor and Mrs. Rodriguez, feeling, after three years' constant work, the need of rest and change, are leaving for England on April 24. They hope that many homes may be opened for them to plead the interests of the work at Figueras.

Rev. Philip Kembell Fyson has, on the nomination of the Church Missionary Society, been appointed to a new missionary see in Japan. He has worked in Japan since 1873, and has been of especial service to the C.M.S., although his work for the Bible Society has been of even wider value. He was a double first-class man at Cambridge, and worked as a curate in Hull before he went out to the mission field.

Rev. Egerton Young sails on May 12 for his work in Canada. During the past few weeks he has been speaking in Canterbury, Maidstone, Ramsgate, and Bristol. He is spending his closing two weeks in the principal towns of Cornwall. On Sunday, May 3, Mr. Young will take the services at the Polytechnic, Regent-street, W., at 3.30 and 7 p.m. Friends wishing to communicate with him or aid his work may address letters to our care.

The late Lady Lyceatt.—The will of Dame Emily Sarah Amelia Lyceatt, of 7, Cambridge Gate, Regent's Park, was proved on March 25, the value of the personal estate amounting to £63,126. The testatrix bequeaths £3000 to the British and Foreign Bible Society; £1000 each to the London City Mission, the Disabled Fund of the said Mission, and the Home for Little Boys at Horton Kirby, Farningham; and £500 to the Religious Tract Society.

Mr. I. D. Sankey has been attracting large gatherings in various Californian towns during his sojourn in that far western State. Sometimes helped by Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins, and sometimes alone, he has sung some of his most popular and effective Gospel songs; also giving descriptive accounts of the genesis and history of the songs. A recent issue of The Newcastle (Pa.) News gives portraits of Mr. Sankey and his venerable mother (now eighty-five), with a view of the Y.M.C.A. building gifted to the city by the evangelist.

Lambeth Baths Winter Meetings.

MR. CAUSTON, M.P., took the chair on Saturday week at a large gathering held in Lambeth Baths to celebrate the close of the thirty-fourth series of winter meetings there. The report, presented by Rev. W. Mottram, spoke of the enterprise as a great mission to the poor. The closing season had not been one of the longest or busiest, but it had a good average of success. There had been ninety religious and temperance gatherings and lantern services, forty-five entertainments for the people, twenty-two dissolving-view lectures, twenty-two social evenings with discussion, and twelve workers' meetings, a total of 191. The attendances had not quite reached the high-water mark of last year, but they had been more than 100,000. Three hundred names had been added to the pledge-roll, a number below what had been hoped for. Referring with regret to the fact that age and failing health compelled him to retire from his present post, Mr. Mottram said that during the nine years he had held it the attendances were 887,500, the total income £3834, and the number of persons who had taken the total pledge over 4000. His remarks on this part of the subject and an allusion to the death of his eldest son were received with much sympathy. Rising a little later, he said that about £90 was wanted to clear off all liabilities. The chairman, after a few feeling words with reference to Rev. W. Mottram, said he was to be succeeded at the Murphy Memorial Chapel by Rev. G. Fuller, who consequently would probably be the next superintendent of the Lambeth Baths Meetings.

Temperance Notes.

A TEMPERANCE breakfast was given in connection with the recent annual conference of the National Union of Teachers held at Brighton.

A temperance campaign on a large scale has been conducted during the last nine days at Pontypridd, and during the meetings upwards of 1000 adults have signed the pledge.

Mr. Thomas Hudson, who became an abstainer in 1886, celebrated last week his eightieth birthday. For many years he has been an earnest and valued temperance advocate both by pen and lip.

A conference of delegates from the various temperance organisations, convened by the C.E.T.S., was held on Wednesday at Westminster to decide upon united action in formulating evidence for the Royal Commission.

The liquor-dealers are moving the courts in order to obtain a declaration that magistrates interested in temperance establishments have no more right to sit on a licensing bench than those interested in the sale of intoxicants.

Mr. Froome Talfourd, younger brother of the late Judge Talfourd, has forwarded a donation of £50 to the London Temperance Hospital as a thank-offering for having completed fifty-six years of abstinence from intoxicating liquors.

It is stated that in New York attempts are being made to evade the obnoxious Raines Liquor Law in this State. Saloon keepers are applying for hotel licences, allowing them to sell drink on Sundays. Many of these licences have been granted.

The annual meetings of the National British Women's Temperance Association are to be held in London, from Sunday, May 31 to Thursday, June 14. Tickets, and every information desired, may be obtained of Mr. H. J. Osborn, 112, Fleet-street.

The Royal Commission is now complete by the appointment of Lord de Vesci, who is regarded as an impartial member. The Commission is thus composed of eight temperance reformers, eight representatives of the liquor interest, and eight neutrals.

Mr. Balfour, replying to Mr. Tritton in the House of Commons, said it would not be politic on the part of the Government, until the commission had reported, to introduce any legislation on the liquor traffic. Thus the whole question is quietly shelved for the next few years.

The Press Association learns that at the instance of the C.E.T.S. an effort is about to be made to induce the Government, in view of the Royal Commission on Licensing, to introduce a Suspensory Bill, as was done under the Home Secretaryship of Mr. Bruce in 1871.

Lord Roberts, presiding last week at a meeting in connection with the Army Temperance Association, stated that, after many years' experience of that particular subject, he could assure them that the best way to lessen crime in the army would be to encourage the Army Temperance Association.

In a letter from the War Office to the Army Temperance Association it is stated that from inquiries which have been made at the various military stations at home and abroad the Secretary of State for War has been glad to learn that the working of the Association, on lines which received the Commander-in-Chief's approval, has met with much success.

The Good Templar Grand Lodge, in session at Southport, declared that no legislation would be satisfactory which did not confer on the ratepayers the power to prohibit by direct veto the sale of intoxicating liquors in their midst. Mr. Joseph Malins was re-elected Grand Chief Templar for the twenty-seventh year.

The National Women's Christian Temperance Union have written Mr. Thomas B. Reed, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, thanking him for enforcing the rule against smoking in the House. "We feel," they say, "that by such act you have incurred the gratitude of not only the womanhood of our nation, but of the better manhood as well," and conclude: "We are hoping that the day is not far distant when the sale of liquor also will be banished from out the national Capitol."

A new law, lately passed by the New York State Legislature, comes into force on April 30, abolishing the present licence system, and substituting liquor tax certificates issued by a new State department. The new tax is a high one. In New York the annual tax for each ordinary saloon is to be £100; in Brooklyn, £130; in cities having a population between 500,000 and 50,000, £100; between 50,000 and 10,000, £70; between 5000 and 1000, £40; and in all other places £20. Clubs must obtain certificate or cease selling liquor to their members. Towns have the power of saying whether or no saloons or liquor-selling shall be permitted at all in their midst. Control of the liquor laws by the police is virtually abolished by this new law, the enforcement of which is to be entrusted solely to a State department, which is now for the first time created.

THE BOOK WORLD.

Light, Life, Love: Gleanings from the Ministry of the late Rev. William Bruce. (9d. W. F. Mack, Bristol and London.) These memorials of a full and fruitful ministry contain Bible notes and Scriptural thoughts likely to be of real service to many Christian workers, as well as to shut-in ones in searching the Word.

The Year Book of Photography has been published for its thirty-seventh year. It is admirably illustrated, and as it takes account of "x rays," it may assuredly be pronounced "up to date." As a holiday guide for amateurs, this manual should prove very useful. (1s. nett. "Photographic News" Office, 22, Fournival-street, E.C.)

The Christian Pictorial. Vol. vi. (4s. 6d. Alexander and Shephard.) This weekly has now won for itself a well-recognised place in the periodical literature of the day, as a pictorial record of current events in religious circles. The half-yearly volume, tastefully bound, is full of good and readable matter, and will prove a pleasant companion by the family hearth.

Plain Talks on Plain Subjects. By F. A. Rees. (Elliot Stock.) A series of week-evening addresses of a homely and yet a high order. The author deals with practical topics bearing on daily life, and proves himself to be a trustworthy and helpful monitor and guide. Those not skilled in original utterance may be advised to read these wise chapters at social gatherings.

The Story of David Livingstone. By B. K. Gregory. (1s. Sunday School Union.) The "Splendid Lives" series has already done service by giving in popular and cheap form the lives of great and heroic men. This story of the famous missionary explorer is a notable addition. Brief as it is, it is admirably comprehensive, and should inscribe afresh in many youthful minds the lessons of Dr. Livingstone's wonderful career.

Victory. Edited by Mrs. E. C. Millard. (Marlborough & Co.) These reminiscences of and letters from the late Mrs. H. S. Phillips (née Minnie Apperson), of the C.E.Z.S. in China, make up a delightful record of missionary consecration and service. After a few short years of faithful Gospel labour among the Chinese, Mrs. Phillips was called home; but she left behind a testimony both by life and pen that will enrich our missionary literature.

How to Visit Italy. Edited by H. S. Lunn, M.D. (2s. 6d. Horace Marshall & Son.) As a caterer for the modern traveller Dr. Lunn has earned a good degree. Many will welcome the ample and clearly-arranged information of this handy guide-book to the land of poetry and song. There are contributions from various capable and authoritative pens, and nothing seems omitted that would smooth the path of the sojourner in fair Italy.

Architects of Fate. By O. S. Marden. (3s. 6d. T. Nelson & Sons.) This beautifully bound volume contains almost an embarrassment of good things in the way of sage counsel and comforting illustration, culled from a wide area in authorship. The author, on his title-page, aims at the inspiration of youth, "to character-building, self-culture, and noble achievement"; and he has undoubtedly succeeded. As a school-prize for intelligent youths it would be hard to beat.

Looking Upward. By James Adderley. (3s. 6d. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.) These are earnest utterances on pressing social themes, viewed from the Christian standpoint. The author homologates certain ecclesiastical and sacerdotal positions to which we cannot assent, but there is much in his view of present-day movements and their relation to the teachings of Christ that must commend itself to all who would see the Kingdom of God fully established in the hearts and lives of men.

Don Emilio Castelar. By David Hannay. (3s. 6d. Bliss, Sands & Foster.) We have here the sixth of the interesting "international series" of public men of to-day. The internal politics of Spain have been of a very troublesome kind since the days of the French Revolution, and the eloquent Castelar has played an active part in them during the last generation. His public career, marked by political inconsistencies, but also by evident honesty, is admirably described by Mr. Hannay, whose fascinating literary style is well wedded to historical discrimination.

The Saloon-keeper's Ledger, by Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D., is the title of a volume of temperance revival discourses, which we cordially commend to the attention of those who are fighting the drink fiend. The liquor saloon is condemned by a study of its ledger, which shows it a debtor in respect of disease, private and social immorality, ruined homes, pauperised labour, lawlessness and crime, and political corruption. In a concluding chapter on "How to Settle the Saloon Account," Dr. Banks advocates prohibition with much power. Dr. T. L.

Cayler contributes a hearty introduction. (3s. Funk & Wagnalls Co.)

Public Speaking and Debate. By G. J. Holyoake. (3s. 6d. Second edition. T. Fisher Unwin.) This new edition of a "Manual for Advocates and Agitators" is fitly dedicated to Dr. Joseph Parker, one of the most skilful of living rhetoricians. Though written by an Agnostic, Christians may find many useful hints and directions in these chapters, which are the result of long experience in public address, and in the most effective methods of arresting and impressing popular opinion by speech or by the pen. Gifts of convincing utterance ought to be cultivated by all who would guide the thought of their generation in right directions.

Fors Clavigera. By John Ruskin. New edition. Vol. 1. (6s. George Allen.) Mr. Ruskin's writings are not to be judged by any conventional standard of worth; they are, so to speak, a law unto themselves, like those of his greater contemporary, Carlyle. Through many immaturities of an economic sort there shine out clearly a loftiness of aim, and a strong moral sense which amply atone for certain eccentricities of view on matters artistic. It is a consoling thought in these fin de siècle days that there should be a market for a new edition of these weighty letters to British workmen. A very beautiful and readable edition it is. For the price of a trashy modern novel can now be had five hundred pages of reading which is as entertaining, as, on the whole, it is wise and elevating.

THE CLERICAL ATTACK ON NATIONAL EDUCATION is the title of a statement prepared for the National Education League of the Free Churches, by J. Hirst Hollowell. (1d. P. S. King & Son, King-street, Westminster.)

MAY'S HANDY GUIDE TO MAY MEETINGS. (1d. E. J. May), gives not only the May anniversaries but also conferences of various kinds throughout the year. It forms a useful guide alike to religious institutions and to the sights of London.

IF CHRIST CAME TO BIRMINGHAM. By W. H. Archer. (6d. Midland Educational Co., Corporation-street, Birmingham.) The writer of this brochure sets forth in detail what he believes to be the hindrances, in its civic and Christian life, to the reign of Christ in the great Midland city.

Two new tracts by Henry Barnett are, THE SERVANT THAT GLORIFIED GOD and THE SERVANT WHOM GOD GLORIFIED. They make known with force the glory and standing of believers in Christ, and should be widely circulated. (Fifty for 2s. 6d., post free. H. Barnett, 94, Malmesbury-road, Bow, E.)

FULL SALVATION. A pictorial chart, prepared by Mr. H. Downie. (A. Holness, 6d.) Its aim is to show that in the two New Testament ordinances of baptism and the Lord's Supper the whole Gospel is set forth. While agreeing with the author in his statement of the truth, we do not find that his designs aid in making it clearer to the mind.

THE PARISH OF ALL SAINTS, CAMBERWELL: ITS ORIGIN AND PROGRESS.—Rev. Thomas Joseph Gaster, first missionary curate, then incumbent and vicar, has written a pamphlet with this title. It gives an account of a very interesting enterprise, carried on under a true sense of Christian duty and with the manifest blessing of God. (1s. From the Author, The Vicarage, Ryelane, S.E.)

NURSERY NONSENSE is the title of a piece of music composed by T. Walter Partridge, Musical Director of Stockwell Orphanage. The well-known words of our old nursery rhymes have never been set to music more appropriate or more likely to delight the children than this. The melodies are bright and original, and the accompaniments are excellently varied. (W. Paxton, 19, Oxford-street, W.)

Mr. G. Stoneman, 39, Warwick-lane, has issued some very attractive Gospel booklets, appropriately called the "Sacred Gem" series. The pages are illuminated with red and gold, and the get-up is very striking. The series already includes THE VOICE OF JESUS, BEHOLD THE MAN, CROWNED WITH THORNS, AND THE GOLDEN LINK. These booklets will be welcome for circulation in envelopes or otherwise. (1d. each.)

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE 23rd Psalm has been called the nightingale psalm, because it sings in the Valley of the Shadow; the 103rd Psalm is like the note of the lark sounding from a clear morning sky. It is a song of renewal, of delight in the blessings of health, of recovery, forgiveness, and restored fellowship with God. One clear note of gratitude sounds throughout, faithful to its keynote in the face of all that is saddest and darkest in life. Some of the strophes touch the high-water mark of sacred poetry, as where the sweetness of forgiving love and the pathos of life's transitoriness are described. In this glorious spring time the psalm may fitly voice the Christian's delight in the natural blessings of life, crowned with the thought of the Divine mercy and compassion as shown in the spiritual gifts of his grace.

Why should our thanksgiving services be always in the autumn? This is the season in which Nature seems to be most instinct with the presence of her Maker, and his glory and love are most strikingly evident. So long as spring comes, harvest cannot fail; and in the wealth and beauty of the earth just now, we see the pledge of her fruitfulness by and bye. In every heart, and every family, and every church there should rise strains of love and gratitude as the earth is renewed by the touch of spring. The "joy of the whole earth" should find vocal expression in the praise of men. The prospects of an abundant harvest were never brighter than in this wonderfully bright and prodigal spring.

Bird and beast can only enjoy God's goodness unconsciously; man alone knows his Maker and can return thanks for what he receives at his hand. And yet how rare is a truly thankful heart! The life of many is crammed with blessings, but because there is a dark spot in their sky the whole horizon seems clouded. If we had a due and proportionate sense of God's mercies, the most unfortunate among us would see that his life after all has more light than dark in it.

more reason for joy than sorrow. It is needful when what we call "the worst that could happen" has befallen us, and the richest possession of our life has taken wings, to look back on the fact that there are other good things left which we have no right to forget, and which if we rightly value them will help in good time to restore the mind to its balance. More practical atheism is probably caused by the bitterness of loss falling on thankless hearts than in any other way, and we should see to it that we do not fall into the temptation of forgetting God by failing to value our blessings aright.

The complimentary breakfast to the veteran Manchester preacher, Dr. Maclaren, reported on page 21, was a worthy fraternal tribute to one of our greatest living preachers. All that it needed to give completeness were the presence and speech of someone representing the Church of England. We feel sure there are thousands of preachers, not to speak of private Christians, connected with the Establishment who are glad to derive help and inspiration from the Biblical discourses delivered in Union Chapel. We trust that young ministers everywhere will give earnest heed to the weighty utterances of Dr. Maclaren on the question of pulpit concentration.

If the Anti-Sunday Travelling Union, which seems to be making headway, can only succeed in checking the roving habits of professors of religion on the Sunday, to say nothing of other pleasure-seekers, it will have done a great thing. There can be no hard and fast line as to people's habits, but thousands of professors waste time, money, and strength which could be used to advantage if they would worship near their own homes. They would probably find all that is good for them in a ministry which they now pass by, if they were to think more of what they ought to do, and less of what will please them. But if no church or minister near them meets their needs, then let them seek a house near the place of worship which they feel they ought to attend. It is said that over 420,000 railway, tram, omnibus, cab and steamboat men are kept at work on Sunday; let religious professors ask themselves how much of this work is done for them, and is needless.

We regret to see that The Echo, whose religious tone is so markedly superior to many of its contemporaries, should say, in extenuation of Sunday holiday-making:—

The moment's escape from the man-made town to the God-made country often works a miracle, and under the present conditions of life and labour, Sunday travelling is more efficacious in the saving of souls than sermons.

The confusion of thought in this sentence is palpable. The implication clearly is that the physical benefits of fresh air and country sights have more spiritual efficacy than addresses and appeals definitely made to the spiritual nature. No one would deny the spiritual message of Nature to those who are fitted to receive it; but it cannot be interpreted except by those who have already been converted to a spiritual mood; and to say that salvation for the soul is to be attained by invigorating the body is a paradox devoid of the slightest truth. There is still a large supply of cant in the world, and one of the phrases that does duty for a good deal of it is "the Gospel of Nature," which is so often flung into the faces of reformers of Sunday morals. The Gospel of Nature never saved a soul yet. It is on record that at least some sermons have served as means to that end.

Reluctant though our Government may be to do anything in the way of diminishing the evils of the drink traffic in our country, we yet may hope that a few more hours of the Sunday may be saved for quietness and worship. It is asked that friends will make earnest prayer in that behalf on Sunday, May 3. On this phase of the temperance question—the sanctification of the Sunday—there can be no difference of opinion. The unity of the churches could not be better exemplified in a united effort to secure for England as quiet and pure a day as has been given to Scotland, Ireland, and Wales.

The Poet Laureate, writing concerning the establishment of a free library at Bexley, has been laying down some salutary principles on the selection of books in such institutions. Every precaution ought, he says, to be taken against the danger of loose fiction occupying too large a share on their shelves. Only the works of its recognised masters ought to be admitted. This he urges on the ground that the too prevalent habit of reading poor, sensational, empty novels, often to the exclusion of everything else, is one of the worst forms of self-indulgent indolence. The result is that "the imagination is fostered at the expense of the judgment, and the mind, grown passive and over-receptive, loses its energy for active thought." There are few things more needed than to educate young people in the art of choosing good books, for inclination unchecked by earnest aims inevitably gravitates into the shallowest groove. Let those whose work it is to choose books for such institutions ponder this well.

Rev. G. T. Coster, of Stroud, to whom the Church owes a debt of gratitude for some inspiring hymns and some melodious poetry, freighted with pure thought, has again rendered her a service in his "Gloria Christi" (H. R. Allenson). He writes as a man of this age, familiar with its thoughts and moods and struggles, but also as a believer whose feet are firmly planted upon the rock Christ Jesus. His faith makes him peaceful, hopeful, and cheerful. He sings as one who knows "the chastening of the Lord," who has thought and struggled, but has found in the response of his own will to the will of God a "sweet release from wearying care." Where heavy books, burdened with massive knowledge and weighty argument, might fail to help men, they may possibly find help in these "verses," which not seldom give a long chapter in a line. Loyalty to Jesus as the Saviour of men is the great feature of the book. This verse on the evangelists breathes its spirit of love:—

They were his friends, and when He took His leave at last, the precious hoard
Of loving memories they had stored
Became an everlasting Book.

With what intense relish secular papers criticise the sins and shortcomings of every branch of the Church. They chronicle and remark upon the blots, just as they give large space to the crimes and absurdities of foreign nations, and take small notice of their virtues, and of the spread of prosperity and contentment among them. We hear much of an offending minister, of an inconsistent Sunday School superintendent, of a knavish church member, but nothing of the quiet usefulness of tens of thousands of their brethren, who walk worthy of Christ. We do not object to the supervision, and we can hardly expect it to be friendly. If the churches condemn the sins of the world, the world may well seize every opportunity of rebuking the churches when they fall into the same sins. It must, however, be remembered it is from the world that the Church learns these things. They are not of her nature and life? She exists to save every man from their power.

That keen anatomist of the soul, Dr. John Owen, observed in his day that growing notions of truth without answerable practice is a thing that indwelling sin makes use of "to bring the souls of believers under a decay." The same may be said now. To talk and write about religion is always more pleasant to the carnal nature than to cultivate the spiritual life by means of prayer and meditation and the obedient fulfilment of Divine commands. Owen called his times "days of light," but how much truer is that of our times; and, if so, the temptation to make knowledge everything is correspondingly increased; and "knowledge puffeth up." To gain a true idea is to gain a pearl of great price, but it only adds to our guilt if it does not become a new motive to obedience, a new incentive of holiness. "Conscience, unless thoroughly awake and circumspect, and furnished with spiritual wisdom and ease, will be very well pacified, and enter no rebukes or pleas against the way the soul is in." But unless we strive to embody every truth in a corresponding experience of the heart and action of the life, decay of faith must needs ensue.

In a localised Church magazine, called the Banner of Faith, for April, there is an article on the Bible and the Church, by Rev. Hobart Hampden, which is symptomatic of the trend of thought in that section of the Episcopal Church. The writer says that "the Bible can no more be described as the foundation of Christian doctrine than the laws in our Statute-book can be called the foundation of the English law"; it is only "the stereotyped embodiment of the oral Catholic tradition of the first ages of the Church." It is the Church itself that is the final authority, because it is "older than" the Bible, which is "the product of the Church," and "the voice of the Church." Co-ordinate therefore with, or rather superior to, the Bible, we must place the "tradition" of the Church, as regulative of faith and practice. By a little manipulation of this position, the writer comes to the conclusion that "God's plan of saving and teaching mankind, and of keeping alive the hope and knowledge of salvation, has been alike in Jewish and Christian ages, through an ordained priesthood, and by sacramental means of grace."

The true reply to this fallacious position is found in emphasising the fact that ultimately both the Bible and the Church depend on a deeper principle. The objective origin of organised Christian thought and life in the Church is the Lord Jesus Christ's life and teaching and saving work; its subjective origin is his free presence through the Holy Spirit in the hearts of men. The Church is the embodiment of the universal promise, "Wherever two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in their midst"; the Bible is the outcome of the other promise given specially to the Apostles of the "Spirit of Truth," who should lead them "into all the truth," and "bring all things to remembrance" that He had said unto them. The Bible being the primitive and inspired record of the facts that lie at the root of the life, is in virtue of that very fact superior in authority to all subsequent Church tradition, and so is, to all intents and purposes, our only authority in matters of faith and practice; and its final standard of interpretation is to be found in the enlightened conscience and intelligent judgment of the universal priesthood of all believers.

The death of Baron Hirsch has removed one of the foremost figures, and one of the most generous philanthropists, from the Jewish world. His history is remarkable not only in the fact of his rise to fabulous wealth, but in the strange mental changes through which he passed. During the lifetime of his only son he devoted himself to accumulating wealth for his sake. After he died, at the age of twenty-one, the father gave himself with enthusiasm to the furtherance of all the objects dear to his son's heart. These were directed almost entirely to the amelioration of the oppressed and poor of his own race.

Baron Hirsch founded vast educational establishments in Russia and Austria for the benefit of the Jews in those countries, and when this work was stopped, through the rise of anti-Semitic feeling, he turned his attention to the formation of agricultural colonies for his people in most favourable parts of the earth. Immense sums were spent by him on these projects, and no needy and deserving Jew ever applied for help to him in vain, though he had a keen eye for pretenders. In character he was a strange mixture of the sportsman and the philanthropist, giving all his "earnings" on the racecourse to charities. The best we can say of him is that he had the materials of a grand Christian in him, if only the possibilities of his complex nature had been realised under the touch of the love of Christ. Lacking that, his character and spiritual horizon were bounded by the narrow limits of the Jewish creed.

The Greek nation and Court have gone mad over the victory of their compatriot in the Olympic race from Marathon to Athens. The winner was a young Greek peasant who had until recently scarcely been outside his native village; but, since the race, he has been made into a kind of demi-god, and all manner of extravagant honours have been showered on him by king and populace. Truly, one of the saddest things in the world is the misproportioned enthusiasm of men. If only the vast fund of hero-worship that lies sleeping in human nature were all rightly and nobly directed, what possibilities of noble life would be opened up! As it is, great missionaries, Armenian martyrs, and true benefactors of the race must die before they are canonised; while the winner of a trumpery race is made into an idol. Such honours, unlike the "gentle dew from heaven," bless neither "him that gives nor him that takes." Let true honour be reserved for goodness and nobleness of character, and not wasted on mere wind and muscle. The lesson is not untimely for cities nearer home than Athens, for the extravagant adulation shown to our own athletes is a sad symptom of the times.

The Prudential Committee appointed by the American Board of Missions to report upon the condition of Christianity in Japan expresses the conviction that the present tendency of some of the Japanese converts to "extreme liberalism" is not widespread, and will not be enduring. A few may lose their faith and leave the Church, but the committee believe that the tendency to destructive criticism will be less in the future, and that the work of construction will become more prominent. The theological problems of the world are now discussed in Japan without a balancing foundation of Christian life and faith. It is eminently satisfactory to learn that "the evidence is complete" that the missionaries of the American Board have been faithful in presenting the truths of the Gospel, and "that none of the present conditions are due to any lack of fidelity upon their part."

"The Christian" Abroad.

WE feel sure that many of our friends who have co-operated with us in sending THE CHRISTIAN to missionaries and other Christian workers, both at home and abroad, will be interested in reading the following extracts from a few of the letters which have come to hand from all parts of the world during the last three or four months. A lady missionary in Shanghai writes:—

I sincerely thank you for sending me THE CHRISTIAN, which I receive regularly. May you be greatly prospered in the circulation of a paper which is so helpful to spiritual life.

Another from India says:—

I am very glad of the opportunity to let you know how greatly this weekly messenger is appreciated in this far-off jungle mission station. When I have perused its interesting and helpful pages it is passed on to my fellow-workers, and from them to the Baptist Mission in Cocanada, a town far to the south of us; and they again make good use of it by passing it on to the Eurasians in their locality after it has been well read at the mission-house.

From a pastor in Florence:—

Permit me to express the thanks I feel for the favour of receiving THE CHRISTIAN every week. I would not willingly be without it, as it often does me good. It is received with a welcome in my family, and after being read is sent on to an Italian evangelist who reads English.

Another friend in Italy writes

To renew her thanks to the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN for the privilege of receiving that excellent periodical, which she tries to make useful among English residents in Italy.

A Canadian minister sends this acknowledgment:—

Your paper is of very great interest to me. I would not care to be without it, and it keeps me in touch with people we know.

A Congregational minister writes from Wisconsin, to express his

Thanks to the kind donor for THE CHRISTIAN, which has been a welcome visitor to me during the year.

A postcard from Bulgaria has the following:—

Thank you, and the kind friend who sends me THE CHRISTIAN.

It is very gratifying to know that the efforts made by ourselves and by those who volunteer to help us in this service are so appreciated, and we regret the more that in one or two instances friends have stopped sending copies to missionaries on account of their not acknowledging receipt. We would suggest that in many cases a correspondence, which need not be heavy, might be commenced, and thus the friends at home who send THE CHRISTIAN, and those abroad who receive it, would be brought into closer touch, with mutual benefit. We have at the present time a number of names of Christian workers in this country and abroad anxious to receive THE CHRISTIAN, and we will gladly forward their names and other particulars to any who will undertake to supply them.

Widows' Friend Society.—At the annual meeting at the Mansion House last week, Sir Joseph Dimesdale said that for eighty-seven years the society had endeavoured to relieve the poor widow at the time when she most needed it. The society had rendered many a bereaved home happy and bright through its timely aid. There had been 139 cases relieved during the year, each one of which had been most thoroughly investigated, and practical and permanent good had been rendered. Mr. Sheriff Pound, Revs. E. Grose Hodge, J. Telfree Parr, and others spoke.

The Study of Types.*

By MR. D. L. MOODY.

IT is a very interesting thing to study the types of the Bible. Get a good book on the subject, and you will be surprised to find out how interested you will become. The Bible is full of patterns and types of ourselves. That is a popular objection against the Bible—that it tells about the failings of men. We should, however, remember that the object of the Bible is not to tell how good men are, but how bad men can become good. But more especially the Bible is full of types of Christ. Types are foreshadowings, and wherever there is a shadow there must be substance.

God seems to have chosen this means of teaching the Israelites of the promised Messiah. All the laws, ceremonies, and institutions of the Mosaic dispensation point to Christ and his dispensation. The enlightened eyes see Christ in all. For instance, the tabernacle was a type of the incarnation of Jesus: John i. 14, "And the Word was made flesh, and tabernacled amongst us." The laver typified sanctification or purity: Eph. v. 26, "That He might sanctify and cleanse the Church with the washing of water by the Word." The candlesticks typified Christ as the Light of the World. The shewbread typified Christ as the Bread of life. The High Priest was always a type of Christ. Christ was "called of God, as was Aaron"; "He ever liveth to make intercession"; He was "consecrated with an oath"—and so on. The Passover, the Day of Atonement, the Smitten Rock, the sacrifices, the City of Refuge, the Brazen Serpent—all point to Christ's atoning work.

Adam was a type of Christ. Think of the two Adams. One introduced sin and ruin into the world, and the other abolished it. So Cain stands as the representative natural man, and Abel as the spiritual man. Abel as a shepherd is a type of Christ the heavenly Shepherd. There is no more beautiful type of Christ in the Bible than Joseph. He was hated of his brethren: he was stripped of his coat; he was sold; he was imprisoned; he gained favour; he had a gold chain about his neck; every knee bowed before him. A comparison of the lives of Joseph and Jesus shows a startling similarity in their experience.

The disease of leprosy is a type of sin. It is incurable by man; it works baneful results; it is insidious in its nature, and from a small beginning works complete ruin; it separates its victims from their fellow-men, just as sin separates a man from God; and as Christ had power to cleanse the leper, so by the grace of God his blood cleanseth us from all iniquity.

Adam represents man's innate sinfulness.

Abel represents Atonement.

Enoch represents Communion.

Noah represents Regeneration.

Abraham represents Faith.

Isaac represents Sonship.

Jacob represents Discipline and Service.

Joseph represents Glory through suffering.

Another good way is to study Bible characters—take them right from the cradle to the grave. You find that sceptics often take one particular part of a man's life—say, of the life of Jacob or of David—and judge the whole by that. They say these men were queer saints; and yet God did not punish them. If you go right through these men's lives, you will find that God did punish them, according to the sins they committed.

A lady once said to me that she had trouble in reading the Bible, that she did not feel the interest she ought. If you do not keep up your interest in one way, try another.

The Person of our Lord.

IN dwelling on the Divine glory of our incarnated Saviour, how we need the aid of the Divine Spirit to pour light into our spirits, and reveal that glory. May we not say that the trend of much of modern thought respecting Divine things is rather soulish than spiritual, to the weakening, if not the denying, of the foundations which millions have built all their hopes upon. It is well described in the words of dear departed Spurgeon.* "Our cultured friends of the school of modern thought have learned at last that the Deity of Christ may be denied, the work of the Holy Spirit ignored, the inspiration of the Scripture rejected, the atonement disbelieved, and regeneration dispensed with. And yet the man who does all this may be as good a Christian as the most devout believer!"

But we have not so learned Christ. No wonder, if the expiatory sacrifice and substitutionary offering on the atoning cross of the Saviour is not accepted, that the Deity of Christ is not believed, which gives it its marvellous efficacy, that it is not needed, that a personal Holy Spirit which brings the blood of atonement, with power to the repentant and convinced sinner, is rejected, that the plenary inspiration of the Holy Scripture which contains these blessed revelations is doubted. All these precious doctrines hang together, a radiant star in heaven's firmament with its bright and blessed rays shining into nature's dark condition. Give up these, and what have we left?

In apostolic days, all believers "in every place called upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours" (1 Cor. i. 2). The angels had this invitation, "Let all the angels of God worship Him" (Heb. i. 6). The Gospel of John (v. 23) tells us in the words of our Lord Himself, "All men should honour the Son, even as they honour the Father." Do we hear the words of that sublime Gospel of John—Jesus is the Word, and is to God what man's word is to him, the expression of his mind of Himself? He was God and was with God in the glory from all eternity, and when incarnated, walking amongst men, was ever in the bosom of the Father. How clearly his divinity is implied in all the invocations at the beginning, and in the doxologies at the close of the Epistles. The Lord's final commission to his apostles to "teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," sets forth the wondrous mystery in the unity of the Godhead; and the concluding promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. xxviii. 19, 20). Who is this, then, that accompanies his beloved missionary servants but "God with us" still?

THE BRIDEGROOM.

Amongst his other and many titles He is the Head and Bridegroom of his Church, and when judgment falls upon the false woman who claims to be his bride, it will be proclaimed, "The marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife has made herself ready" (Rev.

xvii. 1; xix. 2, 7-9). This readiness of his bride is suggestively set forth in allegory by the Puritan writer Thomas Goodwin in his "Exposition of the Epistles to the Ephesians," chapters i. to ii., and expounding verses 1, 48. "When we were chosen by God, we came not up sinful before Him, or imperfectly holy, as we are here; but God looked at the utmost end, what He would make us at last, and so He presented us to Christ, upon which presentation Christ was so taken with our beauty, that never since can He absolutely delight in us until He hath sanctified and cleansed us, and made us perfect, having neither spot nor wrinkle, as at first we were presented to Him."

This great truth of the gift of the Church by his Father to Jesus is again and again repeated in that sublime prayer by our Lord in John xvii., but a few hours before his ascension. He had come down to take our true and pure humanity, to be a man with men, as distinctly man as He was God. He entered into all the limitations of that humanity from time and locality, subject to hunger, thirst, and fatigue, and even the temptations of the evil one. As we contemplate his earthly course, how gracious, tender, and kind in all his words and works, and having completed redemption work on his cross, He ascended to glory, but from thence He acts in a far different manner, and on a wider scale. He has assumed his power; his communications are no longer limited to the then capacities of his disciples, but penetrate by his Spirit to the utmost recesses of their hearts. He has changed the narrow life of external effort and influence for the all-power in heaven and earth, and a perpetual presence with his people; not only revealing Himself to them, but in them, and giving them a capacity of reception they never had before, of that "grace upon grace" in perpetual succession and daily enjoyment, and glorious openings into the future.

Our adorable Lord has given us very vivid openings to our understanding of what the glory-state is, by making Himself visible to human eyes and human apprehensions, by appearing in that glory state on the Mount of Transfiguration, and, more fully, during those forty days when He was visible likewise in his resurrection body, seen, heard, and in personal contact with them. But now ascended to where He was before, He has become in his resurrection life and condition a new and of a new race, and we who believe, and thus united to Him, are the spiritual seed. He came out of eternity into time, and has gone back out of time into eternity, taking us up with Him into eternity, for we are made by God to "sit together with Jesus in heavenly places," and hence is our real standing and our proper home, astonishing in its glory and blessedness. Yes, there is a Man in glory on the Father's throne and we are wondrously linked with Him. Farewell then the powerlessness of the flesh, its sins and rule. Welcome then the resurrection power which works in us. Farewell then our old Adam state, which we part with on the cross. Welcome our life in our new Head in the world of a new creation. What then is our occupation whilst left here below, but to seek the things above, and intimacy more and more with our beloved Lord, and waiting for his appearing?

*From Mr. Moody's latest work, PLEASURE AND PROFIT IN BIBLE STUDY. (2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d. Morgan & Scott). A book of suggestive and helpful hints for all who love the written Word, and long to know more of its contents. It is to be feared that Bible searching, as understood by our fathers, is not general in these days of haste and hurry. We trust these pointed chapters will set many to study their Bibles with plan and purpose, seeking to learn more clearly what God has been pleased therein to reveal.

*"THE SOUL WINNER; OR, HOW TO LEAD SINNERS TO THE SAVIOUR."

Gospels, False and True.

By REV. R. LEITCH, NEWCASTLE,
EX-MODERATOR OF THE PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD.

THIS week the annual Synod meetings of the English Presbyterian Synod are being held at Regent-square Church, London. On Monday evening the retiring Moderator, Rev. R. Leitch, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, delivered the customary sermon. He took for a text, "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other Gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed" (Gal. i. 8).

The question naturally arises (he said), What was that Gospel which Paul had preached, and which he sets up before the minds of his readers as being at once complete, final, and infallible? A summary of it is given in 1 Corinthians: "For I delivered unto you, first of all, that which I also received: how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, that He was buried, and that He rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures." From this short, but comprehensive, definition of the Pauline Gospel, we learn that the death and resurrection of Christ form the basis of our salvation. The ground of our pardon and acceptance with a righteous God is not, according to Paul's conception of the Gospel, something subjective, but objective. The centre of his theology is the cross, in which he saw Christ made a sin-offering for us—"delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification."

It is no gospel to tell me that Jesus Christ by his life has set before me a perfect model for my imitation, for this only brings home to my soul a crushing and overwhelming sense of my own deficiency, and fills me with dismay at the thought of standing before the tribunal of an infinitely Holy God. Any other method of justification makes man his own saviour.

Notice Paul's intolerance of any other Gospel. Paul was no narrow-minded bigot. He was a man of large, enlightened, and liberal views of truth and duty. It was not to Paul but to Peter that the sheet had to be let down from heaven, to break down his Jewish prejudices, and to convince him that the "door of faith had been opened to the Gentiles." If he uses emphatic language in condemning a false gospel, he does not do so without sufficient reason. The Pauline conception of the Gospel was not a theory that he had framed out of his own cogitations; it was a revelation which he had received from heaven. "The Gospel which was preached by me was not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." He was in no way predisposed in favour of the Gospel. His antecedents had been

ALL AGAINST THE NEW FAITH.

The system of theology in which he had been trained in his youth was essentially distinct from that which he had promulgated in the Galatian churches. To attribute his spiritual history, as Strauss, and Baur, and Pfeiderer have done, to the play within himself of religious emotions, is either to misunderstand him, or is equivalent to charging him with misunderstanding himself. His words plainly imply that up to the time of his conversion he was inaccessible to the action of any human agencies which could have resulted in his acceptance of the Gospel.

The truth of the Gospel which he preached had, moreover, vindicated itself in his own experience. It had made him a new man. It had revolutionised his whole inner being. He knew God as he had never done before. He had a peace and rest in his soul to which previously he had been an utter stranger. His new faith gave him a larger outlook and a deeper experience of godliness. He was conscious of a vital union subsisting between the risen and glorified Christ and his own soul. He exulted now in a glorious freedom. He saw the law fulfilled by Christ, and this had changed him from slavery to sonship. He could say, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." The truths which were the staple of his teaching thus became principles deeply rooted in his life experience, and he felt that the Gospel which had been revealed to him exactly answered his own inner needs, and thus his theology was, in the richest and deepest sense of that term, the theology of experience.

Can we wonder then that Paul's whole nature should have throbbed with a feeling of holy indignation when he thought of this Gospel being corrupted by a set of Judaizers, who were perverting the Gospel by substituting a doctrine of righteousness by works for the doctrine of righteousness by faith? These Galatians saw no inconsistency in beginning with faith in a crucified Saviour, and ending in Jewish legalism, but to the mind of Paul the two things appeared to be quite incompatible.

Is there nothing in our own day that corresponds to all this? Who can deny that the Church of Rome has added enormously to the Pauline Gospel? What is High Church Ritualism in its essence but just a reversion to the earlier type of revealed religion? The Gospel, in many quarters, is being overlaid with rites and ceremonies that savour more of the Old than the New Testament dispensation.

That the Pauline Gospel was adapted to the apostolic age, few will dare to deny. Chronologically considered, we are to-day far removed from St. Paul's age, and many forms of social, intellectual, commercial, and political life have changed, but that Gospel which was preached in the first century is the very same that is required in the nineteenth. It never grows old, and those who embrace it need never feel that they are behind the age. If men will insist on making it accord, as they fancy, more with the spirit of the age, and make it agree more with the dictates of human reason, by divesting it of its supernatural character, they only weaken its force and destroy its usefulness.

WE NEED NO NEW GOSPEL

for the present day. What we do need is that the old Gospel should be preached with fresh power, with more faith, more earnestness, and more reliance on God the Holy Ghost.

Open-air Mission for Ireland.

THE report for last year of the Open-air Mission for Ireland is entitled "Where the Paths Meet." We make the following extracts:—

"The rapid multiplication of open-air meetings in this country within the past few years is an evidence of the guiding of the Holy Spirit. Ten years ago street-preaching was unknown in Ireland, south of Portadown, and was believed to be impossible. But now the Gospel is preached every week in the streets of Dublin, Williamstown, Blackrock, Kingstown, Arklow, Cork, Galway, Athlone, Tullamore, Portlinton, and Sligo; and, during the summer months, at Kilkee, Howth, Bray, and Greystones.

"In Dublin alone there are about fifteen street meetings held every week in winter, and about twenty-five in summer. In Belfast there are more than 120 street services regularly maintained every week, whilst frequent meetings are held in the streets of Derry, Omagh, Enniskillen, Lisburn, Lurgan, Portadown, and other large northern towns, as well as in the most popular watering places.

"Thus, through the teaching of the Spirit of God, many fearless men and women have been sent forth to make known to multitudes, who would not otherwise hear it, the glorious message of present pardon, imperishable peace, and everlasting life through simple faith in the person and work of the Lord Jesus Christ.

"Amidst all this tumult in Sligo, the Spirit of God has been silently touching dead souls, and already fruit has resulted to his praise. A clergyman writes: I had the joy this week of receiving into Church membership three Protestant young people who have been won to the Lord through your efforts in this town. Such testimonies more than compensate for the suffering which street-preaching entails." The hon. organising secretary is Mr. George Williams, 13, D'Olier-street, Dublin.

Village Work.

"HE SHALL DIRECT THY STEPS."

FOR several months past we have been proving the blessed reality of the power of God in owning the proclamation of his Gospel. We have been particularly cheered in the manifest leadings of the Holy Spirit in directing and controlling our steps. My wife and I had started to go some miles to visit a poor Christian widow, intending calling on several persons en route, though not in the direct road. After going some distance I was impressed that I ought to drive direct to the widow's cottage; why, I knew not. On arriving there, it was to find a poor woman just leaving the house. She had been led to walk some miles to visit the widow (a relative), and was now leaving. I had not seen her for years, but my late father and I had often spoken to her of salvation till she left the locality. I asked if she were yet unsaved. With a sigh she said "Yes, still unsaved." "Do you wish still to remain so?" "No; but I live in too much wickedness to be saved." "That is just the very reason you should have the Lord Jesus as your Saviour and Friend." She sat down, listened afresh to the story of the Cross, unburdened her heart to Christ, on her knees gave herself to Him, and received Him to her heart, and went on her way rejoicing.

On another occasion I left the house purposing to go into a village by one road, but unconsciously went by the front gate instead of the back, and so went by another path. In doing so I passed a cottage, and was impelled to go in. I noticed a peculiarly pleased look on the face of the woman who came to the door. On entering she said: "I was at the meeting last night, and God spoke to my soul through you. I have had no sleep all night, I have been such a sinner." Then she burst into tears. Continuing, she said, "I pleaded with God this morning that He would make you call and see me, for I want to be saved, and I felt you could help to make it plainer to me, and when I saw you I said 'God has answered my prayer.' What must I do? What can I do?"

"Receive what Christ Jesus has done for you, and accept Him as God's gift." After further conversation she was able to praise God for the gift of love.

A very intelligent man said at the close of a meeting, "I don't know what made me come to the service to-night, but I felt I must. It seems to me God made me come, and made you say just what you did. I have been trying to live a Christian life for a long time, and have tried to leave off and overcome my sins, but the more I have tried the worse I have become." I need not say he found the Saviour ere he left the meeting.

These are samples out of numbers of instances witnessed lately as trophies of the power of the Gospel. Our villages need it beyond everything else. Many villages I have recently visited are abodes of heathen darkness. Do pray for these places. We are still plodding on with the Gospel. Over thirty years have passed since my late father first came to these districts, and hundreds upon hundreds of precious souls have been saved. The work still goes on. Our Gospel meetings are better attended in many of our mission rooms than for many years past, and souls are being constantly blessed.

We are anxious to send our Gospel tent into some of the villages during this summer, and would seek the prayers and sympathy of your readers towards this end.

Rescue Work in Sheffield.—Mr. W. Corbridge, of the Rescue and Evangelisation Mission, 250, Duke-street, Sheffield, writes:—"We have now been helpful to 279 rescue girls and thirty-two children in four years, and 85 per cent. have turned out well. Several of the girls have been on the streets of London, and others come from Sussex, Surrey, Kent, Hants, and various parts of Great Britain. God's special smile has been upon us in the rescue work. Many sad cases that have given other homes much trouble have turned out well under our care. We think the secret is we trust them; the homes are homes, with the freedom and charm of home. We greatly need better accommodation for our maternity cases. These are the most difficult, yet so few people sympathise with them, although in many cases they are the most needy and the most deserving."

King David and His Psalms.

By REV. J. STORJOHANN, CHRISTIANIA.

SONGS OF THANKSGIVING FOR THE NEW HARVEST.

IF the three years' famine, by reason of the Philistine war, of which it may be said to have been the cause, was momentous in the history of the Davidic period, the conclusion of the famine was no less remarkable, owing to the punishment which was deemed necessary before God would grant the country rain. When David inquired of God concerning the continued drought, he was told that it was on account of Saul and of the "house of blood" that the famine had been sent.

Despite the promise made on oath* by Joshua to the Gibeonites, that they should be unmolested in the land, it was Saul's intention that they should be so completely exterminated as not to exist at all within the boundaries of Israel. By this fanatical outrage Saul's house had become a house of blood, for his kinsmen must have supported him (comp. 2 Sam. xxi. 1-7), and have benefited by the confiscated property. The whole population became a party to the crime by not showing even a passive opposition to such a breach of faith and law, and by not having seen that due compensation was made for the plunder.

It was, however, out of zeal for the children of Israel and Judah that Saul had acted, probably at the time that the Tabernacle was moved from Nob to Gibeah. When asked what compensation they required, the Gibeonites answered that they did not wish the payment of a fine (2 Sam. xxi. 2), a form of restitution which was also forbidden in such cases (Num. xxxv. 31), and that, unlike the Israelites, they had no right to revenge themselves by the shedding of blood. When David granted this right, and asked them what atonement they wished made, they demanded seven men of the house of Saul whom they would hang before Jehovah in Gibeah of Saul the chosen of Jehovah. The Gibeonites might, in justification of their demand, have pleaded the Lord's words to Moses (Num. xxv. 4, R.V.), when the people had sinned with the Midianites: "Take all the chiefs of the people, and hang them up unto Jehovah before the sun, that the fierce anger of the Lord may turn away from Israel." The bodies were to hang on the aforetime royal hill, from the commencement of the barley harvest (in the beginning of April) until God gave rain.†

An act of heroic maternal love, however, threw a softening light on this horrible scene of execution, and shortened the time of waiting. Rizpah, the mother of two of the victims, covered all of them with a sackcloth, and watched over the bodies day and night, in order to keep away the birds and the beasts of prey. David saw in her touching grief a silent prayer for honourable burial. This prayer David granted, and at the same time took the opportunity of having the bodies of Saul and Jonathan brought from Jabesh, and buried in the sepulchre of Saul. But how could David have omitted the far more important task of giving his people a right understanding of the whole of this stirring judgment? A judgment which was a testimony to the whole world that God will in due course visit the sins of every nation against law and faithfulness?

It appears, from 2 Sam. xxi. 14, as if the rain came only after the interment had taken place. But it must have been about the time of the execution that the third incursion of the Philistines occurred, because they saw that there was again a bad harvest in Israel ("at the return of the year, at the time when kings go out to battle," 2 Sam. xi. 1).

* The breaking of Joshua's oath by Saul and his people was manifestly punished by the violation of the oath made by the Philistines to David and Israel (Ps. cxliv. 8-11).
† Contrary to the usual order of the law. (Deut. xxi. 22 and 23.)

The execution took place in April, when the "latter" rains are usually over, and the dry season lasts until the "early" rains come, in October. It was certainly not so long as this before the prayer for the land was granted, but, what was not usual at that time of year, there must have been showers of "late" rain, which ripened the grass for the sheep, and the corn (Ps. lxx. 13) for the people. Possibly this very shower was the torrent called down by David's supplication in the Philistine war. This supposition is strengthened by the fact that it is in connection with the Philistine campaign that David mentions the bloodguiltiness and its atonement. In Ps. ix. he refers to God as One who remembers bloodshed by violence (12), in connection with his own deliverance from the gates of death (13); also the defeat of the heathen (15).

But above everything, David, in Psalm lxx., gives his people the fullest instruction regarding the atonement of the crime and the pardon of the nation, as shown in the granting of his prayer relative to the war and to the famine. Was ever such occasion to praise God as the Lord and Giver of harvest as now, at the conclusion of the famine, which ended amid such a concurrence of thrilling events? These are mirrored in Ps. lxx. in the deepest thoughts, the most powerful language, the brightest colours.

In Psalm lxx. 3 we most probably find reference to the atonement of the crime committed by Saul and the people against the Gibeonites. In this case there really were "cases of guilt," which were too difficult of decision for David as judge (Deut. i. 17; xvii. 8), and which as king he was unable to cope with.* He was constrained first of all to seek enlightenment from God in the matter, and then to leave to the Gibeonites what atonement they would demand. It was a common national sin for which the whole country was punished by famine. This common guilt, "our transgressions," God condoned by accepting the atonement demanded by the Gibeonites, and by answering the prayer of the country (2 Sam. xxi. 14). Thus He first afflicted the land with distress, and then visited it (Ps. lxx. 9). The Gibeonites had with bitter irony, in conformity with Deut. xvii. 15, called Saul "the chosen of Jehovah" (2 Sam. xxi. 6). In allusion to this David dares to say, "Blessed is the man whom Thou chooseth"; and of himself and his people he says, "We shall be satisfied with the pleasures of thy house," i.e., when Thou lettest us approach and dwell in thy courts.

Psalm lxx. proclaims a three-fold hearing of David's prayer by God: "Thou that hearest prayer, unto Thee shall all flesh come."

(1) God has shown Himself as the Hearer of prayer in condoning the sin of the people, and in choosing them again, together with their king, to approach and dwell in his courts.

(2) God has answered the prayer of the people by terrible deeds of justice, thereby lulling the tumult of the nations, and spreading a holy fear of God unto the uttermost parts of the earth.

(3) God has heard the cry of the country (comp. 2 Sam. xxiv. 25), and answered it by sending a good year, thus filling the land with rejoicings.

(To be concluded.)

Wesson Rio Harbour Mission.—Mr. Oscar Schmidt, the missionary of this effort, has just been stricken down by yellow fever. After a hard struggle against the disease he succumbed, and on March 20 he passed away. The committee under whose direction he worked bear witness to the earnestness and sincerity of his character, and to the efforts he put forth for the welfare of the seamen in the port.

* Without the historical supposition, it has proved impossible to understand verse 3 of Psalm lxx. Luther translated the passage "our iniquities," and the revised Norwegian version gives "mine iniquities," but quite without authority, as the words, literally rendered, mean "cases of guilt too hard for me." The English Revised Version has translated the words, "Iniquities prevail against me," retaining "me"; but in so doing has added to the text by inserting the word "against." The marginal note indicates that the Revisers had some difficulty in dealing with the verse. It will be seen how victoriously the progress of historical research clears up such long-standing questions.

American Missions in Egypt.

DEAR SIR,—Having been in Egypt for a little holiday, and having an interest in the Lord's work, we have taken some pains to ascertain what is being done in that respect in this most needy part of his vineyard. We pass over the missions to the English-speaking part of the population, but in doing so would like to emphasise the need of Y.M.C.A. work in the country. We know of no part of the world having greater temptations to young men than this.

The two leading agencies at work in seeking to reach the native population are the American Presbyterian Mission and the Church Missionary Society. It is about forty years ago since the founders of the American Mission began operations in Egypt. They and their successors have laboured away steadily during that time, often amid great discouragement, but they are now seeing fruit to their labours.

Their work has been very largely educational, as from the first they saw that their great hope lay in getting hold of the young people as the best means of destroying the natural prejudice that exists against Protestant Christianity. The result of this is that now they have not only large schools throughout the country, but have many native Christian congregations, formed very largely from the young people who have passed through their schools.

At present they have from Alexandria to the first Cataract, twenty-five girls' day-schools, with 2599 pupils; 135 boys' day-schools, with 8179 pupils. Of these three-fourths are Copts and one-fourth are Moslems. The education given is of a very high class. Many of the pupils pass from these schools to very responsible positions under Government and elsewhere. Seeing that the Bible is read and taught, we cannot shut our eyes to the great good which must result from such means.

The Sabbath-schools, of which there are 120, with nearly 4000 pupils, are doing grand work. It was our privilege to visit two of them, one at Cairo and the other at Assiout, with over 350 and 500 children present respectively. It rejoiced our hearts to hear these brown-skinned and bright-eyed little folks singing the songs of Zion in their own language.

The mission has now 190 preaching stations, with thirty-six organised native congregations, and a membership of 5004, showing an increase last year by profession of faith of 577, out of which four were Moslems. There are twenty-two native preachers, some of which are very able and eloquent men. We heard one preach at Assiout to an attentive native congregation of 500. The native colporteurs, of which there are twenty-seven, visit the towns and villages, where no other agency exists, selling Bibles, Testaments, religious books, etc. This branch of the work is giving every evidence of God's blessing upon it. We give one case in particular, where a Bible was bought by a young Moslem, and now there are ten meeting together in the same village to study it, in face of great persecution from their friends. Dr. Alexander informed us they had applied to the mission for a teacher to be sent to them.

There is a large mission college at Assiout, for the training of young men who are to become teachers and preachers; it is presided over by Dr. Alexander. There is also a medical mission at Assiout, where nearly 20,000 patients are treated annually, and to many of which the Gospel is preached. Zenana work is carried on throughout the country by Bible-readers, together with night-schools and several other agencies.

Whilst rejoicing in the great and good work done by our American brethren, and thanking God for the spirit of sacrifice and love which such a work entails, we feel that there is still much land to be possessed. It is impossible to conceive the ignorance, superstition, and degradation in which the people of this country are living, unless by a personal visit to their homes. We can only pray that God may speedily sweep away the blighting influence of Mohammedanism by the bringing in of the glorious Gospel of Jesus Christ.—Yours faithfully,

Newcastle.

"THE KING IS NEAR OF KIN TO US."—2 Sam. xix. 42.

THERE are two derivations for the word king: one from the word can—the king is the man that can do things; the other from the word kin—the king is closely related to us, of our kith and kin. In either case, there is a beautiful meaning, as touching our Lord and Saviour. He is King, because He has overcome our enemies, and can overcome. He is King, because He has taken on Himself our flesh and blood, and has for ever made us one with Himself. The King is our kinsman; our kinsman is King. Whoever does his Father's will, the same is brother, sister, mother.

It is very comforting to know how really our Lord has identified Himself with us. The Gospels are full of the wonderful story. His kinship was manifested in—

His prayers. He bade us speak to God as our Father; in that marvellous possessive pronoun, not only linking us all to one another, but including Himself in our petitions, save when we ask for forgiveness.

His infirmities. "We have not a high priest who cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities." His hunger and thirst; his weariness and exhaustion; his suffering unto death, all accentuate the closeness of the tie between us.

His temptations. "In all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." The avenues through which the tempter could approach Him were those by which He assails us also. No temptation took Him, but such as is common to man. So to every lonely soldier of his He draws near, saying, "Be of good cheer, I have passed through it all. I am your brother in the fight, I feel for you with a quick sympathy; the glories of my throne do not alter my true-hearted love."

MONDAY, May 4.

"THE MEN OF JUDAH CLAVE UNTO THEIR KING."—2 Sam. xx. 2.

We are reminded of the exhortation of the good Barnabas, that with purpose of heart the converts of Antioch should cleave unto the Lord. This is the test of a true faith. We often come to the dividing of the paths. We stand on the watershed of the hills; that way leads back to Moab with its fascinations, this on to Canaan with its spiritual attractions. Orpah and Ruth must choose. Each is equally profuse in speeches and tears, but the ultimate test of love is whether they will stay or go. Which will cleave to the widowed Naomi? She is the truest lover; her fidelity will attest the fervour and strength of her affection. Orpah kissed her mother-in-law, and returned to her people and her gods, while Ruth "clave unto her."

We must cleave to Jesus in spite of the derisions of the multitude. We must be prepared to stand with Him when He stands alone, or goes forth alone to die. We must be willing to stem the mighty tide of the world which has left Him and pours past us. Though all forsake Him, yet we must cleave.

We must cleave to Jesus in spite of the rebellion of the flesh. Our whole nature may sometimes rise in insurrection, demanding some forbidden fruit. It is no child's play then for the lonely will to stand by itself in unshaken fidelity and loyalty, but it must.

We must cleave to Jesus when He seems to rebuff us. Only those who can stand so sharp an ordeal, are exposed to it. But sometimes we are called to pass through it as Job, that angels may learn how Christ's lovers cling to Him, not for his gifts, but for Himself.

TUESDAY, May 5.

"BECAUSE HE SLEW THE GIBEONITES."—2 Sam. xxi. i.

The Gibeonites were under the protection of a special covenant, which had been entered into between them and Joshua. That covenant was the outcome of a ruse on their part. But since it had been most solemnly made by the leaders of Israel, it held good. The fact of their deceit and chicanery could not absolve Israel from the oath which had been passed for their safety. For centuries the provisions of this covenant had been observed, till Saul invaded them, and slew the Gibeonites. This was a grievous sin, which, according to the religious light of the time, seemed to demand blood, and David proposed to atone for blood by blood. Nothing but blood could atone for sin so black and dark.

We are also protected by a covenant, into which the Father has entered with the Son, not for our worthiness or merit, but only because He would. The provisions of that covenant engage to take us to be his people, to remember our sins no more, and to make the divine law the object of our love (Heb. viii). And the argument is irresistible, that if man is so mindful of a covenant as to feel that its infraction is a sin which can only be expiated by blood-shedding, it is impossible to suppose that God will ever run back from his. It must be "ordered in all things and sure."

O my soul, thou mayest rest secure in this: here is an everlasting rock, this foundation shall suffice thee for evermore. Thou art in the Son of his love. Though thou art sinful and evil, yet thou art included in the covenant which is more lasting than that of day and night. Jesus has met its conditions on thy behalf, and has undertaken to secure thy obedience and holiness. O rest in the Lord; be of good comfort: heaven and earth may pass away, but the covenant of his love shall never be removed.

WEDNESDAY, May 6.

"THY GENTLENESS HATH MADE ME GREAT."—2 Sam. xxii. 36.

The triumph of God's gentle goodness will be our song for ever. In those far distant ages, when we look back on our earthly course, as a grown man on his boyhood, and when the words of this Psalm shall express our glad emotions, we shall recognise that the Hand which brought us thither was as gentle as our mother's, and that the things we craved, but failed to receive, were withheld by his gentle goodness. Our history is a specimen of what gentleness will do.

The Apostle besought the Corinthian converts by the gentleness of Christ (2 Cor. x. 1); though there were abuses amongst them that seemed to call for stringent dealing, he felt that they could be best removed by the gentle love which he had learned from the heart of Christ. The wisdom which is from above is gentle as well as pure, and in dealing with the sin that chokes our growth, it is probable that gentleness will do more than severity. The gentleness of the nurse that cherishes her children; of the lover to her whom he cherishes above himself; of the infinite love which bears and endures to the uttermost, is the furnace before which the foul ingredients of our hearts are driven never to return. We might brave the lion, we are vanquished by the Lamb; we could withstand the scathing look of scorn, but when the gentle Lord casts on us the look of ineffable tenderness, we go out to weep bitterly.

That He has borne with us so lovingly; that He has filled our lives with mercy even when compelled to correct; that He has never altered in his tender behaviour towards us; that He has returned our rebuffs and slights with meekness and forbearance; that He has never wearied of us—this is an everlasting tribute to the gentleness that makes great.

THURSDAY, May 7.

"HE SHALL BE AS THE LIGHT OF THE MORNING WHEN THE SUN RISETH, A MORNING WITHOUT CLOUDS," ETC.—2 Sam. xxiii. 4.

The dealings of God with man are compared to morning light, and the sprouting of tender grass in the sunshine that follows rain. The one may refer to youth, and the other to age. In each there is sunlight, but in the one case it is before the clouds have gathered, in the other after they have dispersed, their burden being discharged.

Clouds. There are many different sorts: the cirrus, like platines in the sky; the cumulus, in heaps, like the summits of distant mountains; the strata, or long bars; the nimbus, heavy with showers. There is a counterpart for each in human life, without which we should miss much of those experiences of light and shade that so frequently reveal the nature of the light. We should not know God's comfort and very present help if it were not for the clouds which are born in the marsh-lands of trouble. Who does not prefer the changeful beauty of an English spring to the unclouded blue of Italian skies?

The light of the morning. The love of God steals over hearts as the dawn. He is the Rock, but He breaks gently as light. So God's love came to Lydia, whose heart opened as a flower its petals. This makes it difficult for some of us to decide the moment of our regeneration, but we know that, once darkness, we are now light in the Lord.

Clear shining after rain. We all know something of cloud and rain. If we did not, our lives would be arid as a desert. Rain is necessary to fructify the seeds that lie buried in the soil, but clear shining is needed too. Times of joy are needed equally as those of sorrow. The tender grass is the child of rain and sun. Hast thou had tears, thou shalt have smiles! Hast thou had clouds and rain, thou shalt have clear shining!

FRIDAY, May 8.

"NEITHER WILL I OFFER BURNT OFFERINGS UNTO THE LORD MY GOD OF THAT WHICH DOTHTH COST ME NOTHING."—2 Sam. xxiv. 24.

God's love to us cost Him something. He spared not his own Son, and that Son spared not his blood. But how little our love to Him costs us! Let us understand that where there is true, strong love to Jesus, it will cost us something. Love is the costliest of all undertakings.

It will cost us self-denial. Christ and self are perfectly incompatible; to have the one we must be prepared to surrender the other. The heart subtly schemes to hold both, but it does not deceive Christ. He knows in a moment when we have preferred to spare ourselves and to sacrifice Him, or to obey Him and sacrifice ourselves. We know it also. At first we may find it an effort to count all things but loss for Him, but as we go on doing it, and drink in the fresh air that breathes about the mountains of self-denial, above all, as we see the smile of pleasure on his face, our hearts leap with joy, and we love to give Him everything, not thinking of the cost, any more than Mary did when she broke the alabaster box of very precious ointment.

It will cost us companionships. Those who knew us will pass us with averted faces. It will cost us hard-earned money, for we shall realise that we have no property in anything that we possess. It will cost us high repute amongst our fellows. But what shall we mind if we gain Christ? You cannot give up for Him without winning the spiritual counterpart of everything you renounce in Him in whom all the fulness dwells.

SATURDAY, May 9.

"AS THE LORD LIVETH, THAT HATH REDEEMED MY SOUL OUT OF ALL DISTRESS."—1 Kings i. 29.

"In my distress I called on the Lord, and cried to my God." Never let there be distress without its cry. He will hear your voice out of his temple, and your cry will come before Him even into his ears. He will answer and set you in a large place. There is even a gain to be won from distress, because it brings out new phases of Christ's redemptive help.

God redeemed David from the calumny of those who maligned him without cause. In so many of his Psalms he refers to the unjust and cruel hatred which misrepresented him and his doings. But God, to whom he committed his cause, vindicated him, so that his righteousness shone as the light, and his judgment as the noonday. So He will do for you. Those who now lay all manner of unkind charges to your door, will be compelled to admit your innocence. Only leave your cause with God, and be still.

God redeemed David from all the afflictions that shadowed his early days; from his wanderings in the wilderness, from his hairbreadth escapes in the caves, from meeting his death on many a terrible battlefield. We hardly realise, just now, how much we owe to the Angel of God's redemption, who is ever beside us, envining us with careful love, so that no evil may approach us, or snare take our feet. Our pathway is thick with snares and dangers, as pilgrims in journeying through the valley of the shadow, but there is a way out, and in the morning we shall marvel to see how we escaped.

Devotional meetings, to pray for the passing of the Sunday Closing Bill, will be held on May 6 at the Church House, Westminster, arranged by the C.E.T.S., and at Exeter Hall and the Y.M.C.A. rooms, Aldersgate-street, organised by the Women's Total Abstinence Union.

What the Spring Teaches Us.—2.

S. Sol. ii. 11, 12.

LAST week the spring brought us the message of CONTENTMENT. This week there are two or three more for us to hear. First that of HOPE.

As we see the buds and blossoms upon the trees we think of what they will become, and we hope for fruit and flowers by-and-bye.

So it is with your young lives; they are as it were in blossom during the years of childhood, but as you grow older the buds of your character will grow into flowers and fruits. Your parents and friends watch them as carefully as the gardener does the seeds growing under his care, and they hope that your lives will become useful and good and pleasant to all who know you.

I have no doubt many of you sit and think, or lie awake before you get to sleep at night, and wonder what you will do when you are "grown up." You make all sorts of plans, "build castles in the air," and look forward with hope to the future. All this is good, and helps to make your life happier. Life without hope would be like a deserted house with all its brightness gone.

But here comes the next message, which is one of

WATCHFULNESS.

Sometimes after the spring has set in a sharp frost or a cold wind will come one night and nip off the blossoms which looked so promising and hopeful; or perhaps some horrid blight or tiny insects will spread over the buds and prevent them from coming to perfection. Therefore the gardener has to be on the watch to protect his plants and trees as much as possible from these evils. So, too, you must guard very carefully against any of the little sins and temptations (and, of course, the big ones too) which would come and spoil your character just as it is forming in these early years.

I heard a clergyman once give this acrostic on the word "Watch":—Words. Actions. Thoughts. Company. Heart. If we watch each of these it will include all the blossoms and buds on the tree of our life.

One day I saw some big boys sailing their model yachts across a piece of water. After they had started them they ran round to meet them on the opposite side. Two of the boats made a splendid start, and got ahead of the others, but a gust of wind caused the one to get entangled in the other, and instead of scudding on across the lake, they slowly sailed round each other, and made no progress at all.

Does not that illustrate the verse in Galatians which says, "Ye did run well; who did hinder you?" And so it is with many bright young lives. They begin so well, but are hindered in their course by sin in many forms. Untruthful or unkind words, deceitful actions, evil thoughts, bad company, and a naughty heart—all these spoil the life, and, like cold winds and frost, shrivel up the buds and blossoms which gave such hopeful promise of fruitfulness. For instance, one of my "nephews" says he feels inclined to lose his temper sometimes when he is playing golf or some other game. That would soon spoil the beauty of his character, would it not? He will have to watch against that, as we all must against every other temptation.

In your Bible Searcher this week you are asked to find out what are the fruits of the Spirit. When you have done so, remember that any or all of them may be ruined by sin unless you watch and pray against it.

Another message that is brought to us by the spring is called

HARD WORK.

Look at that tiny plant shooting up through the earth. Do you think it is easy to grow? Not when there are heavy clouds of earth that it has to fight its way up through. But it perseveres, and pushes, and pushes its way up until the heavy lump falls on one side, and up comes the little shoot into the sunny fresh air. Perhaps some of you are not fond of work. When you are in school you would rather draw faces than figures, and count the spots on the wall-paper, or the flies on the ceiling, than do the sums that are set for you to do! That is like living downward. Remember, God is above you, and you must ask Him to help you to live upward. Not long ago you searched out for me some texts upon diligence. Well, that is a message of the springtime, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might." And now the last message is

PATIENCE.

How hard it is sometimes to wait for something we are very anxious for. When your birthday was two or three weeks off the time seems to go so slowly, doesn't it. When I was at a boarding school we used to put down all the days that were to pass before the term ended, and mark them off one by one—90, 89, 88, 87, 86, and so on, until they came down to 7, 6, 5, 4, 3, the day after to-morrow, to-morrow, to-day, hurrah, off we go! But I think the term seemed all the longer because of our impatience; and the holidays passed much too quickly. Why? Because we were not at all impatient for them to be over.

Dear boys and girls, don't be in a hurry for your schooldays to be over. The older you get the more you will feel that life is very short. Pray rather that the seeds of your future life now being sown may grow up to produce good fruit. Seeds take a long time to grow, and it is no use trying to hurry them. "Ye have need of patience." "Let patience have her perfect work. Then, when the fruit time comes, your character, which the Spirit of God has caused to grow, will be beautiful and good, a joy to yourselves and a pleasure to those around you."

The Bible Searcher.

Personal Paragraphs.

THE first question of the Bible Searcher last week seems to have been too much for my young readers' perception; only one having answered it really correctly! I think, therefore, you will not grudge Helen S. Dunbar two stars. As, however, the question may be considered rather "catchy," I have included in the list those who gave the answer, "father-in-law," if all their other replies were correct.

THE PRIZES.—I have been asked to say what books were given for prizes. These are some of them:—Pocket Bible, "Dad's Light," "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "Pilgrim's Progress," "Birds of the Bible," and some story books.

GIVING REFERENCES.—When asked to give references to a text, this only means, say where the text is found, and does not mean that other texts on the same subject are to be looked up. Many of you have given yourselves a good deal of extra work by not understanding this.

AS TO AGE, I think seventeen should be the limit for expecting a prize, but by all means let older ones send in their answers. The knowledge gained will be worth the trouble.

SUNDAY POSTING.—Do not post on Sunday unless the box is cleared after midnight. The "second list" is as good as the "first."

BESSIE WHITEHEAD.—Send your answers every week, and I will keep a note of them as they come. THOMAS KIRKPATRICK.—Perhaps this text will help you, sometimes: Prov. xvi. 32. FRANCES BENNETT.—See note as to age. K. DOWSETT.—Thank you for stamps received. GRANNIE.—Thank you for your letter. I have answered your questions below. ROSETTA SHERWIN.—You have done splendidly. EDITH HEARN.—Thank you very much for your beautiful box of flowers. C. S. HAYWARD.—You are rather hard on "the nephews." Let us hope they will soon do better.

UNCLE TOM.

From a Little Girl in S. Africa.

DEAR UNCLE TOM,—My sister, myself, and another little girl who goes to school with us have answered questions given to the children in THE CHRISTIAN. It is an old number, but you will know that we are not able to get ours as soon as the children in England get theirs.

We live on a farm in South Africa which is far away from any town, and we only have post twice a week. A Kafir postboy brings it on horseback.

I have often read in books about English farms. They are not at all like ours. We have large dams on our farms, which my father builds, to hold water. We have ostriches too, which are very often so vicious that we have to run away very fast, and get into a tree before they can kick us. They hate all kinds of people and always try to kick them. There are heaps of snakes, and they sometimes come into the house. We are very much afraid of snakes.

My sister asks if you get quinces in England, because we have a lot, and like to eat them very much. We eat salt with all our fruit, which our governess thinks very funny, for she says little girls in England eat sugar with theirs.—Your little friend

GREYTOWN, NATAL.

A WORK began here with the visit of the late Dr. A. N. Somerville, the results of which have continued to the present. His sermons were translated into Dutch. He was followed at intervals by Revs. Andrew Murray and David Russell. Converts carried back the Gospel and the influences of the Spirit to their isolated farms. Here and there a Bible-reading and prayer-meeting was started, and the neighbouring farmers and their families were gathered in. So the wave of spiritual life spread over the whole district in an ever-widening circle.

The way in which the Spirit sometimes worked may be illustrated by such cases as these: A wealthy farmer was sitting by the fire. His past life came before him, and he was convicted of its sinfulness. He threw his cards into the fire, but that did not bring him peace. He had a horse entered for a coming race, and wrote cancelling the engagement; but still no peace. Then he sold all his racehorses, and gave up his gambling and other forms of sin, and then found pardon and peace and ways of serving God.

Another, a rich farmer, was riding over his place one Sunday morning, and while looking at his cattle a mighty influence came over him, and the question was pressed upon him, "Where did all these come from?" Then the conviction followed, "I have never thanked God for one of them; I have not acknowledged Him in any of my ways." He galloped home, sent his horse to the stable, and rushed up stairs, fell on his knees by the bedside, and cried for mercy.

The president of the Agricultural Society and race-meeting of Umvoti county, in speaking at the public dinner, attributed their failure that year to the wave of religious mania that was sweeping over the county. But that it was a work of the Holy Spirit appeared from the fact that Dutch farmers, who detested the idea of the natives being educated, or used as preachers of the Gospel, began to speak of Jesus to them. They formed a missionary society among themselves, and sent native evangelists into Zululand, whose work is going on to this day.

My informant added that his great hope for the Transvaal was that the Holy Spirit might change the feeling of the people towards the native races, and that they might learn the Gospel of the grace of God by imparting it to those of whose country they had possessed themselves.

LESSONS IN GRATITUDE.

What the present feeling is may be gathered from the remark of a prominent inhabitant of Pretoria, of English descent, who said, in reply to some observation about the natives, "The only way to teach them gratitude is the shamback," i.e., the whip.

One of my first recollections on hearing my uncoloured fellow-creatures in South Africa pouring out the sad tale of the sufferings they endure at the hands of their coloured brethren, was that of having heard every one of these agonies laid to the account of the British workman and domestic servant. And, singularly enough, a brother resident in Basutoland, who lately visited the paradise which the English everywhere call Home, had made the same observation.

Our fellow-sufferers in Africa eulogise "the raw Kaffir" in preference to the one who has been educated more or less at a mission-station, just as I heard the British matron bewail the woes which the Education Act has inflicted upon her through her maids. And as to ingratitude, who has not heard it brought against the humbler classes at home ad nauseam? I was conducted over the Agricultural Show ground at Johannesburg, where provision had been made for the homeless people whose corrugated iron homes had been destroyed by the

HORRIBLE DYNAMITE EXPLOSION.

Before we left, my friend remarked, "But you know there is no gratitude among these people!" Were they all blacks? Oh, no. Dutch, English, Italian, Afrikaner, colonist, native—a fair sample of our common humanity. But my friend added, "Of course, there are exceptions," as some pleasing instance of the kind recurred to his recollection. The complainant here or at home against his dependents, whether descended from Shem, or Japheth, or Ham, generally makes the same admission.

I must not omit to mention the good work done by some zealous Christians in Johannesburg, though, so far as I could learn in my short stay, the churches as such are not very evangelistically active. The Y.M.C.A. and the S.A.G.M. have open-air meetings, after which they announce the meetings at their respective halls; and Rev. H. D. Goodenough, of the American Mission, and his helpers, make manifest the courage of their convictions by gathering in the market square every Sunday afternoon a large body of Kaffirs and other coloured people, to whom they preach the Gospel, some of the preachers being themselves coloured.

Leaving this meeting, my friends and I walked to the Kaffir compound at the City and Suburban Mine. Here we saw in his integrity, in his native ignorance and more than semi-nakedness—great children, many of splendid physique, in their huts, pounding tobacco into snuff, playing their simple one-stringed viol, or a couple executing a duet upon a wood harmonicon, or outside their huts dancing in circles, each with a panpipe at his mouth or making a vocal noise. But while we were there we saw no coarse or violent behaviour.

Among these children of nature Mr. Baker, a barrister, from Pretoria, has begun

A TRULY CHRISTIAN WORK.

He became wealthy, I understood, through the increased value of land. He has given up his practice, in order to devote himself to the spiritual and temporal good of these uncared-for souls. He spends the greater part of the Lord's Day among them, and by the time this is in print he will probably have completed a school-house which we saw in building, as well as a house for two evangelists whom he has engaged as his helpers. It was under consideration whether he should join the S.A.G.M., but he has decided to work independently. How many a wasted Christian life might, in ways like this, be made fruitful, and how incomparably happier here during the sowing time, how infinitely more blessed throughout the eternal harvest.

AN INDUSTRIAL HOME.

Prominent in philanthropic and Christian work in Johannesburg is "The Present Help League and Industrial Home for Boys, Fordsburg," of which the hon. director and the chief moving spirit is Rev. W. Ed. Kelly, a Baptist minister, an enthusiastic Irishman, and a most kindly-natured Christian. The superintendent of the Home is Mr. H. Jasper Smith, of whose conversion and Christian character and work Mr. James Pearce, late secretary of the West-end branch of the Y.M.C.A., has lively recollection. He has maintained the credit of that Association in Australia (whither he went from London in 1885) and now in South Africa.

The Industrial Home, a corrugated iron building, was itself damaged by the explosion to the amount of at least £1000, much of it requiring to be rebuilt. The work done here is most effective and valuable. We were indebted to Mr. Kelly for gaining for us permission to see the Robinson mine, to which I have previously referred.

Let there be much prayer for South Africa—which is the centre of disturbance at present—and for Armenia. Let us take hold of God. The Powers will do nothing. Pray that God may so act, that the people shall say, "This is the finger of God." This is more important than anything.

The Spiritual Life.

A CONVENTION for the Deepening of Spiritual Life was held in Warnambool, Victoria, on Feb. 6 and 7, convened by Rev. John MacNeil, of the Presbyterian Church. Among other speakers was Rev. H. B. Macartney, of Victoria.

The first day was more especially devoted to the ACTUAL Christian life—as it is, often a miserable parody of what it should be. The second dealt with the POSSIBLE. In issuing the invitation, Mr. MacNeil said:—

Has not our God spoken about a "life more abundant," about being "abundantly satisfied," about a salvation to "the uttermost," about being "saved from sinning," about being "kept by the power of God," about being "guarded from stumbling"? Are we then living in the present possession and enjoyment of these blessings? Those who are seeking to know and possess and enjoy on earth all that God has for them in Christ are earnestly counselled to take time to wait upon God. "Be ye holy" is the commandment, and we cannot be holy in a hurry. "Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard."

The Gospel in Saxony.

HAVING recently returned from a mission tour in the kingdom of Saxony, Pastor Fuller Gooch gave a brief account of his experiences at the Aldersgate-street Noon Prayer Meeting last week. The laws, he said, are much more strict than in Germany generally; there is great restriction placed on the preaching of the Gospel. It is illegal for anyone, not a Lutheran pastor, to read the Scriptures, to pray, or to permit the singing of a hymn in public. The Lutheran pastors, who are very hostile to the free preaching of the Gospel, are constantly on the watch to aid the police in bringing "transgressors" to trial.

On Easter Sunday Mr. Gooch enjoyed the privilege of preaching the Gospel for the first time in a new mission-hall at Plauen, a town of 20,000 inhabitants. The hall only seats one hundred people; it is impossible to do a large work in the face of the great opposition, but it was crowded. Many working-men listened intently at Chemnitz; the room in which the meetings were held was overcrowded, and some professed salvation. At Leipzig, on a week evening, a large number gathered; to an after-meeting fifty to sixty people remained and poured out their hearts in prayer to God for Saxony.

At Hartha, two hours from Dresden, the Lutheran pastor is very hostile to the work. Yet here it is so richly blessed that the people overcrowd the room and stand in the street that they may hear the Gospel. Many of the worst characters have been converted, and are now living consistent Christian lives. The pastor who has been carrying on this work has been endeavouring to sustain his wife and family on the slender support forthcoming (£30 per annum), but finding himself unable to do so he has been obliged to go further afield, and the people are left without a preacher.

At Plauen the work is being heartily supported by the Y.M.C.A. at Dresden. At a Bible-reading held there, Mr. Gooch was rejoiced to find a gathering of twelve or thirteen young men. In conclusion, he pleaded earnestly that Christian men should devote their energies to preaching the Gospel in countries such as these. Men are wanted there with the old power which "turned the world upside down." Thousands are longing to hear the Gospel.

Evangelization Society for Liverpool and Neighbourhood.—The twentieth report states that during last year 757 meetings were conducted under the auspices of this society. Encouraging accounts are given of effort in various centres. The income for the year amounted to £258, against an expenditure of £302, showing a deficiency of £44. The united noon prayer meeting was fairly sustained, ministers and others attending and speaking helpful words. The superintendent of the work is Mr. T. Lydiatt, 3, Hackins Hey, Liverpool.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, FOREIGN SECRETARY L.M.S.

FEW people have any conception of the difficulties of managing the affairs of a large society, the agents of which are working in many distant lands. Some think that the duties of the staff in England consist in raising funds, providing information, and sending out men and women. So far as the actual work done abroad is concerned, the popular idea is that that is exclusively managed by the missionaries themselves. But when it is explained that many of the requirements of the work, whether expressed by committees or individual missionaries, have to be inquired into and sanctioned at home, it is apparent at once that the chief adviser of such a society ought to be a man of strong character, large experience of men and affairs, and that he should have a personal acquaintance with, at least, the principal fields of labour.

These qualifications are fully possessed by Rev. R. WARDLAW THOMPSON, to whose care is entrusted the administration of all the work carried on in China, India, South and Central Africa, Madagascar, New Guinea, and the South Seas by "The Missionary Society usually called the London Missionary Society."

He is indeed a child of the Society. His father, the late Rev. William Thompson, was a missionary from 1836 to 1849 at Bellary, South India. His mother was the daughter of the Rev. Dr. Wardlaw, of Glasgow, and sister of Rev. J. S. Wardlaw, M.A., D.D., also a missionary, and founder of the Wardlaw Institution at Bellary.

In 1849 Mrs. Thompson died at Madras, while on her way to England, and soon after Rev. W. Thompson went out to South Africa as pastor of Union Chapel, Cape Town, and agent for the South African Missions. There his son was educated, and entered for a time into business life. After a course of study at Cheshunt College, under the venerable Dr. Reynolds, Mr. Thompson spent sixteen happy years in the pastorate of Ewing Place Church, Glasgow, and Norwood Chapel, Liverpool, acting also as local secretary and a director of the London Missionary Society.

After the death of Dr. Mullens at Chakombe, while on his way to reinforce the Tanganyika Mission, Mr. Thompson was invited to succeed him as foreign secretary, and entered upon the duties on January 1, 1881. In September of the following year, accompanied by Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., Mr. Thompson started upon a tour of inspection of the Society's stations in India, and then proceeded alone to visit the stations in China and South Africa, returning in May, 1884. The comprehensive reports presented by this deputation revealed the fact that the success of the work at many stations would be abundantly increased by a little additional outlay, and some well-considered help was afforded. But for several years it was apparent that the labourers were far too few for the ripening harvest, and a vigorous forward movement was needed. It was therefore resolved in 1891 that an effort should be made to send out 100 additional workers before the Society completed its Centenary in 1895. Numbers of eager young Christians responded to the call, and sixty-eight additional workers have been sent out.

But the churches which support and control the Society did not adequately realise the urgency of the work, and not more than half of the increased expenditure already incurred has been provided for by additional contributions. A menacing debt of over £40,000 speedily arose, the offers of candidates had to be refused, and only the advent of the Centenary year checked its advance to a portentous sum. The special fund then commenced has provided for the debt, but is not available for the increased annual expenditure. It is to be hoped that the £100,000 aimed at will be reached before the coming May Meetings. It is also to be hoped that the sending out of additional missionaries will be speedily resumed, and that the churches interested will adequately maintain the work. The labour entailed by this special effort is, of course, additional to that general guidance of affairs which forms the greater part of the foreign secretary's duties. But this brief résumé of what is called "the forward movement," which Mr. Thompson has so skilfully guided, will give some slight idea of the anxieties and toil accompanying the position he holds. Right bravely and resolutely has he gone on, and the present halt in the movement, with the responsibilities and care it involves, furnishes a most severe test to his powers of endurance. But he does not stand alone. Other colleagues and ardent fellow-workers also resolutely uphold the advance already made. May the Holy Spirit bless their work of faith, and inspire the churches with zeal and liberality needful for its completion!

Mr. Thompson visited South Africa upon special missions in the autumn of 1887, and went as far as Palapye in 1892. We earnestly hope that the severe strain which recent events has put upon the work in Bechuanaland and Matabeleland will soon be relaxed, and that the work of God among the natives may gain in strength and power from the test it has experienced.

Strength and ability are not the only distinguishing features of this able secretary. Brightness of spirit, a tender consideration for others, and a charming personality which endears him to all who have to work with him, without any of the weakness which often accompanies it, go to make up a character which all love and admire. Fifteen years of onerous work, well performed, have proved him to be "worthy to stand by the side of the very first of his predecessors."

Vigilance Association.

THE Medical Home is situated at 179, King's-road, Camden-road, N.W., and receives thirteen patients. The nature of the work makes it most desirable that the numbers should be restricted, so that each patient may have personal care and attention. This Home has been established five years, and those who have watched it closely feel that the results have fully justified its existence. The special object has been to help young girls, suffering from the consequences of their life, and whom it is hoped to save from further evil. It is most desirable to keep such cases from the Lock Hospital or Infirmary, where, however excellent the supervision and treatment, it is almost impossible to classify the patients; so that often, and unavoidably, those long hardened in sin and girls of tender age are found side by side. Numerous instances could be given of those who have passed through the Home, and who are now doing well in service. Many of these are from country homes, away from their friends, and alone in London.

The Preventive Training Homes are situated at 1 and 3, Urswick-road, Hackney, N.E. Here again there are a number of young girls, but the work is happily very different. A laundry, healthily situated in the large garden, supplies remunerative occupation for strong young limbs, whilst those not capable of such exercise are employed in lighter domestic duties. The Home is comparatively small, so that the matron's supervision is that of a mother over her family. There is a close study of individual character, the diversity being as interesting as it is marked.

An interesting case is that of a young girl, whose upbringing—or rather "dragging-up"—had resulted in the worst characteristics, and who was the despair of the matron. Her physical condition was equally pitiful. Wildly running the streets at all hours, she had been knocked down and run over, and was greatly bruised. The mother added to these bruises by severely punishing her for getting into such trouble! When the girl entered, her utterly neglected and injured condition was sad in the extreme. She was most troublesome as she grew strong and well. She was, however, retained in the Home, because it was found she had a great love for all dumb animals, which led one to hope for other good qualities—dormant, but not dead. No fact is too trivial to be noted if these young lives are to be developed and fitted for a useful future.

In the case of these poor children and young girls, as with those more favoured, it is useless to expect success unless they are placed in situations where they can follow their particular bent. Through the kindness of ladies willing to help this has always been possible. Will not others in these and other ways do something for these young lives? Money, clothing, vegetables, fruit, and anything that can be spared from well-filled stores, will be most thankfully acknowledged. Reports will be gladly sent to anyone applying for them.

267, Strand, W.C. W. A. COOTE, Secretary.

South Africa General Mission.—The s.s. Pembroke Castle, which sailed on Saturday last, had on board seven fresh workers for this mission. Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton (of Belfast), Miss Eva Carmichael (sister of Miss Amy Wilson Carmichael), Miss M. J. Day (of Norwich), Nurse Beckwith, Nurse Osment, and Nurse Knipe. Several interesting and well-attended meetings were held in and around London previous to their departure.

Tram-cars and Omnibuses.—The London Tram-car and Omnibus Scripture Text Mission, says in its twelfth annual report:—"We are only paying for 140 texts now, but, through the consideration of Mr. Frost Smith, the majority of original numbers (259) are still maintained in their positions. Our honorary secretary, Mrs. E. S. Wood, has, for private reasons, retired from her position, which will be taken up by Mr. R. D. Stewart, well known as interested in every good work. We purpose placing an order for 100 transparent texts to be placed on windows of cars. Thus the Word of God will be brought more effectually before the view of travellers. The secretary may be addressed, 1, King Edward-street, E.C.

The Pastors' College.

By A MINISTER.

DURING the past week the ninth annual conference of the Pastors' College Evangelical Association was held, and answered, in the form of it, to the record of past years. It seems to us that the chief lesson to be drawn from the late conference concerns the need of emphasizing the inner principles of unity. In our judgment the little measure of ground-swelling there was had no sufficient warrant. The Association is undoubtedly a peace-loving fraternity. We venture to think that it was never more so than at the present time. All the more necessary, therefore, that the unity of the spirit be preserved, and everything suggestive of friction expire in the blessed death of self.

The conference owed much, under God, to the gracious spirit of its president, Pastor THOMAS SPURGEON. Without being autocratic, he proved a rue overseer; and, alike in tone and word, exemplified the law of the Gospel. Long may he experience the upholding of the Divine arm in an office which is his even more by Evangelical than lineal succession!

This year the preliminary proceedings of the opening day (Monday) took place in two centres—Trinity Chapel, Edgware-road, where Pastor J. C. Carlile ministers, and the Metropolitan Tabernacle. The Tuesday morning gathering seemed, in point of numbers, to be in excess of any former year. There is no meeting of the conference which so brings back the past as this one, or gathers around it more inspiring memories of "the Prince of Preachers." "Oh, that we had him now!" was a filial cry that touched the deepest chords in many a heart.

We can only briefly summarise the presidential address, entitled "The First Report of the Christian Church." The text for this address was drawn, not, as might have been expected, from the Acts of the Apostles, but from the Master's own acts. "Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see. The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk; the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear; the dead are raised up, and the poor have the Gospel preached to them. And blessed is he whosoever shall not be offended in Me." On the forefront of this report is seen activity. The Master laboured; He did not loiter. "Lately," said the speaker, "having an hour to spare, I sauntered about the railway-station of a certain seaside place, until there met my eye a large and legible notice to the effect, 'Loiterers will be regarded as trespassers and will be prosecuted accordingly.' I was off like a shot. Would God that we could put very plainly before our people the difference between loiterers and labourers." Another thing noted in the report was sympathy, and a third thing, victory all along the line.

Enlarging on this third particular, Mr. T. Spurgeon drew from it what we might term the keynote and cadences of his address. The all-commanding beauty, the unique charm, of the first report was this—that Christ had an antidote for every ill. A humorous story, told in Spurgeonian style, prefaced the application and exposition of this significant feature. A worthy woman would not go to hear a certain preacher, and, being pressed for the reason, said at length, "I heard him preach on one occasion; but let me tell you, sir, it was antidotes, antidotes, antidotes, from beginning to end—nothing but antidotes." "I do not doubt," continued the speaker, "that the good woman meant 'anecdotes,' and there may be a sidelight just here for some of us, as to what the people think of an undue use of narratives. But is it not the privilege and duty of all Christian ministers in their sermons and in their lives to produce 'antidotes, antidotes, antidotes, nothing but antidotes'?" So Jesus went out, giving sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, life to the dead, dispensing antidotes wherever He wandered."

The gist of the address supplied the prismatic unfolding of this key-thought to the leading varieties of human need and sin, and was characterised by practical point throughout, as well as being suggestive, in many touches, of the wit and wisdom of "the dear father-president."

A word from Professor Fergusson, now eighty years of age, and almost completely blind, followed the stirring words of the president, and served to heighten the effect of a service not soon to be forgotten. Passing over the general business meeting, the day's proceedings closed with the usual informal gathering at the Stockwell Orphanage in the evening.

We confess to a feeling of disappointment in respect of the Wednesday morning's session—not so much from what was done as from what was left undone. The programme spoke of a conference on "The Pastor in Relation to Public Prayer," but the promise on the agenda was not realised. Professor Usher, in a devotional paper of much incisiveness, paved the way for the conference, and Pastors A. G. Brown, of Bow, and E. J. Edwards, of Dover, laid the train for it; but the conference did not come off, for business had got shunted on the track, and monopolised the golden hour with leaden details. Happily, the annual supper for the College subscribers more than fulfilled anticipations, and brought the day's engagements to a prosperous termination, the sum of £1400 2s. 5d. being subscribed, an amount since increased.

But if Wednesday morning's session was somewhat disappointing, for the reason stated, that of Thursday morning furnished an ample compensation. The address of Pastor CHARLES SPURGEON on "Men with God-touched hearts," was a singularly versatile exposition (1) of the secret of Divine power, (2) of the seat of the Divine power; and, lastly, of the subjects of Divine power. This address was followed by Pastor H. Knee's paper on, "Joy in Christ a Condition of Power in Preaching Christ"—joy in Christ being dealt with, first, as our fulfilment, and second, as our equipment. At no stage of the conference was there a richer fall of the heavenly dew than at this season. Pastor Knee's words seemed to bring the King Himself near. The morning sitting closed with Pastor A. Bird's valuable address on "A New Plea for an Old Doctrine," which we cannot better characterise than by designating it a temperate and withal pungent assault on the new theology. Pastor Bird is a brother of an exceedingly gentle spirit, who has roamed far afield in the colonies, and who evidently, by what he has seen of the other Gospel which is not another, has had his soul stirred within him; and spoke, therefore, with a decision and warmth one could hardly have expected. It added, however, to the force of his observations that they came from a brother the reverse of constitutionally severe.

In the evening of this day the annual public meeting of the conference was held in the Tabernacle, and presided over by the president. The report for the year was read by Dr. J. A. Spurgeon, and reasons alleged why it would be the last report which he intended to submit. The meeting, while perturbed by the statement of the grounds of this announcement, was safely carried to a successful issue.

We wish our space admitted of a lengthened summary of Pastor A. G. Brown's sermon, delivered on the closing morning of the conference (Friday), from the words in Matt. xxvii. 36, "And sitting down, they watched Him there." We scarcely ever remember a season wherein the emotions of an audience were at once so deeply and worthily stirred. The discourse was an intensely vivid and realistic setting forth of "Him there"—two words which may be regarded as the non-such of speech. No such other two words could be formulated or framed. Here we behold, first, the climax of surprising tragedy; second, the delirium of sin; third, the vindication of righteousness; and fourth, the triumph of love. On these and other points the preacher dilated with such intenseness of feeling, and in a manner so all alive with pathetic ardour, that it seemed as if the whole scene of the crucifixion was unveiled to sense and heart. The effect as much transcended sensationalism as truth transcends fiction.

With much enthusiasm a resolution of thanks to Mrs. Spurgeon for her conference gift was carried, and a message of respectful and sympathetic greeting sent, including the hope that at the next meeting of conference there might be the added joy of her presence again as occasionally there had been in years gone by. The proceedings closed, according to the unchanging custom, with the memorial feast of the Lord's Supper and the ceremony of linking hands while the prayer for "the Peace of Jerusalem" in song ascended.

Days come and go, in joy or woe
Days go and come in endless sum;
Only the eternal day shall come, but never go;
Only the eternal tide shall never ebb but flow:
O Long Eternity, my soul goes forth to Thee!

The Thames Church Mission.

THE fifty-second anniversary of The Thames Church Mission was held at Morley Hall, W., on Tuesday week. The society ministers to the spiritual necessity of the population on the Thames, consisting of sailors, watermen, barge-men, and other classes employed on the river. Services are held on board emigrant and passenger ships, screw and sailing colliers, and every description of vessel; also in the five mission and reading-rooms, in the various docks, East Greenwich, Leigh, Tilbury, etc. A clergymen and six laymen constitute the staff, and undertake the distribution of tracts and the sale of the Scriptures to seamen, as well as giving Testaments to emigrants. The field of labour extends from Richmond to the Nore Lightship, seventy-four miles. Mr. F. Penfold, R.N., secretary, read extracts from the annual report, which, besides embodying these facts, gives striking figures showing the exceedingly useful and extensive work that the Society is carrying on. During the past year there were visited in all as many as 34,576 vessels; services were held which were attended by 73,847 people belonging to the classes already mentioned; and no fewer than 330,154 English and foreign tracts and about 7000 Testaments and portions of the Word of God were given away.

The annual gathering was presided over by Mr. Robert Barclay, who has recently accepted the chairmanship of the society. He, as well as Rev. Robert Bashford and Messrs. W. F. A. Archibald and G. L. Dashwood, earnestly advocated the claims of the society, dwelling especially upon the pressing needs of the work. A history of the society's operations was given in a homely style by Mr. Lowman, who has for many years acted as one of the agents of the Mission. He contrasted the receptions which in former days the missionaries often got with the way in which they are welcomed now. In the first days of the Mission their welcome, he said, was oftentimes very warm, but it consisted in a copious douche of hot water. Again, it was not unusual for them to be coldly received with a ducking of water of quite another temperature. He was glad to say, however, that matters had considerably changed since then, and that the old Gospel was now generally listened to with respect and attention by those whom the missionaries visited, and it had proved to be the power of God unto salvation to many a hardened sinner.

Our Foreign Mail.

BILBAO, SPAIN.

FOR a quarter of a century effective and successful work has been going on in this important town, aided by the Evangelical Continental Society. Señor José Marqués has gathered around him a number of earnest Christian Spaniards, converted from the superstition and idolatry of Roman Catholicism. He has also done splendid evangelistic work by visits to neighbouring villages.

The income of the Evangelical Continental Society having been seriously diminished, unless other help is forthcoming the station will have to be relinquished. Rev. W. H. Gulick, San Sebastian, of the American Board of Foreign Missions, who has generously superintended this work at Bilbao since its commencement, writes urging that the good work may not be given up, and pleading for help. Rev. George H. Giddins, secretary, Evangelical Continental Society, 13, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, London, E.C., will be happy to furnish further particulars.

MOROCCO.

Some interesting information regarding the difficulties of mission work in Morocco is afforded by a letter from Dr. Kerr to Mr. Grahame Wilson, Glasgow, dated April 2. Dr. Kerr says:—

Since my arrival my hands have been full, and I am thankful to say that I have been able to raise a good deal through the dispensary towards our support. There never was a time when there were more difficulties attending our work. We have had some interesting and inquiring young men. Many believe, but are afraid to confess the faith. Everywhere the Moorish Government has gone there has been terrible slaughter. In the Rhamna tribe there have been several hundred heads cut off and 3000 persons put in irons. They say that there are several hundred boys in irons, many of whom died from cold and hunger before they got to Morocco City.

Last week they sent us fifty-eight heads from this tribe, and nailed them up on our city gate, and the same day seventy-one heads came from another tribe where the Sultan has another camp. The Moors say that it is much better to have their heads off than to die a lingering death in prison. The Government are fast depopulating the country.

We are praying definitely for more workers, and, if it is the Lord's will, to give us £1000 to enable us to initiate some industrial work.

MANITOBA.

A few years ago Archdeacon Phair, superintendent of Indian Missions in the North-West, felt very strongly that the Indians should have a hospital of their own. He obtained means to purchase Dynevor, a large stone building, for many years the headquarters of the C.M.S. and well adapted for hospital work. It stands in the midst of a large native population, three miles from the thriving little town of Selkirk, two miles from Winnipeg. Scarcely a month has passed since Dr. Rolston, the medical superintendent, commenced work. The need of such an institution has been abundantly exemplified. The out-patients form a large and very important branch. If some ladies would commence a Deaconesses Home here, at their own charges, they would find an open door. They can speak English (with few exceptions) and are a quiet, impressionable people.

While thanking those who have helped us to commence this hospital work, I may say we have no endowment, or even fund, on which to draw for supplies. Our wants are multifarious, and the expenses of carrying on this work necessarily heavy. Help will be gladly received, not only in money, but articles of clothing, left off dresses, flannel vests and petticoats, tracts, pictures, papers, &c. Perhaps ladies whose hands are free to work, would undertake to become a "local centre," and gain the co-operation of friends in their own neighbourhood.

SOUTH INDIA.

My station is named Kodambakam, and is four miles from Madras. The population consists of nearly three thousand people, consisting of caste Hindus, Mohammedans, Pariahs, and native Christians. We have an infant congregation, which promises to take root, and put forth branches which will spread all around; but converts are all from the Pariah caste. We have two day-schools, one night-school for the labouring classes, and six Sunday-schools. We have no school buildings, except one near my house, where we hold our Sunday services. The other schools are held under the shadow of some trees, in the centre of the villages. There are two catechists with me, and with them I visit the villages.

Our Mission is undergoing a great financial difficulty, and though we have been desiring to take three more additional workers, we have not been able to do so.

I shall esteem it a privilege to correspond with any readers who are personally interested in the work we are doing, and desirous to know more fully about it.

NEW HEBRIDES.

Dr. William Gunn, missionary on the island of Futuna, New Hebrides, writes:—We arrived in Aneityum early in October. Our stay there was limited to one month, during which reports on the state of the work were received from the teachers throughout the island. Then we came to Futuna, our other station, from which we had been absent rather more than two years on furlough. The Futunese had begun almost to despair of our return, but they seemed pleased when we landed among them again. The Mission station had been carefully looked after during our absence by the head teacher, and those who assisted him. More were attending church, more could read and write, and more interest in the Gospel was manifested by many of the natives.

There are seven districts in Futuna. Of these one is depopulated, five are composed almost exclusively of worshipping people, the other, Mouna, is entirely heathen. In former days, the natives of Mouna always hid when I attempted to conduct worship among them. I have since returning made several visits to them, accompanied by the Christians, but all efforts have hitherto resulted in failure. We pray that God may soften their hearts, and teach them that the Gospel which they fear is 'glad news.' Will your readers remember us in prayer for this work?

Midnight Meeting Movement.

THERE was a good attendance of friends at the thirty-sixth annual meeting in the Council-room of Exeter Hall. The report, presented by Mr. T. Nixon, testified to the increasing immorality which accompanied an increasing population, and to the efforts the society is making by missioning the fallen. A night missionary and his wife have been earnestly at work, and they have not laboured in vain.

Dr. Gritton, in the course of a vigorous address, said he had no doubt that the evil which this society is doing its utmost to remove had been productive of insanity—and of a kind from which there is little hope of recovery. Rev. F. C. Hughes (Borough-road), said the story of the society's year's work was one to make the angels glad. Mr. George Holland said that he had had much to do with the work. One Monday morning three mothers had called on him imploring that they might leave their children under his care. They knew nothing about God, yet their cry was, "Save them, for God's sake, from becoming what we are!" His heart was very sad at the sight, and he could only think of the old words of mercy, "Let him that is without sin, cast the first stone." It is a very blessed thing to be able to point these lost ones to their only Saviour. He thought the work of the society was more and more deserving of public sympathy.

At the West London Police-court, a young wife who had been arrested for drunkenness was last week strongly urged by the husband and others to sign a document for her detention in an inebriate retreat for twelve months. She hesitated to sign away her liberty for so long. After retiring and consulting with the missionary and friends, she returned and signed the necessary document.

The Open-Air Mission.

FOR forty-three years the Open-Air Mission has banded together a large and influential body of Christian workers, and encouraged them in their labour of love for God and humanity. A goodly number of these earnest men and their friends assembled in Exeter Hall on Wednesday last, on the occasion of the annual gatherings of the Mission. In the afternoon the chair was occupied by Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS, who emphasised the need for love and sympathy in all work for Christ. He mentioned with affection the name of Richard Weaver, and said that it ought to be more widely known than it is, that the cloud which for some years hung over him was the work of the enemy, having for its object, as was at length confessed, the extortion of money. In reality, the grand old open-air preacher enjoyed a stainless reputation.

Mr. F. COCKREM, secretary, read extracts from the report, calling special attention to the development of work at race meetings throughout the country. These efforts have been instrumental in rescuing hundreds of souls, the prey having been taken from the mighty on his own ground. During the year preachers were sent to 850 races, fairs, and such-like concourses of people, an increase of 100 upon the preceding year. The distribution of Gospel tracts, cards, and books reached a large total, thus showing that, in a way full of promise, the agents of the Society follow up by the printed page the words which they are unable to speak in the Master's name.

Rev. F. SUMNER, M.A., of Greyfriars Church, Reading, delivered an address on Open-air Preaching under the Parochial System. He spoke as a firm believer in the work, declaring that in his own experience no form of effort had been so fruitful of results. Having shown the pressing need of this work, he described the methods he had followed in a rural district, also in Bristol and Reading. He spoke of the importance of system in carrying out a campaign, and urged workers to make careful preparation. Speaking on results, Mr. Sumner not only instanced those that are direct, but the blessing which out-door meetings in town streets had proved to bed-ridden ones who hear the Gospel from their windows, and the spirit of union which they promote among Christian people regardless of denominational differences. He then referred to drawbacks and discouragements, but in spite of these his concluding word was: "Go out quickly, for time is passing, and the night is coming when no man can work."

Rev. Z. B. WOFFENDALE, of Somers Town Presbyterian Church, dealing with Reaching the Masses in London, told in brief the story of his own life as an open-air preacher, from the day when, forty-five years ago, he held John Macgregor's books during a debate at King's Cross, until quite recent days when he has disputed with unbelievers of many shades, and made the truth shine through the clouds of error and ignorance. His earnest words were listened to with deep interest, and when he counselled prayerfulness of life, and a loving disposition, forbearing and "not easily provoked," his words received the ready assent of the assembly. Those who have not a temper consecrated to God, and a tongue of prayer and peace, as well as of power, should keep out of public disputation. He rejoiced to say that his ministry had been fruitful in a high degree.

An address on work in the villages was delivered by Mr. GEORGE HEATH, an agent of the Mission. In the evening Lord Overton presided over a second meeting, at which hearty words were spoken by Canon RETH, of Watford, and Captain W. H. DAWSON, of Bournemouth.

Jews in Paris.—On Tuesday week, a new mission-hall for Jews was opened at 2, Rue du Roide Sicile.

The Young Women's Annual.

AMONG the earlier "May" meetings, which crowd Exeter Hall to the door, the anniversary of the Y.W.C.A. ranks foremost. This widespread organisation enlists the heartiest interest alike of members and workers, who come up in troops from branches in all parts of the metropolis to enjoy their own bright and high-toned celebration. "Our Own Choir," a well-trained company of members, sang admirably during the half-hour preceding the regular meeting. Lord Kinnaid presided, and after praise and prayer,

The report was read by Mr. W. T. Paton. This opened with an important statement to the effect that, "Owing to the rapid growth of the work during recent years and the formation of new departments involving the need of additional offices, the committee have acquired commodious freehold premises at 25 and 26, George-street, Hanover-square. The premises are spacious enough to provide a Central Institute and offices for the London Association, as well as for the World's Y.W.C.A., the British National Council, the South of England Division, and the Continental Department; and, in addition, will afford space for a good gymnasium and for a hall capable of holding 500. The freehold has been purchased at a cost of £20,000, being £5000 less than the sum originally asked."

The institutes, homes, and evening rooms in London number fifty, and there are ninety-two other branches, making 142 in all, with a total of 13,922 members and associates. The Central Institute, Princess House, and other branches have a restaurant attached, where good and cheap meals are served daily to hundreds of young women. The Finsbury Institute and the Central each has its gymnasium for physical recreation. Accommodation for 364 boarders is provided at the various homes. New branches have been started during the year at Kensington, Islington, Canning Town, Kennington, Hatcham, Penge, etc. The work of the various institutes and branches presents many encouraging features. The year's income for the London work was £5712 15s. 11d., and the expenditure £7068 15s. 3d., showing a deficiency of £1355 19s. 4d. Subsequent receipts and balances reduce this deficiency to £850. For meeting the special needs of young women there are twenty-one departments and five agencies affiliated to or under Y.W.C.A. auspices. These include emigration, employment agencies, flower mission, libraries, park mission, educational, &c. The convalescent, sick aid, and holiday fund procured last summer two or three weeks' rest for nearly 500 girls, and sixty-one Saturday afternoon excursions for 2065 women and girls. The teachers' department reports a total of 721 members, being a net increase of 105. Amongst trained nurses also an encouraging work has been carried on by the Nurses' Union.

Lord OVERTOUN spoke of woman's wondrous influence as sister, friend, wife, and mother. But that influence might be for good or evil. Every member of the Y.W.C.A. must be a power for God and good. As he thought of this world's vast need, he could hear the tread of a great army of young women marching to its relief. But until she herself had been delivered from the yoke of sin and unbelief no one could be a true helper to others. There were three things about which we must be dogmatic—that the old Book is from God; that the cross of Christ is the only thing to save from death; and that a man or woman must be born again before becoming a new creature. After an earnest Gospel plea, Lord Overtoun concluded by showing that Christ came not only to save souls but also to save lives from being wasted in that aimless, useless fashion in which so many fritter away their brief opportunities. The King is coming, and there is need of watchful diligence.

Mr. WILLIAMSON described the aims and working of the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union in this country and America, making, in the course of a closely-reasoned paper, a strong plea for the recognition of missions as the grand business of the Church, urging that the world might well be evangelised in the present generation were the matter really entered upon as unto the Lord and in obedience to his commands. He believed the Church has the money, the men and women, and certainly, if she would but use it, she has the prayer-power to bring the blessing down in floods.

Mr. C. T. STUDD opened a ringing address by depicting the deplorable prevalence of disobedience in the Church. Jesus Christ says "Go," and we do not go; therefore are our prayers unanswered, and we ourselves impotent and unprofitable. Our Master would have us out among the heathen, and we prefer to stay at home. Can we expect to be blessed and satisfied? Our Lord, as of old, is thirsty; He is longing for souls; He looks to his own people to satisfy Him. Are we ready to yield ourselves to his blessed service, so that He may use us in winning poor dark souls to his glory? A graphic description of the terrible things he had witnessed in China lent point and emphasis to his appeal for obedience and self-surrender, to be used as our Master wills to the glory of God.

Reformatory and Refuge Union.

ST. JAMES' HALL was crowded on Wednesday afternoon by the friends and helpers of this Union, who came together to celebrate its fortieth anniversary, and to enjoy the clever evolutions and sweet singing of some 500 representative children from the London Homes. After an enjoyable hour thus spent, a meeting was held, Lord MONKSWELL presiding. From a statement laid before the audience, it appeared that upwards of 750 preventive and reformatory institutions are now affiliated to the Union. The council record that during the forty years of their existence a marked advance has been made in the number of efforts and in the methods pursued to save these outcast children. The percentage of failures among the girls and boys trained in Reformatories or Industrial Schools is very low, but there is very urgent need for the establishment of more of these institutions, particularly for girls. During the past year 420 children have been placed in homes and schools, certified as voluntary, through the action of the twenty-seven agents of the Union. Others have emigrated, have been sent to sea, or have been placed in situations, in which many are now doing well, a credit to themselves and to the Institution.

The CHAIRMAN spoke of the condition of boys and girls brought up without restraint or discipline, and with scarcely an elementary idea of the distinction between right and wrong. What is to be done with such children? To imprison them is to expose them to grave peril in coming within reach of those who seek to corrupt them for their own ends. Hence the importance of reformatory institutions in which such neglected and endangered children may be sheltered and trained aright.

Archdeacon SINCLAIR followed with a warm and earnest plea on behalf of the Reformatory and Refuge Union and its operations in establishing, maintaining, and aiding homes and refuges in which uncared for children, likely to go to ruin, may be disciplined, taught, and trained for useful lives.

Col. ROTTON, L.C.C., followed with an appreciative address from a practical point of view, after which the Countess of Ancaster kindly distributed the prizes gained in a recent examination in Scripture knowledge, and the shields won in the winter evening recreative competitions.

The Prison Mission.

THE annual meeting of the Prison Mission and Discharged Female Prisoners' Aid (one of the branches of Mrs. Meredith's Institutions) was held at the headquarters of the Mission, Conference Hall, Clapham-road, on Wednesday, 22nd inst.

Mr. BROWN-GOLD, having opened the meeting with prayer, read the thirty-first annual report of the Prison Mission, which laid great stress upon the necessity of further extending the operations of the Society, especially with reference to finding work of a more diversified character than can be found by a laundry alone. In addition to finding about 18,000 days' work in the laundry and slipper room, nearly 20,000 letters were sent out at Christmas to prisoners all over England, Europe, and America.

Sir MARK J. STEWART said that whilst the income of the charity did not show any increase, yet the work of the year had been one of the most successful ever chronicled. Sir Mark Stewart went on to say that from his own knowledge the Prison Mission was one of the most deserving charities that had ever come before him.

Mr. W. F. A. ARCHIBALD, who presided, referred to the more humane laws now in existence, and to the smaller number of prisoners sent for trial, as compared with some twenty years ago, and gave credit for the decreased percentage of convicts to this and similar charities. He said that in his belief the letters sent to prisoners in gaol was one of the best ways of reaching their hearts.

Lord Rookwood said that as a chairman of Quarter Sessions he could endorse what had fallen from Mr. Archibald as to the diminution in the number of prisoners. Whereas some twenty years or so ago the sessions used to occupy four or five days, now they rarely lasted over two, and were very often completed in one. Whilst part of this improvement was attributable to the spread of education, yet the greatest force working to improve the prisoners, both morally and in material things, was undoubtedly the work done by institutions like this, in meeting the prisoners on discharge at the gates, finding them employment, and ultimately obtaining situations for them. He made an eloquent appeal on behalf of the Mission.

Miss LLOYD, having read a letter from Mrs. Meredith, expressing her regret that her health did not permit her to be present, said that the behaviour of the women in the Mission showed a great improvement. She referred to the difficulty of dealing with the inebriate class, and suggested that special homes to deal with these cases would sooner or later have to be established. She said that the letters of the Mission were now admitted to prisons in Russia, Poland, Greece, etc., and applied for help in writing letters in foreign languages.

The choir of some sixty children from the Princess Mary Village Home, Addlestone (another branch of Mrs. Meredith's work), attended, and enlivened the proceedings with some very well-rendered music.

Armenian Massacre Relief.

THE Bible Lands Missions Aid Society seeks especially to succour those sufferers in Turkey who "are of the household of faith." It is distributed from twelve mission centres in Asia Minor, hundreds of miles apart, and all of them localities of the recent terrible atrocities. We have sent out £2000 of relief, not to strangers, but to the missionaries whose work we aid yearly; and by them our fund is most carefully and wisely used to assuage the sorrows of broken-hearted men, helpless widows, fatherless children, sufferers for the Lord Jesus.

Our almoners pray most pathetically for continued help a few months longer, and we are deeply anxious to send forth on this work of mercy at least £2,000 more. Donations for this special fund should be sent to the hon. sec., Rev. W. A. Essery, 7, Adam-street, Strand, London, W.C.

Dr. Maclaren's Jubilee.

COMPLIMENTARY BREAKFAST.

IT is seldom that such a representative company, and one so catholic in its composition, is brought together as that which gathered in the Holborn Restaurant on Tuesday morning to do honour to Dr. Alexander Maclaren, of Manchester. It was a remarkable tribute to the character of the man and the general esteem in which he is held, as well as to the worth of his pulpit ministry. For it is as a preacher of the pure evangel that Dr. Maclaren has constituted the whole reading world his debtor. It would be useless to endeavour to describe the make-up of this unique breakfast party. Almost every prominent preacher in the ranks of the Evangelical Free Churches in England seemed to be there, though letters of regret at absence were announced from not a few others. Messages of greeting from the other side of the Atlantic were not wanting.

The company was presided over by the venerable Dr. Joseph Angus, "the Nestor of the Baptist Denomination," as the guest of the morning described him. Breakfast being over, and the letters of apology being read by Rev. C. Williams, of Accrington (to whom the inception and carrying out of the arrangements were due), Dr. Glover, of Bristol, led in prayer, very tenderly and beautifully, beseeching God that the friend whom they all delighted to honour, might enjoy light in the eventide of his life, and that the delectable mountains might never be far away.

The Chairman's speech was brief, but admirably suited to the genius and spirit of the occasion. He recalled the time when, as secretary of Stepney College, he remembered their guest entering that institution as a mere youth, in a short jacket and his collar turned down. Another reminiscence was connected with Dr. Maclaren's Manchester ministry, to which the speaker attributed the influence which caused the late Mr. Rylands, the great Lancashire manufacturer, to bequeath £10,000 to the Baptist College in London. "I know no man," said Dr. Angus, in closing, "who has made his ministry more completely the exposition of the Bible, and who has a firmer grasp of the great central truth of the Bible—the Cross of Christ. We thank God on his behalf, and regard him, all in all, as one of the best specimens of the Nonconformist Ministry."

An album, containing an address of greeting and goodwill, and signed by 360 ministers of the Baptist body, was presented to the morning's guest by Dr. Green, of the Religious Tract Society. The address, needless to say, was couched in highly appreciative terms of the great public service rendered by Dr. Maclaren through his spoken and printed discourses. The presentation was made with the whole assembly standing.

DR. MACLAREN'S ADDRESS.

In reply, Dr. MACLAREN said: You will forgive me if I am somewhat staggered under the load which your kindness of this morning lays upon me, and if my tongue somewhat falters in attempting to find adequate words. To all this company I can only render thanks from my heart of hearts, largely mingled with wonder at the place which you allow me to feel that I hold in your regard. Your praise awakes conscience, and things look so different as seen from the inside from what they do on the outside. There rise up so many spectres of mingled motives, of perfunctory work, of opportunities let slip, that it is hard to believe that anyone can look at the work which I know to be so poor, and find such words as my friends have used by which to characterise it. I remember, when I was a young student, once talking with Thomas Binney, the man who taught me to preach. For he came at the time when the last rolling thunders of Johnsonian eloquence were dying out of the Dissenting pulpit. He taught us, as I remember him once saying to me, to "stand on our hind legs and talk." With the enthusiasm of the student I once went to thank him for what I had learned from him, and he said to me with tears in his eyes: "Don't speak about it; it is all such a poor thing." I understand his point of view now. I also remember Thomas à Kempis's great words: "Thou art none the holier because thou art praised; and none the worse because thou art censured. What thou art, thou art; and it avails thee not to be called anything better than thou art in the sight of God." So I only say, whilst thanking you for all your love and appreciation,

Nothing in my hand I bring,
Simply to Thy cross I cling.

After some words of retrospect, Dr. Maclaren continued:—I dare not speak of attainment; I may venture to speak about aims, especially as I think there are a number of young brethren here this morning. I began my ministry, and I thank God I have been able to keep to it as my aim, with the determination of the concentration of all my available strength on what is the proper work of the Christian ministry, the pulpit. I believe that the secret of all true success lies largely in the concentration of intellectual force on the one work of preaching. I have tried, as the chairman has said, to make my ministry one of the exposition of Scripture. I know that it has failed in many respects, but I will say that I have endeavoured from the beginning to the end to make that the characteristic of my public work. I have tried to preach Jesus Christ, and the Jesus Christ not only of the Gospels but of the Gospels and the Epistles. I believe that is redemption—the power of the Gospel on the individual soul; and that men know they want it. Dr. Johnson once said in his wise way: "Nothing odd lasts"; and I believe that too. But Christ lasts, and man's sin lasts, and man's need lasts. We have got to preach Christ and Him crucified, the Saviour of mankind. And I have tried to preach Christ as if I believed in Him, not as if I had hesitations and peradventures, and limitations. And I have tried to preach Him as if I lived on Him. That is the bottom of it all—that we shall ourselves feed on the truth that we proclaim to others. If my words can reach my dear younger brethren this morning, I do want to say, concentrate yourselves on the work of your ministry. Preach the Bible and its truth; preach Christ the Redeemer; preach Him with all your heart. "Lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up; be not afraid." "We know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding, that we may know Him that is true, and we are in Him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ." Depend upon it, that if these be the themes and that the spirit of our ministry, whether men will hear, or whether they will forbear, they will know that there hath been a prophet among them. For myself and for my children, absent and present, I thank you.

THE ONE THING THE WORLD WANTS

The Doctor spoke throughout with much spirit and vivacity, and it must have been specially pleasing to his many friends to see him in the possession of so much physical and mental vigour. The speeches that followed were all in keeping with the nature of the interesting occasion. Dr. Joseph Parker, who was the first to follow, was in a merry mood. Referring to a playful remark by the guest of the day in his address, Dr. Parker explained that anyone who had preached so long next door to Dr. Maclaren as he had done, would sympathise with him in his anxiety to leave Lancashire and come to London. Dr. Guinness Rogers spoke warmly on behalf of the large body of Congregationalist pastors who desired to express their indebtedness to Dr. Maclaren. As representing the Presbyterian community, Dr. Monro Gibson followed suit, and Mr. W. S. Caine was the mouthpiece of those "lay" preachers who had derived stimulus and strength from the published sermons of their beloved friend. Further prayer was made by Dr. Booth, in which Dr. Maclaren was specially commended to God's tender care during the evening of his life and work, and the great gathering broke up.

After Thirty Years!

AN Institution that can point to a thirty years' record of enlarging successes has surely undergone one of the severest of tests. Of such there are not a few who will in the May Meeting season be telling their friends and supporters the story of another year. Among the best known, however, alike for the quality and for the sphere of their work stand "Dr. Barnardo's Homes." Who does not know that nearly five thousand children are now under their care, and that no destitute boy or girl is ever refused admission at their hospitable doors? It was in 1866 that these Homes began their beneficent career. No wonder that their trustees and committee desire to signalise their thirtieth year by some special effort.

On Monday, April 27, two meetings of friends and sympathisers were held in the afternoon and evening at Exeter Hall, at which Dr. Barnardo made a statement as to the work, and commended the proposed movement to the prayers of Christians generally. For years past there has been a heavy charge upon the income of the Homes, due to the burden of mortgages and loans, incurred for the purpose of erecting the buildings necessary for the housing, education, and training of the rescued children. In the early days of the work, Dr. Barnardo explained, it was impossible to purchase brick and mortar out of current income, and the only course available, therefore, was "to build in faith," defraying the capitalised encumbrance thus created by annual instalments in future years. But the work grew in extent and usefulness even faster than the income, and the result has been that the capital charge for buildings presses more and more heavily upon the funds. The suggestion of the trustees and committee therefore is that the thirtieth year of the work should be celebrated by the establishment of a Reserve Foundation Fund, to be devoted to the extinction of this burden. The definite proposal, as laid by Dr. Barnardo before the meetings on Monday, is that a sum of £150,000 should be raised for this fund in the three years 1896, 1897, and 1898, so as to set the income free, and, as was stated, give to the children the houses they live in. The scheme was cordially received by the friends assembled, and earnest and united prayer was engaged in at both meetings. In the evening, Canon Girdlestone presided, and delivered a brief address. Rev. W. H. Langhorne, Rev. Ernest Gill, Rev. A. Downes-Shaw, Mr. S. E. Burrow, and many other friends took part in the proceedings, which were marked by earnestness and sympathy.

The Turk and Missions.

A REUTER'S telegram from Constantinople says: Mr. Knapp, the American missionary who has been expelled from Asia Minor, arrived at Alexandretta on April 23, but, notwithstanding the written assurances given by the Porte to Mr. Riddle, the United States Chargé d'Affaires in Constantinople, the Turkish authorities declined to hand him over to the American Consular Agent.

Mr. Riddle at once made energetic representations to the Porte in the matter, and demanded the fulfilment of the undertaking which had been made. He also telegraphed to the American warships at Messina to proceed to Alexandretta, and remain there at the disposal of the American Consulate. In consequence of these steps orders were sent to Alexandretta that Mr. Knapp should be handed over to the United States representative, and these instructions were carried out on Monday. Mr. Knapp will probably proceed to Constantinople. Contrary to the assertion of the Porte, the American missionary was treated as a prisoner during the whole of his long journey, and was detained for five days at Aleppo, while the Vali endeavoured to make him sign a declaration that he would never return to Bitlis. This, however, Mr. Knapp refused to do.

West London Mission.—The new report of this forward movement, entitled, "The Story of Our Work, 1896," is published, and is a marvellous narrative of aggressive Gospel work in a difficult field. As a frontispiece to the admirably told story there is an excellent portrait group of the founders of the work, Messrs. Guy Pearse and Price Hughes; there are also portraits of the principal workers. The annual meetings of the Mission are at St. James's Hall, on Friday, May 8. Dr. Maclaren, of Manchester, is expected to preach at 11 a.m.

The R.S.U. at Stafford House.

WITHIN the historic quadrangle of St. James's Palace stands a fine old mansion known as Stafford House, the residence of the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland. This was kindly thrown open on the afternoon of Thursday last for a meeting on behalf of the work of the Ragged School Union among necessitous and crippled children. All who attended (and it was crowded) must have been impressed with the stately grandeur of the reception-rooms, with its beautiful marble walls and priceless frescoes. The Duchess herself, who for years past has taken part in Ragged School work, was present and interested in the proceedings.

Mr. RICHARD STONE, who presided, in place of Earl Compton, unexpectedly detained in Paris, opened with a clear and careful statement of the work of the R.S.U. among 6000 helpless home cripples and 54,000 poor neglected children of the slums. Special mention was made of the new Home being built at Southend for the reception of cripples in need of a change of air, and a strong plea was made for liberal aid.

Lady HOPE followed with a sympathetic address, illumined with many touching incidents from her own experience, and well calculated to arouse interest and call forth fresh helpers for this great effort on behalf of poor children.

Rev. J. REID HOWATT spoke on the pitiful condition of crippled children, prisoned for life in dull, sordid rooms, with all a child's keen longings, yet without an interest in life or a hope for the future. Amongst these a host of willing workers are now doing noble service, but there is room for many more of a like spirit and type.

Canon WILBERFORCE came next with a glowing and eloquent exposition of the claims and the necessities of the hopeless, helpless, neglected children of ignorance and misery. Our Master extended his tenderest sympathy to such, and left as his command, "Feed my lambs." We therefore must surely feel the peculiar claim such service has on our personal help and liberal giving. Brief words followed by Messrs. T. A. Denny and James Robertson, and the proceedings were concluded with earnest appeal for all effort on behalf of poor children.

Mr. C. Inglis at Yeovil.

THE Mission just held in Yeovil has filled our hearts with praise and gratitude to God. Mr. Inglis came to us under the auspices of the Y.M. and Y.W.C.A.'s, and remembering how God had used his servant on two former visits, much prayer was offered for a shower of blessing. This prayer has been abundantly answered. The Town Hall has not only been filled to overflowing on Sunday night, but on the week nights filled with those eager to listen to the Gospel. Some of the addresses were intensely searching; one on the service of sin will long be remembered. As some of the awful results of sin were described, strong men were weeping as they thought on the past, and looked into the future with no confidence.

Christians of all denominations, some of whom were saved during former missions held by Mr. Inglis, have worked heartily in the inquiry room. We praise God for backsliders restored, and many gathered out of the world. The afternoon Bible readings have been times of great spiritual profit, and so much have they been appreciated, that the Institution Hall was well filled day by day.

Drift Children's Mission.

SEVEN hundred cripple children are regularly visited in their homes by the agents of this Mission. The sick and helpless are cared for at a seaside home at Margate, and hundreds of sufferers have been nursed back to health and strength.

At the third anniversary meeting lately held at the East London Tabernacle, the work of Mr. Boyer and his assistants was warmly spoken of and commended to the support of the Christian public by Mr. W. D. Francis (who presided), Rev. Dalfaw Lewis, Mr. J. F. Shorey, Mr. H. Clegg, and others. The large Tabernacle was well filled with men and women, many of whom were deeply touched by the singing of hymns by the cripples' choir. This choir is doing excellent work in seeking to win souls at the open-air van meetings.

Lansdowne Hall, W. Norwood.

THE varied work maintained in connection with this hall, under the superintendence of Pastor Fuller Gooch, has had another very prosperous year, judging from the report submitted at the annual meeting last week. Mr. HUTCHINSON, church secretary, had to tell of progress in every department. A vigorous work is carried on among the children, among young men and young women. The classes for consecutive Bible study are well attended, and are a channel of much spiritual strength. There has been great encouragement and manifest blessing in connection with the work of the Flower Mission to Lambeth Infirmary. The missionary element has been well to the front during the year, and several in Church fellowship have been led to give themselves for service abroad. Over £140 were raised for different missions through meetings held in the hall.

In a subsequent statement Pastor Gooch spoke thankfully of the spirit of devotion and harmony prevailing among the workers. He referred to the steady progress that had marked the course of their efforts as a church since the opening of the hall three years ago. The debt on the freehold property has been reduced to £200, and the freewill offerings of the people had sustained all the operations of the church. The hall has now become too small for the growing needs of the work, especially for the large congregations on the Sunday evenings. Additional accommodation is also greatly needed for the smaller gatherings. The time has not yet come for erecting a permanent structure in place of the iron building. A new piece of ground adjoining the present site has been purchased for £300, thus adding forty feet of land to the site. It is proposed to erect a smaller hall for the holding of sub-ordinary meetings, with rooms for the hall-keeper. It is also proposed to throw the vestries in the rear into the main body of the hall, which will give room for 150 new sittings. For these various extensions it is computed that £1000 will be sufficient, and it is earnestly hoped that friends will help in raising the amount.

At the afternoon and evening meetings on anniversary day a number of well-known brethren were present to give words of sympathetic cheer or exhortation.

Female Education in the East.

THE Archdeacon of London presided, a few days ago, over the annual meeting of friends of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East. In a brief statement on the work, he said:—This Society was founded in 1824, and had therefore completed its sixty-second year. The operations were on a large scale, its expenditure being annually about £8000, and its reports each year were most encouraging. As the oldest of the societies for teaching the women of Asia and Africa, this should receive the undivided support of those members of the Church of England who understood the Gospel of Christ in the same primitive sense. Having read from the report specimens of the work which is being carried on under the auspices of the Society, the Archdeacon asked what could be more delightful than to be the means of bringing the beautiful and beneficent light of the message of the Lord to shine in places where it had never yet been seen, and which were sunk far down in ignorance, superstition, and vice. More was effected by personal influence and intercourse than by general preaching. Here are the very agents that we should most wish to have for the women of the East. Shall we not do more than we have ever done before to encourage their efforts, to strengthen their hands, to supply their needs, to hasten to their calls, and to enlarge their work?

Rev. P. K. Fryson (Bishop-designate of Hokkaido) followed, confining himself entirely to Japan, where he had personal experience of the work of the Society. Japan, he reminded the meeting, is a very populous country—a fact very often overlooked. It contains forty-one millions of people, and there are some twenty millions of women amongst whom the agents of this society might work. The people dwell for the most part in large cities. Tokio, for example, has a population of two millions, and is the largest city in Asia. Another advantage to the missionary was that the people are all of one race and of one language. There is plenty of work for more missionaries in Japan, and there are special openings for women who could go out at their own charges and work amongst the women of the higher classes.

Mr. H. W. Fox, who accompanied his father, the hon. sec. of the C.M.S., on a tour in the East, having given some of his impressions, Miss WERN, the secretary of the society, spoke of the great loss sustained by the death of Miss Cooke, for forty-two years missionary at Singapore.

Watchwords.

BORNE upon the foaming billows

Of life's stormy sea,
Comes a whisper soft and gentle,

Saying, "Follow Me."
Onward, then, thy God to follow,
Onward in his might,
Doing, daring, waiting, suffering,
Trust Him—do the right.

In the silence of the twilight

Of the dying day,
Came an echo thus resounding—
"Christian, watch and pray."

Gird thine armour on, "Good soldier,"

"Stand" firm in his might;
"Watch," for soon the Bridegroom cometh,
Soon it will be light.

From the trees of Eden's bowers

Words come soft and low,
Words which call for speedy answer—
Christian, "Where art thou?"

Art thou in the battle raging,

Bravest of the brave?
In this world's dark hour of midnight,
Art thou there to save?

Borne upon the breath of even,

From Gethsemane,
Hear the suffering Master saying,
"Christian, why sleep ye?"

When by others He betrayed is,
Show Him thou art true;
When the pearly gates are opened
He will welcome you.

Through the mists of the sunrising,

From the silent tomb
Come these accents, strangely thrilling,
Scattering all the gloom.

Child, "Why weepest thou?" no longer

Death thy Lord could keep;
He is risen, and by his rising
Death is turned to sleep.

"He is risen," and with Him rising

Let us hence away
Up into our Father's presence,
There with Him to stay.

"Seated in the heavenly places,"

Earth's dark shadows flee,
Though in earthly bodies dwelling,
We in Him are free.

Earth can bind our earthly bodies;

Still in spirit free
We from earth's vain transient pleasures
To our God can flee.

Glimpses of the brighter glory

On our souls have dawned,
And in pressing forward, onward,
Earthly glory's scorned.

"Go ye into all the world,"

Tell his wondrous love;
Tell how He the sinner pitying
Left his throne above;

Tell the glorious, touching story
Of his pierced hands;

Tell the slaves of sin's dark bondage

He can burst their bands. E. H. B.

Belgium.—We have from time to time called attention to the excellent work of the Belgian Missionary Church, and given some account of the work among the miners at Jumet, near Charleroi. We regret to learn that through lack of help from outside, the Jumet church is struggling alone to maintain its work and free its "temple" from the burden of debt. A correspondent who has followed the work with interest writes to us:—"It would be a sad result to all previous efforts if these working people and their pastor should become utterly discouraged, and the services could not be carried on, or if some, not well grounded in the faith, fell away, or were enticed back to Roman Catholicism. M. Reymond writes that there are 261 children in his Sunday-school. If helped in their straits this little community may become a flourishing Christian body."

Letters to the Editor.

HOW TO KEEP ELDER SCHOLARS.

SIR,—May I give a little of my own experience to prove that young people do not consider themselves too old to attend school or Bible-class, providing someone takes sufficient interest in them and is willing to instruct them?

Some years ago, in connection with a village church, I announced my intention to start a Sunday-school, and was surprised to find that instead of only small children coming, several young men, who had long since left another school, as being considered too old to attend, presented themselves for instruction; consequently, I had a mixed class of boys and girls, varying in age from five to twenty years.

Two years ago, in the place from which I write, we had a week's mission, at which several young men and women decided for Christ. At the close of the mission I asked all who would to join me on Sunday afternoons for a Bible-reading. As I was not sure who would come, and who would become regular attendants, I suited my reading to all ages. We took the International Lesson, and I read Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's notes upon it. The meeting was always opened and closed with singing and prayer, and was as orderly as possible. Those who joined were—a young labourer and his two sisters, aged from twenty-two to twenty-six years, a gardener's man, a blacksmith's apprentice, a married woman and her children, and several other young women over twenty. These have been regular attendants ever since. Six others come in occasionally, and are always welcome, but these I can depend upon.

Since Christmas we have been taking the New Testament all through, a chapter each Sunday. We study the chapter during the week, and choose hymns bearing upon the subject. At the meeting I ask who has chosen hymns, and then make a selection of three or four of the most suitable ones. The chapter having been read, each taking a verse in turn, I ask the members which verses have impressed them most, and what text or hymn they have found bearing on the subject. As they are not clever, nor able to express their thoughts clearly, they generally find a hymn which does so, and either they or I read it aloud. Then I speak a few words of explanation or encouragement, trying especially to bring the truths home to ourselves. After addressing each one, I say which part has most struck me, and what it made me think of, and also speak on any part of the chapter that has not been touched upon.

Then a lady friend of mine has been in the habit of speaking a few words, or reading a paper on some part of the chapter. Now, what is it which draws these young men and women together? Not the thought of pleasing a popular teacher or minister; not the expectation of earthly reward, for I am but a working girl myself, unable to give prizes of any kind, and our meetings are unnoticed by outsiders. Nothing but a sincere love for God, and a desire to know more of Him, can bring them. Neither severe cold, nor heavy rain, nor anything else, prevents some of them from coming.

I think the reason our class gets on so well is because, like the Society of Christian Endeavour, all ages and both sexes are welcome, and each one is asked to take some part in the meetings, and all feel on an equality with each other. Each feels that they are looked for and needed, and that is so different from the condition of things which E. P. Sharman describes, namely, "Having to fold his hands and sit idly watching the older people, feeling he cannot venture to offer his services when his seniors are at work." May I venture to say that we young people too often make a mistake in sitting idly watching our seniors when we might be up and doing? Teachers would not be wanting for the elder scholars if some of the most earnest and capable of the elder scholars would help, instead of waiting for older teachers who never turn up. I am speaking from experience when I say this, for I should have started a Bible-class years before I did if I had not felt that there were elderly people in the congregation who were better fitted to teach than I, and whom I thought ought to do it.

Those who joined my class were just the last people I should have expected to join, because apparently the most careless, whereas those whom I thought would be sure to join disappointed me. I cannot close without saying how much I enjoy reading THE CHRISTIAN. I frequently read aloud in class some article which I think will be helpful to others. After reading the paper myself, I pass it on to a dear Christian worker in Ireland, who enjoys it also.—Yours faithfully,

A READER OF THE CHRISTIAN.

PARENT AND CHILD.

DEAR SIR,—As the mother of a large family, I have read with interest your letters on the "Parent and Child." May I suggest to my younger sisters the importance in family life of "little words and little things." Young children of Christian parents (and of such only I write) believe implicitly what those parents say. It is, therefore, all important that father and mother should be of one mind, and whatever main differences exist (and such there must be in those brought up in different homes), they should not be brought before their young children, who are incapable of weighing the relative importance of matters discussed.

A truly Christian couple will have had their early morning prayer together, in which they will have pleaded that right words may be given through the day. Such will, above all things, desire to be of one heart and one mind in parental training. On one occasion, when a request was denied by the father, a young visitor's suggestion that "perhaps mother would grant it when he was gone," was met with the astonished reply, "Oh, no; father and mother always say alike." Later, on a birthday of the eldest, then five years old, a promise was made that if the day was fine, a drive and treat in the country should be given. The longed-for day arrived, and rising from the breakfast table, and looking out of the window, the father said, "I think it will be only a Scotch mist"; when I, the mother, foreboded, "I fear it is coming on to rain, and will be a wet day." Judge our surprise when the boy exclaimed, "I shall never, never forget this day." Being asked why, he repeated with great emphasis, "Father says one thing, and mother says another! No, I shall never forget it." To the child the difference of opinion was as real as if it had involved a matter of vital importance.

Truly we parents have always need to pray, "Let the words of my mouth," as well as "the meditation of my heart," be "always acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord, my Strength and my Redeemer."

Oxford Notes.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

There have recently been several changes among the clergy here, some of them of interest to those outside Oxford. Rev. E. H. Elwin, formerly curate of St. Peter-le-Bailey, sailed on Saturday, 18th April, for West Africa, to work at Fourah Bay College. His going out has increased the interest in the missionary cause and we trust will lead others to consecrate themselves to the Lord's work.

Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, curate of St. Aldate's, left on Saturday for London to take up his new work at Portman Chapel. St. Aldate's Church was packed on the evening of Sunday, April 19th, when Mr. Thomas preached his farewell sermon, and on Tuesday the new Examination Schools were crowded by a great gathering which came together to show their love and affection.

Rev. W. C. G. Lang, vicar of the University Church, is also leaving, having accepted the incumbency of esteem Portsea.

Pastor Case, of the Commercial-road Baptist Chapel, has accepted a call from Evesham. He has been here about six years, and his departure is much regretted by his congregation.

The plans of the Hannington Hall are completed, and it is hoped that the Hall may be ready by October or at the latest by Christmas. There will be a library beside the hall, and the total cost will be £3000.

Melanchthon.—Recently, on the occasion of the 400th anniversary of the birth of Melanchthon, the Evangelical community of Bretten, in the Grand Duchy of Baden, issued an appeal to the Protestant world for help in raising a monument to the Reformer, on the site occupied by the house in which he was born, which has been acquired for commemorative purposes by the town authorities. The monument will be a museum, containing souvenirs of Melanchthon and his friends, including manuscripts, medals, books, and drawings, and embellished with statues, busts, and portraits of the reformers.

LESSONS ON PRAYER.

Luke xviii. 9-17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 13.

THE title of this lesson suggests that its teaching should be applied to prayer. By the parable of the unjust judge Jesus has just taught the necessity of earnestness and importunity. These are necessary, not in order to make God willing to give, but as a test of the sincerity of our desire, as a means of strengthening our faith, and in order to increase our appreciation of the blessing when bestowed. To know how to pray without fainting (ver. 1) is one of the most important lessons on prayer.

The parable of the Pharisee and the publican (9-14) has a double purpose. It shows the kind of man whom God will not receive, and whose prayer God will not hear (11, 12), and places in contrast with him the man who, in answer to true prayer, went down to his house justified (13, 14). It is a repetition in parable form of the story of Cain and Abel. There is the same approach of two men to God, the same contrast between what they offered to Him, and the same result in the rejection of the one and the acceptance of the other. The parable reminds us that it is possible to be a worshipper and yet be rejected by God.

The Pharisee's prayer was wrong because he was wrong (9). His character was described long before (Isa. lxxv. 5). The righteousness in which he prided himself was mere ceremonialism and externalism. It exceeded what the law required, first, in fasting "twice a week" (12), while the law appointed only one fast-day in the year (Lev. xvi. 29); and, secondly, in tithing everything, adding "mint, and anise and cummin" to that which the law required (Matt. xxiii. 23). Such righteousness counted for nothing while the weightier matters of "judgment, mercy, and faith" were omitted. Such a man, with his heart full of pride and self-complacency, and looking down with contempt upon others, cannot pray. There cannot come out of him what is not in him. Where there is no conscious need, no sense of helpless dependence on God, there can be no prayer.

The prayer itself is simply a revelation of the man. Count the number of capital "I's" there are in it! Though the name of "God" appears at the beginning of it, there was no need for it, for he prayed "with himself" (11). It contains not a single petition; and he does not even attribute to God the excellency of which he boasts (see Rev. iii. 17, 18). He merely displays the varied points of his own excellence, in contrast with the publican, whom he scorns. Can God answer a prayer in which there is nothing requiring an answer? He came away self-satisfied, but condemned. From his example we may learn how not to pray.

The publican's prayer was different because he was different (13). What we are determines the character of our prayers. Yet note that fitness for prayer does not consist in being righteous, but in knowing that we are sinful. The Pharisee could not pray because he deemed himself righteous. The publican could not but pray because he felt himself a sinner. To one of these two classes we belong—which?

Everything about the publican's prayer showed his acceptance of the sinner's position. He stood "afar off," away in some remote corner of the temple as one unworthy to come near the holy place. The Jewish mode of praying was looking up toward heaven (Psa. cxxiii. 1, 2). The publican was too conscious of sin to do this (Psa. xl. 12). By smiting the breast he expressed the bitterness of his grief (Luke xxiii. 48). What he seeks is mercy; and the words "be merciful" mean "be propitiated." His example, therefore, teaches us how to pray aright. No man is too bad to pray if he will come to God as the publican did; and no man is so good as not to need the publican's prayer.

The incident which follows (15-17) suggests three lessons: (1) Parents may bring their children to Jesus. The earlier this is done the better. The simplicity, trustfulness, humility of a child are qualities that render it easier to come to Jesus than at any later period. (2) Others may be a hindrance to children. Even the disciples so misunderstood the Saviour that they considered it beneath his dignity to attend to them. They did not know how He loved the children. Others have done the same by suggesting that children are too young to come to Christ, that when they do profess to trust Him they must be kept outside the Church for a period to test their sincerity. The seed sown in the Sunday-school is often taken away by the influence of the home. Recall the warning of xvii. 2! (3) All who come to God must seek a childlike spirit (17). Children need not become men, but men need become childlike in order to enter the kingdom of God.

Obituary.

MR. FRANK WRIGHT.

MANY will have heard with regret of the sudden death of Mr. Frank Wright, chiefly known as manufacturer of unfermented wine for communion use, a line of business which he had made peculiarly his own. He was in his sixty-ninth year, had led an active and useful life, devoting much time and attention to the affairs of the Temperance Hospital. In temperance circles he will be widely and greatly missed.

MRS. LECHLER, YERCAND, MADRAS.

This faithful and beloved servant of Christ has been called to her rest and reward. Her death, on March 25, from influenza, was very sudden, but she was fully ready as one who had walked long and closely with God. She was seventy-eight, but quite strong and active in work at Yercand till the last. The natives had great faith in her prayers and medicines. Her husband, a missionary of the L.M.S. at Salem, Madras, died at his post many years ago, and after his death his widow continued labouring for Christ, as she had so long done, unconnected with any society. Those who knew her speak of her as a loving, devoted, gentle soul-winner.

REV. JOSIAH HUDSON, BANGALORE.

The well-known principal of the Bangalore Theological College, and superintendent and chairman of the Mysore district, has died suddenly. The sad news was received on Thursday at the Wesleyan Mission House in London. Mr. Hudson was well known in Yorkshire and Lancashire, being the son of the late Rev. Josiah Hudson. A native of Selby, he spent his earlier years in Manchester, where, while engaged in teaching, he also attended the Owens College. Thirty years ago he was appointed by the Wesleyan Conference to the Mysore district, and subsequently to the charge of the High School in that city. Later he occupied a similar post at Bangalore. In 1878 he was appointed chairman of the Mysore district.

MR. JOSEPH RIVOLTA.

Many friends, far and near, will mourn the departure of this beloved saint, who passed to be with Christ on the 18th inst. Of a singularly modest and retiring disposition, he did not come so prominently to the front as some, but all who knew him personally were aware that he was a devoted worker, a useful evangelist, and a well-instructed teacher in the Word. Both in connection with the Evangelization Society and independently, he rendered for many years constant and valuable service as an honorary evangelist. Besides, he was a ready helper of many Christian institutions, such as the Strangers' Rest. Missions to the heathen were also specially on his heart; while, moreover, he did good service in connection with the Midway Mission to the Jews, his wife and daughter going for some years regularly to sing to the patients in waiting at the Medical Mission Dispensary. Nor did his sympathies beyond make him forget nearer claims. He was interested in many evangelistic missions at home, and was known at Blackheath and Streatham as a faithful witness and consistent and devoted follower of Christ. Some two years ago he had an illness which never fully left him, and which somewhat hindered his activity in the service he loved.

REV. DAVID HILL, WUCHANG.

One of the noblest of missionaries has fallen at his post, after thirty-two years' devoted labour in Central China. Throughout the ranks of British Methodism Rev. David Hill was specially known and loved, but his loving and self-denying service had made him known far beyond the borders of the church to which he specially belonged. Throughout his many years of missionary service he had entailed no cost to the Wesleyan Missionary Society, having given his fortune as well as his life for the sake of China. It will be remembered that when last at home his favourite theme was self-supporting missionaries, and his most urgent appeal was for young men willing to give themselves to this great work.

Under the appropriate title, "A Missionary Hero," the Daily News gives the following notice of Mr. Hill's life and labours:—On Tuesday the sad news reached the Wesleyan Missionary Society in London of the death, at Hankow, of Rev. David Hill, of Wuchang, one of the most experienced and valued of the Society's agents in China. He entered the Wesleyan ministry in 1861, and received his theological training at Richmond College. Three years later he was appointed to the newly-opened mission in Central China. He commenced his work at Hankow, then slowly recovering from the terrible devastations of the Tai-Ping Rebellion. Subsequently he became pioneer missionary in Kwang-Chi and Wusueh. In the terrible famine in Northern China in the years 1877-79, this noble missionary was one of the first of the band for the distribution of relief.

Fifteen years ago he returned to his work in Central China, after having visited England, and awakened considerable enthusiasm on behalf of mission work in China. It was at this time that the missionary became founder of the Central China Lay Mission, and established the Blind School at Hankow. As chairman of the Wuchang District he has done much to consolidate and extend Wesleyan mission work in that part of the Chinese Empire, often at the risk of his life. A few years since he paid his last visit to England, and since his return to China one of his latest projects was the establishment of a mission-station in Chang-Sha, the capital of the province of Hunan, the scene of recent disturbances.

Scottish Notes.

THE meetings of the U.P. Synod fall to be held in Edinburgh next week.

After a very fruitful mission at Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow, the brothers Weaver are now holding meetings at the Wynd Free Church.

During the past week, Dr. A. T. Pierson has addressed large gatherings in Edinburgh, Aberdeen, and other places. The meetings were held under the auspices of the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society.

At the annual meeting of the Sailors' Orphan Society for Scotland, held in Glasgow last week, it was reported that a larger number of children had been received than in any former year; they came from many different parts of the country. Weighty speeches were made in support of the work of the Society.

The Home Mission Union of Glasgow embraces 166 congregations, of the Established, Free U.P., Congregational, Baptist, Methodist, and other churches. The object of the Union is to prevent overlapping, and to act upon those who are non-church-goers. One of the speakers at the annual meeting, held last week, stated that in Glasgow and suburbs there are 335,000 persons outside all church connection.

A most helpful fortnight's mission, held in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, has closed. The services were conducted by Mr. John Anderson and the staff of the Bible Training Institute students. The attendance at all the services was remarkably good, and every evening there was blessing, especially among the men who attended. In the midst of the mission on Saturday, April 18, a conference was held in the afternoon and was largely attended.

Last week an interesting thanksgiving meeting was held in the Seamen's Chapel, Brown-street, Glasgow. At the close of a three weeks' mission, conducted by Mr. William Thompson, jun., several sailors and others testified to God's saving power; upwards of forty seamen of different nationalities professed conversion during the mission. Christians spoke of blessing and quickening through the Bible readings. A number of young people were present, of whom nearly 200 professed decision for Christ.

Christian Endeavour.

THE first Indian C.E. Convention has been held at Askar, Bengal.

Rev. Dr. F. E. Clark would like it to be known that his address is now 646, Washington-street, Boston.

The North Staffordshire C.E. Union held its annual meeting last week. It now numbers twenty-four societies with a thousand members.

It appears that Rev. John Pollock, of Glasgow, has six C.E. Societies in his church, the Shamrock-street U.P. Two are junior societies, one young people's society, two senior societies, and one mother's society.

At the missionary resolution service of last year's Boston Convention a member of the First Presbyterian Society, Syracuse, pledged the society to double its gifts during the next year. Within the year ending April 1, the society has given 225.47dols. to missions, which is more than three times the amount given the previous year. The society has only forty active members.

T. M'E. V.

The second Scottish National Convention was held last week in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh. The report stated that in Scotland Christian Endeavour had been advancing with very rapid pace. The youth of the country were coming forward in ever-increasing numbers to dedicate their lives to Christ and his Church. The societies numbered 314, and whereas the membership in April, 1895, was 9455, it now stood at 14,492. Of the total, 10,334 were active members, as against 6816 a year ago. Christian Endeavour was strengthening the forces of the Church, as was evidenced by the fact that in the past twelve months out of 7240 active members in the Young People's Societies, 711 had joined the Church in one or other of the denominations. Rev. D. F. Mackenzie, of Langside, was elected president for the coming year.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE spring conference of the Western District of Y.M.C.A.'s took place at Weston-super-Mare on 23rd inst.

A branch has recently been formed in Upper Sydenham, S.E. The secretary, Mr. Herbert Barber, 76, High-street, will gladly welcome young men.

The second annual report of the Putney Y.M.C.A., presented at the annual meeting just held, is very encouraging. The Sunday afternoon Bible-class has nearly doubled its membership, and in all other departments satisfactory progress has been made. Forty-four new members and associates have joined, making in all a total of seventy-nine.

The associations of the North Metropolitan District Union met for their spring conference under the presidency of Professor Orchard, at the rooms of the Hampstead Association, on Wednesday evening last week. An admirable paper on the functions of committee-men, and means for developing and improving their work, was read by Mr. J. H. Putterill, and a profitable discussion followed.

Rev. W. J. Woods, secretary of the Congregational Union, addressing the annual meeting of the New Cross and Brockley Association, on Wednesday evening, 22nd inst., said he had been identified with the Y.M.C.A. as a member and worker throughout the greater part of his life. He referred to the grand brotherly and consecrated bond uniting the associations in all parts of the world, and related his experiences as to the excellence of the work in Sydney, Montreal, Quebec, Kingston (Jamaica), and Tokio (Japan). Rev. J. W. Atkinson, Vicar of St. John's, also gave a valuable address.

At the annual meeting of the Bristol Y.M.C.A. Youths' Department, Mr. Brigstocke Hitchings occupied the chair, and there was a good attendance. The report stated that a most important change has taken place in connection with the Friday evening Bible meeting. The name and character of the meeting have been changed, and the average attendance has gone up to thirty. Gospel meetings have been held in the lecture-room as previously on Sunday evenings, the average attendance running very high. The prayer-meetings on Saturdays prove a great stimulus to the work. The Sunday afternoon Bible class has had an average attendance of eleven through the year. Details followed of the many auxiliary agencies carried on. Stirring addresses followed by Revs. J. E. Brennan and J. W. Simister.

The Stafford Rooms (Edgware-road) Association celebrated its anniversary on the 23rd inst., when a most successful meeting was held in the Marylebone Presbyterian Church. Hon. Henry Noel presided. The report for the past year, presented by the general secretary, Mr. Basil Hewer, recorded much excellent work, particularly in the way of personal endeavour on the part of the members, through whose instrumentality many young men had been led to decision for Christ. Mr. J. H. Putterill delivered a forcible address, dealing with the necessitous condition, from a moral and spiritual point of view, of the thousands of young men in London, and pleading the claims of the Association upon the hearty support of God's people. Dr. Pentecost, Rev. Marcus Rainsford, jun., Dr. J. H. Gladstone, Mr. W. H. Mills, and others took part in the proceedings.

The Y.W.C.A.

A MOVEMENT is being inaugurated to establish a branch of the Y.W.C.A. in Egypt.

The half-yearly meeting of the missionary club in connection with the Y.W.C.A., was held at Dundee on the 16th inst. A sum of £46 was collected.

The sixth anniversary of the Ramsgate Institute was held on the 16th inst. The annual report was satisfactory. Mr. Rayner, of the Y.M.C.A., gave an interesting account of the work accomplished by the missionaries of the association among the Zulus.

The Religious Tract Society.—On Sunday morning, in the Congregational Church, Bromley, Kent, Rev. T. Nicholson, the pastor, preached in connection with the R.T.S. anniversary, on "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds." It was shown that the world of to-day is the scene of a very real battle, and that, in the highest sense, the Church now is a Church militant. No one can die nobly, unless with sword in hand against the strongholds of evil, of pride of intellect, prejudice, and ignorance. These had to be cast down, and all the high things which exalted themselves against the knowledge of God had to be abolished. The only weapons which could be used lawfully were the meekness of wisdom and the persuasiveness of the truth. These had been the only weapons which the R.T.S. had wielded from the days of its founders until now. Again and again, throughout the years had they proved "mighty through God."

There is something striking in a London daily paper beseeching every section of the Protestant Church to use the May meeting for giving a deliverance in favour of International Arbitration. The Daily Chronicle does so, and at the same time points out the possibility of obtaining this arrangement between England and the United States. "In such a compact," it says, "lies the hope of Christendom and humanity." If the Churches fail, "God knows what the issues may be when war on an unimagined scale lies in our path." "Divided in form, will not the Church unite on this matter of vital substance?" Such simultaneous action would, no doubt, have great weight. But in case the various societies find it difficult to arrange for an expression of opinion on this question—and we know that it is not easy for them to depart from their own particular work—men of all Churches should surely make it a point of duty to attend the annual meeting of the Peace Society to be held in the Memorial Hall on Tuesday, May 19, at 6.30 p.m. A great demonstration then would cheer a good society and meet the request of our contemporary. The secular Press has often criticised the May meetings, but now that it pleads for such a good object, we hope it will not be neglected or denied.

In his latest volume of sermons Dr. MacLaren makes the remark once and again, as if the subject were much on his mind, that there are "few things which the so-called Christianity of this day needs more than an intenser realisation of the fact, and the gravity of the fact, of personal sinfulness." He believes this to be the root of the shallowness of so much that calls itself Christianity in the world to-day, the source of almost all the evils under which the Church is groaning. It has a great deal to do "in shaping all the maimed, imperfect, partial views of Christ, his character and nature, which afflict the world." Of old we have known it as the mother of most of our heresies. The fact is a somewhat startling one, when it is remembered that never was there an age in which men clamoured more loudly for their rights, and in which class more fiercely denounced class for its sins. But this is just because the sense of personal sinfulness is feeble. Men who do their duty are the least clamorous for their rights, and the most conscious of shortcoming; therefore they are less censorious than others.

The terrible confessions made by the men charged with the Muswell Hill murder is one of the most striking events in the recent annals of crime. The whole story bears the mark of truth, and shows how inevitably the law works, "though hand join with hand, yet shall not the wicked go unpunished." Partnership in wrong-doing is a dangerous business at best; the proverbial honour of thieves among themselves is not of much account when each one has the fear of the halter before his eyes. The horror of that night seems to have burnt into the souls of the men who committed the murder, and the story in all its details is a lurid picture of the avenging power of conscience, as well as the law.

There is a short but striking article in the current Evangelical Magazine on the decline of family prayer. A veteran missionary being asked on his return from the East what sign of change during his ten years' absence had most impressed him, he replied, "The decline of family worship in the Christian households where I am a guest." In many cases not only is morning family worship omitted, but the blessing at the table also. Time was when evening as well as morning prayer was the rule in religious families. Social engagements and late hours have altogether driven out the evening prayer, and early trains to business now threaten to exclude the morning prayer. In many families composed of earnest Christians in other respects this is growingly the case. It is time a note of warning were sounded, for to maintain the spirit of religion apart from its form is a hope without warrant from experience. Even the children who at the time look at the custom as irksome are unconsciously impressed by it, and years afterwards may bear good fruit. It is a sad day in many a household when this time-honoured Christian practice falls into decay.

The special place given to the children's address in public worship is creating quite a literature of its own. The number of volumes of sermonettes to the young folk that is issuing from the press continues to increase in geometrical progression. A few years ago it was hard to find a suitable collection for the help of busy preachers; their number now is so great that a small library of such books could be easily brought together. The quality of most of them is of a high order. The grown-up people who hear such discourses are sure to be as interested as the little ones; and preachers should make a juvenile address a special feature of their ministry.

In these days, when well-doing runs the risk of being put upon a profit and loss foundation, it is cheering to come upon a bold and unconditioned assertion of principle—to be told, e.g., that "men did not give up private vengeance, or polygamy, or slavery, or the butchering of prisoners on the battle-field, because they disliked these things, but because they knew that the desire for them was wrong." It is for us, says Mr. Shaler in The North American Review, "it is for us, in this matter of peace, to make for good as our ancestors have done." So it is. We shall never destroy an evil custom by showing its inexpediency; it must be assailed as evil. The appeal which comes to conscience is always stronger and more effectual than that which comes to common-sense and the pocket. The world is moved forward by moral, not material, forces.

Many signs portend the ending of the old barracks school for workhouse children; it will be a blessing for the nation and a blessing for the children when it comes. The success which has attended the efforts of the Sheffield Board of Guardians to place children in various parts of the city in cottage homes should give an immense impetus to the movement in favour of a more humane treatment of poor boys and girls. After only a three years' trial of the Scattered Homes system the children are manifestly better, both physically and mentally. They have lost the dull, listless look, and do not trail their feet when they walk. The improvement in them has been found out by employers of labour, so that, whereas, under the old system, it was difficult to find a place for a girl, and she only got sixpence a week to begin with, under the new system girls are worth one shilling and sixpence a week, and have several places to choose from. The boys also are in great demand. There are dull children, of course, but the Scattered Homes do not make them duller. In other words, when we follow the way that is right, we find that the children become good and useful members of the commonwealth, an aid instead of a burden.

Dr. C. H. Payne, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who has a great knowledge of the conditions and problems of American life, believes that the American Church is on the eve of another great religious movement, "a revival epoch unprecedented in her history." Its characteristics, he believes, will be a revival of original Christianity, of individual righteousness, of corporate righteousness, of civic righteousness, of social righteousness. The agents to be employed he believes will be largely young people, and the fruits of the revival young converts.

This forecast points to an ethical revival based upon a quickening of the Gospel in the heart; this is the normal course of revivals, as it is the normal course of conversions. The need for it is great both in America, in England, and everywhere. The testimony of Major Swift, of Chicago, is evidence enough for one city, even if large discount must be taken from it. Asking who bribes the Common Council, he replies that it is representative citizens, capitalists and business men. We have had revelations enough, and more are said to be pending, of the unsound condition of much of our commercial life at home. Until this sore is probed and healed by the truth of God, there can be no salvation for such as are smitten with the disease. We want some preaching that shall take the same effect upon the conscience as did Baxter's at Kidderminster, Luther's in Germany, and Wesley's all over England. It seems as if it must be searching, ethical, evangelical preaching. A bold and resolute blow must be struck at common sins in the name of the Saviour of sinners.

The behaviour of audiences is almost as important to the success of public worship as the work of the pulpit; but it does not seem to be thought of in many churches as a matter worthy of much consideration. Most people are satisfied if they behave with conventional decency; and there are some good customs that are but little considered, notably the habit of punctuality. Propriety in some congregations seems synonymous with a mere cold impassiveness. The cold and austere way in which the most impassioned appeals are met is one of the real hindrances to a true acceptance of the Gospel. The stirring truths of the Gospel are received in a listless and apathetic manner. The praise is devoid of warmth and reality. There is no audible and visible response to the prayers and the sermon. When this is so, public worship is as cold and becomes as wearisome as an empty ceremonial.

The element of spontaneity should never be absent from a religious service. The preacher should not be ashamed to make use of those little familiarities and personal touches which beat within to the real human power of his convictions; nor should his congregation be so frozen in under the ice of a faultless deportment, that they dare not make a sign of outward interest. There should always be a steady interflow of sympathy between preacher and people, that they may together realise the invisible touch of the Holy Spirit. The times of richest blessing in the ministry of the Word have not been those of stately ritual, and careful proprieties, but those in which all who take part in it are so absorbed in their spiritual exercises, and the realisation of the Divine presence, that all the poor conventions of behaviour have been forgotten, and they have dared to be natural. We should watch and pray against the intrusion of anything which interferes with the full reception of Divine influence and the maintenance of a sense of real communion. The truest seemliness is found in the heartiest and happiest brotherhood.

Lepers in India.—Mr. Wellesley Bailey, who has returned from a prolonged tour of inspection through India, states that in many of the public thoroughfares of Calcutta the mendicant leper is in painful evidence. While in the neighbourhood of Raniganj, he found, in three days, no fewer than nine cases in which lepers were engaged in selling food and other commodities to the public. Mr. Bailey visited most of the thirty or more centres in India and Burma in which the Mission is at work, and was cheered by many tokens of God's blessing on the self-denying labours of the missionaries and native helpers.

The Stalk and the Sickle.

Immediately he putteth in the sickle.—Mark iv. 29.

It was one of the loveliest of summer Sabbath days, and in the solemn evening hour the sunlight came through open windows, and a shimmer of green leaves into a beautiful little chapel, built by the owner of an estate on his own grounds. And the noble mansion not far away, with its fair surroundings, looked all the fairer to me because of this recognition, so devout and practical, of Him "who giveth all."

No sanctuary could have had a greater charm in its perfect adaptation to its mission. Neither cost, nor pains, nor taste had been spared, as wainscoted walls and sweet-scented organ and clustering ferns all bespoken. There was no village near the hall, but the chapel, which was seated for 150 worshippers, was filled to its utmost extent, many having walked four miles to be present at that evening service. An agriculturally-employed audience, for the most part, and the subject was in perfect adaptation thereto, its outlines clear-cut as a cameo, but filled in and throbbing with most un-cameo-like vitality. It was the deep problem of life that was treated from the standpoint of this sweet country picture drawn by Christ, the Creator and Lord of nature, the life and growth of the plant, illustrating so closely the processes of spiritual life. The thoughts followed each other in quick vivid sequence, but I can only indicate them here.

1. That the soil and the seed were in perfect adaptation to each other, so that to bring them into contact was to give every reasonable chance of germination. 2. That when the seed was committed to the earth, all responsibility was then transferred to the soil, the sower having, for the time at least, done his part. 3. That when life begins it brings under tribute all its surroundings. Earth and air, sunshine and shower, stormy wind and evening dew are all made ministers to its growth, thus discrediting the excuses of those who, in the higher region of morals, lay the blame of sterility on unfavourable environment. 4. That constant, though gradual growth is the surest proof of vigorous life. And then came the point which was flooded with light to one at least of the listeners in that little congregation. When the corn is ripe, its connection with the earth is weakened by gradual decay of the stalk, and now it bows its head in glad surrender to the service of others, its own life yielded up in magnificent ministry. Passing through processes akin to pain and humiliation; the keen-edged reaping hook, the relentless flail, the sharp winnowing fan, the crushing machinery, but all making it into food for the service of man, staff of life to the people.

What a glad some light is thrown on many dark experience by this thought—no life without death; and yet how slow we are, in our own individual experience, to recognise it. We pray to be moulded to the Divine will, to be more used in blessing to others, but we wish it all to be brought about without any personal discomfort, and when the Divine Husbandman answers our prayer and takes sharp measures for detaching us from the earth, we are amazed and discouraged, and think the Lord has forgotten to be gracious! and that these fertilizing, fructifying processes are a series of Divine blunders.

Good John Newton quaintly renders this phase of unbelief in his well-known hymn:—

Lord, why is this? I trembling cried,
Wilt Thou pursue thy worm to death?
'Tis in this way, the Lord replied,
I answer prayer for grace and faith.

The preacher, whose powerful exposition of truth had so moved his hearers that evening, little thought how prophetic of his own case the closing teaching was. Only a fortnight later, and that Sabbath scene of calm peaceful beauty was exchanged for one of Sabbath desecration and violence, accompanied by a ruffianly attack on his person by men debased and made savage by drink. Now, brought back to ministerial work again after long weeks of life nearly extinguished, there can be seen in him what he would be the last to recognise in himself; a mellowing and ripening of the "shock of corn" even by the lightning flash of what men would call sore accident and disaster. Foretastes of Heaven.

That your days may be...as the days of heaven upon the earth.—Deut. xi. 21.

THE law which God gave to Israel aimed at their profit and welfare. Length of days, health of body, temporal prosperity, and supremacy over the nations were to follow in the train of obedience. "Observe to do it," said Moses the mediator, "that it may be well with thee," and again, "The Lord commanded us to do all these statutes...for our good always" (Deut. vi. 3, 24). "Holy and just and good," it contained not a single enactment which did not promise its special blessing to obedience; a reward lay in the observance of every precept, nor could one be deleted from the statute-book without detriment and loss.

For the law was in its measure the expression of the will of God; the will, therefore, of essential Love, for "God is love." The law, therefore, could intend nothing but the good of his people—love was the legislator, love dictated every provision. Hence the arbitrary restrictions and blemishes which so often mar human legislation found no place therein. Moulded and fashioned in conformity with this law, how fair and prosperous had been Israel's destiny! How "had her peace flowed as a river, and her righteousness as the waves of the sea!"

Alas! we know too well, how the human love failed to respond to the claims imposed upon it by the Divine love. The will of God was not "done on earth as in heaven." The blessings of obedience were forfeited, and the curse of a broken law became the nation's bitter heritage. It was in the prevision of this failure that Jehovah uttered his pathetic lament, "O that there were such an heart in them that they might fear Me, and keep all my commandments always, that it might be well with them and with their children for ever" (Deut. v. 29). That "heart," whence alone issues acceptable obedience (Rom. vi. 17), was wanting. The love which is the motive and the power of obedience was lacking; for the law that love imposes, love alone can fulfil, "for love is the fulfilling of the law" (Rom. xiii. 10). The sum of its requirements is love Godward and manward. Law's prescriptions provide love with scope for her beneficent activities. The law defines her sphere and opportunity of service. But the love which law enjoined, it could not engender. The love it commanded, it was powerless to compel. It failed, through no inherent defect, but through the weakness of the flesh to which it addressed its precepts.

The law formulated a claim. The Gospel proclaims a fact. The law demanded human love. The Gospel declares the Divine love. The law said, "Thou shalt love," and the edict was barren of result. The Gospel said, "God so loved," and behold! the genesis of the Divine love in the soul of man was accomplished. For love is ever of procreative virtue and begets her kind. If this love were universally prevalent, in other words, if the Gospel which (by the quickening energy of the blessed Spirit) generates it, were everywhere believed, earth would become a nether heaven. If the love of God "having its seed in itself" were received into the hearts of all without exception, the world would exhibit one vast harvest field of love to rejoice the heart of the Divine Husbandman.

Fancy a world, a continent, a nation, a family where love performs unhindered her proper functions. And what a world, a continent, a nation, a family were this! Heaven alone exhibits such a scene of felicity. There, every volition runs parallel with the will of God. There love's behests are accomplished without remission or reserve. There love reigns supreme, and the perfect will of God is perfectly done.

Happy region, love's own home and fatherland! Dear fellow-believer, through "the grace of God and the gift by grace," we shall soon be there. We shall breathe its atmosphere. The sure hope will have become the begun reality. Jehovah's word and oath are pledged to secure it to the feeblest believer in Christ. Let us exult together in our God and in his Christ, as we quaff deep draughts of the wine of this "strong consolation."

We wait indeed for that supreme felicity, with its exemption from sin, sorrow, and death; and its welcome "weight" of resurrection glory. But we need not wait for the earnest thereof. Even here and now, a partial heaven may be ours, proportioned to our conformity to the Divine will. Inlets of heaven will flood the soul that knows, approves, and obeys, amid how much of confessed imperfection, the will of God.

The "days of heaven upon earth" are yet available to the individual experiences of such. Their heaven is begun. They possess its essential element in that special Divine presence which our Lord promised when He said: "If a man love Me, he will keep my word, and my Father will love him, and I will come unto him, and make our abode (lit. mansion," as in verse 2) with him (John xiv. 23). Such honour God puts upon obedience in a world where it is so passing rare. Thus, the Majesty of Heaven, the "Inhabitant of Eternity," condescends to the lowly dimensions and meagre appointments of the believer's heart and transforms it by his residence into a royal palace! Reader, is this your experience? If not, it may be. It is no impossible ideal. Fulfil the conditions and it becomes yours.

Lives—not a few—transfigured after this fashion, stud the starry firmament of Christian biography. What about our own? Heaven's days are still willing to be domiciled on earth, and with us. Let us entertain the bright visitants. Heaven's borders are yearning to annex and enclose the little area of your life and mine, and make it a very Beulah land. Above all the Divine guests are at the door, and wait for admission. So the guest-chamber be but prepared and ready, let us open and admit them. Thenceforth shall every day in our calendar be "a day of heaven upon earth." C. K.

A Commission on the Liquor Traffic, appointed by the Canadian Government, sent queries to ministers of all denominations. To the question, "From your experience and observation as a clergyman, do you consider the use of any intoxicating liquors, in any shape, as hurtful morally or socially?" no fewer than 2123 replied in the affirmative, the negatives numbering only 272.

Letters from S. Africa.—16.

THE following, which narrates more fully a very promising effort for the good of the "boys" at one of the mines on the Rand to which I have already alluded, may well supply the place of a letter from myself this week. Such schools are needed at every mine. May God raise up other men like the single-eyed and whole-hearted writer.

The manager of the mine mentioned, Mr. Rogers, showed much kindness to a party of friends, of whom I formed one, himself being our guide through the mine. There are not a few earnest Christians in positions of responsibility in the Barnato mines, and probably in others also.

Bloemfontein, April 6.

R. COPE MORGAN.

MISSION NOTES FROM JOHANNESBURG.

The gold-bearing reefs of the Witwatersrand District extend East and West, and are dotted with successive mining companies for a distance of ninety miles or more. All these companies employ ranging from twenty "boys" (as they are called) up to three thousand, according to the extent of the company's operations. These natives come from all parts of South Africa, tempted by the high wages paid, averaging about £3 10s. a month and rations. They come from Inhambane by steamer to Delagoa Bay, and from there on foot or by rail. From Gazaland, Matabeleland, and from beyond the Zambesi they travel on foot in small parties, often taking two months to complete the journey.

Bechuanaland, Basutoland, Natal, and the Cape Colony also contribute to the supply, and large numbers come from the northern districts of the Republic itself.

The natives from the Northern districts of the Transvaal are a mixture of various conquered and scattered tribes, and mostly speak several dialects of other tribes. Those from the East Coast and Delagoa Bay, the Machopis, Shangaans, and Inyambaans, are a very quarrelsome lot, and dearly love a free fight with those of any other tribe. With the added incitement of a little vile liquor, numerous skirmishes take place, and not infrequently lives are lost in these encounters.

Each company provides lodgings for its boys, the quarters being called although differing entirely from the closed and guarded compounds of Kimberley. These compounds are merely rows of sleeping rooms, either of stone, with galvanised iron roof, or entirely of galvanised iron on a wooden framing; the floor is of earth. To escape the attacks of fleas and other lovers of dirty mankind, many of the boys erect staging of packing-case material or any other available timber which they can pick up in out-of-the-way corners. The architectural effect is ludicrously ingenious. Around the walls hang garments of all descriptions, but mostly of an indistinguishable colour, while here and there are suspended tin trunks and milk or beer cases, containing the wardrobes of some of the more genteel of the lodgers. The Company provides and cooks maize-meal for the employes, but to this is added meat, tripe, a sheep, and an occasional fowl by the lodgers themselves. An empty oil-drum, perforated at the sides, like a plumber's, serves for an oven, and coal is taken from the Company's supply. When free from work the volatile spirits are let off in numerous ways, of which the most favoured is accompanied by the din of drums, the rattle of native wood harmonicons, and the shrill whistle of a hundred short reeds held in the dancers' hands. The get-up of the performers is as varied and original as it is indescribable. These dances are kept up with very little intermission all the Lord's

MIMIC WAR-DANCES,

[412]

Day. Outside the doors of the rooms groups of five or ten, as the case may be, sit shouting and squabbling over a game played with a number of stones in three sets of holes. Inside the rooms will be found groups playing at cards, others cutting up and devouring fried meat, liver, or tripe, others mending sundry inexpressible articles of apparel, whilst every now and then one comes across an industrious anklet and bracelet maker squat on the ground, with his steel or copper-wire and horse-hair stock-in-trade, plying his horn implement from morn till eve. Round these lodgings, from room to room,

THE EVANGELIST

(when there is one who will do it) goes, sits down on an empty oil-drum, and tells the blessed story of God's love for a lost world to little groups, ranging from three to thirty souls. In some cases he will have rapt attention and the deepest interest; in others an incessant jabber is kept up, and men go in and out all the time he speaks or prays; not infrequently a drunken native will curse the preacher in his choicest vocabulary of invective, and follow him in and out of several adjoining rooms. Often the remark is heard as the worker enters, "Oh, here comes Jesus! I am off; I am not going to give up drink. I don't want to be a Believer." Some hearers follow interestedly to several of the services, and occasionally pertinent inquiries are made.

Amongst the lodgers are to be found educated natives from mission stations, the larger number of whom have succumbed to the multiplied temptations which surround them, and particularly that of strong drink, the authorities having granted with profuse indiscrimination. These public-houses for natives are mostly conducted by Jews of an exceedingly low moral type, and the liquors sold are of the vilest and most vitriolic nature, frequently killing the drinker within a short time.

Among this range of mining properties, it is estimated that some seventy thousand natives are constantly employed. With the exception of spasmodic visits from native teachers, and occasional visits from stray workers, scarcely anything is being done to preach the Gospel to this perishing multitude, of whom it has been aptly (but oh, so sadly) said—

"THEY COME TO US SAVAGES AND GO BACK DEVILS."

In Johannesburg and its environs, the various churches mostly have adjunct native schools, but these are principally attended by the house servants and store boys, who can dress up in style, and only a very small percentage of the mine boys go near them. The Gospel must be taken into their quarters, and at their very doors a counter-attraction to the canteen must be provided. A great thirst for education on the part of most of the younger natives of most of the tribes provides a very good fulcrum for the lever; and when the Bible is the primer for every student, and prayer and hymnology the accompaniment of every lesson, there is abundant ground for faith and hope.

The writer, to whom the crying need and the grand open door formed an irresistible call, has taken up the joyous privilege of trying to supply the need, as far as the funds with which the Master has entrusted him will admit, and so long as he grants the needed strength and opportunity.

HIS FIRST SCHOOL

has been erected in the immediate vicinity of the compound of the City and Suburban Gold Mining and Estate Company, Limited, only a few yards from the doors of the natives, the Company having in the most generous and kindly manner granted the use of a site for the school, and another for the cottage of the superintendent. It is proposed (God willing) to open with a magic lantern entertainment on March 27, to commence Divine services on the following Lord's Day, and school on the day and night following, to meet the needs of both day and night shifts of labourers. It is hoped to have two native teacher-evangelists and a white superintendent in charge of each school, and to keep up the room-to-room visitation, as well as the public services and school. Two consecrated white brethren have already volunteered for service in this large field, one of them giving up a salary of three hundred a year for the "reproach of Christ," or its modern equivalent,

A "NIGGER-SPOILER."

Free board and lodging and a small salary can be promised to Spirit-baptized workers who are prepared to devote their lives to this glorious work. Romance, however, there is none. No great chiefs or whole tribes to turn to Christ! No Robinson-Crusoe life in the wilds! No glowing accounts of privations and hair-breadth escapes for missionary periodicals! But a patient, prosaic, plodding work of breaking up fallow ground and planting good seed, which in very many instances will be carried away into the wilds before it has time to take root or spring up. There are real devils to fight, and an indifferent professing Christianity, with its wet blanket and stumbling-blocks to combat; but there is no finer seed-bed, and no grander opening for missionary activity in South Africa. If the Lord prompts any dear child of his to volunteer for this work, Mr. MORGAN will furnish the writer's address, so that communication may be established. No unmarried ladies are at present wanted, but some married men without large families, and single men, may be required shortly. A vigorous total prohibition crusade is being waged, and as the Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church is also actively busy with the drink question, and has for one of its pleas we are very hopeful. When the Volksraad meets in the month of May, strongly worded and influentially signed petitions will be presented by specially chosen deputations.

TOTAL PROHIBITION OF SALE OF INTOXICANTS TO NATIVES,

The prayers of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN are specially sought that the blessing of the Most High may attend this battle with the forces of darkness. In this mine alone no less than twenty per cent. of the natives are daily incapacitated for work through the effects of intoxicating drink.

Rest in Jesus.

O THE bliss of doing nothing
But his will!
Ever on the Spirit falling—
"Peace—be still."
Quit of earthly noise and worry,
Rest to greet;
Like another Mary, sitting
At his feet.
Rich the hour of meditation
On his word;
Sweet the moments of communion
With the Lord.
In his loving presence only,
Naught to do,
But to prove deep peace of spirit,
Sweetly true.
Here the links which bind to folly,
All are riven;
Here the Holy Spirit's unction
Breathes of heaven.
O the joy of doing nothing
But his will!
O the bliss of ever hearing
"Peace—be still."

ALBERT MIDLANE.

Stranger's Rest.—The monthly workers' meeting was presided over last Friday by Mr. Matthews, of High Barnet. Mr. Isaac told that in the past week there had been manifest blessing. Pastor Fuller Gooch gave a helpful address, based on Col. iii. 1-4. Miss Ferriman, recently returned from China, gave a most interesting account of work ther Affairs in Madagascar.

IN a private letter, Rev. J. Peill, of the London Missionary Society, Ambohimanga, says:—

The new Resident-General, M. Laroche, is a Protestant, as is also his wife, we hear. She comes out in May. He bids fair to be a useful man, and we hope his appointment shows that the French Government means to observe strictly its treaty engagements with Great Britain. He assured one of our members who called on him on his arrival that ere long a proclamation would be issued assuring full religious liberty to all. He was most gracious and friendly.

The French language is now greatly run on by all the younger Malagasy. Great numbers go to the priests in Antananarivo to learn it. If they go to mass they are taught free, but if not they pay 2s. each per month.

My wife teaches French to the natives seven times a week, in three different classes. The lack of French Gospel literature is a hindrance, and we could use and distribute almost any number of French tracts, Gospels, and Scripture texts. The results are telling the country people that Romanism is the religion of the French, and they must conform to it or it will be the worse for them (!). They have succeeded in thus frightening many of the poor ignorant villagers into a profession of the Frenchmen's religion.

It is greatly to be desired that the French Protestants will bestir themselves at once and send out one or more of their missionaries to help at this crisis. They would receive a very hearty welcome from all the members of our Mission. The people are gradually settling down once more, congregations and schools increasing in numbers again.

I enclose copy of a letter written by two teachers to a Sunday-school at Kendal, telling of their experiences during the war and after. I thought it might interest your readers.

[TRANSLATION.]

This is indeed a furnace of affliction. From the very beginning of the war there were some who eviled Christianity. "Since the praying began," said they, "there have always been wars going on." "Jesus is an ancestor of the white man," said others. "Jehovah is an old English King," said some. "Let no one pray any more to those two, but only to God the Creator."

When word came that Marovoay was taken, and the chapel there burnt, many more people went back. When the war came nearer to Antananarivo, still more turned their backs on God. Yet they had nothing to flee to except idols. A story was put in circulation that the Queen and Prime Minister had denounced the praying. All the dross and false holding melted away, and it was seen to be much more abundant than we had even supposed. The churches were shut up. Some of the native pastors were reviled. The missionaries, evangelists, and teachers were evil spoken of, and most of the people stopped their ears from hearing the Gospel. They were, alas, like those of whom Isaiah wrote, "They have stopped up their ears, and their eyes have they closed." Even some of the native pastors and preachers were of the number. When the French were close to Ambohimanga I was here, and, alas, what a grievous sight I beheld. Several pastors and local preachers were there, but could no longer be known as such, for they had all turned into idolaters. Some had idol charms tied round their necks; others had them rubbed on their bodies; others, idol priests beside them to protect them. Even now I cannot think of that day without tears, for it seems as if God would show my weakness and unworthiness in that there seems to have been no fruit of all my labours in this town and neighbourhood. At the present time God is showing me what a weak creature I am, and how useless. Day of discouragement; day of distress; dark of darkness and deadness. Much of the idolatry which appeared that day has lasted ever since.

Some of the churches are closed. In others are very few worshippers; and with schools it is much the same. Our schools here in Ambohimanga are reduced to less than half their numbers, viz., forty boys and thirty girls. The French did not attach Ambohimanga although they were drawn up in line of attack. I don't know why that was; but I think that God forbade them to attack, lest the people should be destroyed in the midst of their sin and folly. Those who trusted to their idols, however, say, "We prevented them from attacking by means of our idols, and so they could not attack." But, although there was no attack by the French, the people themselves became enemies, pillaging in all directions, even to the contents of the Queen's Palace. All my store of rice-corn was taken, besides other property, Testaments and some other books torn to pieces, and some thrown out of doors.

One day an old man met me in the street and said: "Let's have no more of that praying, lad, it's done too much harm already." Another time while I was preaching in a certain church, some people called out, "Stop his mouth—he brings ill-luck." And even now few will listen to the Gospel.

One sixth of Imerina is in open revolt against the French now, and those who are most relentlessly persecuted are the evangelists and teachers, and, alas, the missionaries too, for Mr. Johnson and his wife and child they have brutally murdered.

Foreigners may now enter the town of Ambohimanga, which before was closed to them. On Sunday, Dec. 8, and Friday, Dec. 14, Mrs. Peill and Mr. Peill first came up into the town. Previously to this, however, many French with horses and mules had been up. Up here in the town now an evening service is being commenced in the boys' school-room. Her Majesty Queen Ranavalona III. appears to be a real Christian. On the Sunday, the day before the French entry into Antananarivo, all the churches were closed, but the Queen had the palace church opened and herself went there to worship. And on the Monday, during the severe fighting, she called her followers aside to prayer. She still continues to be a true friend of Christianity and herself clings earnestly to God.

My dear friend, this letter is written at a time when all is sorrowful and dark, and you see that alone is written in it. We are blackened with the smoke and we are melted in the fire. We believe, however, that those who have fallen away were never truly the Lord's, and our eyes have been holden that we did not see this long ago. Alas, the covering of hypocrisy was so thick that until it was removed by force the true condition of things could not be seen. Oh, friends, lift up your prayers for us more than ever, for our land is full of folly and ignorance!

True though this be, thank God for those who still cleave to Christ, for they hold fast by him through all. Most of the severe fighting with the French was on Sunday, and the people heard that the French priest said: "Let their God save them," and so the hearts of many grew cold.

We stayed near the forest for about a fortnight, and, alas, we saw that Madagascar is still a heathen land, for only about one in twenty of all the church members in Imerina can be considered Christians, even if there are any Christians at all in some of the churches. They have been clever at hiding their idolatry, but now it is clearly revealed. There are six chapels not far from where we were staying, but no one worshipped in or even opened any one of them, and when we urged them to come and worship, they answered plainly: "There will be no more praying now." We opened one chapel, but nearly all who came to it were strangers from a distance, Christians who had fled eastward like ourselves. So we preached, urging to trust in God, each Sunday, until our return home, but the people of the place set up their idols, put them on long poles, and shouted and danced round them. They killed goats, divided the meat, and those who ate of that meat, they said, would be untouched by the enemy. (There is a play on the word for goat. Osy is goat, osa is weak; so those who ate of the osy, their enemies would be osa or weak to injure them.) The owner of the house we occupied went to the ceremony, and brought some goat's meat home, but he was ashamed to let us see him cook it, so it went bad, and had to be thrown away. The people all worked on Sunday the same as on any other day.

We have taken up the work again, but it is even more difficult than in the dark days (days of persecution), for in those days, dark as it was, missionaries were not murdered, they were only sent out of the country; but now, alas, they have murdered Mr. Johnson and his wife and child, and would have murdered other missionaries, if they had not got away in time; and joining with their murderers were some of their own scholars, who also took their share in plundering their goods, burning their house, and wrecking many chapels in the district.

We have visited several of the village churches connected with Ambohimanga lately and talked with the people in their houses too. Where there were 100 people in a congregation before, there are from five to twenty now, and some of the chapels are not opened at all for worship. We are busily at work now, not only in the churches, but visiting the people, too, trying to lead them back again to God.

On December 8 we preached about the folly of idolatry, and exposed the nothingness of idols, here at Ambohimanga in one of the churches. That night, a big dead striped cat (equivalent to the witches' black cat of the old fairy tales) was brought and laid down at our door with the intention of killing us, because we had said, "The idols are useless, and can effect nothing at all. If you think they can try them on us." Of course no harm came to us at all, nor to our wives or children, so on December 15 again we exposed the nothingness of idols.

The darkness of many is pitiable and laughable even. They say: "The praying is not true, for the French live in and defile some of the churches in and around Antananarivo, and yet Europeans introduce the praying among us." Some say: "The praying is all a cheat. We Malagasy are fools, and it was brought among us as a means of getting our country from us, for does not their hymn even say, 'There is a happy land'—that is our land. 'Land that pilgrims love,' that is Madagascar; for the foreigners have long desired to secure it. 'Tis for us still here on earth,' and lo they have got it now." That shows how dark their hearts are. They change the meaning of hymns, and many do not like to hear them read in church any more, for they say, "They have bewitched us" (with those hymns).

God willing we mean to press forward more zealously than ever in the Lord's work, and we beg you to pray for us more earnestly too, that the Lord may be with us, for there is much to hinder our work; and the Romish priests are beginning already to threaten some of the workers. Therefore we beseech you to do all you can to help us in advancing the kingdom of God more earnestly, specially in the villages. This is our rainy season, and there is much rain, but may God help us nevertheless not to be kept back by distances and flooded streams from spreading the kingdom of Christ.

We send greeting and farewell, praying the Lord to be with you and us.—Your friends,

RAMITIARAY and RANTOANINA.

Religious Freedom in Russia.—A Daily News telegram from Rome says: "From a trustworthy Russian authority information comes to the effect that, on the occasion of his coronation at Moscow, the Czar will issue a ukase proclaiming liberty of conscience throughout his dominions. At the same time it is stated that the Holy Synod, headed by M. Pobiedonostzeff, is passionately opposing the project, and making every effort to bring it to naught."

"THAT THE LORD MAY CONTINUE HIS WORD."—
1 Kings ii. 4.

HOW strongly David held to God's promise! It was deeply graven in his soul. How could he forget the word which guaranteed the succession of his race upon the throne of Israel. At the same time he distinctly recognised that the fulfilment was conditional. There was an if in it. It was only in so far as his children took heed to walk before God in truth that God was bound to place them on the throne of Israel; therefore he urged Solomon to keep the charge of the Lord, that the Lord might continue his word. We also must obey the threefold condition if we would enjoy a continuance of God's helpful care.

1. Be thou strong.—The strength which is in Jesus Christ waits to make us strong. In the Lion of the tribe of Judah there is the boldness which will not swerve in the face of the foe. Timid women and little children in the days of persecution have waxed valiant in the fight, and have not flinched from death, because Jesus was beside them. Let us seek to be strengthened with all might by his Spirit in the inner man.

2. Keep the charge of the Lord thy God.—He has committed to our care his holy Gospel. Let us watch it until we see it weighed out in the temple as in the days of Ezra (Ez. viii. 33).

3. Keep his statutes and commandments.—We must obey with greater precision the one new law of love, which includes all the rest. Acting thus, we shall put ourselves in the way of enjoying a continuance of that favour which God has promised.

MONDAY, May 11.

"I HAVE ALSO GIVEN THEE THAT WHICH THOU HAST NOT ASKED."—1 Kings iii. 13.

The understanding heart was Solomon's supreme request, and it was given him before the morning light had broken over Jerusalem. But God did exceeding abundantly beyond what he asked or thought. Riches and honour, victory and long life were thrown in as part of the Divine gift, as paper and string are given by the tradesmen with the goods we purchase. It seems as though our Lord's words were anticipated, "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

Put first things first.—One of the most important lessons of life is to discern the relative value of the objects within our reach. The child will take the handful of glass beads, and leave the heap of diamonds in the rough. It is the terrible mistake of men that, perplexed by earth's cross-lights, they put evil for good and good for evil, they make earth rather than heaven their centre, time rather than eternity their measurement.

Seek God and all things in Him.—Things without God cannot satisfy the craving of the soul. Not to know God, and to be known by Him is to possess all things. All things are ours when we are Christ's, because in Him we are God's.

Be more careful of what you are than what you have.—A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things that he possesseth, but in his purity, truth, tenderness, and the properties of his soul.

"LARGENESS OF HEART."—1 Kings iv. 29.

We must all admit that our soul is too narrow. It holds too little, knows too little, is deficient in will-power, and, above all, in capacity of love, and when we are called to run in the way of God's commandments we break down in despair, and cry, "If I am to be a runner, Thou must first enlarge my heart."

How little we know of the experience which Madame Guyon describes when she says: "This vastness or enlargedness, which is not bounded by anything, increases every day; so that my soul in partaking of the qualities of her spouse seems also to partake of his immensity."

"There is," says one of the Puritans, "a straitness, slavery, and narrowness in all sin; sin crumples up our souls: which, if they were freely spread abroad, would be as large and wide as the whole universe. No man is truly free, but he that hath his will enlarged to the extent of God's will, by loving whatsoever God loves, and nothing else. He enjoys boundless liberty, and a boundless sweetness."

Thomas à Kempis says, finally: "He who desires glory in things outside of God, or to take pleasure in some private good, shall many ways be encumbered and straitened, but if heavenly grace enter in, and true charity, there will be no envy, neither narrowness of heart, neither will self love busy itself, for divine charity overcometh all things, and enlargeth all the powers of the soul." Give unto us, O God, this largeness of heart, even as the sand that is on the sea-shore.

WEDNESDAY, May 13.

"NOW THE LORD MY GOD HATH GIVEN ME REST ON EVERY SIDE."—1 Kings v. 4.

God is the Rest Giver. When He surrounds us on every side with his protecting care, so that our life resembles one of the cities of the Netherlands in the great war—inaccessible to the foe because surrounded by the waters of the sea, admitted through the sluice—then neither adversary nor evil occurrent can break in, and we are kept in perfect peace, our minds being stayed on God.

Hidden in the hollow of his blessed hand,
Never foe can enter, never traitor stand.

Have you learnt the rest which comes by putting God round about you on every side, like the light which burns brightly on a windy night because surrounded by its four panes of clear glass? Ah! what a contrast between the third and fourth verse: Wars on every side; Rest on every side. And yet the two are compatible, because the wars expend themselves on God, as the waves on the shingle, and there are far reaches of rest within like orchards and meadows and pasture-lands beyond the reach of the devastating water.

Out of such rest should come the best work. We are not surprised to find Solomon announcing his purpose to build a house unto the name of the Lord. Mary, who sat at the feet of Jesus, anointed Him. Out of quiet hearts arise the greatest resolves, just as from the seclusion of country hamlets have come the greatest warriors, statesmen, and patriots. Leave God to care for your interests, and give your soul time to understand his plans.

THURSDAY, May 14.

"THE HOUSE WHEN IT WAS IN BUILDING WAS BUILT OF STONE MADE READY BEFORE IT WAS BROUGHT THITHER, SO THAT THERE WAS NEITHER HAMMER, NOR AXE, NOR ANY TOOL OF IRON HEARD IN THE HOUSE WHILE IT WAS IN BUILDING."—1 Kings vi. 7.

In absolute silence, like the growth of a palm in the desert, that noble building arose in the symmetry of its fair proportions. But there was plenty of quarrying and hammering and chiselling before the materials were brought to the site.

The absolute silence with which the Temple rose is a meet emblem of the progress of the Church, from its foundations laid in the Apostolate towards the top stone, which before very long will be laid upon the completed structure. Amid the rise and fall of dynasties and empires, the Church is being built. Soul after soul, as so many added bricks, is being quietly placed upon the walls. Some day the world will be amazed when it sees the New Jerusalem descend out of God from heaven. The mightiest works of God are the fruit of silence.

You and I are now in the quarry, hewn, chipped, chiselled; or we are in the saw-pit, being sawn, planed, pierced by nails. Be of good cheer. It is not long, and the preparatory work will be over, and we shall become part of the eternal structure. Into heaven there can enter neither hammer, nor axe, nor any tool of iron. The discipline will be complete. The trial will have done its work. Sorrow and crying will flee away. Then shall the city of God shine forth in completed beauty, her walls Salvation and her gates Praise.

FRIDAY, May 15.

"IN THE PLAIN OF JORDAN DID THE KING CAST THEM."—
1 Kings vii. 46.

The Apostle tells us to obey from the heart that mould or form of doctrine to which we were delivered (Rom. vi. 17). What a mould is to the metal which is wrought into various forms of utensils, that the form of sound doctrine is to believers who desire to resemble Christ. When our hearts, melted in contrition and penitence, are poured into the teaching of the Apostles, to ponder it in memory, and to carry it out in life, they are, so to speak, cast into the pattern of Jesus Christ, which they wear for evermore. Thus we are conformed to the image of his Son.

We differ as widely as the vessels named here. Some are lavers, and some bases; some shovels, and some basons. It matters little what shape we bear so long as we are cleansed and meet for the Master's use. Each vessel in Solomon's temple filled its own niche. The machinery of the whole would have been hindered if one had been missing. Be content with the shape which the Great Designer hath intended for thee. Yield to it. Dare to pour into the dark passages of the mould. Do not ask the intention of this or that. Obey from the heart, otherwise thou mayest have to be broken up, and put back again into the furnace to go through the process once more. This is the Plain of the Jordan for us, the place of death, but soon we shall be remitted to the Palace and Temple of God.

SATURDAY, May 16.

"THAT HE MAINTAIN THE CAUSE OF HIS SERVANT, AS EVERY DAY SHALL REQUIRE" (margin, "the thing of a day in its day.")—1 Kings viii. 59. R.V.

What rest would come into our lives, if we really believed that God maintained the cause of his servants! Men hate you, and say unkind or untrue things about you; on your part, though you are quite prepared to admit that you may have made mistakes, yet you know that your motives are sincere, and that your hands are clean—be of good courage then, God will maintain your cause, as every day may require.

Or, you are beset by strong competition, and, in order to hold your own, you may be tempted to do what is not perfectly the best—to spice your teaching with a little heterodoxy, to puff your wares with misleading titles, to adulterate your goods. But there is no need to do this; so long as you are faithfully serving God, He will maintain your cause, as every day may require.

Or, you are tempted almost beyond endurance, and think that you must yield. The seductions are so insidious, the pitfalls so carefully concealed, the charm of evil so subtle. But, if you would only look away to God, you would find Him a very present help to maintain your cause. Oh trust Him, for none of them that do so can be desolate. Daily strength for daily need; daily manna for daily hunger; daily maintenance for daily temptation. These are assured.

Pendleton.—The thirty-third anniversary of the John-street Hall Ragged School and Mission was held a few days ago, and largely attended. The Mayor of Salford occupied the chair. Addresses were given by Revs. Canon Hicks, T. Edleston, and T. Mackay, Messrs. Thomas Johnson, Muir, W. Taylor, and Gaskell. Mr. Sugden's report showed that last year the average attendance of scholars on Sundays was 1037, other nights 580; of adults at Bible-classes, women's and Gospel temperance meetings, etc., there had been an aggregate of nearly 16,000, visits to cottages 1100, and 76 poor relieved. There had been put in circulation 182,000 tracts, 121,300 magazines, and nearly 400 Scriptures and books, and £239 10s. 4d. had been received at the penny bank.

Bible Garments.—I.

THE "Searcher" this week is all about clothes, and considering how much time and thought are given to dress, it is wise for us to see what is said about it in our guide-book, the Bible. There are many lessons to be learnt from the various circumstances under which different garments are mentioned in the Book of God.

Let us think, this week, of those in the Old Testament. For instance, there is the gay coat of Jacob's favourite son, which suggests a grave warning against the evils of jealousy. "Jealousy is cruel as the grave," and so poor Joseph found it to be. Think of ten big brothers all made angry and vindictive because of one little coat? It is not likely that the coat would have been of the least use to either of the ten, and yet they grudged to see their brother arrayed in it. Beware of the first stirrings of an envious spirit. It may cost you, as it cost Joseph's brothers, many a long year of vain anguish.

The history of Achan's temptation and Achan's fall warns us against disobedience, and points the solemn moral, "Be sure your sin will find you out."

The wily Gibeonites teach us a lesson of a different kind. We see, in them, the cunning which, even when it seems for a time to succeed, is sure to bring disgrace at last. Every old shoe upon the feet of these crafty Gibeonites was, in the sight of God, a lie, for it was an acted lie. We may learn, too, not to judge of persons by their clothes. Even Joshua and the elders of Israel were deceived when they did this, and it is quite certain that we also shall make mistakes if we make friends with people because of their dress. It is "the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit" which should attract us, and not flowers or feathers, when we are choosing our friends.

Passing over many others of the garments mentioned in the Old Testament—the lessons connected with which you may like to search out for yourselves—I want to say a word or two about some notable garments in the Book of Daniel.

They are not to be found in the British Museum, but perhaps even in that interesting place there is nothing more wonderful to think of than are the "coats," "hosen," and "hats," which were cast, with their fearless wearers, into the midst of the burning, fiery furnace; and which yet came out again without even the smell of fire upon them.

You know how readily a garment is set on fire. If an accident happens, it is not the child's hand or foot which is first ablaze, but the dress or pinafore. And when not actually burnt, yet how quickly your clothes are scorched if you stand too near the fire. God not only cared for the lives of his faithful servants, but He would not suffer even their clothes to be hurt by the devouring flames. His promise, "Neither shall the flame kindle upon thee," was literally fulfilled to Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego.

Shall we not learn anew the lesson of trust in Him who has all power in heaven and on earth, and of whom King Nebuchadnezzar truly said, "There is no other God that can deliver after this sort?"

It is true that God has not always interposed to save the lives and property of his persecuted people. We know that He has let many of them, in other ages, have the honour of winning the martyr's crown; but He is always "able to deliver," and we may be absolutely certain that in the blessed pathway of his will, not even a hair of our heads can be singed, nor a thread of our clothing injured without his permission.

I hope that none of my young readers will ever be put to such a test as that of which we have been thinking; but the very youngest is not too young to learn how safe and how sweet a thing it is to have God for our helper. "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

Winds and waves his will obey,
Messengers of his are they;
And if nothing else can end it,
But a miracle, He'll send it.

These words of a very old writer are found true, quite apart from fiery furnaces, and by young and old alike.

An Act of Heroism.

I DARE SAY many of you will have heard or read of a sad incident which took place recently at Buluwayo, in South Africa. During a battle with the Matabele warriors an English soldier was wounded, and a comrade, seeing his helpless condition, gave him his own horse in order that he might ride to a place of safety. But the noble fellow by doing so placed himself in grave peril, and almost immediately fell dead under a shower of the enemy's spears, or assegais.

After reading this you will, I know, feel very deep sympathy with one of my "nieces," who wrote me the following letter, dated April 29:—

DEAR UNCLE TOM.—I am very sorry to tell you my dear brother, Frank William Baxter, was killed last Wednesday at Buluwayo. He gave his horse to a wounded comrade, and he himself was assailed. It was a noble death, and a glorious end, but we are all in deep sorrow for his loss. We had a letter from him only last Saturday.—Your affectionate niece, ANNIE BAXTER.

It is curious that one of the texts you had to look up in last week's Bible Searcher was, "Bear ye one another's burdens; and so fulfil the law of Christ" (Gal. vi. 2). This is just what I should like you to do, to help bear the burden of those who are so sorrowful at the loss of their loved one.

How can you do it? Well, you cannot all write to Annie and say so, but I am sure your hearts will feel very deep sympathy with her; and you can pray for her and her relatives that God may comfort them in their sad trial.

Personal Paragraphs.

ARTHUR COUCH.—Thank you for the text you sent. GERTRUDE DOOLAN.—You will find your question answered in last week's CHRISTIAN. LILLIAN GRANT.—I am sorry that your first attempt should have been unsuccessful. Try again. EVELYN MOIR and EVA SAWDAY.—I have had your names corrected. FRANK WOOD.—A postcard is sufficient. MABEL MCLEAN.—I am sorry you have not been well, but hope you are better now. LOUISA BAUGH.—You can serve God as well in doing your duty to others, as in answering questions. DAVID PENMAN.—The next prize competition will be June 25. WALTER THOMSON and T. W. HOLLINGTON.—A star indicates neatness and general excellence. ELSIE RUTTER.—Please do not cross your writing. NELLIE FARRELL.—All the questions must be correctly answered to secure mention in the weekly list. E. B. BLACK.—You do very well for your age; the older you grow the better you will do it. NETTIE BLACK.—I wish you many happy returns. ARTHUR PROCKERSGILL.—I am sorry you are not able to do the "Bible Searcher" at school. Can you not have THE CHRISTIAN sent to you there? KATE IRELAND.—I hope your arm will soon be well.

ANNIE PAISLEY writes:—"I always look forward to Thursday morning for THE CHRISTIAN. It comes by the Wednesday night boat, so we do not receive it until Thursday. I want to tell you about Jersey; it is such a lovely place. We go out and gather snowdrops, violets, primroses, forget-me-nots, and other flowers. The apples were very plentiful last year, and promise to be the same this year. When out in the country, I often think of the poor little children who have never seen the green fields. How they would enjoy to be here, as the fields are white with daisies, but no buttercups grow here. There is a small yellow flower, very like a buttercup; it is called a Jersey daisy."

Children's Holidays.—For some years the council of the Sunday School Union has sent away large numbers of children to cottages throughout the country, and having realised the need of a Home under their own control, where the children could be cared for more thoroughly, Acton Lodge, Clacton-on-Sea, was opened in July, 1894, the house having been hired for two years. During the past year 1,797 children have been sent away for a fortnight's holiday, of which number 532 were sent to Clacton. In January, 1894, "Glenbank, the House Beautiful," Bournemouth, was opened as a Children's Convalescent Home, and last year 145 children were received. Nearly 3,000 teachers have visited the Teachers' Home of Rest, at Hastings, since its commencement in 1887, and recently, through the kindness of Mrs. Kennedy, the future of the Home has been secured.

King David and His Psalms.

By REV. J. STORJOHANN, CHRISTANIA.

SONGS OF THANKSGIVING FOR THE NEW HARVEST.

(Concluded.)

THE whole of this wonderful poem reeks, as it were, with the blood shed in Gibeah for Saul's guilt; but at the same time it is redolent, as of new-mown hay, and is brimming over with the jubiliations of victory and harvest. (2 Sam. xxi.)

PSALM LXV.

For the Chief Musician. A Psalm, a Song of David.

PART I.

1.

1. Unto Thee, Elohim, silence is praise in Zion,
And unto Thee let vows be performed.
2. Thou that hearest prayer, unto Thee shall all flesh come.
3. Are cases of guilt too hard for me to decide—
Our transgressions: Thou, Thou atonest them.
4. Blessed is he whom Thou chooseth, and receivest to dwell in thy courts.
Satisfied shall we be with the pleasures of thy house, thy holy temple.

2.

5. By terrible acts of righteousness dost Thou answer us, God of our salvation, Confidence of all ends of the earth and regions afar off.
6. Girded with might, He establishes mountains by his force,
7. He stilleth the roaring of the seas,
The roaring of their waves, and the tumult of the peoples,
8. So that they who dwell in distant places are afraid of thy tokens.
The outgoings of morning and evening Thou makest to rejoice.

PART II.

1.

9. Thou hast visited the land and watered it;
Greatly Thou didst enrich it.
The river of God is full of water—
Thou providest them corn, for so preparest Thou the earth.
10. Drenching her furrows, settling her ridges,
Thou makest her soft with showers;
The springing thereof Thou didst bless.

2.

11. Thou hast crowned the year of thy goodness,
And thy paths drop fatness.
12. The pastures of the wilderness do drop,
And the hills are girded with joy.
13. The meadows are clothed with flocks,
And the valleys are covered with corn;
They shout for joy—yea, they sing.

PART I.—The laudation on Zion is not, as usual, expressed in audible rejoicings, but in silent praise, and in vows to be performed. All flesh must flee unto Him who hears prayer. Certain causes which were too hard for the king to decide, and which were common guilt, God has atoned. How blessed to be one of his chosen (Deut. xvii. 15), and in close communion to dwell (Num. xvi. 5) in his courts, there to enjoy, according to the great promise, all the good things which his house and his holy temple afford.

The mystical words of the first line of the psalm give a sufficient impression of what is referred to. All are bowed in silence to pay vows to the God who, in such an impressive manner, has atoned the national sin, through those who fell victims to the terrible misdeeds—misdeeds which even after such a long lapse of time had to come to light, for which the whole nation had been obliged to suffer, and which the king could not remedy. The people are all the more filled with thankfulness for their protection, and at being enabled to approach the holy, jealous God, and enjoy his favours in full measure.

But the outside world has also been calmed (verse 7, comp. also Ps. lxxvi. 8). The God of salvation has answered his people in terrible deeds, testimonies of his justice. By them He has become the "confidence" of all the ends of the earth, and of them that are afar off on the sea. He has shown Himself to be the One who, girded with might, setteth fast the mountains with his strength, and stilleth the roaring of the sea as He stilleth the noisy tumult of the peoples. Those that dwell in the uttermost parts of the earth must be alarmed by these tokens, while the holy land rings with rejoicings from end to end.

PART II.—God has answered the prayer of the country with overflowing abundance—so that his river became full of water. He it was who so effectually provided the harvest. He it was who watered so abundantly the parched furrows, softened with his showers the sun-hardened earth, and blessed the crops thereof. The good year which God has given presents a charming landscape; the foot-marks of the Lord are to be seen everywhere—in the wilderness and on the hills, in the flocks and pastures and wheatfields of the valleys, in songs of exultation. The silence on Zion regarding God's judgments contrasts beautifully with the songs of rejoicing over the prosperous year which God has vouchsafed the country.

According to David's usual graceful method, we find placed as a companion to Ps. lxxv., a short psalm (lxxvii) intended to convey an answer to it. The country has yielded her increase (7); David blesses the people in the words of the Aaronic benediction (1), with the object of proclaiming God's way and saving health, to the whole earth that by so doing the nations may know (2), praise (3), and with joy (4) fear Him (7).

PSALM LXVII.

For the Chief Musician, on stringed instruments. A Psalm, a Song.

1.

1. Elohim be merciful unto us, and bless us,
And cause his face to shine upon us. Selah.
2. That thy way may be known upon earth
Thy saving health among all nations.
3. Let the peoples give thanks unto thee, O God,
Let all the peoples praise thee.

2.

4. The nations shall be glad and sing for joy,
For thou wilt judge the people in equity,
5. And the nations upon earth
Thou wilt govern them. Selah.
6. Let the peoples give thanks unto thee, O God,
Let all the peoples praise thee.

3.

7. The earth has yielded her increase,
God, our own God, shall bless us,
God shall bless us,
And all the ends of the earth shall fear Him.

This Psalm connects the blessing of the well-garnered harvest with the fact that God has taken the judgment and government of the nations into his own hands. Where, otherwise, should this have happened but at the final victory by which was assured David's dominion over the world? Israel and the heathen are now so bound up together that the token of God's blessing on Israel, in the shape of the abundant harvest, also includes the true welfare of all the nations, if they will understand and thank God for that his face thus shines on Israel.

The Psalm, then, presents the blessing of the harvest in a light both redemptive and historical. As certain as is the blessing from the harvest (6) so certain is blessing through the salvation of God and the government of the nations (7). A Selah follows the priestly benediction of Israel (1), and the same occurs after the second chief part of the psalm; i.e., the proclamation of God's equitable, theocratic government of the nations (4, 5). The blessing of the harvest is in these psalms placed in the same relationship as the idolatry censured in Psalms xcvi. and xcvi.

Psalm lxxvii. is without a heading; a fact previously mentioned in connection with Psalm lxxvi. As, however, they belong to a collection of twenty-two Psalms, all of which, with the exception of Psalm lxxii., are, according to the conclusion of Book II. (Psalm lxxii. 20) of Davidic origin, the fact that these two are without headings ought not to throw any doubt on their authorship. They should be recognised thereby as belonging to one group. Psalm lxxv., as the most comprehensive, is placed first, and should be classed together with Psalm lxxvi. and lxxvii., of which the one shows to the heathen world the great importance of the victory, and the other the significance of the new harvest.

The Street Cries of Damascus.

WHAT a contrast to those of London! How one realises, walking through this beautiful, orchard-girt city, one of the oldest in the world, all that one has read about it in the Book of books! Yet, in spite of its beauty of situation (Eastern writers have called it "The handful of gold in a goblet of emerald"), it is a dirty, wholly unclear city. The prowling, howling dogs are its only scavengers, and notwithstanding its thirty miles of gardens—the scents of countless peach and apricot trees when in bloom—one grows sad in Damascus, for of all the 150,000 inhabitants, so few know our Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ.

And yet the Western traveller finds endless interest in the bazaars, or streets of open shops, where the merchant sits cross-legged among his wares, nearly always smoking his beloved hookah. The native silversmith weighs his precious stores before he sells them to the over-charged Westerner, while the latter, looking over the piles of merchandise, is attracted by the cries of men passing up and down, and calling out their goods.

One comes along—he carries sherbet and sweets, and he says: "Buy of me! Ah, buy, buy, buy. Yes, buy of me!"

Another pushes him aside, and thrusts forward his water-skin:—"Ho! ye thirsty ones, come, buy of me, and drink."

A custom termed "Sebil" causes another man to cry:—"Lo, the distribution! Lo, the distribution!"

The crowd presses round this man, for there is nothing to pay. He is dispensing a sort of lemonade, some rich man having purchased of him his stock of this cool drink, which is to be given to all the thirsty ones who shall ask for it. And walking up and down these streets in and out among these crowds, passing unseen through the highways of the earth, is One who, with a voice of sweetest invitation, cries: "Ho! every one that thirsteth! Buy, buy. I counsel thee to buy of Me!" Who is this, and what does He offer? This is the Lord Jesus, and He offers "without money, and without price" (Isa. lv. 1) to feed the hungry, to give drink to the thirsty, and clothing to the naked (Rev. iii. 18). "I counsel thee to buy of Me gold, white raiment, and eyesalve." Gold, "the unsearchable riches of Christ," "the exceeding riches of his grace," which will keep you from yielding to sin, moment by moment. Raiment, new clothing, a robe of righteousness, a new heart. And eyesalve, the anointing of God's Holy Spirit, which will enable you to say, "Whereas I was blind, now I see." See where He leads, where He would have you go, what He would have you do, when and how to do it; yes, eyesalve, that you may "see Jesus," and the needs of those who know Him not. "Ho! every one that thirsteth, I counsel thee to buy of Me."

I heard the voice of Jesus say,
"Behold, I freely give
The living water; thirsty one,
Stoop down, and drink, and live."
I came to Jesus, and I drank
Of that life-giving stream;
My thirst was quenched—my soul revived,
And now I live in Him.

Co-operative Holidays are being arranged under the auspices of the National Home Reading Union. Visits to Whitby, Keswick, Helensburgh, and Edinburgh are included in the programme, all particulars of which may be had from the general secretary, Rev. T. Arthur Leonard, Colne, Lancashire. The organisers have recently taken an old Elizabethan mansion at Whitby—the Abbey House—which will be used all the year round by those who join the holiday parties. A week-end holiday is offered for the low sum of 13s. 6d.

The Late Mr. H. Thane Miller.

ONE of the most prominent and interesting figures in the personnel of the Y.M.C.A. Jubilee Convention of 1894 was Mr. H. THANE MILLER, from Cincinnati, the blind singer and evangelist. All who followed closely the programme of that memorable gathering will recollect the touching, heartfelt words he spoke under the historic walls of Windsor Castle, as the Convention was on the point of being finally dissolved. Last December the news of Mr. Miller's sudden decease, from heart affection, was the occasion of very wide-spread mourning and regret. So great and universal was the esteem in which he was held throughout Y.M.C.A. circles in the United States, that he was termed "the George Williams of America." With his departure a powerful personality passed out of the working ranks of the Association, leaving it distinctly poorer in spiritual power and ardent advocacy.

Mr. Miller was converted to Christ at an early age, and became an active worker in days when the help of "lay-workers," so called, was less welcome than it is now. He attached himself to Y.M.C.A. work in the very earliest years of its existence on American soil. An Association was formed in Cincinnati in 1848, of which he was a member. As to his service in Association work, we quote the following from an obituary notice in The Young Men's Era:—

"The Association invited the second American convention to Cincinnati in 1855. This marks the real beginning of Mr. Miller's Association life. He saw the possibilities of this new layman's movement; he threw his energies into it then, and he has never deserted the cause. By this convention the International Committee was located at Cincinnati. Mr. Miller was chosen a member of this committee, and soon become its chairman. His tireless energy was thrown into what he believed was to become a great enterprise. Mr. Miller and the committee were pioneers. In the days of the confederation, when New York and Boston held aloof from the national movement, these men with a few others pushed forward the Association cause until it culminated in the great national revival of 1858 and the United States Christian Commission—the preacher of the Gospel to the soldiers during the war.

"When the war was over, and the Association, with prestige gained from its sacrifices, rose in 1866 into new dignity before the nation, Mr. Miller joined with the now increased number, in the maturity of his powers and experience, to make the Association a saving power among the young men of American cities. Through this channel his influence has gone far and wide. He has been for years in the inner counsels of the International Committee, and he is one of the great laymen who has grasped the Association ideal and made it to shine before the world. In 1866 he was chosen president of the famous Albany Convention, which re-founded the American Association. There were 597 delegates in attendance, and the convention attracted much attention from the press and the pulpit.

"Mr. Miller has been the greatest convention figure in the American movement. He has been president of twelve Ohio and four International Conventions, and vice-president of the Jubilee Convention held in London in 1894. He had the power to inspire enthusiasm. He knew how to keep people sweet, and could steer a large gathering past hidden rocks with the deft hand of a pilot. His gift of song has been blessed to thousands.

"In 1867 he founded the state work of Ohio, and has been its active supporter ever since. He has raised more money for state and international work than any other man in Ohio. In the critical years of 1866, '67, and '68, Mr. Miller's services were invaluable. In the difficult position he was placed in as president of these three conventions, Mr. Miller was true to the cause he loved, and won the enduring gratitude of the Associations."

For the last thirty years or more of his life Mr. Miller suffered from a total loss of eyesight. "This misfortune," says a friend, "did not make him morose, and in spite of the limitations his blindness imposed upon him he lived a very busy and useful life." His characteristic features were a boundless enthusiasm and an overflowing spirit of love. His presence and speech in committees and conventions were ever a source of cheer and inspiration. Some striking testimonies to this have been borne by those who were closely associated with him in work. Says one:—

He was an every-moment Christian, daily and hourly, living in the sunlight and smile of his Saviour. My own life has been made better, my Christian faith and hope made stronger and brighter by my contact with him and in the living example he set before me. In Sunday-school work, Young Men's Christian Association work, or evangelistic work he was always the same, warm, true-hearted, devoted, consecrated, earnest follower of his Master. To know him was to love him. He is enshrined in the hearts of thousands all over this broad land, and the Christian young men for whom he had done so much who to-day mourn his loss.

His departure was very sudden. He retired at 10 o'clock one evening, feeling slightly indisposed. A little later he arose, took some remedy, and retired again. The family physician was sent for. While waiting for him Mrs. Miller administered other medicine, and heard her husband say: "Now I will go to sleep." These were his last words. He died before the doctor reached his bedside. So he verily "sleeps in Jesus," and his works do follow him.

Temperance Principles in Schools.—A conference of nearly forty members of Parliament, presided over by Lord Templemore, has been held on the question of teaching temperance, not total abstinence, principles in elementary schools as a class subject

The Month & Its Lessons.—5.

MAY—The Flower Month.

MAY is one of the sweetest months in the year. It betokens farewell to winter, the dawn of summer, the awaking time of joy, and hope, and the emblem of youth. It is the birth-month of flowers. The special features of the month are flowers and brightness.

LESSONS FROM THE FLOWERS.

1. WILD FLOWERS. A lesson on natural life.—Ps. ciii. 15, 16.
2. SPRING FLOWERS. An illustration of spiritual life.—Song of Solomon ii. 11, 12.
3. GARDEN FLOWERS. A picture of developed life.—Song of Solomon vi. 2, 3.
4. BIBLE FLOWERS. A guide to perfect life.—Song of Solomon ii. 1.
5. COLOURED FLOWERS. A mark of varied life.—Is. xxxiv. 1, 2.
6. BEAUTIFUL FLOWERS. An image of beautiful life.—Matt. v. 28, 29.
7. FADED FLOWERS. A warning of the end of life.—Job xiv. 2; 1 Pet. i. 24.

The ancients depicted May as a youth, clothed in a robe of white and green, crowned with a garland of roses. In one hand a lute, and on the forefinger of the other a nightingale is perched—a picture of life, health, beauty, fragrance, and song. All enjoyed in Christ in the atmosphere of grace, in the life of faith, and in the service of the Lord.

There is a lesson in each flower,
A story in each stream and bower.
In every herb on which you tread,
Are written words which rightly read
Will lead you from earth's fragrant sod,
To hope and holiness and God.

In order to reclaim a miser, Constantine the Great took a lance and marked out a space of ground the size of the human body, and said to him, "Add heap to heap, gather riches upon riches, extend the bounds of your possessions, conquer the whole world, and in a few days such a spot as this will be all you will have."

The world without flowers would be like a face without smiles. Flowers are the stars of earth, and stars are the flowers of heaven, bright lessons in Nature's book of instruction, and emblems of hope and glory.

"For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away: but the word of the Lord endureth for ever" (1 Peter i. 24, 25).

C. EDWARDS.

An Appeal for Jamaica.

THE following statement is heartily commended by Dr. Grattan Guinness:—

Pastor Geo. House, of St. Ann's Bay, Jamaica, W.I., is now in England for his first furlough after eighteen years of service. During his stay in Jamaica he has been instrumental in leading hundreds of souls to Christ. Besides sustaining pastorates, he has opened up several new and important centres of Christian usefulness where churches, Sunday and day-schools are in good working order.

On August 26, 1893, Mr. House's chapel in St. Ann's Bay, a large and substantial building, with a seating capacity for 1500 people was destroyed by fire. He and his people were not daunted by this calamity, but began the work of restoration almost before the walls were cool.

After incessant toil and self-sacrifice, in less than two years they completed a substantial and beautiful chapel in place of the one they had lost, at a cost of £1400, having a seating capacity for 1200 people. The members of this church and congregation are among the poorest labouring classes, but during the two years they succeeded in raising amongst themselves and friends in money and labour value the sum of £1000.

Mr. House and his people would be very grateful to receive, through Dr. H. G. Guinness, of Harley House, Bow, E., the help of Christian friends in Great Britain in freeing this struggling church from the burden of £400 debt. Mr. House would be pleased to visit missions or churches in England and give lectures, illustrated by dissolving views, on Jamaica or the West Indies. His address is, The Elms, Lee-on-the-Solent, Gosport.

MAY MEETINGS.

Christian Literature Society.

THE friends of this society held, on Wednesday week, their annual meeting in the Council-room, Exeter Hall. The Right Hon. the Earl of Northbrook presided, and opened the proceedings with a review of the condition of things in India, maintaining that that vast empire had, in the providence of God, been placed under the rule of the Queen in order that Christianity might be spread, and the darkness of heathendom dispelled. In this direction the work of the Society in providing school books and general Christian literature in the languages of India is of the utmost importance. The report presented by the Secretary, Rev. George Patterson, showed that the work of the society in India is three-fold, publication and distribution of Christian literature, training of Christian teachers, and Christian vernacular education. The society issued last year 133 new books and eighty-six new editions, and the sales amounted to £6312. Great attention is given to the training of Christian teachers, some sixty-nine natives being under the care of Rev. J. S. Haig, at Ahmednagar. In the Christian Vernacular Circle Schools some 8000 children are under Christian instruction. While the work is prospering, the income is very far from satisfactory, and larger funds are urgently needed.

Rev. H. C. Squires, of Richmond, formerly of India, spoke of its linguistic peculiarities, and the native literature found among the people, showing the utter absence of any sound, useful, or healthy literature. Hence the value of this society in providing a reliable, religious, and moral literature for the millions of India. Addresses followed by Major-General A. H. J. Campbell and Rev. H. Haigh (W.M.S.), of Mysore. The General stirred many hearts by declaring boldly that he regretted the Government did not see its way to nail Christianity to the mast and avow clearly that it is established on the Christian faith.

The Railway Mission.

EXETER HALL was crowded on Wednesday evening last week by an enthusiastic company of railway-men and their friends. Mr. F. A. Bevan presided.

The report, read by Mr. Nixon, the secretary, spoke of the past year as one of great encouragement and distinct progress in bringing the Gospel before railway-men, who are largely hindered from ordinary Christian privileges. The plan of holding brief services during the meal hour at great centres has been increasingly adopted. Sixteen new branches have been formed in the past year, making 418 in this country. Many of these have mission halls in full operation in connection with them. Large space is given in the report to incidents of blessed result in the salvation of souls and reclamation of the victims of drink. Good accounts of similar work have been received from the Cape, Australia, Canada, South America, India, and Japan, as well as Switzerland. The Railway Mission Convalescent Home at Hastings has been doing splendid work during the year; but a larger Home is needed, and the foundation-stone of a new Home will be laid shortly. According to the testimony of leading railway officials, the operations of the Mission have produced a remarkable improvement among the men employed on the railways.

A financial statement was presented by Mr. S. GURNEY SHEPPARD, who stated that the new Convalescent Home is to be opened on May 23 by H.B.H. the Duchess of Teck. The old Home accommodates thirteen, the new Home will receive forty. About £3,000 is still wanted to complete it.

Mr. F. A. BEVAN, the chairman, dealt with certain sneers as to Exeter Hall Christianity, maintaining in the face of these misstatements that religion is for men as well as women, for working men in the full activity of life. This he proved from scriptural example, and from present day experience. They who yield to God become better and braver men in every way, while their homes are transformed by love and peace.

LORD OVERTON, in the course of a vigorous speech, said that many seem to think that railway-men are mere machines, who may have bodies but certainly have no souls, who stand at their posts, do their duty, help perplexed travellers, and need trouble with no higher or deeper things. Giving reasons for his interest in railway employees, he told of various Christian railway-men with whom he had to do in Scotland, witnesses of the right stamp, doing good service for God and their fellows

Mr. ROBINSON SOUTTAR, M.P., followed with a clear and ringing Gospel address, finely emphasised and pointed by a beautiful Gospel solo sung by Miss Ada Rose, closing—

Why will you do without Him? He calls and calls again, "Come unto Me, come unto Me," oh shall He call in vain? He wants to have you with Him: Do you not want Him, too?

You cannot do without Him; and He wants even you.

Short testimonies were given by a large number of station-masters, guards, porters, pointsmen, engine-drivers, and other railway employees—many of them saved through the Mission, and all working in connection with it. These hearty and straightforward words afforded strong evidence of the real work going on amongst railway-men all over the land.

Christian Colportage Association.

It was a delightful break in the ordinary routine of May Meetings to sit for an hour on Thursday afternoon among the hearty colporteurs of this society, listening to their terse and telling testimonies. It is impossible to detail the stories of blessing narrated. Suffice it that from all parts of the land and the Metropolis came tidings of souls won from sin's darkness to the light of God, not merely through books sold, but through personal words spoken by the "man with the books." Quite a host of incidents of this kind were forthcoming in rapid succession, and then, as time sped on, the secretary called for "sharp-shooting" half-minute testimonies, and thus in a quarter of an hour some twenty-one men mentioned special books blessed to old and young. These included Bibles, penny Testaments, "Grace and Truth," "Blood of Jesus," and many other Gospel books, as well as Penny Stories and tracts. In conclusion, Lady Hope addressed the men in a few bright and stirring words.

The annual meeting proper followed, Lord Kinraid presiding. Mr. Martin Sutton, one of the oldest friends of the Association, expressed his deep interest in the work of the colporteurs.

A short abstract of the report read by the secretary, Mr. H. D. Brown, deplored the prevalence of morally poisonous literature, with the most ruinous results on young people. The definite evangelistic operations have been remarkably blessed of God, and very specially among villagers in out-of-the-way hamlets, and among domestic servants, who are peculiarly difficult of approach by any agency save that of colportage. The colporteurs now number 125. During the past year nearly 47,000 Bibles and Testaments have been sold, and about 700,000 books, etc. It was to be regretted that the financial statement showed a deficit of £383, which it was hoped would speedily be cleared off.

The CHAIRMAN followed with an earnest plea on behalf of the C.C.A., putting in plain, practical fashion the strong claims colportage work has upon the Lord's people in these days of Ritualism, Rationalism, and open ungodliness. It might be unsentimental work, but on the other hand it was real, honest, fruitful work, going from door to door and getting hold of certain classes by no means easily accessible to ordinary agents.

CANON GIRDLESTONE maintained that this Society is filling an important niche in Christian effort. It is aiming to supply a positive remedy for a positive evil. He believed that popular literature is undergoing an entire revolution at the present time—largely owing to the introduction of penny reprints, most of which so far had been very good. From this point the Canon passed on to a review of present-day literature, its tone, tendency, and general drift, concluding from his rapid glance that there is urgent need for Christian men giving more earnest heed to the circulation of sound and healthful books, as well as direct Gospel literature. He commended in the warmest terms the work of the Society. Sir G. WILLIAMS next took up the matter of funds, and issuing a challenge succeeded in securing promises amounting to £300.

In the evening another meeting was held, Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P., presiding. Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor addressed the colporteurs in a high-toned and spiritual manner, calling for deepened devotion and fuller service.

Trinitarian Bible Society.

On Tuesday evening last week the friends of the Trinitarian Bible Society assembled in the Lower Exeter Hall, in celebration of the sixty-fifth anniversary of the Society. The chair was occupied by Mr. JAMES INSKIP, who in his address advocated the distinctive claims of the Society and commended its work. The proceedings were hearty throughout, addresses being delivered by Revs. T. Davis (Harborne), W. Sinden (Regent-square Chapel, W.C.), and G. Duncan (Gravesend), also by Prediger C. T. Lipshytz (Barbican Mission to the Jews), and Madame Lopez-Rodriguez (Figueras, Spain).

In a summary of the report, read by Rev. Dr. Bullinger, the secretary, particulars were given of the sustained circulation, with blessed results, of Salkinson's Hebrew New Testament; of the publication of Dr. Ginsburg's standard text of the Hebrew Old Testament, a work of great value, the introduction to which (now in the press) will give full particulars of sources and much fresh historical information; and of the Breton Bible, which has called into existence an important evangelical mission, the activity of which is rapidly developing a native church full of life and zeal. Encouraging news from Italy, Spain, and France, was followed by a few words on the Judeo-German Bible, which has been largely used by the Mildmay Mission to the Jews; and, finally, a good account was given of work among English and foreign sailors at home and abroad.

The total income of the Society during the year was £3931, and the circulation of Bibles, Testaments, and portions reached the aggregate of 253,990. Free grants were made to some sixty missionary and other societies, and to workers in various parts of the world. Herr Lipshytz and Madame Lopez-Rodriguez were able to relate remarkable cases of blessing resulting from New Testaments freely distributed—in fact, placed in the hands of people who in some cases were unable to buy them, and in others objected to pay for books of which they had no knowledge, and which, therefore, they could not be expected to appreciate or value to any degree.

Lord's Day Observance Society.

The annual meeting was held in St. James's Hall on Tuesday week. The report maintained that it is becoming more and more clear that the only defensible ground is the position taken up from the first by the Lord's Day Observance Society; that the Lord's Day of the Old Testament and of the New Testament cannot be secured for the advantage of man, except by its recognition as a day of consecrated rest; a holy day, and not a holiday; a day instituted under a Divine charter, and to be enjoyed in obedience to Divine laws. Where the Divine gift of the day and the Divine claim to regulate its use are denied, or ignored, or put in the background, the human claim to enjoy the day is imperilled, or largely set aside. There no longer remains any ground on which it can be demanded as a right; and what God intended for all is utterly lost to those who need it most. It is already lost in large measure in this country to those sections of the working classes who are employed in street and railway traffic, and in public-houses and refreshment-rooms. It is lost to growing numbers of musicians and others who furnish amusement to the public, and to those who have the charge of places of public resort. And each fresh step intended to secure new profit for shareholders, and employers, and employed, or new amusement for the devotees of pleasure, tramples underfoot the best interests of those too blind to value, or too weak to enforce, their right to that Sabbath which God made for man, and stamped as "holy," to protect it from human greed and human folly. But in the present and in the future, as in the past, your committee are prepared to offer at every point a strenuous resistance to all such attacks. The increasing inroads on the observance of the Lord's Day were deplored, while accounts were given of the endeavours made to counteract legal and social popular and Parliamentary encroachments of the Day of Rest.

Vigorous addresses followed by Messrs. W. Johnston, M.P., W. D. Cruddas, M.P., R. Macintosh, Revs. F. A. C. Lillingston and H. Stevens, and others.

The Union Hall Mission.

THE work carried on by the late Mr. Bilke is still maintained by a devoted band of workers. The anniversary meetings were held on Thursday, Mr. T. B. Miller presiding at the evening meeting. After praise and prayer,

Mr. C. STUART THORPE, who is now superintending the general work, made a statement as to the experiences of the past year since the calling home of the trusted leader. While this loss had been felt in every department, the work itself has gone on with increasing success. Reviewing the various operations in Union Hall and in the Queen's Park Hall, mention was made of special efforts on behalf of the poor blind. If the funds permit, it is hoped to continue occasional tea meetings for the sightless who are numerous in the district. Details were also given of the open-air, Sunday-schools, and Gospel services in both of the halls, for which the Union Hall Mission is responsible. It may be well to note that the Union Hall is under the honorary superintendency of Mr. Edwin T. Cook, while Queen's Park Hall is in charge of Mr. S. Stiddolph. The financial statement showed need of additional help.

Touching reference was made by the chairman to the life and labours of Mr. Bilke, drawing therefrom various practical lessons for young workers. Brief words followed by Messrs. John G. McVicker, E. T. Cook, W. Holmes, William Grove, and others.

The Missions to Seamen.

THE annual meeting of this society was held on Wednesday in St. James's Hall. Com. Dawson, the secretary, read extracts from the report, stating that the income of the Society for 1895 was £37,413 7s. 2d., being the largest sum ever received in any one year. With regard to the staff, at the end of the fourth decade, it has two superintendents, forty-three chaplains, three lady-workers, fifty-six readers, and eight helpers working at fifty-one seaports at home and seventeen abroad. These are aided by eighteen boatmen and thirty-three institute-keepers, and supplied with seventeen steam and sailing Mission vessels, and fifty boats to carry them to the crews on board ships, fishing vessels and barges, and to the isolated inhabitants of remote lighthouses, islets, deep-water forts, and coastguards. There are also eighty-five seamen's churches, institutes, and mission-rooms for sailors and fishermen.

Admiral the Hon. Sir E. R. Fremantle, late Commander-in-Chief in the China Seas, who presided, bore testimony to the good work being done by the Society. Similarly cheering evidence was borne by Rev. A. Gurney Goldsmith, late of Hong Kong, T. S. Treanor, chaplain of the Downs, J. F. Griffiths, from the Tees, and Mr. Joseph Livesey.

"Coalies" at Mildmay.

THE annual gathering of London coalies and their wives was recently held at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park. After tea and talk, a most enthusiastic meeting was held, attended by nearly 1000 persons. Colonel Morton, who presided, gave the guests a hearty welcome, and in plain and homely language exhorted them to enlist under the banner of the Lord Jesus.

Mr. BOTTING, a Christian coalie from South London, spoke of what the Lord had done for him, and exhorted all his brother coalies to come to Christ. Mr. G. C. LOCKETT, representing the coal merchants, rejoiced to know that many merchants are now assisting to support the four missionaries who regularly visit the various depôts. Mr. Burrows, a coalie from West London, gave a good ringing testimony. Mr. FRED TREN, coal merchant and treasurer of the Mission, spoke of the great interest coalies themselves are taking in the work. Their contributions have increased each year. During last year the Mission had been able to add two extra workers. He gave an earnest Gospel address. Other addresses were given by various friends.

The report of the past year's work published in a neat pamphlet entitled "The Music among the Coalies," can be had from the office of the City Mission, 3, Bridewell-place, E.C., price one penny. It is well illustrated, and gives a graphic account of the interesting operations of the missionaries.

Baptist Anniversaries.

THE Baptist anniversaries held last week were well attended, and a good spirit prevailed at the various meetings. At the opening session of the Union on Monday, in Bloomsbury Chapel, Rev. J. G. Greenhough vacated the president's chair in favour of Rev. T. Vincent Tymms; and Rev. E. G. Gange (Regent's Park) was elected vice-president, a post which carries succession to the presidency. On the following day Mr. Tymms delivered his address, which dealt with "Authority, True and False." In conclusion, he maintained that as surely as we learn to teach the truths of Christ, and do the work He has appointed, authority with men will come. As authority arrives, there will come also the supreme test of life—whether we are fit to sit with Christ upon his throne. The more men look up to us, the more we must look up to Christ. The more authority we wield, the more incumbent it becomes that we should use it in the fear of God. The man, the church, the people exercising lordship on this earth without an upward look is doomed to be abased. Only reverence for One above can keep men lowly in high places; but looking up into the excellent glory, all unhallowed thoughts and feelings are swallowed up in worship.

At the missionary soirée on Tuesday, Mr. EDWARD ROBINSON, of Bristol, presiding, an income during the year of £75,000 was reported—an advance upon any previous year. Addresses were delivered by Revs. G. B. Farthing (of Tai Yuen Fu, Shansi, North China), G. R. Pople (of the Lower Congo River, Africa), and R. Gordon Fairbairn (of Cheltenham). In the course of an impressive address, the last-named said: We have seen the Indian negro, the Greenlander, the Chinaman regenerated by the self-same faith of the self-same Son of God and Son of Man; and while the churches have been mourning because Pentecost was past Pentecost has been everywhere persistent, refusing to be hustled to untimely burial, till we have been constrained to acknowledge that this very age is the age of the Holy Ghost. There is joy in the presence of the angels as the slaves of sin and Satan forsake their idols. How the heart of Christ must leap for gladness when, at the chiming of the Sabbath bell, they besiege the throne of grace! 10,000 Eskimo Christians, 150,000 Red Indian Christians, half a million West Indian Christians, 10,000 Patagonian Christians, 40,000 Chinamen, nearly a million natives of India, and all the sons and daughters of the 400 African communities! Oh, it is wonderful, wonderful!

Mr. H. P. GOULD, of Norwich, presided over the Home Mission and Church Extension meeting at the Memorial Hall on Monday. Rev. A. Pidgeon gave an encouraging account of work in Cornwall, and Rev. R. Silby, of Nottingham, followed. Dr. Richard Glover delivered an address on "Free Churchism in the Villages." At the meeting on the same day of the Bible Translation Society, a good report was rendered, and a resolution was adopted emphasising the importance of providing and circulating faithful and complete versions of the Holy Scriptures, in view of the impossibility of sending missionaries in sufficient numbers to carry the light of the Gospel to the hundreds of millions of people who are still in heathen darkness.

There were a number of prayer-meetings, also sermons on behalf of missions. At the gathering of the Zenana Missionary Society, Miss Edith Angus was enabled to say that the year had been marked by special mercies. Not only had the lives of all the missionaries been spared, but the committee had been enabled to send out new workers. Their hearts had been gladdened by the open profession of some of the pupils, and the heavy monetary burden with which they had closed in former years had been averted by the increased contributions from the churches. The meeting of the Young Men's Missionary Society was presided over by Mr. Bompas, Q.C., who, in the course of a vigorous address, said: As one grows older, the conviction deepens that the only supremely important things in this world are those that belong to Christ, and I would say to young men and women—if you want to make life bright, let work for Christ be your absorbing interest, and use your best powers in helping forward the salvation of the world.

The annual missionary gathering was held in Exeter Hall, Mr. J. Compton Bickett, M.P., in the chair. The secretary, Mr. Baynes, was enabled to state that during the past quarter of a century there had never been a report so full of encouragement. A thanksgiving fund had therefore been started, and over £1000 subscribed. At the missionary breakfast, Rev. J. B. Myers announced that steady advance was being made in the direction of every church member being a subscriber to missions. Several speakers warmly commended the penny a week system.

British Syrian Mission.

THE annual meeting of this Mission at Morley Halls was interesting and well attended. Sir MATTHEW DODSWORTH, Bart., presided. The financial statement told of a deficit of £500. Miss STOWELL, who has worked for six years in the Mission, told something of what was being done in the twenty-eight schools of the B.S.M., and the thought uppermost in her mind was the great need of the hundreds of villages, scattered about on the mountains and in the plains of Syria, with no light, no teachers, and no schools.

Rev. H. E. Fox, speaking as an eye-witness, said he knew of no better work being carried on in Syria. He spoke of the beauty of the land, and recommended people to take a holiday trip there; while doing so, to try and do good to the people. Rev. J. F. ANDREWS having spoken, the audience had an opportunity of helping by contribution or by making purchases at the sale held in the adjoining hall.

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

THE friends of India's secluded and untaught women filled St. Martin's Town-hall on the afternoon and evening of Tuesday week, for the annual meetings of the above society. Lord Kinnaird presided, and, after prayer, the report was presented by Rev. A. R. Cavalier, who stated that eleven new missionaries had gone forth during the year. The society now employs 122 European missionaries and assistants, 175 native Christian teachers and nurses, and 79 Bible-women—making a total of 376 workers. An addition to the hospital at Lucknow is sorely needed. At Benares there are now two English and one native lady doctor, and the extension of the hospital has been found to provide a corresponding increase in work. At Patna the Duchess of Teck Hospital has been opened, and now meets a very great need. The committee have arranged with the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions to take over their work at Jaffna in Ceylon.

The hon. finance secretary, Mr. W. T. PATON, presented the financial statement, which showed a total income for home and India of £19,716, and pleaded for more young ladies to go out as honorary missionaries. They already had eight. Was it too much to ask for sixteen? Referring to the fact that the Society had three hospitals in India, he remarked that the total cost of their maintenance was only £2,391, or £797 for each hospital.

Rev. G. B. DURANT, of the C.M.S. Mission, Allahabad, having acted as superintendent of the work in the Punjab and North-West Provinces, spoke with some authority on progress in the North-West, where the Society has from fifty to sixty workers. These he knew as earnest and devoted ladies. There was no light task, no child's play. Nor was it a work of which the results were rapidly seen. The Converts' Home at Allahabad provided numerous instances of successful labour. Again, the valuable and important work which Miss Paterson was doing among the native Christians had been too much neglected, but it was deeply important. He had been asked, "Are the results satisfactory?" He did not gauge missionary results by the number of baptisms. In imitation of the C.M.S., the Society had adopted the band of associated evangelists scheme, which had proved a decided success.

Lord OVERTON followed in a telling address, dealing with various phases of the work, and concluding with the triple appeal, "Pray ye," "Go ye," and "Bring ye all the tithes into my storehouse." Rev. B. WARDLAW THOMPSON closed the meeting with an interesting account of what he had seen of work among women during his late visit to India.

The ladies, who had been silent in the afternoon, had their opportunity in the evening, when a meeting of a more popular character was held in the same hall, and during the evening a novelty was introduced in the shape of a report illustrated by limelight views. Mr. T. A. Denny took the chair, and among the speakers were Lady Hope, Miss Tulloch, a Zenana worker from Jaunpore, and Miss Rouse, of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union.

The Church Missionary Society.

THERE may, as some have feared, be a diminished interest in May meetings generally, but certainly there was no flagging to be detected in the great host who packed Exeter and St. James's Halls on Tuesday morning and crowded the whole eight meetings held by the C.M.S. during the day. When, prompt at 11 a.m., Sir John H. Kennaway took the chair in the central meeting, Exeter Hall, he was greeted with an enthusiasm which spoke volumes.

The report, presented by Rev. H. E. Fox, recalled the men of faith, on whose heroism the work was built. A glance followed over the field in India, Western Asia, Africa, Japan, and the Isles of South China (with touching reference to the martyrs of Hwa sañg). Special and thankful mention was made of the Medical Missionary department. At length coming to finance, a deficit was disclosed of £17,069—not due to a falling off in the ordinary income, but to the fact that the expenditure had grown faster than the income, and this by reason of the opening doors on every side: "the real cause of the present position is the increasing missionary force."

The approximate statistics of the Missions are:—Stations, 424. European missionaries, 467; wives, 290; ladies, 218: total, 975. Native and Eurasian clergy, 311. Native teachers, 5035. Native Christian adherents, 212,640. Communicants, 57,779.

The PRESIDENT began his customary review of the difficulties and losses, triumphs and encouragements of the year, with a cordial welcome to the new secretary, Mr. Fox, who had now presented his first report, and who was, he felt sure, the right man in the right place. Dealing with the financial question, he advocated the policy of "Advance," giving his reasons for holding that money is not the difficulty. There is plenty, if only hearts be touched and real self-denial be exercised. If God's people realise their opportunities the deficit will be wiped out. Not content with this, he called the Church to a great forward movement, which has been named the "Three Years Enterprise," an endeavour to publish the Gospel in all lands and to all peoples in the three closing years of the present century.

Mr. EUGENE STOCK followed with a detailed account of this T.Y.E. to send out the glad tidings to every creature ere the close of the century.

The Bishop of EXETER, in the course of a weighty speech, rejoiced that the next three years were to be years of preparation for the centenary, to usher in, he trusted, an epoch of unprecedented triumph for the Gospel. Surely it could not be forgotten that two-thirds of the human family are strangers to God's love, while all the time our Lord calls us to evangelize the world. Will any say, "We cannot?" What! Does Christ command an impossibility? He never does. What He commands, He will enable us to fulfil, if we be willing and obedient. From this point the speaker went on to indicate the lines along which advance should take place, beginning with the doubling of the mission staff at all great centres. He hoped to see an income of £400,000 next year; £500,000 the following year, while it ought to be a million in the centenary year. There was no reason it should not, if the Lord's people rose to their privileges in these last days.

Sir CHARLES A. ELLIOTT, K.C.S.I., spoke of his life-long interest in missions, and, in a rapid and statesmanlike review of his observations in various parts of India (including some of the best known, and on the other hand some little known, but true and valuable missions), dwelt on the devotion to duty, simplicity of life, and unselfish love for the souls of men which characterise the missionaries in the East. These men and women are doing a work deserving of all praise, and their labours have been remarkably successful. Sir Charles could not, however, endorse the views held by some as to the possibility of evangelising the world in the next three years; he knew too well the deep-rooted beliefs, the tremendous obstacles which Christianity has to overcome. Hence converts are comparatively easily won from the aboriginal and simpler races, but the convinced Hindu or the bigoted Mohammedan is a different man to win, and these ancient systems cannot be expected to be overthrown in a day. Sir Charles desired to prevent hasty anticipations which might lead to disappointment, to promote patient effort, which must in the end prevail. Four short missionary addresses followed by Revs. J. E. Padfield (of the Telegu Mission), G. K. Baskerville (of Uganda), H. Carless (of Persia), and H. S. Phillips (of Fuh kien, China).

Wesleyan Missionary Society.

THE annual meeting of the Wesleyan Missionary Society is always characterized by considerable enthusiasm, and the gathering held in Exeter Hall on Monday last was no exception. The tribes of Methodism came up in goodly numbers, and on the platform and in the general assembly there were representatives from all parts of the country. The chair was occupied by Mr. EDWIN CANNINGTON, of Liverpool, who in a sympathetic address spoke of "the power of the penny," and advocated greater energy in the collection of small contributions in aid of the mission cause.

A summary of the annual report was read by Rev. F. W. MACDONALD, one of the secretaries of the society. It presented a succinct view of the Society's work, beginning with operations on the Continent of Europe. Here, as was pointed out, scepticism and superstition, each at once the ally and antagonist of the other, have to be combated. "Nowhere in the world is there greater need of the Gospel in its purity, in its enlightening and converting power, than among the great European populations where, in the absence, on any adequate scale, both of reformation and of revival, the prevailing form of Christianity is degenerate and corrupt, and the recoil from exaggerated and misdirected belief is seen in a total disbelief of all things spiritual."

The missions in Asia form a great department of the Society's work, and in them a point has been reached when past toil is beginning to tell on a rapidly-increasing scale. The schools, in Hindu, Mohammedan, and Buddhist centres, turn out a large number of youths on whom Christianity has made some impression, in many cases its saving impression. The development of the native ministry, and the training and oversight of lay evangelists is a leading aim in the Society's policy, and receives careful attention. In the African field, the Transvaal and Swaziland district shows the greatest increase. In the Western world the Society has missions in Honduras and the Bahamas, where the work is to a large extent self-supporting, and continues to make progress in Church life and effort.

In the statistical department some encouraging figures were given. The number of accredited church members in the missions under the immediate direction of the committee of the British Conference is 42,677, with 9459 on trial, being an increase of 1698 on the number of the previous year. The total income on the current account was £123,757, which was, by £963, less than the expenditure. It was also reported that of the special sum of £50,000, for the payment of the accumulated deficiency of £34,478 reported in 1894, up to the close of last year £26,819 had been received. The contributions from Juvenile Associations and Christmas Offerings were more than in any previous year.

Rev. Dr. WALLER, president of the Conference, made tender reference to the recent losses of the society by death—naming Messrs. Roe, Ingram, Hudson, and Hill. He insisted that the most solemn privilege and responsibility that has come down to the Church is to carry on the work of the Lord Jesus Christ; and the missionary spirit will be manifested just in proportion to the spiritual life of the Church. Methodism is the outcome of missionary work, and its prosperity depends upon its discharge of a like obligation.

Rev. HENRY HAIGH, of Mysore, described the comfortable, orthodox, caste-bound Hindus, 180,000,000 in number. He showed that pantheism has confused them in their worship and in their morality. To the typical Hindu sin is nothing but the failure of expediency, and holiness is only the perfection of prudence—a doing nothing obnoxious to the claims of caste. He believes in transmigration, and is the slave of fate; and the greatest sin he can contemplate is the embarking upon new courses, or trying to cross his fate. Mr. Haigh explained the peculiar difficulties encountered in dealing with such people, and showed that effort must be comparatively slow in its results. A man cannot shed in one hour the assumptions of a lifetime inherited from long centuries. On these grounds the speaker urged the friends of the mission to holier efforts, showing how inadequate are the existing forces in the field.

Rev. GILBERT G. WARREN, of Central China, gave some account of the character and work of the late Rev. David Hill, warm-hearted, devoted, and prayerful. Rev. WILLIAM BURGESS, of Hyderabad, followed, maintaining that the harvest for which the Church has long prayed is waiting to be gathered, and the garnering is limited through the smallness of the number of reapers.

Presbyterian Synod.

THE opening address by Dr. J. Thoburn McGaw, Moderator, dwelt with the growth of sacerdotalism, and the recent extension of the Presbyterian system in England. On the second day fraternal greetings were accorded to delegates from several sister churches.

In the course of a discussion on religion and morals, cordial tributes to the evangelistic service rendered by Mrs. Baeyerz were paid by several of the ministers. It was stated that the new college at Cambridge (to be called St. Columba's) would probably be ready for opening two years hence. There was a warm discussion on the education measure now before Parliament.

Revs. Dr. Pentecost, J. H. Scott, G. H. C. Macgregor, and T. G. Murray were appointed ministerial evangelists for the current year. A resolution approving of arbitration in the settlement of international differences was passed. The next synod was fixed to be held at Sunderland.

British and Foreign Sailors.

ARCHDEACON SINCLAIR presided at the annual meeting of this society, held on Monday at the Mansion House. The report showed that during the past year the board had been able to make grants to seventy-two stations. Since the Samaritan work had been opened in London 87,442 free meals had been given, and 16,520 "free beds" to those who had not a place to lay their heads.

The Chairman, after giving figures to show the importance to this country of her navy and mercantile marine, said it was their bounden duty to be extremely interested in the condition of the vast number of men connected with such an enormous trade. The object of the society was the religious, intellectual, and social elevation of British and foreign seamen. There was no class which more needed their help and support, considering the great social dangers to which they were exposed. He expressed the hope that the £1000 now required would be raised, also an additional £1000 a year, so that the society might be placed upon a sound financial basis.

Mr. J. Compton Rickett, M.P., and Mr. Tufnell having spoken, the Countess of Warwick presented souvenir prizes to some of the collectors. On the motion of Canon Wilberforce, seconded by Rev. J. G. Train, a special appeal on behalf of the society, addressed to the "Churches and counties of the British Isles," was adopted.

National Temperance League.

THE Bishop of London took the chair at the annual meeting, held on Monday night in Exeter Hall. The annual report, an abstract of which was presented by the secretary, Mr. Robert Rae, stated that the pledge-signing crusade, commenced the previous year, had been continued. Miss Weston's report showed that 19,894 pledge-cards had been issued by the Royal Naval branch. The importance of persistent effort upon educational lines was insisted upon; the development of the movement was reviewed, it being pointed out that one person out of every seven in the United Kingdom was now a total abstainer. A call was made for a body of well-equipped and enthusiastic crusaders to carry on the work into the twentieth century.

The Chairman expressed his very strong sympathy with the recommendation that the last years of the century should be spent in a most earnest endeavour to increase the numbers of the total abstainers of this country. When measures were proposed which they believed would help forward the temperance cause they were very glad; meanwhile their own work was more important than legislation, for laws were efficient in proportion as the public whom they affected really endeavoured to follow them up by practical action. In four years, if they took up the work as they should, they would assuredly succeed in very largely increasing their members, and then statesmen would begin to think that, whatever their personal opinions might be, they had better make account with "these fanatical total abstainers."

Major-General T. Lynden Bell spoke of temperance work in the Army. Mr. William Noble followed with "Twenty Minutes with John B. Gough," mainly consisting of impressive extracts from speeches. Other gentlemen gave addresses.

Dr. Grattan Guinness's New Book.

DURING the past twenty-five years, Dr. H. Grattan Guinness has given to the world several substantial expositions of prophecy, calculated to inform Christians regarding God's purposes, and to impress all thoughtful readers with the reality of Divine revelation. Alongside this course of study, fascinating and absorbing, he has given close attention to world-wide evangelisation and scientific inquiry in several departments. These activities, taken together, have engaged his mind with deep thoughts and large ideas, which he has at length elaborated in a noble volume, entitled, CREATION CENTRED IN CHRIST. (9s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

The title has obviously been suggested by the words of the Apostle, "In Him all things consist," or held together. The aim and object of the work are admirably set forth in the Introduction, towards the close of which the scope of the studies is thus described: "First, Nature's witness to God is briefly set forth; then the need of Revelation is shown, and a summary is given of the proofs of the existence of Revelation. The connection of the natural and revealed is then exhibited. Evidence is given that there exists in Nature a universal law of centralization, controlling the inorganic, the organic, and the moral world; that such a law similarly exists in Revelation, linking in unity its various parts, and reigning in the system of Redemption which it reveals; and that the law of centralization not only prevails in Nature and in Revelation, considered separately, but also in the relation of the one to the other; that the natural is centred in the revealed; and that as the natural is centred in the revealed, so the revealed is centred in Christ, and that thus the whole system of things, both natural and revealed, is centred in Him."

With Dr. Guinness the Christo-centric investigation is not employed to discount the importance of circumferential facts, but rather to view such facts in fresh aspects, and to place them in their highest light. The book deals with a large number of subjects, as well might be expected in so immense a theme. The pages are not reading for everyone; they are for the thoughtful and studious. In the words of the author: "Like a telescope of large aperture, this book is a light-collecting instrument, constructed to bring a broad beam of light to a focal point. As Copernicus applied the Heliocentric principle to the problem of the motion of the planets, so the present work applies the Christo-centric principle to the problem of the constitution and course of the seen and unseen Universe, or of the universal system, natural and revealed."

Here is philosophy as well as religion, history as well as science. In his studies on Analogy Dr. Guinness expounds many Divine laws and principles; in those on Adjustment numerous and deeply interesting sidelights are thrown upon revealed truth, historic and prophetic; and mighty constructive proof is furnished of the certainty of the inspiration of the Bible. The volume investigates important problems in chronology, and makes a substantial contribution to this subject on strictly scientific lines. Among the questions discussed are the dates relating to Christ's life and death, Daniel's prophecy of the Seventy Weeks, and the great prophetic periods. There is a chapter on the cyclical character of prophetic times, with special reference to the discoveries of M. de Chéseaux. In this department Dr. Guinness's independent discoveries are of great importance. Writing on the harmonization of religion and science, he says: "True religion and true science are not opposed. True science may be opposed to false religion, and false science to true religion; but true science and true religion must harmonize as truth with truth. It is a suggestive and interesting fact that the founders of modern science were religious men, and believers in the Christian revelation; and that their faith, so far from having proved a hindrance, was a guide and help to them in the study of Nature."

Having amply shown this, Dr. Guinness writes on the harmonization of Revelation and Nature, maintaining the following positions: The effect is centred in the cause; the type is centred in the antitype; the means are centred in their end—this last point being considered geologically, historically, astronomically, and morally. In conclusion, the relation of these facts and principles to Christ and his work is shown, and the prophetic word is proved to agree with the thesis; the coming kingdom, the subject of prophecy, will manifest the glorious reality that in Him, that is, Christ, "all things consist," or hold together. As setting forth some of the wonders of nature and revelation, this book is a contribution to evidential literature; as dealing with some of the cruxes of chronology, it is a contribution to prophetic exposition. Every page bears witness to wide reading and profound thought. Those who know Dr. Guinness's other works will want to read (or rather study) this book; the wideness of its scope indicates it as also likely to gain some readers whose special interest is in the realms of science and philosophy.

Mission Work in Ireland.

ON a recent evening, Rev. Thos. Connellan addressed a crowded meeting in the hall attached to St. Paul's, Onslow-square. Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE presided, and said he had hurried from a meeting in the City to welcome and listen to their brother, whom he was pleased to call his own son in the faith. It was admitted on all hands that Mr. Connellan had been marvellously used of God in Ireland. First his own family, who knew him best, were won by his teaching and example, so that recently his father had died in assured peace, trusting in Christ and Him alone. They knew, of course, that Mr. Connellan had lived here for several months, worshipping among them, and moving quietly and unostentatiously in their midst.

MR. CONNELLAN, who was very warmly received, said:—It is a little over seven years since I ceased to worship in St. Paul's, Onslow-square, and, with the approval of your vicar, went back to carry the Gospel to my former co-religionists in Ireland. I hold in my hand the Bible which he handed to me on my departure, and which bears date March 4, 1889. I had previously spent seven years in the ministry of the Church of Rome in Ireland, and now I have passed almost exactly the same space of time in the ministry of the Gospel. I was informed in March, 1889, and by gentlemen who professed to know the country, that I would be murdered before three months. Lo! seven years have passed, and although no one who knows me will charge me with shirking danger or avoiding the van of the fight, here I stand safe and sound, all the more determined after my seven years' experience to labour on in season and out of season for the evangelisation of Ireland. Much that I saw darkly, as in a glass, seven years ago, has become vividly bright and real to me since. Christ does not leave his servant unsupported in the battle, and the man or the woman conscious of the indwelling Christ is able to conquer Satan even as Christ was.

What have I got to say about Ireland to-night? Very sad is the condition of the sister isle. Romanism in Ireland is day by day degenerating into a system of fetichism. Among the illiterate (and at the last election one out of every five who voted declared himself illiterate) there is no limit to the occult power of the priests. And the priests consider all things lawful which increase their revenues. The illiterate Irish peasant goes to his priest, and pays down his hard-earned money to have "offices" read or masses said for sick wife or child, sick cow, diseases of the body or mind, butter stolen by the fairies, child "overlooked" by the "Evil Eye," or brother injured by "the blast." And these highly-fed, well-preserved men in black clothes and Roman collars always pocket the fee, and always leave the cure in doubt.

Recently we have had three shocking cases of superstitious mania, so shocking that those who do not read the newspapers will scarcely believe them. A married woman in co. Tipperary was burned to death by her husband and relatives, held forcibly over the kitchen fire until she ceased to struggle. Why? Because she was supposed to be a witch. The local priest had read mass in the house the previous day, and we may presume administered moral instruction to his flock. The murderers are now in penal servitude. The second case occurred in co. Roscommon. A father, four sons, and a daughter were reciting the "Rosary" at night, when one of the sons made an attack on the old man. The rest of the family seized him, dragged him into the room, and hacked him to pieces with shoemaker's knives, which they found lying about. They then ran to a neighbour's house, declaring the house they had left to be filled with devils. In the presence of the police they declared that a voice from the loft ordered them to do it. In the police barrack the daughter flew at her father's throat and proceeded to draw devils therefrom. So violent were they that six policemen were engaged in a deadly conflict with them for an hour and a-half before they were overcome and bound. All the time they were shrieking prayers to the Virgin and the saints. The father and two sons have been committed for trial, while the daughter and another son have been sent to an asylum. The parish priest was examined before the magistrate, and he admitted having taken money for masses in order to cure the murdered son, who had previously shown signs of insanity. A third case has cropped up in the county Galway. Here again the whole family, with one exception, have gone mad; and again the epidemic is religious insanity.

Why do I recite these dreadful facts? Not to cast mud at my poor countrymen, but to show how lamentably Rome has failed with these people; to show that now, thirteen centuries after St. Patrick, the Church of Rome keeps the illiterate Irish peasant in the same condition of dark superstition that prevailed under the Druids.

Legislation may keep Irish restlessness within bounds, but it will never supply a cure. God alone can do that through his revelation to fallen man. Hence it is the truest sign of love for the Irish peasant to point out his disease, and offer the only remedy. It is an old remedy: "Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is, that they might be saved. For I bear them record that they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteousness, have not submitted themselves unto the righteousness of God. For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth" (Rom. x. 1-4). That is the everlasting Gospel, and that is the righteousness which exalteth a nation.

The mission to which I belong is among the youngest in the land, but it is unique in this respect, that it is worked entirely by converted Roman Catholics and is a movement springing from within the Church of Rome. It is in the nature of a pioneer movement, levelling obstacles, removing barriers, sowing seed, making friends of the natives, and then permitting the Christian Churches to step in and possess the land. We believe in the necessity of heart conversion, and do not care so much about names, or numbers, or profession. We lead our inquirers to the feet of Jesus, and He is able to do the rest. Wonderful success has crowned our efforts even already, although the movement is in its infancy. Priests have been led out, some nuns, too, have been influenced, large numbers of lay Roman Catholics have entered into Gospel light, while a great and growing spirit of inquiry is manifest on all hands. Everywhere I labour I am denounced by the priests, and everywhere, with scarcely an exception, Roman Catholics steal in to my meetings.

In conclusion, Mr. Connellan gave a number of deeply-interesting details, speaking for more than an hour.

Messages from Abroad.

PUERTO STA. MARIA, SPAIN.

IT is now thirteen years since the Presbytery of Andalusia established a college here for the training of teachers and evangelists. We have admitted and trained students from the Spanish Reformed (Episcopal), the American Congregationalist, the Methodist, as well as the Presbyterian Churches. There are two pastors, three evangelists, and six teachers now working for the Lord in different parts of the country who have been trained in our college. At present there are eleven students.

The Irish Presbyterian Church kindly provides the Principal and pays his salary. Three of the pastors of neighbouring missions give two days each a week to help in the teaching, but the expenses for the maintenance of the students, taxes, etc., have to be paid by subscriptions from friends of the work. The Spanish brethren and parents of students do what they can. This year we have had a falling-off in the subscriptions, and the number of students has increased. About £50 will enable us to tide over all our difficulties.

SOCIÉTÉ ÉVANGÉLIQUE DE FRANCE.

With the end of March another year of this Society's work closes. The report for 1896 is full of interesting details of the activity of the band of workers. France, in these troubled times, needs the Gospel more than ever. The help England gives, however, seems to be gradually declining. We see our deficiency increasing every year, and it now reaches the sum of £960.

I have, at the request of our committee, left my work at Brive (Corrèze) to help the general work of the Society. Brive is not abandoned; the three towns of Brive, Tulle, and Aurillac have become stations of our Society, and there is a faithful worker in each. Our stations are very far from each other, and the intervening country needs to be evangelised by itinerant work. I should like myself to help in that work, and many of our agents are qualified for it. If it is in the power of some of our friends to send us help towards this itinerant work I should be very glad.

We have still complete freedom in France to evangelise, to spread the Gospel all over the country; let us work while it is called to-day, and let us think of the noble aim which we have before us to bring France to Christ.

CYPRUS.

I have been spending a happy Easter-tide in Cyprus, and enjoying the beautiful coast and land scenery in the northern district of the island, looking its loveliest at this time of the year. I have been staying at the little mission hospital at Kyrenia, which was started by Mr. C. E. Newton, of Mickieover, Derby, about five years ago, and where a very real, though quiet, work for Christ is being faithfully carried on.

There are wonderful openings for mission work amongst the Cypriotes, but the labourers are few, and there is little evangelistic work being done in this island. Cyprus seems specially to call to English Christians, as the government of the country is entrusted to England. The natives chiefly belong to the Greek Church, or are Mohammedans, and are feeding upon "husks," instead of "the Living Bread" entrusted to us to give them.

It has been laid upon the hearts of a few Christians to invite a Greek evangelist and his wife from Smyrna to come and hold Gospel meetings in the towns and villages throughout Cyprus. It is believed that £30 will be sufficient to defray the cost of bringing the evangelists here, and paying expenses of their tour round place to place on the island. Rev. J. H. Askwith, Christ Church Vicarage, Derby, will answer further inquiries.

NORTH-WEST CANADA.

Many thousands of men and women belonging to Great Britain and Ireland are to be found colonising the magnificent prairie province of Manitoba and the great territories adjoining. The country is a good thousand miles in length, and the same in breadth. Lakes, forests, and immense prairies are to be seen everywhere. The summers are hot and the winters cold. Winnipeg is the largest city with 40,000 people. Other cities and towns vary from 5000 to 10,000, while large and small settlements are scattered over the country. The people are highly intelligent, and making rapid advancement in modern improvements. Manitoba has an energetic and progressive population. Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Assiniboia are vast territories yet to be filled up. There is room here for one hundred millions. Christian work goes on continuously, but for want of means exertion is hindered.

Rev. Alexander Grant, of Winnipeg, who is a veritable apostle of the North-West, is visiting England and Scotland. He is pastor of a large church in Winnipeg, and a great worker in fifty-two other churches and missions among all nationalities. As treasurer (pro tem.) for the Manitoba Missions, I shall be glad to hear from anyone interested in the subject. Large public gatherings and drawing-room meetings are the things we desire.

AMOY CONGREGATIONAL UNION.

The annual meeting was recently held. The number of members of the churches is now more than two thousand. Two thousand more are putting themselves under Christian instruction. Increasing efforts are made to establish efficient schools in all directions. There is a movement for helping aged and infirm native ministers. Doors are open everywhere for the Gospel.

Day by day at the mission meetings there was a great turning of heart to the source of all strength and wisdom. It is felt that our deepest need is for a fuller measure of the life of God. Students leaving the College to begin public work, and new men coming in, were helped by sympathy and prayer.

The important meetings of the Presbyterian Synod are being held at this time.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

Writing from Ichang on March 23, Mr. Beauchamp says:—What a change since 1892; then there was no house; now there is a spacious mission-house, though still unfurnished. We are the first guests. The house here is situated quite in the country, and overlooking the river. Two and a-half years ago there were but four or five European houses; now there are from ten to twenty.

The price of everything has gone up tremendously, and for the first time the cheapness of silver is being felt in inland China. While we get more silver for £1, we are only getting 1150 cash, instead of 1500 for an ounce of silver. This fall is very sudden, and it makes a very serious difference to those who are living in inland China. Those who are supporting individual missionaries ought to be told this, so that they might send a little more than that named as required. Prices are exactly twice what they were this time last year.

CUZCO, PERU.

Once again we are writing from the city of Cuzco, with the prospects of a longer stay and a better issue to our mission than last time. Many friends have welcomed us both here and on the journey. Our position is a difficult one. Denounced from the pulpit, we are watched and suspected by the ignorant class, which here forms the majority. We write to ask the prayers of your readers on our behalf, and for a real, living interest in this neglected land.

JOHN L. JARRETT.

SANTO, NEW HEBRIDES.

Rev. Oscar Michelsen, reporting a visit to the island of Santo, in the new Mission steamer, Day-spring, says:—"We brought five youths for the Teachers' Training Institution. I was very much pleased with the progress made by the students in general, and feel confident that many good men will go forth from this Institution.

"Dr. Annand tells me that they are short both of funds and clothing for these young men, of whom there are about twenty as a beginning. I have no doubt that a mission box containing dungaree or common white trousers, Crimean or flannel shirts, hats or caps, blankets, towels, printed handkerchiefs, small iron brackets, cheap sheath-knives, etc., would be very acceptable. Also good clear print English Bibles, S.S. Union spelling-books, slates, copy-books, and Sankey's hymn books—words only.

"I ought to mention that the Training Institution on Santo is intended to supply the whole of the New Hebrides Mission with teachers or evangelists, as it is also looking to the whole mission for students. Mission boxes for the Institution should be addressed to Dr. Annand, the Principal, and sent to the care of Rev. Dr. Cosh, Balmain, Sydney.

FLORENCE.

Acknowledging the receipt of contributions from our readers in aid of his excellent work, Dr. Comandi writes:—"Our faith is sorely tried, many and many a time, but we realise the faithfulness of our God, who has supplied, and will yet supply, all our needs. A new door for preaching the Gospel is opened to us now, at our farm school close to Fiesole. The opposition is great indeed, and shows that the Church of Rome is still the same as ever.

"Were there no laws to protect us, we are sure they would try to burn our farm. As it is, they do all they can to hinder us. The Pope himself has sent a circular letter to the clergy, authorising them to excommunicate all those who come or have been to our little meetings; and to warn the people not to sell us anything, or to have anything whatever to do with us.

"Some of our workpeople, when looking for employment, had to say that they had been working for us. They were thereupon told that they could return to us, as work elsewhere would be refused them. Yet the people are most eager to listen to the Gospel, and God is bringing home the Word in power."

The address of the Asilo Professionale Evangelico is 6, Via Aretina, Florence.

Home of Industry, Canada.

THOSE kind readers who have followed our seventieth party across the Atlantic with prayer, will read the following details and join us in praise and gratitude to our God and Father for all his loving-kindness and tender mercies.

Those in charge of the party write in reviewing the journey: "It has been goodness and mercy every step of the way. Every official most kind, plenty of room, and very fine intercolonial cars. Plenty of snow, but not cold en route. Now, at the end of our first week in Canadian Home, our party is reduced to twenty. The children, we believe, have gone to good homes, as there was a good choice of places, being an abundance of applications as usual.

"The little baby girl has found a loving mother, a good, Christian woman, who had lost her only child last autumn. She said she must have someone to fill the vacant place. I gave her a choice of the smallest girls, but made the baby look sweet in her pale-blue frock and pretty pinafore. The little thing clung to the father, and at once they took to her. I wish you could have seen them go off with their new-found treasure. We will often see her if spared to grow up, as they often come in to the weekly market of our town.

"I helped one man (continues Mrs. W. Merry) to choose his boy, having found out that he wanted one who would be kind to the missis. So the book or history of their characters was studied, and the boy Hales was chosen, not for his size, but for his kind heart; he has gone to a good home. We now follow them with prayer, and shall watch their onward growth in this land of peace and plenty, and what an exchange, freed from all the drink associations of the old land!"

Our Beehive is again busy, receiving and training another happy family, sowing the good seed that alone produces loving obedience and gratitude, bringing the humblest share in this most blessed work into touch with our Lord and Master, who saith still, "Suffer them to come unto Me."

ANNIE MACPHERSON.

The American Marathi Mission was established in Bombay in 1813. The latest report tells of further retrenchment owing to lack of funds, but alongside this there are very cheering records of work in various centres. The words of a native pastor in one sphere apply very generally to the entire field:—"It is evident that by Christian books and leaflets, by preaching, and by the prayers of God's people, the Holy Spirit is causing the seeds of truth to take root in the hearts of the ungodly. Idolatry, caste, and the ancient rites and customs of Hinduism, are gradually disappearing. The irreligious are beginning to hunger for knowledge, and for a religion. Their hunger and thirst calls for food and water, and we know not what their end will be if they do not receive it." The work is very extensive and thorough—evangelistic, educational, medical, and industrial. It includes special efforts in behalf of women, also itineracy. Copies of the report may be had from the Columbian Press, Satara, Bombay.

Scottish Notes.

THE Countess Schimmelmarm addressed a crowded meeting in the City Hall, Glasgow, last week.

General Booth addressed a largely-attended meeting of the Salvation Army in City Hall, Glasgow, last week.

The agents of the late Miss Georgina Isabella Small, who resided at Downfield, near Dundee, have paid over to the New Orphan Homes, Bristol, the Stockwell Orphanage, London, and the Orphan Homes of Scotland, Bridge of Weir, legacies of £400 each.

During the past fortnight Dr. A. T. Pierson has been addressing deeply-interested audiences in different parts of Scotland, upon Holiness, Bible Inspiration, the Power of Prayer, Christian Stewardship, and Christian Missions. Already Dundee, Aberdeen, Perth, Edinburgh, Dunfermline, and Inverness have been visited. Particularly in Aberdeen and Edinburgh the impression made was of a very deep nature. Dr. Pierson proceeds to Glasgow next, where he will conduct meetings in the Christian Institute and in St. Andrew's Hall. He afterwards visits Stirling, Kirkcaldy, Uddingston, and Hamilton.

The annual gatherings of the Congregational Union of Scotland were held in Glasgow last week, the chairman being Mr. J. R. Sandilands. The great subject of interest before the Union was that of union with the Evangelical Union Church. The act of union was discussed and decided affirmatively at one of the sessions, though a considerable minority was opposed. A joint meeting of the two churches for consummating the arrangement will be held in October. Dr. Fairbairn, in addressing one of the gatherings, suggested that an amalgamation with the English Congregational Union should be brought about.

Great Assembly Hall, Mile End.

THIS hall is the centre of much activity, year in and year out. Its numerous agencies are continually being blessed in the rescue, help, and salvation of men and women. Another month of earnest effort has been put forth for the Master. Mr. Walter Notman, of the Evangelical Society, who is a great favourite with the audience at the Great Assembly Hall, has had marked signs of blessing following his preaching. His faithful, searching utterance of unvarnished truth, delivered with energy and earnestness, makes his hearers feel that he thoroughly believes in the message he is setting forth. The result has been that it has reached the hearts of many.

Mr. Notman's last night saw the body of the hall filled. At the close, many, some from a distance who had casually walked into the hall and been saved, pressed towards the platform, and warmly shook hands with Mr. Notman and bid him God speed.

Distress in Armenia.

Mr. FITZMAURICE, British Vice-Consul, has returned to Constantinople from his mission of investigation in the Biredjik, Orfah, and Bitlis districts of Asia Minor. The reports which he has made to the Embassy, embodying the results of his inquiries, show the existence of a terrible state of affairs in the districts mentioned, especially Orfah, in consequence of the massacres and forced conversions to Islamism that have taken place.

The Turkish Government (says the New York Independent) apparently thinks it can do about as it pleases with American citizens. Mr. Knapp and his family, and that of Rev. R. M. Cole, in Bitlis, are under close guard by Turkish troops, so that the servants are not allowed to go in and out to provide food. Every week comes news of hindrances placed by the Government in the way of those distributing relief; and although this is invariably followed by retraction of the unfavourable orders, still the constant opposition tells. Not a mail comes in but brings the story of some new aggression on the part of the Turkish Government. Our Government protests, and that, so far, is all. To be sure, it is in good company. England, France, Germany, and everybody, except Russia, are and have been for a year the puppets of Turkish and Russian diplomacy. But what a position for the great Christian nations of the world!

THE C.E. Union of Hopkinsville, Ky., has been more than usually aggressive in work "for Christ and the Church." Its latest endeavour is one of far-reaching influence, and a good example of loyalty to the individual church—nothing less than a house-to-house canvass of the entire city by the Endeavourers.

Evangelistic Notes.

Leeds.—On April 30 there was brought to a close a blessed series of meetings in this city, conducted by Mrs. Baeyeretz. Believers were refreshed and stimulated, while the unsaved were lovingly and simply dealt with. A large number professed to accept Christ as their Saviour.

Dr. L. W. Munhall lately conducted a sixteen-day series of meetings in Rochester, N.Y., under the auspices of the Methodist churches of the city. He opened March 18, and closed April 3. They were of intense interest. Fitzhugh Hall, capable of seating 2500, and under stress 3000, was filled at every evening service and frequently hundreds went away. The afternoon meetings grew in attendance from the first, until at the last the hall was filled. The churches were quickened and profited, and many professed conversion.

Greenwich.—It has been my great pleasure during this week to meet and welcome to Greenwich-road Congregational Church Mr. C. Edwards, of the Soldiers' Home, Winchester. His address on "Clocks and Christians," as also those on "The Life and Death Railway"—which were illustrated by means of large pictures—were exceedingly interesting and instructive. I am expecting to hear of decided spiritual blessing received by many, and am sure he would have far larger audiences on a second visit to Greenwich. Geo. Norton, Pastor.

Personalia.

Rev. Robert and Mrs. Wallace arrived safely at the Marchmont Home, Ontario, on April 14, with their large party of 174 children, after a favourable voyage.

Mr. Joseph Cook is getting better, although very slowly. His sight has improved, but so far he is not able to read much. He will never be able to shoulder the burdens which he has borne in the past, but it is hoped that he may do good work yet.

Mr. I. D. Sankey paid a passing visit to Chicago on his way homeward. He addressed and sang at several meetings, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins. In the course of an interview Mr. Sankey stated that Mr. Moody and he were about to conduct a series of Gospel services in Boston.

Miss Frances E. Willard arrived at Southampton on Wednesday last week by the s.s. Paris. She has accomplished a remarkable tour in the Southern States of America during the past winter. She has visited in all twenty states and fifty towns, and has spoken to enthusiastic audiences everywhere.

Dr. Newman Hall has returned from the Continent to his evangelistic work among the churches at home. When in Rome he preached at the Presbyterian Church on Easter Sunday. On the last Sunday evening of his visit he addressed a large company of Roman citizens on "Christian Socialism" in the Central Mission of the earnest evangelist Mr. Wall, who translated. The following day Mr. Wall received a number of inquiring Romans, who desired further instruction.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas A. Bailey, of Edinburgh, sail on Saturday, May 9, for America, to attend the Y.M.C.A. Annual Conference in Cleveland, Ohio, June 5-8. After a tour through America and Canada, they hope to remain in Los Angeles for about a month, proceeding from there to Honolulu and New Zealand, remaining in New Zealand about two months; after which they sail for Ceylon and India, where they hope to reside in India and engage in mission work. Mr. Bailey will act as hon. travelling representative of the English National Council of Y.M.C.A.'s while in India.

The Princess of Wales has appointed Tuesday, June 9, as the date for the opening of the bazaar in aid of the funds of the Hackney and East Middlesex Band of Hope Union.

The Guards' Mission.—In his report for last year of the work carried on at 58, Hugh-street, Ebury Bridge, Pimlico, S.W., Sergeant Pullinger says:—Four meetings are held weekly. We are happy to say that the military attendance has been most encouraging, and the men have been much interested in the Bible-teaching. One man of the 1st Coldstream Guards, when leaving the meeting one evening, said "how very thankful he was to have such a place to come to." To another, I said, "We are always glad to see you"; his reply was, "I am always glad to come, I feel I cannot stop away now." During the past year we have endeavoured to get different brethren to address the Wednesday evening meeting, and we have found it to be very successful. During the past year I have again been permitted to conduct 103 Gospel services in different parts of the country.

Obituary.

REV. ISAAC BRITAIN.

THIS worker died at Harrogate on April 22. For many years he was familiar to the people of Harrogate, as he went about visiting the sick or distributing tracts and booklets, many of them written by himself. In them the "old fashioned" Gospel was given with great clearness, mingled with numerous instances of its application to the needs of various individuals he had met in the course of a long life of ministerial work. Born in Warwickshire eighty-two years ago he left it as a lad to begin teaching in Yorkshire. Passing thence to the C.M.S. College at Islington his health gave way at the end of his four years' course, and he was obliged to give up hopes of mission work abroad. Thereafter, in the Isle of Man and in various parts of Yorkshire, he laboured faithfully and successfully.

W. D. D.

REV. E. A. SALL.

On March 22 Rev. Ernest Augustus Sall fell asleep in Jesus at the ripe age of seventy-six, after a long life spent in the service of his Lord at home and abroad. Converted under the ministry of Mr. Hackett, of Dublin, when a young man studying for the army, he devoted his life to the foreign mission field. This action gave great offence to his family, who felt that he was throwing up all chance of "advancement" in life. He continued his studies, feeling sure the Lord would definitely lead him out, and soon a call came to him in Newfoundland. He went there in 1844, and the same year met the lady who through fifty long years was his loving helpmeet, and who passed away only four weeks before him, leaving a record of patient endurance through intense suffering lasting for fifteen years.

After fifteen years' labour in the mission field, he was obliged to return to England on account of partial loss of sight. After a few years' rest he again sailed, with his wife and part of his family, for mission work for Panama, as the snows of the North were pronounced fatal to his sight. He was obliged to return after two years, partly from failure of Mrs. Sall's health, and spent the rest of his life in England, the greater part of it as vicar of Dolphinholme, Lancaster.

DR. WILLIAM LOCKHART.

This venerable servant of Christ has passed away at the ripe age of eighty-five, at his residence, Granville Park, Blackheath. He was, as we stated in a sketch of him given in 1891, the first Protestant medical missionary to China, and had a large share in opening that country to Christian influence. His settlement there dated from 1838. He attempted to commence medical work in Macao, but in consequence of the hostility of the Portuguese he was compelled to desist and withdraw. He next visited Chusan, in the hope of being able to commence work there, but ultimately in 1843 he got to the newly-opened port of Shanghai, where he laboured with great success until 1857, when he returned to England on a visit. In 1861 he went back to China and commenced the first Protestant mission in Peking, obtaining the privilege of settlement in the Imperial city in consequence of his official position as physician to the British Embassy, which was established there in that year. His volume, "A Medical Missionary in China," published in 1860, was full of interesting details of his work, especially during the war with this country, throughout which he heroically stuck to his post. Though his active work as a missionary ceased in 1864, he kept up a vivid interest in missionary enterprise, and did all he could to help it on, acting as a director of the London Missionary Society and President of the Medical Missionary Society. Those who knew him will long miss his kind and genial presence. With him has passed away one of those who are fitted both by nature and grace to become pioneers in a great cause. He had collected during his long and active life a very remarkable and valuable library of Chinese books and of works upon China and the East in all the principal languages of Europe. These he presented to the L.M.S. three years ago. Dr. Lockhart married in 1841, Miss Catherine Parkes, the sister of Sir Harry Parkes, the well-known H.M. Minister to China and Japan, who proved a valuable helper in the mission field, and who still survives him.

Requests for Prayer.—For great blessing upon meetings to be held in Greenock during May and June, by Robert McLean, of the Evangelization Society.—For blessing on tent work this season in the counties of Aberdeen, Banff, Elgin, and Kincardine, carried on by the Gordon Evangelistic Mission.—For blessing on a three weeks' mission at Miss Sarah Robinson's "Hut," Burley, Ringwood, by Mr. Monro Collings.—For a seven days' mission to be held by Mr. Henry Lakin in Southport, May 9 to 16.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Rev. R. B. Harrison, late of Florence, has been appointed to Newington.

Canon and Mrs. McCormick celebrated their silver wedding at Highbury last week.

The Bishop of Newcastle has begun the practice of preaching to the inmates of Hospitals and Unions.

The Sons of the Clergy Festival took place on Wednesday week. The service at St. Paul's was attended by a large congregation.

The Western Times of Exeter announces that the Ritualistic Mother Superior of St. Wilfrid's Home, Exeter (a Miss Baylis), and two of the sisters in that Home have seceded to the Church of Rome.

Many will be sorry to learn that the Bishop of Mackenzie River, N.W.T., Canada, has met with a great misfortune. A fire recently broke out in the mission, completely destroying the house and nearly all its contents.

In connection with the Church Pastoral-Aid Volunteers, a band of open-air workers has been formed, qualified and willing to visit Evangelical parishes on the invitation of the clergy for the purpose of conducting open-air meetings.

A drawing-room meeting was held at Rayleigh House, Chelsea-embankment, on Tuesday week, in aid of the funds of St. Mary's Home, Chelsea, which stretches out a helping hand to young girls, chiefly under twenty years of age, who have fallen for the first time.

Rev. F. J. Chavasse, Principal of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford, recommended his Greek Testament readings to University men on Sunday, April 26, the Iron Room in New Inn Hall-street being crowded. He proposes to take this term as his subject, "The Ministry of the Risen Lord" (John xx. and xxi).

The income of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society for the year ended March 31, 1896, was £32,105, and the expenditure £35,683. The Society has fifty-three stations in India, eight in China, and one in Ceylon, and its staff numbers 276 missionaries and assistant missionaries, and 637 native Bible-women, teachers, and other workers.

Arrangements have been made for a public meeting of the friends and supporters of the society to be held in the large hall of Sion College, Victoria Embankment (close to Blackfriars Station), on Tuesday, May 19, at 3 p.m., to welcome Rev. W. Hay Aitken and his fellow workers on their return from their mission tour in Canada and the United States.

The exact amount of the C.M.S. deficit is stated as follows in the society's periodicals:—There is a deficit on the year's working of £15,897. To this must be added the deficit of 1894-5, viz., £1,422, making a total deficit of £17,319, towards which there is a sum of £250 in the Contingency Fund, leaving a deficit of £17,069 to be carried forward to the next year.

The Liverpool Courier has a very suggestive article on Church Reform in the matter of patronage, in which attention is directed to the condition of things prevailing in the Established Church of Scotland. Since 1874 the members of that Church have had a voice in electing a minister. The Courier is of opinion that the man that has worked so well in Scotland would have the same result in England.

Congregational.

Elstead Chapel, Surrey, has celebrated its jubilee.

Rev. John Yonge, pastor of Wycliffe, Warrington, is seriously ill.

Emmanuel Church, Leicester, reports 520 scholars in the Sunday-school.

Ministers are to be sent out to Ridgemount and Brixton Hall, Jamaica.

Mr. Donald Fraser has commenced his ministry at West Clayton-street, Newcastle.

The English Chapel Building Society reports help rendered last year in twenty-one cases.

Dr. Barrett's Church, Princes-street, Norwich, has devoted the result of a week's self-denial to the Colonial Missionary Society. The result was £25.

The Centenary Fund of the London Missionary Society having more than reached the anticipated £100,000, steps are being taken permanently to raise the income of the Society.

Rev. Leonard J. Thacker, of the Colonial Missionary Society, reports his arrival in the Kat River Settlement, and reception on April 3 by the church at Philipstown. About forty members of the church came out on horseback as far as Seymour to greet their new minister.

Rev. R. Westrop, lately pastor of Belgrave Chapel, Leeds, has intimated his acceptance of the "call" from Westminster Chapel, London. He hopes to enter upon his new duties on the last Sunday in May. The work before him will be of a congenial character. There are, besides the usual morning and evening services in the chapel, and much week-day work, two P.S.A.'s to look after—one for women, held in the chapel on Sunday afternoons, with an attendance of 500; the other for men, held at the same time in Westminster Town Hall.

Rev. T. Scott, of Cheadle, to Olney; Mr. John Simpson to Longworth; Rev. J. H. Patterson, of Kendal, to Bath-lane, Newcastle; Rev. W. Jones, of Baglitt, to Rhosymedre.

Rev. Dr. H. A. Stimson, of Broadway Tabernacle, New York.

Baptist.

Dronfield Chapel has celebrated its jubilee. There are now 159 members.

Rev. Timothy Richard expected to leave China about the end of March for India, whence he proposed returning to this country.

Rev. A. Carey Nuttall, son of Rev. Levi Nuttall, of South Africa, and formerly of Ogden, commenced his ministry at Morecambe on Sunday.

Fillebrook, Leytonstone, reports 446 members. In the Sunday-school are 361 scholars, of whom fifty-four are members of the church.

Memorial-stones have been laid of a new chapel and schools at Morley, near Leeds, for the congregation that since 1874 has met in the Tabernacle.

A challenge banner, offered by Mr. F. G. Admitt, J.P., to the school coming out best in average in the recent Scriptural examination held by the Northampton Sunday School Union, has been won by Olney School.

At Dartford, Kent, Pastor H. Spenderow sat on Monday week in his vestry from seven a.m. to nine p.m. for the purpose of receiving "thank-offerings," to be applied to the renovation of the chapel. The amount received reached £80. During the day a series of ayer-meetings were held.

The Baptist Missionary Society has profited by the rise in the value of Consols. A large proportion of the Centenary Fund, which was raised two years ago to commemorate the society's centenary, was invested in Consols, which have been sold at a profit of £100, and the proceeds invested in Metropolitan Consolidated Stock.

Rev. W. Walker, of Brentwood, to Barrow-in-Furness (accepted); Rev. Sandy Kent, of Bradford, to Colne; Mr. D. Walker, to Maze Pond, Old Kent-road (accepted).

Rev. W. H. Elliott, of Maryport, Cumber-land.

Methodist.

A Sisterhood is to be established at Leeds, with Brunswick House as its headquarters.

The membership of Wesley's Chapel, City-road, which in 1892 stood at 478, is now 838, with 148 on trial.

The Primitive Methodist Mission Van continues its tour in East Anglia. Within the last few weeks it has visited nineteen villages.

New chapels have been opened at Guiseley, Northfield (Rotherham), Burton-on-Trent, Pudding'n (Cheshire), Faringdon, Abersychan, and Oxford-road (Reading).

The Bishop of Ripon was present on Sunday week at the afternoon meeting of the South London Mission in Bermondsey Town Hall, and offered prayer during the service.

The Jubilee Mission Car (United Methodist) is making its way through the North of England, doing evangelistic work en route. A large quantity of healthy literature is being sold.

The Clapton Mission reports that during the past year 11,500 free breakfasts were given to poor children, 13,000 articles of clothing were distributed, 1200 cases were medically assisted, and 400 accommodated at the Home of Rest.

The Wesleyan Eastern Annual Conference in the West Indies has just been held. The statistics show that there are 22,756 church members within the jurisdiction of the Conference, with 1340 on probation. This is a decrease of nearly 800 on the previous year.

The present position and prospects of Methodism, in view largely of the falling-off shown by the recent census, formed the subject of a conference at a special meeting of Methodist ministers last week. Rev. C. H. Kelly maintained that class membership is not a fair test of church membership. A large number took part in the discussion, but no definite issue was arrived at.

The Wesleyan Missionary Committee will hold this day, at the Mission House, Bishopsgate, an In Memoriam service in connection with the deaths of the eminent missionaries who have recently died—Revs. David Hill, of China; Josiah Hudson, of Mysore; Bryan Roe, of Western Africa; and A. Romilly Ingram, of India. The service will be conducted by Rev. Dr. Jenkins.

Presbyterian.

Rev. R. W. Wilson has entered on his new charge at Dudley.

Principal Caird, who has been confined to his room for some time, is very much better.

The ninth anniversary of Rev. S. D. Scammell's pastorate at Chatham has been celebrated with much interest.

A new church, said to be the largest in the North of England, is to be opened on May 24, by Principal Dykes, in Newcastle.

Dr. McGaw's address before the Synod last week took a very hopeful view of the progress of Presbyterianism. Yet he went on frankly to confess that the Presbyterians of England "had not undertaken as much aggressive work among the masses of the home heathen as we ought to have done." "In all our great centres of population," he said, "there are thousands of men and women who have 'no hope, and are without God in the world,' that are never reached by our congregational missions, nor by any similar agency. Yet there are hundreds of our Church members who are not regularly engaged in any special form of Christian service."

Rev. Dr. Raitt, formerly of Woolwich, to St. George's, Southwark; Rev. R. H. Fisher, of Jedburgh, to Nest Church, Aberdeen; Rev. D. Matheson, of Tarbat, to Lochgilphead; Rev. H. R. Davies, to Machynlleth.

Rev. J. W. Pearson, of Earle-road, Liverpool; Rev. A. Anderson, of Carlisle.

Society of Friends.

Mary Ann Marriage Allen, of London, is doing good work in Baltimore, U.S.A., and also finding fruit from the seed sown by her in former years.

The Friend gives the names of twenty-three women Friends who are members of Boards of Guardians, or District Councils. They are to confer together during the coming yearly meetings.

California yearly meeting was held late in March, at Whittier, and showed an increase of ten per cent. on its membership. Only thirty-seven out of a membership of 1359 use tobacco. Religious instruction and Christian Endeavour enterprise are telling for good on young Friends.

Sussex, Surrey, and Hampshire quarterly meeting has just adopted a series of resolutions in line with other Non-conformist bodies with reference to the education question. The Bill at present before Parliament is condemned for four weighty reasons, and cannot have the support of sound unsectarian educationalists.

The Friend of last week gives the last address, delivered at Didsbury, of the late John T. Dorland, and One and All, issued on the same day, gives a synopsis of the funeral addresses on the 21st ult. The loss of such a devoted and able worker is deeply and universally felt, and truly imposes on others increased responsibility.

Fallen Asleep.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

BY general consent our country is now enjoying a revival of trade and commerce. This will bring relief of pressure to many classes, but it will also bring strong temptation to irreligion. There will be more pleasure-seeking and more indulgence in animal appetites; the drink trade will go up with a bound. The tendency of prosperity to make men careless and forgetful of God is manifest in prominent individual cases, and is also written large on certain portions of our history. Sir J. R. Seeley says that the whole successful development in commerce which culminated in the treaty of Utrecht secularised and materialised the English people as nothing had ever done before. Never were sordid motives so supreme, never was religion, and every high influence, so much discredited as in the thirty years that followed.

A certain part of this prosperity and corruption and ungodliness came from the slave trade. It was, however, the time when God, in his mercy, raised up Whitefield and Wesley, and sent them forth to preach his Gospel to all the English-speaking people, so counter-acting the evil of material things. It will be for the churches to strive and draw men away from the things which are seen to the things that are not seen, to the eternal and spiritual world.

Husbandmen understand the times and the seasons, the effect upon the soil and upon the fruits of the earth of summer heat and winter cold. It would be well if all Christians had as good an understanding of the seasons through which the Great Husbandman causes their souls to pass. Most of us would prefer raptures of piety, the warm, bright, stimulating days; and, no doubt, these have their uses. But, as William Law reminds us, seasons of coldness and spiritual desolation may also be often good, even better for the soul than the other, as producing a more entire dependence on God than could otherwise be obtained. It is the old, old conduct of men. "When He slew them, then they sought Him; and they returned and inquired early after God. And they remembered that God was their Rock, and the high God their Redeemer. Nevertheless, they did flatter Him with their mouth, and they lied unto Him with their tongues." How often has even the truest heart proved its inconstancy and the need for the discipline of the cold, trying days, when every flower is hidden, and every voice is silent; for then it betakes itself to God with fresh earnestness.

The Daily News, in a high-toned article on the Companies Bill before the House of Lords, points out that there is a dangerous spirit abroad in commercial affairs. Capitalists great and small are showing a tendency to trade and speculate without personal risk, and to act as though the ignorant and trustful portion of the public are fair game for those who can manipulate the market to suit their own interests. The law is at present full of opportunity for those imbued with this spirit to take advantage of their fellow-creatures, and it is with a view to remedy this evil that the present Bill is brought forward. Those portions of it, however, which aim at forcing all limited liability companies to publish a yearly balance-sheet, after the manner of the public banks, are being strenuously opposed in Committee. We hope that, in spite of this, the provision will be passed, for publicity in these matters injures no one but those who have something to conceal. "A great opportunity," as The Daily News says—has now come for doing something that will check the abuses which recent disclosures have brought to prominence, and above all to restore public confidence in the possibility of honest and useful joint-stock enterprise on a large scale. To do that would be to turn our rapidly-growing stores of unused capital into fresh and productive channels, so that money would become more and more the promoter of wealth rather than of "illth."

But is there not something also to be said to the "ignorant and trustful portion of the public" in whose interests this publicity is being sought for? Is not the root of the evil in the passion for wild and reckless speculation in the hope of profits and rises in the market, which is so marked a feature in the present day? The desire to become rich without effort, and to purchase ease without industry, is ominously on the increase among those who have a little spare money. This is not only an unhealthy but an immoral principle; and those who venture on the Stock Exchange for this reason, and not for the sake of genuine investment, deserve much of the treatment they receive at the hands of dishonest company-promoters and City sharks. Something deeper than a change in the law is wanted to cure this evil; we want a more real acknowledgment of the responsibilities of property, and a deeper sense of the sacredness of money. For lack of this, the most stringent laws and regulations must in the end prove futile.

The surprise of the House of Commons and of the press at the second reading of the Sunday Closing Bill brought vividly to mind the fact that more things are wrought by prayer than either Parliament or the press dreams of. There was prayer on the part of many for this consummation to be reached. The press says the Bill will get no further. It may, or it may not. Combinations of circumstances and of parties may arise which, as on May 6th, may send it forward in spite of all that "the trade" can do to stop it. Its friends acted with consummate tact on the last occasion, and its foes were all abroad in the neglect of over confidence, and a similar thing might happen again; or something quite different may occur, but quite as helpful. The Lord can save by few as well as by many. Let our eyes be up unto Him from whom cometh our help.

The extraordinary statement of Sir John Gorst in speaking in Parliament on the Education Bill last week that such a text-book as Mr. Gace's Catechism could be taught in a Board School, on the ground that it was "not distinctive of any religious denomination," is one that ought not to pass without a vigorous protest from all who desire to keep the religious difficulty out of the educational controversy. We feel bold to affirm that there are very few Church schools, let alone Board Schools, where such an insult to the common sense of the community could be perpetrated without a storm. This Catechism openly refers to Dissenters as "heretics," to their worship as "idolatrous," to their religious attitude as a "sin," and "in direct opposition to our duty towards God"; and suggests that the only reason why Dissenters have not been excommunicated is "because the law of the land will not allow the wholesome law of the church to be acted upon." To call this teaching "unsectarian" is to empty the word of any real meaning; and to suggest that it would be possible to teach such wicked and uncharitable lies in our Board Schools is fortunately too absurd to need refutation. But for the minister of the Crown who is responsible for the Education Bill to make such a slip is almost beyond belief.

Once more we appear to be threatened with an attempt to revive the C. D. Acts both at home and in India. Statements are made in the press as to the serious spread of disease among the troops in India, and questions are asked in Parliament intended to produce the feeling of alarm on which this kind of legislation always rests. No doubt the state of the army in India is bad, is disgraceful, and nothing else could be expected after the indulgence given to our men under the Cantonment Regulations, and the way in which we implicitly taught them that vice is not vice so long as it entails no physical consequences. It seems as if our young soldiers regarded India as the land where moral restraints are not known. Can our rulers and our army authorities not think of something else than immoral regulations for beating back a disease which never comes but as the consequence of immorality? Our experience in England is opposed to the method suggested, and so also is the last report of the Indian Sanitary Commission. The method has friends in the Cabinet, in the Government, in the House of Commons, but if it be revived, then the full strength of the churches must be directed against it.

It is doubtful if Rev. B. Waugh really helped the children's cause when he said before the Earl of Denbigh's Committee on Infant Life Protection, "I should put the child's life before morality." He was speaking in favour of a system of baby-farming wisely conducted, and was reminded by the chairman that there are some people who contend that such a system would be putting a premium upon immorality. Now Mr. Waugh must know perfectly well that any system which is immoral—we are not arguing that the system in question is so—could not in the long run be other than hurtful to the children. You cannot break moral law, and at the same time keep it; you cannot violate principle, and retain a tender heart; in other words, you cannot do good by doing evil. Such extreme and reckless words as Mr. Waugh spoke, injure a good cause and discredit a useful man.

"Pulpit topics of To-day" forms the subject of an interesting article in the Sunday Magazine. The writer took the trouble to obtain the texts and themes of a great many preachers during the last twelve or eighteen months. Out of 1,500 texts examined, more than 1000 were taken from the New Testament, and half of these were from the four Gospels, and of these, again, the greater number are from St. John. There is no evidence of any "run" upon certain passages; there are no favourite texts. The choice of text is often made for the purpose of arresting of attention, but the old-fashioned method of choosing a text merely as a motto seems to have died out. Topics referring to the person, ministry, and mediatorial work of our Lord are the greatest in number; next come doctrinal and expository topics; next those referring to Christian service and consecration; and then come 120 topics referring to social questions. Strange to say, only twenty deal with prayer, and stranger still, only fifteen "refer directly to the subject of the Holy Spirit." There is no trace of apologetic, prophetic, or controversial sermons.

That so few sermons should be preached directly on the Holy Spirit, may be owing to one of two causes, either that in the ordinary exposition of the Scriptures his ministry and work are always implied, or referred to as necessary to give effect to the truth, or because there is no sense of the need of his aid. Even if the cause be the former, it is well that attention should be called to the necessity for direct teaching. Many may be relying on in their own strength, whose whole life and spirit and experience would be changed if they realised that they had the ministry of the Spirit as a continual help. They would see more of the glory of Christ and more of the treasures of his grace if they turned to Him remembering that the Spirit will bear witness of Him and glorify Him. They would pray more intelligently and more acceptably, i.e., more successfully, if they prayed with the consciousness that the Spirit maketh intercession for us. Everyone who knows anything of the secret of prayer knows how, on his knees, he obtains light and revelation and comfort and courage such as never come to him elsewhere. The Spirit is always with us to help our infirmities, and preachers will be opening a new fountain to their congregations if they point out to them the greatness of Christ's gift when He ascended up on high.

While the religious and denominational papers are full of stirring appeals for missionary funds, some of the evening papers continue to raise the prior question as to the rights of missions to make any claims at all on the purses and hearts of the public. The very fact that this is being done so persistently, shows that there is a real problem here. One correspondent, after stating that he had been brought up to feel the claims of missions, and having in the "days of his inexperience" really felt them, gives his reasons why he has seriously ceased to have any interest in them. These are, briefly, home claims, especially such as arise from the poverty and destitution of the less fortunate classes; and secondly, the fact that there is such an enormous amount of moral destitution and evil in the world immediately around us, which should presumably be remedied first, before we go into other lands to convert the heathen.

The answer of the Church of Christ to this view of the case is simple and sufficient. As to the destitution and want which are only too real a fact in the community, we say that while this ought not to be neglected by those who are followers of the "Good Physician," the command to go to the whole world with the Gospel should not be set aside by the claims of the poor and needy. "These things ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone." As to the lamentable state of morals in the midst of the city that is the centre of missions for the whole world, we recognise that this is at least not for lack of better teaching, or of the opportunity of salvation; and we find that our Lord's injunction is clear that when we are rejected in one city, we are to take the message of salvation to another.

The Church is not to wait for one country to be entirely converted before we announce the Gospel to the rest of the world, but to bring the offer of salvation within the reach of all. We cannot force men to be saved, but we can at least tell them of the Saviour. These are our "marching orders." Besides, it has frequently been demonstrated that the success of mission work at home is in direct proportion to the fidelity with which the people of God carry out the Lord's command in sending and taking the Gospel to the heathen nations of the earth.

It is often assumed that Jesus came to the world to save men from suffering, as though that were the chief evil under which they labour. He came for a deeper purpose. Suffering is not in itself an evil. It has too large a place in the organisation of Nature to be so. Underneath all the suffering of the world there are worse evils. Pain is always symptomatic; it is Nature's bugle-call to battle with a mischief that lies beneath itself. It was to save men from this underlying trouble that Jesus came into the world. From sin and moral wrong He would save us, and not from anything less. Suffering is a part of his redemption machinery, an instrument of chastening and discipline for character. It is true that in heaven "sorrow and sighing shall flee away," and "there shall be no more pain." But that is because there will be in heaven no wrong, no sin. When that is done away with, suffering will cease, because its work is done.

It would be well if we remembered this in our almsgiving. Because suffering is thought to be the root of the poverty and want in the world, we often think we have done our part in relation to these, when we have given away a few doles and relieved a few cases of distress. The truer philanthropy goes back to the causes of the poverty, and forward to its prevention. It asks, "What brought this poor man to this pain?" and "What can we do to improve him as well as his conditions, so that he may avoid it in future?" It aims in a word at the remedy of the subjective causes of poverty, and endeavours to regenerate character as well as circumstances. This is the only true method, and it was Christ's method, who always correlated faith with healing, and forgave sins in the same breath as He bestowed succour.

A Moribund Church.

By DR. ALEX. MACLAREN.*

These things saith He that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars.—Rev. iii. 1.

LET us try to understand what sort of a church it is of whom these words were spoken. Properly speaking, the church at Sardis was no sort at all, for it was dead. One smiting word stands in the place of all characterisation—DEAD! It had no persecution, like the faithful band at Smyrna. Why should it? It had not life enough to be obnoxious. What was there in such a church as that to provoke any antagonism? It exactly suited the world's purpose, and was, in fact, only a bit of the world under another name. So it is not always a good thing that Christian churches should stand well in the opinion of society. Some of you earnest people in London of late years, like some of us in Manchester, have learned that if we begin to apply the Gospel to social evils, to municipal evils, and to political evils, the old antagonism wakes, and the old words (they are only words now; they used to be rotten eggs and something else) are flung at us. A dead church is on the best possible terms with a dead world.

This church at Sardis had no heresies; it had not life enough to grow them. When an iron frost binds the ground, weeds and flowers alike cease to be put forth. There is a worse condition than when many people are thinking earnestly about religion and some of them are thinking wrongly. There may be a very clean bill of health for the ship if all the crew are dead. So the church at Sardis had no heretics because there was nobody in it that cared enough about the principles of Christianity to think earnestly about them. And it had no immoralities either. It was most respectable and stood high in all the common moralities of life. Yet One Eye looked at it and said, "Thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead."

About how many of our churches, and of individuals who take up the profession of Christ, and connect themselves with ecclesiastical arrangements, may the same be said. If we want to understand what the deadness predicated of this Sardian church was, let us remember that the words are Christ's own. Let us interpret them by his own words in John's Gospel, of which the very keynote is this, that life is a condition of union with Jesus Christ; and death is the grim alternative that waits upon separation from Him. This church had lost the tenacity of its hold upon, and the intimacy of, its union with Jesus Christ. Its thoughts had no clear operative perception of Him, his will, his truth, his love. Its life had been clogged and alienated from Him, and so it became flaccid and feeble. Its communion with Him had been interrupted, and the separation had wrought its necessary effects. Down, down, ever deeper down, into the depth and darkness of the cold grave, a body of people that had once been vitalised by the touch of Him, had sunk. Wherever an individual Christian or a Christian community loses the simplicity and tenacity of its grip of Jesus Christ, the life ebbs out of it.

Note further, that such a condition is not final and irreversible. The very fact that the letter came to that community indicated that it was possible to restore and revive. They were not so truly dead as moribund. In another part of the letter we read about "the things which remain," and about the works that were done and were not perfected or fulfilled. Effects last after causes cease, and institutions live when all the reality is out of them. Habit, use and wont, forms and ceremonies, keep up an appearance of vitality when the life is almost gone.

In thousands of our communities there is enough left of the effect of the primitive impulse to keep up a ghastly mockery of life which would be far better if it knew itself to be what it is—dead. Such a condition may be absolutely concealed from every eye but the eyes that are as a flame of fire. "Thou hast a name that thou livest." Translate that into nineteenth-century English—"That congregation has a high reputation in its denomination for activity, liberality, and the Christian graces." How many of our communities are LIVING ON THE PAST.

John Wesley is a great name, but you cannot always live on the fact that once John Wesley was with you. The church that is resting on its traditions and its former victories had better be carried out of the way as soon as possible.

It is not only to outside observers that the reputation of forms and ceremonies masks the dying-out of the spiritual life. Nobody would be more astonished at this word of the Faithful Witness than were the people at Sardis who were affected by it. Unconsciousness is the surest sign of spiritual decline. I suppose a man paralysed has no sense in his limbs, and might put his foot into a tub of scalding water that would take the flesh off the bones and he would never know it. Frost-bitten limbs are perfectly comfortable; it is the wakening that pains. I beseech you to remember that unless we all make definite, specific, prayerful, continuous effort to retain our grasp of Christ we shall slacken our grasp and let Him go. What is it that in the course of ages has blurred into indistinctness, the sharp-cut granite features of the sphinx that looks out over the Egyptian desert? The perpetual attrition of microscopic grains of sand blown against it by the vagrant winds. So the multitudinous trivialities of life, coming in contact with the image of Jesus Christ in our hearts, will efface its fair features.

Look now for a moment at the vision which such a Church needs. "He that hath the seven spirits of God and the seven stars." Here we have a distinct reference to the personal Spirit of God conceived of in the manifoldness of his operations rather than in the unity of his personality. There is —a living Spirit in the sevenfold perfectness of his working. He is the Spirit of consolation, of adoption, of supplication, of holiness, of wisdom, of power, of love and of a sound mind. Into all our deadness there will come the life of the breath which shall surely quicken it all. Here only, as it seems to me, is the hope of a dead Church; and here is the explanation of that which is unique in the history of Christianity as compared with other religions, its power of self-recuperation. When it is apparently nearest extinction, in a marvellous and miraculous way it flames up again, because the Spirit of the Lord is all potent.

THE ANTIDOTE FOR A DEAD CHURCH

But the text brings into prominence not so much the existence and operations of the Divine Spirit that vitalises the Church, as the continual energy and activity of the ascended Christ in bestowing that Spirit. Here is the differentia of Christianity, and of the relation of its Founder to his followers, separating Him and them from all disciples of other schools and followers of other teachers. What can other teachers do? They can impart a system; they can train a little group of dwindling imitators (who generally imitate their weakness and think they are imitating their strength); but to give them the spirit that animated the Originator is what none of them can do. But Jesus said, "If I depart I will send Him unto you." And that is the promise which the average Christianity of to-day by no means treats as the literal and all-important thing that it really is. I would press upon you, who with me look to the Christ who died, as on his Cross having wrought the redemption of the whole world, not to let that great fundamental doctrine obscure, as in some popular evangelicalism it does obscure, the truth, to which it is the vestibule—the truth of the Christ who is in us by his Spirit, to make us partakers of the fulness of his own life and of the beginnings of his own holiness. We have to look back to the Cross, but we have to feel that our salvation is not all secured by that past fact, considered as a past fact, but needs further the

CONTINUOUS ENERGY OF THE LIVING CHRIST and the continuous giving forth of the life-giving Spirit.

I see many brethren in the ministry here; will you suffer a word of exhortation? The only way for us to keep ourselves living, and communicators of life, is to keep ourselves in thought, in heart, and in purpose close to Jesus Christ. "Stars" we may be, but only planets who move around the central Sun and shine by the brightness borrowed from Him. So my last word will be to ask you to gather together the plain practical lessons that I have been trying to set before you. Let them shame us into penitent consciousness of our own deadness; so much life waiting to be bestowed, and our veins so scant of it. Let this vision hearten us when we are conscious of our deadness; let it stir us to ask ourselves why it is that we have not more life. There are three things needed for life—food, air, and exercise. For food you have got Christ, the Bread; see that you feed on Him. For air you have got the respiration of prayer; see that you draw the life breath into your veins thereby. For exercise you have got Christian work and daily living, in your shops, your studies, your kitchens, your nurseries, or wherever God's providence sets you; see that you bring your Christianity into operation. There are many professing Christians the verdict over whose dead religion ought to be what sometimes is returned by a coroner's jury—"Found dead in bed."

Let us all go back to Christ for quickening. When Abraham had returned from his escapade down into Egypt, the story tells us he began his new career in the land by going to the place where he was at the first. And that is where we must go; for our spiritual life can only be continued by that which at the first evoked and communicated it.

Stilling the Tempest.

"Master, carest Thou not that we perish?"

FIERCE rages the tempest, far distant the shore.
The storm-clouds of doubt all encompass me o'er;
Tossed hither and thither, how vain is my cry,
The Saviour still slumbers, nor heeds that I die.
Peace, Peace, troubled soul, though the Master's asleep,
His eye never closes, Who Israel doth keep;
Unchanging his love, everlasting his strength,
The prayer, thought unheeded, He'll answer at length.
See, now He awakens, He speaks to the waves,
He cares for his people, He hearkens, He saves;
At voice of its Monarch the tempest shall cease,
And the storm-cloud descend in a shower of peace.
Can'st thou doubt Him again? Be still, anxious soul,
Whom Christ hath delivered, his Spirit makes whole;
O'er the sea of life's sorrows we soon shall have passed,
And rest in the Haven for ever at last.

The Fate of Unwelcome Babes.

THE discovery of the bodies of seven dear children in the bed of the Thames has sent a shudder through the land, but has not surprised some of us whose path of service for God has lain for many years in the byways of vice and crime. May not God, in these shocking disclosures, be calling our attention to a much-overlooked duty, and stirring our hearts to more compassion for betrayed young mothers and their unwelcome babes?

There are some devoted ladies who, with discreet unobtrusiveness, quite unknown to the world at large, and often, alas! through, I believe, misconception as to the need, scope, and effect of their labours, very faintly encouraged, even by their Christian friends, are spending their time and money in leading erring young mothers back to the paths of virtue, and saving precious babes from neglect or murder at the hands of cruel mercenaries, to whom otherwise their bewildered, despairing mothers might be persuaded to entrust them.

There is a becoming delicacy in alluding to such a question as this, even in the most guarded terms, but it is a sad fact that through this reserve these ladies are left struggling on under crushing burdens of care, straining, by the sacrifice of their personal means, and often at the cost of their health, to fill up in some measure what is lacking so generally in Christian compassion and ministry to mother and child at such a sad juncture, and to save both from a fate dark beyond words.

I have been much touched by what has come before me personally of the patient, wise, strenuous labours of a lady who shrinks from all public notice, but will, I trust, for the work's sake, pardon me for mentioning her name, Mrs. Ransome Wallis, who, with the concurrence of her husband, has made their former residence (Vine House, Walthamstow) a haven for perplexed, betrayed girl-mothers, and a nest for unwelcome babes, where they are under the charge of skilled nurses. Situations are found for the mothers, where they can redeem their characters, and not only support themselves honestly, but contribute (as I can testify they gladly do, even beyond their ability) to the maintenance of their infants. Every effort is made to lead the mothers to decision for Christ, and to help them henceforth, by "newness of life," to show that they are indeed "new creatures in Christ Jesus." When they get their monthly holiday they are invited to come to Vine House to spend the day with their babes, and they not only receive Christian encouragement and counsel, but are helped by cookery and needlework lessons to improve their position, and by earning better wages help still more in the support of their little ones.

There are now about fifty mothers and babies under Mrs. Ransome Wallis's wing. The work hitherto has been mainly supported from private resources, in the hope that as it proved its usefulness hearts would be moved to share in the expenses. The outgoings have, however, exceeded the income by about £900. Some, on account of the meagre support given, others on the score of her health, are pressing Mrs. Wallis to give up the effort, but she is clinging to it heroically in faith that God will appear for the continuance of a work which has been such a blessing to so many distracted, deceived mothers and their unconscious, helpless babes.

Recently there has been a grave epidemic of measles, and in spite of every care six of the babies have died. This has, of course, intensified the anxieties under which Mrs. Wallis is struggling, but I am sure many, when they contrast what has been brought to light at Reading with what has been undertaken in God's name at Walthamstow, will come to her help and assure her that in this loving, self-sacrificing ministry she can count upon a heartfelt sympathy and cheerful help. A report can be obtained by applying to Mrs. Ransome Wallis, Copthill, Burgh Heath, near Epsom.

Letters from S. Africa.—17.

A COMMENDATION.

ON arriving at Lovedale I found the following paragraph in The Christian Express for April 1. This paper is not only the organ of this the largest and most important missionary and educational establishment in South Africa, but also "a journal of missionary news and Christian work" generally. It is naturally satisfactory to me to find these letters so spoken of by a journal so well informed and so influential, and I think it is due to my readers to quote the paragraph:—

LETTERS ON SOUTH AFRICA.

It is the fashion nowadays to write much upon South Africa and its people, their habits and their doings. Some letter-writers are manifestly unjust in their estimates of this country, while some are carried away either with patriotic or other prejudice, or with sentimental zeal. But some are sober-minded enough to write only from knowledge, and not from hearsay. Among the latter must be included the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN. This gentleman has made a lengthened stay in the colony, has not rushed through it at post-cart or railway speed—slow for most people's patience as it may be—and has not written upon subjects concerning which he has nothing to write but rumours or prejudice. His letters, therefore, that are appearing in THE CHRISTIAN are worth a score of the ordinary newspaper ones, and are written in such a spirit and with such information as will not only instruct but also elevate their readers. The Institution at Wellington, the Y.M.C.A. at Cape Town, the affairs of the Transvaal Government, Black and White, the Lepers on Robben Island, Genadendal, and other topics have been carefully and soberly discussed by Mr. R. C. Morgan. If one characteristic more than another marks the ideas on these subjects, it is Christian sympathy with the coloured peoples of the South. When the letters are finished, they ought to form a very interesting volume of ideas, facts, and advice upon things South African.

Leaving Johannesburg, a sixteen-hours' ride by rail brought us to Bloemfontein, where my friends found comfortable quarters at the Free State Hotel, while I was kindly entertained by

REV. JAMES SCOTT,

Wesleyan minister, and his hospitable wife—one of those commended by the Apostle as "not forgetful to entertain strangers." The love and praise of this patriarchal pair is in all the churches, and in the hearts of many pilgrims and sojourners who have tarried under their roof on their passage through this chief city of the Orange Free State. Each doing two or more people's work, and up late and early, they nevertheless wear a smiling and unharassed face. Some years ago, those at home attempted to remove Mr. Scott from Bloemfontein; but such a stir was made by the people, that he was obliged to be surrendered to their goodwill, in sublime defiance of the three-years' rule. He is, I doubt not, "a good Methodist," of the most exemplary type; but he is first a cosmopolitan Christian with an expansive heart, large enough to take in all the brethren, and all the world; and in this his helpmate is his true yokefellow.

Notwithstanding his busy life, Mr. Scott found time to show us the principal buildings and other objects of interest, gave me much useful information, and took me to see President Steyn, with whom we had an hour's edifying conversation. He also introduced me to Dr. Brebner, Superintendent-General of Education, with whom and Mrs. Brebner I spent two very pleasant and instructive evening hours. I also called on Mr. Fraser, an able man, who has recently resigned the office of Chairman to the Volksraad (the Legislative Assembly), and who was the second candidate for the Presidency. It was no small advantage to learn from each of these gentlemen their views of South African affairs. In visiting Mr. Fraser I was accompanied by Dr. Robertson, who is coming home from the Blantyre Mission. When he returns thither it will be as a medical officer of the Government.

During our sojourn in Bloemfontein we witnessed a native wedding in the Wesleyan native church; [434]

Mr. Scott officiated, assisted by the native pastor. It is not my forte to describe weddings, therefore I refrain. Suffice it to say, that on this occasion coloured human nature, in the softer sex, vindicated, by similarity of procedure, its identity with the uncoloured variety.

At the invitation of Mr. Scott, two of us inscribed our names as witnesses to the validity of the ceremony.

On Easter Sunday afternoon there was of a highly-esteemed citizen, Mr. Robert Innes, one of the directors of the National Bank; Mr. Scott, his pastor, conducted the service in the church, and the Dutch Reformed minister addressed the people at the grave, of whom about a third were Dutch. It was touching to observe how death suspends the jealousy of race, and how, for the time at least, national emulations are stilled in the presence of the common enemy. Travelling through thousands of uncultivated and uninhabited square miles, one wonders why there should be any jealousy—why Ephraim should envy Judah or Judah vex Ephraim—let Ephraim and Judah stand for whom they may. Lovedale, April 16, 1896. R. Something Missing.

A VERY LARGE FUNERAL

By REV. J. MORLAIS JONES.

CHAIRMAN, CONGREGATIONAL UNION.

TO a crowded audience in the City Temple on Tuesday morning, Rev. J. Morlais Jones delivered his chairman's address at the opening of the sessions of the Congregational Union. We give some of the leading and salient points:—

Material comforts were never so abundant as to-day. Science is making most rapid strides. We think we are banishing mystery and reducing the area of the unknown. We have a keener appreciation than man ever had, both of the sublimity and the quieter beauty of nature. But we chafe and fret nevertheless; we are full of misery and discontent. Complete as life is, it is painfully incomplete. Nature is a poor picture that can satisfy nobody until you put God into it.

So we meet here to-day. We have many things to be proud of. The religious world into which we were born is a rich one. Everyone to-day takes cognizance of Congregationalism. Our pulpits are filled with educated men, our sons hold their own at the Universities. We have colleges that would be an honour to any denomination, served by men without whom no congress of scholars is complete. Our churches are more liberal than they have ever been. And to say this of ourselves is to say it of all Churches. The denominations rival one another in zeal, hard work, and liberality. But we cannot pretend that the Church is telling upon the world as it ought to. We are filled with a divine discontent. There is something missing. Shall I try to give something in the shape of an answer?

FIRST, THE RENEWAL OF THE PURELY RELIGIOUS LIFE OF THE CHURCH.—That must be the preliminary to everything else. We are proud of our societies, hysterically busy in organising guilds, devising new names for old forms of work, and starting fresh crusades. But the tone of religious life is low; God, and fellowship with God, are ceasing to be pathetic needs; the prayer-meeting, which used to be the thermometer by which we measured the temperature of the Church, is fast becoming a tradition, and the ideal Sunday service is getting to be that in which the music and the æsthetics of worship are perfect, and the sermon is not too long.

This revivifying of the Church will come only by earnest, devoted, and constant prayer. The small band upon whom the power of Pentecost broke had been waiting for it "with one accord in prayer and supplication." Do what you will, the fire in the Church will burn down into grey ashes, the very look of which makes you shiver, if you neglect to pray. You may work hard and devise a thousand schemes of stimulating the Church into activity. It will be piling fuel on the fire, but shutting from it the necessary oxygen. Prayer alone creates the atmosphere, ensures the temperature, in which what is the Church's real glory thrives.

Prayer ensures an abundant out-pouring of the Holy Spirit, and to be endowed with the Spirit is to be endowed with power, the power of a full and healthy, a vigorous and buoyant spiritual life, a power which makes me master of my work. I have no law of prayer to offer you, but that it equips you with spiritual power I know. It establishes a connection between the worker and heaven, and a soul filled with the power of God is irresistible.

Having secured that, I am ready to hear the calls, and face the tasks of the hour. And I will try to say what the needs of the hour are. To begin with, A RESTATEMENT OF THE TRUTH GIVEN US TO PREACH.—No one need be afraid. I have nothing revolutionary to say. I fancy I am the most orthodox man in this Assembly, and I plead for that restatement in the name of orthodoxy. Truth is immortal and never changes; but the way of expressing the truth constantly varies. The language of to-day differs from the language of yesterday, and the language of to-morrow may differ from the language of to-day. But it is for us in the language of to-day to express the truth as we see it to-day; and God forbid that we should continue to use language that has ceased to be true to us.

For long years hosts never knew that they benefited by any promise made to man in the Sacred Volume. Theology had covered over some of its grandest promises; pasted "election," "predestination," "a limited atonement," and I know not what, across the richest words of the Book. Driven to re-examine it, scholarship, criticism, and careful reading have discovered that the richest promises, the Divinest offers, have been pasted over—hidden; and we have been tearing off these coverings, sweeping away every device by which a narrow theology had concealed its real wealth. The Book is richer than we ever imagined. Its wealth has staggered us and filled us with fresh hopes.

The Higher Criticism has done pretty much all that it can do. We know now exactly what it has to give us. We stand in the midst of infinite material, the loose stones of our old temple, "our holy and our beautiful house, where our fathers praised Thee." Some of the old stones, perhaps, must not be built into the new wall, but we have rich material out of which a new house, a grander and more majestic than the old, may be constructed. We have been living out in the open air long enough; at best we only dwell in tents. "Let us rise and build!" The form will be different from that of our fathers, but not a stone will be lost. The old setting has been destroyed, but the jewels are all here. Count them: "God is love"; that is one. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved"; that is another. "For there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved"; that is a third. "He that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out"; that also is there. "Of that which Thou hast given Me I will lose nothing, but will deliver it up at the last day." Every jewel there.

In this re-statement a greater place than ever must be given to the Lord Jesus Christ. Jesus exercises a wonderful fascination over men to-day, even over those to whom He has never been what He is to you and me. The world has never been under his spell as at this present moment. In all Christian thinking we have to give Jesus the first place. And you must subordinate everyone and everything to Him. I must add another word. The essence of Jesus is his Cross, and you do not preach Jesus unless you preach that Cross. "God forbid that I should glory save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." We need never be afraid that our ministry may be a narrow, one-sided, or monotonous one because we make that rule of it. You can touch everything from the Cross.

The closing divisions of this eloquent and living deliverance were devoted to an exposition of the right relations between different churches, and to a re-statement of Congregationalism and a definition of its duties.

THE EVANGELIST.

The Stone Jar.

ONE burning hot Sunday afternoon, four rough-looking men, living in one of our large towns, determined to have a quiet tittle among themselves. True the public-houses were all closed, for it was during the prohibited hours, but this presented no serious difficulty to them.

A small form was placed in a narrow passage, which terminated in a high wall, and a stone jar of beer was mysteriously obtained. But they had reckoned without their host, for an earnest Christian worker had come to reside in the neighbourhood, and from one of the windows of his house his quick eye saw and took in the whole situation. He made up his mind, with the help of God, to make an effort to lead these men to Christ. His wife tried to dissuade him from such a rash undertaking, fearing he would be insulted and perhaps brutally treated, but he was determined to go forth in the strength of the Lord; so standing on a chair at the end of the passage, he began to sing a well-known hymn. Soon a crowd of upwards of two hundred people, men, women, and children, gathered round the preacher, while the children and many others heartily joined in the singing. After a short, fervent prayer, he gave a stirring Gospel address, and in it dwelt on the misery caused by indulgence in strong drink, and then affectionately invited the people to accept Christ as their Saviour.

But what about the four men in the passage? At first they looked upon the affair as a joke, and enjoyed it immensely; but when they found egress impossible on account of the crowd, they became uneasy, and wished they had never come there. The stone jar was pushed into a remote corner, and the men tried to tidy themselves a little.

After a while, as no allusion had been made to them in any way, they got interested in the meeting, and at the end of the address each one of them signed the pledge, and all remained afterwards total abstinents, and to all appearances humble Christian men.

The same Christian worker was asked on another occasion to visit a notorious infidel, and was warned to be on his guard as the man had turned both the minister and the missionary out of doors. After much prayer, and in simple reliance upon the power of the Holy Spirit, he determined to go and see him. Fortunately he found the door open, so he went in, and asked kindly if there were any children not attending Sunday-school, as if there were they would be welcomed at a certain school which he named. In a gruff voice he was told to mind his own business, and was ordered out of the house.

Taking no notice of what he heard, he gave the man himself a cordial invitation to attend church, if he did not attend any place of worship, but he was still more fiercely ordered to be off.

"But," said he, "you will allow me to read with you for a few moments before I go?"

"Nay," was the reply, "you shall do no reading here."

"Well, you will allow me to pray with you for a few moments?"

"Nay," was the reply as before, "you shall do no praying here; get out at once."

"But I shall pray for you."

"No you won't," said the man in a great rage.

"But," said the visitor, "I will pray for you as I walk through the street, and I will pray for you when I get home"; and then he warned him of "the worm that dieth not," and of "the fire that is not quenched."

The next day, as the missionary of the district was passing the house, the man was looking out for him, and invited him in, and told him that a stranger had visited him the day before and warned him of "the worm that dieth not," and of "the fire that is not quenched." "Can you," said he, "tell me what it means, for I don't believe he knew what he was talking about."

The missionary was only too glad to read the whole passage to him (Mark ix. 43-48), and to explain its meaning.

The man expressed a desire to see the stranger again, and, when the worker called, he was welcomed and gladly listened to, the result being that the man gave up his infidelity and became a sincere Christian.—"NEW EVERY WEEK" No. 226 (Religious Tract Society.)

THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST.

God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life.

This is the will of Him that sent Me, that everyone which seeth the Son, and believeth on Him, may have everlasting life.

Jesus said: I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand.

What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me? I will take the cup of salvation, and call upon the name of the Lord.

The Evangelization Society.

THE latest report of the Evangelization Society outlines a large amount of work in all parts of the country. In all, 1067 places were supplied by 259 evangelists. The total number of meetings held was 20,572, with an estimated attendance of two million people. The report says:—

"Many of our most successful missions are organised by people without much money or education, who can neither write a report of the work, nor contribute to its expenses, while the audience consists of still poorer people, who are quite unable to pay the expenses of a mission, though they gladly contribute, often with much self-denial, their pence as thankofferings.

"Frequently we receive letters containing a shilling, or some other small sum, from some poor person who has received blessing and help through the Society; these gifts are among those that we love the most. Even while we write there come ten shillings, the contribution of a fisherman, which must be the result of much self-denial, and another ten shillings from a working man who received blessing at a tent mission. He writes:—'Jesus has changed my life from cursing and bitterness to praise and thanksgiving, and the more I know of Him the more thankful I am to Him who died for me, though I despised and rejected Him so many years.'

"Much of our work is carried on in the villages and country districts of our land, both through the tents and through indoor missions. It stands to reason that the congregations assembling at such missions cannot be as large as those in the towns. Yet their importance cannot be over-estimated. To none is it more necessary to carry the message of the Gospel in the very simplest language, with illustrations and explanations suited to the too often dull intelligences of the hearers."

Among the typical letters descriptive of missions are the following, regarding a tent mission in the neighbourhood of Theydon Bois and Harlow, in Essex:—

"So far as I can tell, we have been permitted to see more visible tokens of blessing this year than ever before. Mr. Greenwood's ministry has in every way met with great acceptance, and I have heard only one opinion concerning his work, that it is most thorough and earnest."

"I cannot help writing to you about the great blessing attending the tent services at Broadley Common and Moreton. There has been a good work going on at Moreton Chapel the last three years; the Master has blessed us there; but the tent services have reached those we had almost despaired of there. Several have given themselves to the Lord, and my heart was very full yesterday, as I saw the fruit of the tent services. Of those who were converted at the services at Harlow years ago, some have gone to be with Christ; they gave glorious deathbed testimonies; I have seen them all depart. Those who are living I believe are faithful, every one of them."

Saving Street Arabs.

WELL-ATTENDED meetings have recently been held to bid God-speed to 100 lads about to start from Mr. Fegan's Homes for Canada. From a small beginning some twenty years ago, this work has grown to notable proportions. It is carried on at the headquarters, a six-storey building in the poorest district of London, the Boys' Home, Southwark, S.E.; the Little Wanderers' Home, Greenwich; and the Boys' Orphan Home, Ramsgate. There is convenience at these Homes for sheltering and training nearly 300 of our street waifs, and the yearly emigration of 100 makes room for the rescue of 100 more from personal destitution and evil environment. The ragged and hopeless lads are transformed by physical comfort and training, and moral and spiritual culture, into the bright, well-dressed, eager, and intelligent young emigrants whose appearance, behaviour, and musical capacity have created much enthusiasm at the send-off meetings.

It is difficult to think that, not many months ago, they were found by Mr. Fegan, or brought to him by the police, or sent to him by the magistrates, squalid, wounded, in the depth of misery, and on the verge of crime. Let the case of one lad suffice as a type. He was brought to Mr. Fegan by a Southwark policeman. His drunken father used to strip him, beat him, and tie him to a bed-post. Then the inhuman monster sat down to watch. If the boy was overcome with sleep, the savage awakened him up by burning him with matches. The most pitiable cases in Mr. Fegan's experience are the victims of parental cruelty. He is also, however, called upon to rescue the orphans and the destitute who have been plunged into street life. Runaways from all parts of the world—sons of professional men, ministers, farmers, tradesmen, etc.—gravitate towards the Homes, which are open night and day. Many of these last Mr. Fegan is able to restore to their parents.

The foundation of the training is the Gospel of the grace of God. By means of comfortable clothing, nourishing food, healthy exercise, regular sleep, and reasonable manual and intellectual duties, the lads cease to brood over vagrant or vicious propensities, the hunted look leaves their eyes, their faces become plump and pleasant, and they form the habit of holding themselves up well and moving about smartly. All the housework has to be done by the boys. A boy who distinguishes himself in this humble sphere is selected for emigration to Canada if physically suitable; failing this he will be privileged to learn one of the industries taught in the Southwark-street Home—printing, shoemaking, carpentry.

Boys who have passed through the Homes are doing well in this country and in all parts of the world. There are special openings for them in Canada, where 1300 have already been happily placed. Several older ones are already established in their own homesteads, acquired in a few years by their own industry and thrift. Many younger ones are adopted by well-to-do people. The great bulk are steadily and honourably making their way up the ladder of life, not a few being earnest Christian workers, local preachers, Sunday-school teachers, etc.

The settlement of the lads is made easy by the gift of a splendid distributing home by the late Mr. William Gooderham, a princely citizen of Toronto. One generous friend contributes the cost of maintaining six boys in the Homes and sending out six boys to Canada every year. A year's maintenance is £15 for an elder boy and £13 10s. for a younger one, and the emigration of a boy costs £10. In all the wide range of Christian philanthropy there are few better investments.

Madagascar.—Pasteurs Lauga and Krüger, who, as already announced, recently went to Madagascar, to view the land for the Paris Society of Evangelical Missions, met with a very pleasant reception. The Queen has attended their meetings, also many French officers. The deputation has been loaded with complimentary gifts. Altogether the outlook is encouraging for missions, and likely to impress the French Society as to its great opportunity in the island.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

"I HAVE HALLOWED THIS HOUSE WHICH THOU HAST BUILT."—1 Kings ix. 8.

MAN builds, God halloweth. This co-operation between man and God pervades all life. Man performs the outward and mechanical, God the inward and spiritual. Paul plants, Apollos waters, but God gives the increase. We elaborate our sermons and addresses, building them up with careful, eager thought, but God must work in and through them for his own glory in the salvation and upbuilding of souls. We must be careful to do our part with reverence and godly fear, remembering that God must work in realms we cannot touch, and to issues we cannot reach, before our poor exertions can avail.

May we not apply this especially to the education of a child's life? Many who read these lines are engaged in building structures which will outlive the Pyramids. The body is only the scaffolding, behind and through which the building of the soul is being upreared. The materials with which we build may be gold, silver, and precious stones, by our example, precept, careful watching, and discipline, but God must come in to hallow. Our strenuous endeavour must be supplemented by the incoming of the Holy Spirit.

God halloweth by his indwelling. Holiness is the result of his putting his Name into a place, a day, a human soul, for his Name is his nature, Himself. Each day may be a building, reared between sunrise and sunset, with our activities; but it were vain to hope to realise our ideal unless the temple be a shrine of God. Build what you will, but never be satisfied unless God sets his eyes and heart upon your life, hallowing and sanctifying each day to Himself.

"BLESSED BE THE LORD THY GOD, WHICH DELIGHTED IN THEE, TO SET THEE ON THE THRONE OF ISRAEL: BECAUSE THE LORD LOVED ISRAEL FOR EVER, THEREFORE MADE HE THEE KING, TO DO JUDGMENT AND JUSTICE."—1 Kings x. 9.

There were two reasons why Solomon was on the throne. First, because of God's love to him; secondly, because of God's love to Israel. May we not address our Saviour with similar expressions of gladness as those which the queen addressed? We are reminded in this connection of a noble hymn by old John Ryland:—

Thou Son of God, and Son of Man,
Beloved, adored Emmanuel,
Who didst, before all time began,
In glory with thy Father dwell,
We sing thy love, who didst in time,
For us, humanity assume,
To answer for the sinner's crime,
To suffer in the sinner's room.
The ransomed Church thy glory sings,
The hosts of heaven thy will obey,
And Lord of lords, and King of kings,
We celebrate thy blessed sway.

We can never praise Him enough. Our furthest thoughts fall short of the reality. His wisdom and prosperity exceed his fame; no question He cannot answer; no desire He cannot gratify; no munificence He cannot excel. Happy are they who stand continually before Him. Let us see that this is our happy privilege, not content to pay Him a transient visit, returning to our own land, but communing with Him always of that which is in our heart.

"HIS WIVES TURNED AWAY HIS HEART."—1 Kings xi. 4.

Every man is vulnerable at one point of his character. Strong everywhere else, and armour-plated, he is weak there, and our great enemy knows just where to strike home. It would have been useless to argue with Solomon for the claims of idols. He could at once, by his wisdom, have annihilated all infidel arguments, and have established the existence and unity of God. But, step by step, he was led by silken cords, a captive, to the worship of other gods. It is a solemn warning, and Nehemiah was perfectly justified when he contended with the Jews who had married wives of Ashdod, and of Ammon, and of Moab, saying, "Did not Solomon, king of Israel, sin by these things? Yet among many nations there was no king like him who was beloved of his God."

Let young people beware where they let their hearts go forth in love. Whom we love we become like, and in the marriage tie it is almost inevitable that the seductions to the lower will overcome the drawings to the higher. When we disobey God's distinct command against intermarriage with the ungodly, we inevitably sink to the level of the ungodly partner rather than rise to the standing of the godly.

Our associates determine the drift and current of our life. Insensibly we think and act as they do. It is so easy to launch upon the current that flows past our feet, allowing it to bear us whither it will. When we are compelled to associate with the ungodly, let us maintain a strict self-watch, and pray that the breath of the heavenward gale may more than counteract the tendency of the earthward tie. The love of Christ is stronger than the love of women.

WEDNESDAY, May 20.

"THE MONTH WHICH HE HAD DEVISED OF HIS OWN HEART."—1 Kings xii. 33.

Jeroboam acted on expediency. It did seem reasonable to argue that the constant going up to Jerusalem to worship might alienate the people from his throne, and awaken a desire for the old national unity; and without doubt a mere worldly wisdom extolled his setting-up of idol-gods at Bethel and Dan; but his policy in this respect led to the downfall of his kingdom. Had he trusted God's promise, made through the prophet Ahijah, the Divine purpose would have ensured the continuance of his rule, but the prompting of expediency resulted in ultimate disaster (ch. xiv).

How prone we all are to devise out of our own hearts. We take counsel with ourselves, and do what seems prudent and farseeing, with the inevitable result of being betrayed into courses of action that God cannot approve, and of which we have reason to repent bitterly. It is infinitely better to wait on God, till He develop his plan, as He most certainly will, when the predestined hour strikes.

He who trusts in his own heart, and takes his own way, is a fool. To run before God is to sink knee-deep into the swamp. We must make all things after the pattern shown us on the Mount, and take our time from God's almanack. It is for this reason that the Apostle so eagerly exhorts us to pour ourselves into the mould of sound doctrine delivered to us in Scripture, that we may think God's thoughts, and conform ourselves to his pattern and plan. Wait on God, and keep his way.

THURSDAY, May 21.

"FOR AS MUCH AS THOU HAST BEEN DISOBEDIENT... BUT CAMEST BACK."—1 Kings xiii. 21, 22, R.V.

We are inclined at first sight to pity this unknown prophet, and to justify his return, but as we look closer into the story, we not only see the reason for the severe penalty that overtook him, but we are warned lest we make a similar mistake. When we have received a direct command fresh from the lips of Christ, we must act on it, and not be turned aside by a different suggestion, made to us through the lips of professing Christians. God does not vacillate or alter in the thing which proceeds from his mouth. When we know we are in the line of his purpose, we must not allow ourselves to be diverted by any appeal or threat, from whomsoever it may emanate. Deal with God at first-hand.

The rule for determining the true worth of the advice which our friends proffer us, is to ask, first, whether it conflicts with our own deep-seated conviction of God's will; and, secondly, whether it tends to the ease and satisfaction of the flesh, as the old prophet's suggestion certainly did. Beware of anyone who allures you with the bread and water that are to break your fast. That bait is likely enough to disturb the balance of your judgment. When a voice says spare thyself, be on the alert; it savours the things that be of man, not of those that be of God.

FRIDAY, May 22.

"I AM SENT TO THEE WITH HEAVY TIDINGS."—1 Kings xiv. 6.

How foolish! Jeroboam thought that the servant of God could penetrate the veil that hid the future, but not the disguise in which his wife wished to conceal herself. As we might have expected, the aged prophet's inner sight read her heart. From God no secrets are hid. Then came the dread announcement of inevitable disaster.

We must not hesitate to unfold all the consequences of sin. As watchmen on the walls, we are bound to tell men of the certain fearful looking for of fiery indignation which shall devour the transgressors. None of us should flinch from declaring the whole counsel of God. Moreover, we should make it understood that there is nothing arbitrary or vindictive in the penalties which God announces and inflicts; they are the crop of which our own sin is the seed. We go to our own place. We lie down in the bed which we have made.

Oh for more tenderness that we may warn men with tears of their doom! We are so self-possessed, so stolid; we need to ask that our eyes, like Jeremiah's, should be fountains of tears, that we might weep day and night. If the tidings are heavy, let us first feel their pressure on our own hearts, let us bend over the regions of despair and darkness, and hear the bitter weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth, and come back to warn our brethren, lest they also come to that place of torment.

SATURDAY, May 23.

"ASA DID...RIGHT IN THE EYES OF THE LORD, AS DID DAVID HIS FATHER."—1 Kings xv. 11.

It is a great thing to have such a testimony as this. We may do right in our own eyes; yet in the eyes of our neighbours we may be very far wrong. Again, we may do right in the eyes of our neighbours; yet the eye of the Lord may detect evil which neither they nor we have seen. We may deceive ourselves, we may deceive others, but we may not deceive God. "All things are naked and open to the eyes of Him with whom we have to do." Let us walk humbly, and strive to have such a testimony as Asa. In the home or business, in the study or pulpit, in situation or factory, let us live as under his searching gaze.

Asa's life was one of religious activity: he destroyed the idols of his father, and even deposed his queen mother "because she made an idol in a grove." A fearless reformer, he brooked no opposition in high places or low. His was a home religion; its power was felt throughout the palace. It needs Divine courage so to live for God that at home or abroad men shall take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus. This is what the world is languishing for—reality, consistency under all circumstances, and before all men.

There are, however, two clouds overhanging this otherwise bright life. "The high places were not removed" (14). Though idols were destroyed, the groves in which they were erected remained. They were no snare to him; and he took care that during his life they should not ensnare others; but after his death, in the reign of Jehoshaphat his son, "the people offered and burnt incense" in them (xxii. 43). We must not only cleanse our way before the Lord during our lifetime, but remove any evil thing which may cause those who succeed us to stumble.

The other cloud is indicated in 2 Chron. xvi. 12, "He was diseased in his feet... Yet in his disease he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians." Strange that in affliction he should not have turned to the Great Physician. Rely not upon the piety of earlier days. The enemy of souls is ever on the watch. You need daily strength, and ever fresh supplies of grace.

Bible Garments.—2.

THE garments mentioned in the New Testament seem to speak to us even more clearly than do those of the Old Testament, because so many of them are either spoken of by the Lord Jesus, or have connection with Him.

When we read of "the best robe" provided for the returning prodigal, we can hardly help seeing the beautiful picture of God's wondrous love to each repentant sinner.

When we remember the Lord's sad picture of the guest who had not on "the wedding garment," it whispers to each of us the plain warning that, in order to sit down at the marriage supper of the Lamb (and surely none of you, dear young readers, would willingly be absent), we must accept the robe of Jesus' righteousness instead of wearing the filthy rags "of our own righteousness."

I think that amongst those who spread their garments in the way, in order to do honour to their Saviour, there must have been little children. Cannot you seem to see the eager little faces, as with busy hands they helped to prepare the way for the Kingly Rider of the lowly colt? Cannot you hear the glad ring of their voices, "Hosanna to the Son of David!"? You would have liked to share in it all, I feel sure. And how nice for us to know that it is not too late, even now, to "prepare the way of the Lord" ere He comes again in glory. I hope you will all share in this glad work. Every effort to tell of Jesus' love, every childlike prayer really prayed on behalf of the heathen children, and every penny lovingly dropped into the missionary box, is like a little garment spread for the sacred feet of Jesus, and goes so nicely with the prayer, "Thy Kingdom come."

Even those words of Christ's about not putting a new piece into an old garment, whilst they have other meanings as well, seem to tell us how fully He entered to the little homely matters which still occupy us, and I think we may learn that He would have Christian children do "heartily, as unto the Lord," even such a thing as a little bit of sewing.

You will not, in the "Bible Searcher" find all the references to dress which are in the New Testament. Especially you may miss those which refer to the various robes worn by the Lord Jesus in the dark days of his suffering on our behalf, but I hope you will notice all those for yourselves at some other time, and with a sweetly solemn sense of the changeless love which endured so much for us.

In conclusion, think of the "washed robes" which come at the end of your list.

Only "washed robes" find entrance to heaven, so that it becomes a very personal question, "Are my robes washed?" or, to put it still more simply, "Are my sins forgiven?"

How many a spot defiles the robe
Of every earthly saint.

If the robe were otherwise white, yet even one stain would render it unfit for the gaze of God. In other words, one sin makes a sinner. So the only way to join the white-robed throng "around the throne of God in heaven," is to come to the Lord Jesus to be made "whiter than snow" in his precious blood.

If your Bible searching leads you to this, how great will your joy be! And how great will be the joy "in the presence of the angels of God!"

This is what "Uncle Tom" and other friends in THE CHRISTIAN desire for you most of all.

To see your names in the lists is very gratifying; to win the prizes is, you think, better still; but if the study should lead to your names being written in the Lamb's "Book of Life" (Rev. xxi. 27), this would be so much the best of all that one hesitates to speak of other things in the same breath.

Remember, "the entrance of thy words giveth light," and the receiving of this light is the true object in all Bible searching. "Uncle Tom" will be so glad if this is your object!

I have received more letters than I can answer individually this week. So I must thank you all together instead. I enjoy reading your letters, even if I cannot answer them. I hear that some of the boys find the lovely weather so attractive that they do not find time for the Searcher. I think if they put down on paper how long the questions take, and how many hours they spend in play, they will see they can squeeze in enough time for both.

UNCLE TOM.

May's Sunday-school Lesson.

MAY stood by the window, pouting, and drumming on the pane.

"I think it's too bad," she said to mamma, who sat sewing.

"I would rather you would mind Dot for a time while I finish this," answered mamma, who looked tired.

"But you said you always wanted me to study my Sunday-school lesson before Sunday, and now I want to, and you won't let me, and Ida will wonder why I do not come over. Dot's all right, playing with her blocks. I should think you would want me to go and study, and Ida will be so disappointed, when I said I would come."

"Well, then, May, go," said mother quietly, and turned to her work without another word. May looked at her to see if she really meant it; for she could hardly believe she had made mamma see the thing as she saw it. And she was not quite sure she had, when, running by the window, she noticed mamma had dropped her work and had taken Dot, who was fretting, in her arms. But she ran down the street and gaily trilled by Ida's house, as she went up the path. The door opened, and a bright-eyed little girl stood there smiling, clad in a long-sleeved apron.

"It's you, May, she said, glancing at the quarterly May held. "I am so sorry to disappoint you, but mamma asked me to clean the silver this afternoon, as Maria is away. Just look at my hands! I knew you would be disappointed too, but I thought you would understand why I wanted to help mamma; you have such a dear one of your own. So we will have to wait till next week. And mamma said she would help me herself to-night, and that would be pay enough. I must not stay any longer now. Come in, won't you?"

May declined, and as the door closed on Ida's bright face, she walked slowly toward home, rolling her lesson quarterly, and thinking very hard. As she turned into the yard, she heard Dot crying, and going past the window, she saw mamma's work still on the floor, and the baby in her arms.

"Back again so soon?" said mamma, as May entered. Dot stopped crying to look at her.

"Yes," she faltered, putting off her hat. "Ida couldn't study just now."

"Why?" asked mamma.

"'Cause she was—helping—her—mamma," burst out May, and running to her mother, she buried her head on her shoulder, while the sobs came fast.

"Oh, is that it?" said mother, comfortably, stroking the yellow hair. "Well, May, you can do that as well as Ida. Here is Dot, who still wants sister; and by-and-by, when the sewing is done, and Dot is asleep, you and I will study the lesson together."

May raised her head.

"That's just what Ida and her mamma are going to do," she said, surprised.

"Is it not a good way when Ida is too busy to study with you?"

"O mamma," said May, colouring, "I did not mean to be so selfish! You know I'd rather you would help me than anyone else. And perhaps it was because I wanted to see Ida more than it was the lesson."

"I do not wonder you wanted to see a little girl like Ida," said mamma with a kiss; I am glad you did."

Work in Swazieland.

AT Durban I met Miss Harris, who, with her companion, Miss Gabh, has been carrying on the work, of which she has written the following account at my request. R. C. MORGAN.

I have been asked to write a short account of the South African General Mission in Swazieland, as latterly that country has come much to the front in consequence of the desire of the people to be under British government.

The Swazies are a fine race of men, an offshoot, some say, of the Zulus, and until quite lately have been wild, free, and independent. It is computed that they number about 50,000, scattered over an area of about 6000 square miles. Until 1891 there was only one mission station in the whole country. In that year our first missionary and his wife started work at Bethany, in the very centre of Swazieland, between the King's and Queen's kraals. At the commencement they lived in two temporary rooms—one iron, the other wattle and daub; but after two years a small stone house was built, and a year later, through the generosity of American friends, a nice little church was added to the station, and has already proved of much service.

The Swazies are not a people who want the Gospel so long as they have food, liberty, and plenty of Kaffir beer. They desire neither our Christ nor his salvation; so the first work of the missionary is to create in their hearts a desire after something better, and to teach them that they have a soul which will live for ever, a hell to shun, and a heaven to gain. At first, as a rule, they listen incredulously as to something which does not affect them, and it is only after frequent repetition they grasp the fact that what we are telling them really concerns them individually. Sometimes we are told that where their ancestors have gone is good enough for them, and that they would rather be with them than elsewhere without them. In many cases, after an interest has been awakened and the truth has gone home, the fear of their young king deters them from accepting it. He strongly opposes Christianity, as he foresees that should it be accepted by the nation his power would be gone; so he takes the cattle and otherwise illtreats those of his subjects whom he suspects of a leaning towards the religion of Christ. He once said to one of our missionaries, "You want to teach the people to worship God. Teach them to worship me. I am the god of the Swazies." But still, in spite of discouragements, the light is entering the hearts of some, and we are believing that before long many will come out boldly on the Lord's side.

In 1894 the owner of a large tract of ground, a semi-civilised heathen, who had seen the advantages of education by contact with the white man, came and asked our mission for teachers, on his promising to give land for a station to be established there. Two ladies went up at once to commence work among them. They lived for nine weeks in a Kaffir hut, with no windows, and a door only 3ft. high. Then a sod and thatch square hut was built, 17ft. by 12ft., which has served as dwelling-house, school-room, and mission-hall until the present time, when a small stone house of three rooms has been erected which they hope very soon to take possession of.

The work up there is much easier than at Bethany, as, being nearer the borders, people are not so afraid of the king, and more contact with white people tends to show them the advantages of civilisation. They often have very mistaken ideas of what Christianity is. They ask if all white men are Christians, and think that to be a Christian they must put on clothes and learn to read, and the old people will say, "It is good for the young people, but not for us, as we can never learn the Book."

At the Welcome there has been much encouragement. In a small kraal close by, five young men and women have openly declared their faith in Christ, and though still living in their kraal, laughed at and ridiculed by the others, have hitherto stood firm in their determination to follow Christ. Three others were baptized by our missionary, and three young men, converted and partially prepared by us, have been baptized elsewhere. The attendance at the Sunday services is very good, often as many as fifty or sixty being present, the kraal natives bringing their assegais, knobkerries, and battle-axes, and leaving them piled up outside. The young people generally stop for Sunday-school in the afternoon, which frequently numbers forty; the young men forming one class, the women, girls, and children another. There is great encouragement in the school; three raw kraal girls, who cannot come to learn in the week, with a little help on Sundays have taught themselves to read, and can now spell out verses in the Testament and hymn-book of which they became the proud possessors at our Sunday-school treat. And we believe they are truly converted to God. The children also learn the texts on Mrs. Grimké's cards, which they take away with them, and are able to repeat many of them.

At Bethany, God has honoured the patient seed-sowing of the devoted missionary in charge, and though the results are not so visible as at the Welcome, three were baptized last year, and some who have at the Welcome desired to learn about Christ, testified that it was at Bethany they first heard of Him.

One of the missionaries also had a very fair knowledge of medicine, and by this has found entrance and influence in the King's and Queen's kraals; and many of the natives travel long distances to see him and procure relief and medicines, thus giving opportunities for seed-sowing and telling the glad news of salvation, to those who, as one dear old native woman expressed it, have "their hearts all dark, and who don't know where they are going to."

THE CHURCH AT BETHANY.

One of the great difficulties of the work is reaching the people, as they do not, as a rule, live in large kraals, but scattered up and down the mountains—often difficult of access—up precipitous paths and across spruits which none but unshod African ponies could attempt. Often when out itinerating, from eight in the morning until sunset, we are only able to speak in about five kraals, and reaching not more than 100 or 150 people, and sometimes riding twenty or five-and-twenty miles.

Kind friends connected with the Welcome, London, gave us £60 to buy a tent waggon, that we might take it, plant it in some valley, make it our headquarters and sleeping-place, and from there on our ponies visit the numerous kraals around. In one valley alone there are thirty such. Perhaps in that valley we may have a missionary when land can be bought or hired. Until then we must rest content with visiting them now and again as opportunity occurs; but the dear people are so dense that it is not until they have been told again and again that a ray of light enters their dulled brains, and they realise that the story of the Saviour's love is not a mere fairy tale, but of vital interest to them individually.

CLARIE S. HARRIS.

Mr. Charles Inglis in Dublin.

MR. INGLIS's visit to Dublin was looked forward to by a large circle of friends. The meetings were held in Harcourt-street Baptist Chapel.

Pastor Hugh D. Brown, who was in London during the first week of the mission, was back in time to see the close of a most successful series. We do not care to give any kind of statistics as regards the result of the mission, but manifestly the Holy Spirit accompanied the word preached by marked signs of approval and blessing. One marked feature of the mission was the evident token of conviction of sin that many seekers after peace exhibited. We have great hope of a man or woman "convicted of sin"; they and they only can fully appreciate a free and full salvation.

Many interesting cases might be given, for many will rejoice in the day of the Lord for the faithful word preached by the evangelist; his wholesome manly words are as stimulating as a sea-breeze. We are glad to know that Pastor Thomas Spurgeon followed up the good seed sown by preaching morning and evening at Harcourt-street Baptist Chapel.

THOMAS WARNER.

Six of the Protestant Bishops now on the Irish Bench are said to be total abstainers. This is full of promise for the country.

THE LATE
Miss Eliza Agnew.

THE lady whose portrait we give to-day has been affectionately called by the people in Ceylon, "The mother of a thousand daughters." She was born in New York City, Feb. 2, 1807, and sailed for Ceylon, July 30, 1839. In the day school which she attended, her teacher one day pointed out to her pupils the heathen and Christian lands; she must have said some earnest words about the darkness of people in heathen lands, for this little girl of eight then and there resolved that when she grew up she would go out and help to tell the heathen about Jesus. She never forgot this resolve.

On account of family ties she was detained at home until thirty-two years of age. But as soon as she was free to go she offered herself for foreign service. It was not usual at that time for Mission Boards to send out unmarried ladies as missionaries. The Board to which she first offered herself refused to send her because she was unmarried; thinking her a desirable candidate, they went so far, however, as to offer to find for her a suitable life companion. But Miss Agnew thought that a woman engaged in such work as she desired to undertake for heathen women and girls ought not to be hampered by family cares. She was accepted by the American Board and appointed to work in Jaffna, the Northern Province of Ceylon. Her journey occupied nearly six months, in a sailing vessel, around the Cape of Good Hope. Her journal letters, written during the time of the voyage, showed that she had a happy and buoyant disposition and was accustomed always to look on the bright side of things. These characteristics she maintained through life.

When missionaries first landed in Northern Ceylon, they found the common people idolatrous and sunk in ignorance and superstition. The prevailing religion of the people was Hindooism. The Hindoos say that they worship 330,000,000 of gods and goddesses, but among them all there is not one whom they love or one who they suppose loves them.

As soon as the missionaries had themselves acquired a working knowledge of the Tamil language they began to translate the Gospels into that language and to preach in the villages. Realising that if they could win the children for Christ they would have the men and women of the near future, they opened schools for children. The people were willing to allow boys to attend these schools, but when the missionaries asked them to send the girls also they ridiculed the idea. There was not at that time a woman or girl in the whole Province who could read. The people said, "What would be the use of teaching girls? A girl could never learn to read any more than a sheep!"

However, after two years of effort, one missionary lady, Mrs. Scudder, succeeded in inducing one little girl to attend school. She soon committed to memory the 248 letters of the Tamil alphabet and was able to read. Other girls began to attend the schools, and the work has so grown and prospered that at the present time there are 15,000 children in mission schools in that one Province, about 5000 of whom are girls. This educational work is effecting a revolution in the ideas of the people regarding the proper status of woman. In this Province, as in other places where mission work is being vigorously carried on, the men no longer regard women as belonging to an inferior and depraved order of being, but admit that they are fit to be the friends and companions of their husbands.

When Miss Agnew went to Ceylon she was received into the home of Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Spaulding, at Oodoville, and was put in charge of a boarding-school for girls which had recently been opened. This girls' boarding-school, though small in its beginning, soon became a large and flourishing institution. Mrs. Agnew lived in Ceylon forty-three unbroken years, never having returned to America on furlough; during forty-one of these years she was the lady principal in charge of this school. In that time more than 1000 girls altogether were pupils in this school. Miss Agnew was very devoted to these girls, and they loved her in return. They were accustomed to call her mother, and because she had taught so many girls in the school, as already remarked, she came to be called by the people, in their poetic way, "The mother of a thousand daughters."

During the time that she had the charge of the school 600 girls graduated, having taken the whole course, and all who thus graduated went out as professing Christians. The majority of these girls came from heathen homes and heathen villages, some of them having not even heard the name of Christ before entering the school. In this school they learned of Christ, and gave their hearts to Him, and went out to shine for Him in their homes and villages. Being educated women, many of them became the wives of Christian young men who had been educated in the mission schools, many of whom afterwards attained influential positions, becoming pastors, catechists, teachers, Government officials, the leading men in the Province.

Not a few of the graduates of Miss Agnew's school engaged in direct Christian work, some becoming teachers in mission schools, and others being employed as Bible women, to work among their heathen sisters in the villages. Miss Agnew herself employed the first Bible woman in Jaffna, and now nearly forty of her former students are working in that capacity, each of whom is teaching in perhaps thirty or forty homes, and some thousands of women and girls are hearing from their lips the story of Jesus and his love.

The Misses Leitch enjoyed the great privilege of having Miss Agnew as an inmate in their home during the last two years of her life. By her singleness of purpose, by her blameless life, by the success which she achieved, she made the position of an unmarried lady missionary honorable in Ceylon for all future time. The highest praise which a native seems able to bestow upon an unmarried lady worker in Ceylon, is to say, "She is like Miss Agnew."

Miss Agnew realised that of all preparation for missionary work, the most important was to know God, and that to know God one must know his Word. She made the devotional study of God's Word the first thing in her daily life. It was her unfailing habit through all her long missionary life to rise with the first streak of dawn and to spend the first hour alone with God in prayer and in the study of his Word. This habit came to be known by all her pupils, and all associated with her, and no one ever thought of interrupting her during that hallowed hour. The low murmur of her voice in prayer, often long continued and earnest, was heard at times by servants and pupils, and those who were associated with her knew that among the many names that she would present before the Throne of Grace their names would not likely be forgotten.

Her last days were peaceful. She had a paralytic shock which deprived her of the use of her limbs. A few days before her death, Rev. W. W. Holland, who had called to visit her, on seeing that the end was near, asked her if he should pray with her. She eagerly assented. He asked, "Is there anything for which you would like me especially to pray?" And she replied, "Pray for the women of Jaffna, that they may come to Christ." The attendance at the funeral service was very large. Many native pastors, catechists, teachers, lawyers, Government officials, and others, the leading men of the Peninsula, who had married girls trained in her school, came to the funeral service, bringing their wives and children. In hundreds of villages in Ceylon and India there is just such a work waiting to be done by Christian young women as that which, with God's blessing, Miss Agnew accomplished in the Jaffna Peninsula.

Self-Denial for Missions.

THE "Do-Without" Missionary Society, Doncaster, formed to encourage self-denial in aid of missions, now supports, among other missionaries, two "Joyful News" evangelists, formerly railway men in Doncaster, and now labouring in China. A leaflet just issued by Dr. A. Christy Wilson gives interesting letters from these brethren, Mr. Fryer, of Huhpeh, and Mr. Pell, of Han-Chuan.

"The native Christians have got 'Hunan' written on their hearts in burning letters, and they feel the burden of the souls of that province (which still refuses to allow foreigners to settle within its borders) weighing so heavily upon their hearts that they have formed a 'Do-Without' Society, and have put forth a missionary of their own, who is maintained by their self-denial.

"This is a new departure, and is of God. It is purely Chinese: and they accept no money from Christians of other lands. One poor man, who makes his living by making straw sandals, works a little longer every day, and gives the product of his overtime to the spread of the Gospel in Hunan. My servant, a warm-hearted old Christian, used to smoke tobacco, but he has given it up, and casts the money into the 'Do-Without' box. He also washes his own clothes, and puts the washing money into the box. Another man said he would do with a basin of rice less every day, so that whoever went to Hunan with the Gospel, might be sure of at least one basin of rice a day."

The Glasgow Lodging-house Gospel Union has seventy pledged workers, who regularly hold meetings in the lodging-houses of the city, and conduct open-air meetings. There is a Sabbath School, a Bible Class, and a fellowship meeting. The sec. is Mr. John Wilson, 16, Douglas-street, Glasgow.

MAY MEETINGS.

The Bible Society.

THIS great institution, as one of the speakers at the annual meeting last week remarked, is the most catholic of all the religious societies. Christians may have their distinctive, varying beliefs and their pet schemes of work, but they all circle around the good old Book. The meeting in Exeter Hall was, in point of numbers and interest, worthy of the Society and the occasion. There was quite an array of veterans on the platform, as well as of younger men. At the outset it was announced that Rev. W. Major Paull, who had been on the secretarial staff for twenty-five years, is on the eve of retiring. He will be succeeded by Rev. J. Gordon Watt, a youthful but earnest man, who offered the opening prayer at the meeting.

The abstract of the report, read by Rev. J. SHARP, the other general secretary, was pitched in a key of thankful praise for a year of progress in the work. The total issues of the year in Bibles, Testaments, and portions mounted up to the enormous total of close on four millions. The fact was emphasised, however, during the meeting, that very much remains to be done before the Gospel record is brought within the range of all the tribes, peoples, and nations of the world. Six new versions were begun last year and others made more complete. As to finance, Mr. Sharp said that four years of heavy deficits had been followed, through economical management, by four years of surplus. The economies are chiefly due to the lessened cost of reproduction through the help of photography. Last year showed a considerable decrease both in income and expenditure, and there must be no relaxation of effort if the aggressive and ever growing work of the Society is to be efficiently maintained.

On the whole, the speeches were excellent and much to the point. Lord WINCHILSEA, who presided (in the absence through illness of Lord Harrowby), touched sympathetically on the most interesting facts in the report—the needs of Germany, the growing opportunities in Mohammedan lands, the rapid spread of the work in China, and especially in Japan, where the Government smiles approval on the distribution of the Scriptures; and the work of Biblewomen in Indian zenanas. Lord STAMFORD emphasised the indebtedness of all the missionary societies to the Bible Society. Rev. HENRY YOOL, Primitive Methodist minister, South Shields, uttered a powerful poetical, and at times really eloquent, plea for the support of the Society. The Bible, he said, is conquering the thought and transfiguring the life of the world; through its teachings alone can human selfishness be dissolved, and the grander day of universal brotherhood ushered in. In a very thoughtful, orthodox, and cogent address, Prof. MONIER MONIER-WILLIAMS, of Oxford, showed the infinite superiority of the Christian Scriptures over any of the sacred writings of the Eastern systems of religion. Referring to the present sombre outlook in the world generally, he pressed home the fact that nothing but the salvation revealed in and by Jesus Christ is adequate to the bettering of human society and the uplifting of fallen humanity.

Perhaps the ablest and certainly the most effective speech of the meeting from the Bible point of view, was that of Rev. HENRY HAIGH, of Mysore, who spoke from twenty years' experience of mission work in that country. Some of the instances he gave of the way in which the reading and the apprehension of the Scriptures had affected intelligent and educated Indians were extremely pathetic, and formed a splendid testimony to the regenerative power of the Word in the human heart. His illustration of the difficulties of the translator were deeply interesting, and sometimes amusing. Altogether it was a powerful address.

The same might be said in a modified degree of the account given by Mr. G. L. PILKINGTON, from Uganda, of the marvellous spread of Scripture study in that land, and the numberless openings for fresh efforts in Bible translation and distribution. Clearly the Scripture goes on its way, unaffected by the researches and vaticinations of the critics. As the report well said: "On and on goes the living Book."

The London City Mission.

THE large gatherings on Tuesday and Wednesday, in connection with the C.M.S. and Bible Societies, were followed on Thursday morning by the anniversary of this great home mission, which is of vital concern to all who feel the pressure of godlessness and worldliness on every hand. Lord REAY presided, and, after prayer, the report was read by the secretary, Rev. T. S. HUTCHINSON.

"The present condition of London" formed the sorrowful theme of its opening paragraphs, such timely topics being touched as poverty, overcrowding, and overwork, desecration of the Lord's Day, drunkenness, gambling, immorality, and infidelity. To combat all these evils, the number of missionaries on the actual staff of the society, on March 31, was 481, four more than on the same date in the previous year; but this number has only been maintained by selling out stock to the value of £7404 19s. The total receipts for the general fund during the past year were £55,255 14s., or £6501 4s. 9d. in excess of the receipts during the preceding year. This is, so far, encouraging; but the increase is chiefly due to the receipts from legacies, which were £5490 15s. 4d. above those in the preceding year, and to one large donation of £2000 from a lady in Scotland. The expenditure has been £60,304 12s. 11d., or £143 11s. 10d. above that in the preceding year, and £5048 18s. 11d. in excess of the receipts.

Details followed of house-to-house visitation, mission-rooms, and open-air services, and of the operations of the 123 special missionaries to various classes, working, or living, under peculiar circumstances, isolating them from ordinary Christian effort, as well as in public-houses, and among foreigners.

The CHAIRMAN felt he could hardly overestimate the importance of such a mission, in such a vast city, and in such an age. After picturing the magnitude and influence of London, he showed the character of the work being done by the L.C.M., and how it is telling on the masses. Dealing in a few vigorous sentences with scepticism, he quoted the report as saying that "Infidelity, of an honest and intelligent type, does not apparently exist among the masses (except in certain districts) so much as in days gone by; but a vast amount of scepticism is encountered by the missionaries, and this, in combination with other forces, keeps many of the working-men in a state of apathy and indifference towards religion." This decrease in infidelity is something to be thankful for, but indifference is, after all, as fatal as scepticism, hence no effort should be spared, which is likely to arouse men from the torpor of apathy and cold neglect. The results of the work only makes one long to see it more widely spread, and surely it is not too much to expect that the number of the missionaries ought speedily to be doubled.

Rev. Dr. P. S. O'BRIEN, vicar of Camden Church, attempted to create in the minds of his hearers some notion of the magnitude and vastness of the population of this "wilderness of bricks." This led to a graphic and glowing description of the L.C.M. work, as it goes on day by day, in the homes and workshops of the people. A work which, based on the Bible, carried on by men of plain common sense and strong faith, is telling, surely telling, on the men and women of this vast metropolis. In the course of his address, Dr. O'Brien dwelt on the sad fact that the society has overspent, during the last two years, no less than £17,000, a truly pitiful state of affairs, in view of the tremendous need.

Rev. S. H. ANDERSON, secretary of the Paris City Mission, with a fine flow of Gallic eloquence and fervour, fired the souls of his hearers as he depicted with light touch the innumerable ways in which the missionaries help and bless the people. Turning to his own Mission, the child of the L.C.M., he painted in lurid hues the condition of things in the gay city, and then showed something of what is being done among the working classes of Paris.

Mr. J. COMPTON RICKETT, M.P., recalled some of the strangely varied and remote aspects of London, forces which make for good or evil, and which, taken together, present unparalleled opportunities for Christian work. All manner of plans have been tried, but, while society is dying of luxury at the top and of misery at the bottom, nothing avails to save. Sanitation, better dwellings, education, shorter hours, healthful amusement—all sorts of ethical ideas have been ventilated, many good enough in their way; but none of them, and not even them all put together, can redeem men, change degraded lives, implant truer ideals, or raise the fallen. Nothing avails to save and renew but the Gospel of Jesus Christ, which the humble L.C.M. missionary carries from door to door. Hence he commended earnestly the work of this mission to the sympathy of Christian and patriot.

Mr. W. B. MURRAY, missionary in Stepney, followed with a racy and vigorous account of actual work in Stepney and Whitechapel among the careless and indifferent, the openly hostile and grossly sinful. As we listened it was impossible to avoid feeling that so long as the L.C.M. sends out such men it has a right to claim, and may expect true and loyal support.

London Jews Society.

THE annual meeting of the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews is always a hearty gathering of earnest believers. The meeting on Friday last at Exeter Hall was no exception to the rule, and there were among those present a goodly number of Hebrew Christians. The Society commenced the year with forty-four stations at home and abroad, and 168 agents, of whom seventy-eight were Christian Israelites.

An abstract of the report was read by Rev. W. FLEMING. It showed a general expenditure of £35,000, which was more than covered by the income. With regard to the important question of the training of missionaries, it has been arranged that the Society, instead of maintaining a college of its own, shall avail itself of the advantages offered by the St. John's College of Divinity, Highbury, N. The various missionaries have had different tales to tell. Some, as the report showed, had been greatly encouraged by the attitude of the Jews; others had met with depressing indifference from people held in bondage by their Rabbis. On the one hand, there has been a willing attention to Christian teaching; elsewhere, ignorance and prejudice have kept the missionaries at arm's length. The agents of the Society have done much in the way of circulating the Holy Scriptures and Gospel literature. With regard to the recent perilous disturbances in the Ottoman Empire, the report stated that not one missionary thought of quitting his or her station. In answer to a letter from the committee authorising them to adopt means of safety, if advised by Her Majesty's representatives, one wrote: "The Lord Jesus hath all power in heaven and on earth"; while the workers at Jerusalem sent word, "He that keeps us shall neither slumber nor sleep."

Sir JOHN KENNEDY, who presided, spoke of the great influence of the Jewish people, as witnessed in history, and foretold in prophecy. The Bishop of Honduras dwelt on the importance of the work, also of its excellence, mentioning in particular the educational and medical agencies. He gave three reasons why the work should be heartily supported:—First, for the sake of the Jews themselves, as Christ died for them; secondly, for our own sake, as Christians, because a reflected blessing will come upon the Church—"They shall prosper that love thee"; thirdly, for Christ's sake—Christ is the Saviour of the world and the Messiah of the Jew, and loyalty to Him makes the Jewish mission a Christian obligation.

Rev. A. HASTINGS KELK, minister of Christ Church, Jerusalem, described the superstition and darkness of the average Oriental Jew. When he began work in the Holy City seventeen years ago there were eight thousand Jews there; now there are forty-five thousand, the increase having taken place in spite of Government restrictions. The missionaries are well received, and are on good terms with the people and their religious leaders. Though the field has greatly grown, the staff has only been increased by the addition of two lady workers, who go in and out among the Jewish women. Among the many important adjuncts of the Mission, he described the schools, both of which have been greatly blessed to the children. In reference to the return of the Jews to their own land, Mr. Kelksaid he was convinced that Palestine must speedily pass from the power of the Turk. He saw the hand of God in the fact that the soil is not in the possession of private persons, but is held from the Ottoman Government on the payment of rent. Hence, it will be easy for it to be transferred to Jews for their independent use.

Addresses were also delivered by Mr. J. K. D. Wingfield-Digby, M.P., and Archdeacon Taylor, of Liverpool. The latter maintained that the promotion of Christianity among the Jews is the sacred duty of those who have received the Scriptures, and, under God, many other blessings from the Hebrew race.

West London Mission.

A DAY spent at the anniversary meetings of this forward movement is one of the most enjoyable that falls to our lot. As one speaker remarked, we find among these friends "Christianity in earnest." The meetings this year have certainly not been a whit behind those of former times. Dr. Maclaren's discourse in the forenoon was listened to by a crowd that filled the great hall literally from floor to ceiling; and his simple, luminous exposition of the cure for our moribund Christianity formed a weighty message for the time. Some outline of it will be found on another page.

After the luncheon in Craven Hall a brief meeting was held, presided over by Mr. Councillor BLACK, of Nottingham; several friends of the work bore testimony to its worth, and some considerable donations were announced.

THE SISTERS' MEETING

In the afternoon was a most pathetic occasion. It was left entirely, in its conduct, to the ladies, and right well they acquitted themselves. Mrs. GEORGE CADBURY, of Birmingham, was in the chair, and gave what Mr. Price-Hughes called a most admirable and truly Christian address. The first question asked, she said, was "Am I my brother's keeper?" At the beginning of the Christian era the question was changed to "Who is my neighbour?" Now the question is, "Where is my neighbour, and how can I best serve him?" The West London Mission is an answer to the last question.

Then came Sister ELIZABETH, whose account of the "Guild of the poor things" and its efforts to brighten the lives of the maimed, the halt, and the blind, and of the workhouse teas, was touching in the extreme, and a splendid illustration of real practical Christianity. Sister CATHERINE had an equally fascinating story to tell about the work done and the transformations effected through the office for counsel and help at the "Sisters' Hour." Sister LILLY spoke, as always, with power, and especially with pathos in describing the rescue work carried on in Piccadilly. One example she gave which moved the hearts of everybody. Last of all came Mrs. PRICE-HUGHES, who spoke on the general aspects of the many-sided work done by the Sisters. She described the aims and scope of the sisterhood, and made an earnest appeal for more helpers in this department.

THE EVENING MEETING, which constituted the annual meeting proper, was crowded, and most enthusiastic. The chairman was Mr. EMERSON BAINBRIDGE, M.P., who immediately found favour in Mr. Price-Hughes' eyes by declaring that he had read every word in the new report for the year. "Splendid!" exclaimed Mr. Hughes. We trust the example of such a busy man as Mr. Bainbridge will be widely followed. His speech was warm and appreciative, and deeply sympathetic. Next to speak was Dr. WALLER, the President of the Wesleyan Conference, whose voice has often been heard on these occasions, and whose testimony last Friday evening was as hearty as ever. Then Rev. J. H. CARDWELL, vicar of St. Anne's, Soho, was full of sympathy with the operations of the mission, dwelling chiefly on the social branches, in their blessed action on the life of the poor.

Dr. PENTECOST created much amusement by relating the restrictive instructions he had received from Mr. Hughes; though he sought to abide by them, he succeeded in making not only a witty, but a convincing and interesting speech in favour of the work. The closing speaker was Mr. PRICE

HUGHES, who almost exceeded himself in versatility, cogency, and impassioned rhetoric, in describing the wonderfully varied and blessedly successful agencies of the mission, and in pleading its claims. Having to raise some £5000, of course there was the usual strenuous appeal for financial help. As Dr. Pentecost remarked, there is plenty of money in the country, and if people would only read the printed story of the work, doubtless all its needs would be more than supplied.

Church Pastoral Aid Society.

A FINE meeting was held on Thursday afternoon in connection with this home missionary society. The report showed that the income has been £63,182, or £1,784 less than last year. During the year thirty-two new grants have been made to thirty-one parishes, of which twenty-five were for assistant curates, two for lay agents, and five for women workers. The total number of grants now on the society's books is 870, an increase of seventeen on the number reported last year, representing a liability of £63,299 if all the grants were in operation. The actual expenditure of the year has been £60,678. The average population of the thirty-one parishes to which new grants have been made is 8,751. The Forward Movement, an endeavour to secure that all the parishes and all the agents for which Evangelical churchmen are responsible shall be as of high a quality as possible, includes not merely the provision of such additional workers as are needed for overgrown parishes, but also the making of better provision for the training of each class of parish workers, the influencing of patronage, both directly and indirectly, and the bringing of more direct spiritual influence to bear upon the education of the young in middle and upper class schools.

Mr. J. H. Buxton, who presided, said that while they rejoiced in the increase in the Society's income, it was not so favourable as it ought to be. The Forward Movement had been taken up very encouragingly, from which he inferred that Evangelical churchmen were determined to be aggressive.

The Bishop of Carlisle declared that ever since he had been able to take an interest in such matters he had been associated with the C.P.A.S. He made a strong point when he urged that whereas fifty years ago the strength of the Church was in the country districts, now it was in the towns. What had brought about the change? He had always associated that change with the work of their Society. Mr. W. D. Cruddas, M.P., and Revs. J. R. Eyre, G. E. Ford, and E. N. Coulthard also supported the claims of the C.P.A.S.

Friendless and Fallen.

THE thirty-ninth anniversary of these institutions, so intimately associated with the name of the late Mr. E. W. Thomas, was held on Wednesday week at Morley Hall, Regent-street.

The report, read by the secretary, Mr. W. J. Taylor, noted the increased attention being paid to Preventive work. Still, however, the rescue and reformation of the fallen is carried on with marked success, and the number tabulated for the past twelve months are in advance of the previous year. The changeable features of the service of sin are discussed in the report, in their bearings on Christian work, and accounts are given of the efforts made on behalf of maternity cases, as well as of the work of the seven Homes. Special attention is paid to the Open-all-Night Refuge, which continues to do valuable service as affording a way of escape for the repentant, and a shelter for homeless and endangered girls. The summary of operations shows that 163 preventive cases, 152 reformatory cases, and six special cases were admitted to the Homes last year; while 358 preventive and 258 reformatory cases found shelter in the Refuge. The total inmates in the Homes at the close of the year were 149. The total income for the year was £5750, and the expenditure £5531.

Mr. J. F. W. DEACON, who presided, gave reasons why he, both as his father's son and as a magistrate in Kent, should aid and support the work of their institution. He mentioned one case in which a wretchedly ill-used and neglected girl brought before him as a magistrate, was saved, and is now doing well in the Homes. Describing a visit to the Homes, he urged the need of rebuilding the laundry at Parson's Green, and made a plea for help.

Prebendary KITTO, in a thoroughly sympathetic speech, roused the righteous wrath of his audience by a vigorous denunciation of the open abominations of the West-end, and the hideous saturnalia which night by night disgraces the metropolis in and around Piccadilly-circus. The grand object of this Society is, however, to save wretched victims themselves; and for what has been done we are thankful, while we should be more thankful to see the number rescued increased a hundredfold. He marvelled to see so much done with so little money.

Rev. F. B. MEXER said that he appeared partly out of common gratitude for the valuable aid rendered him by these institutions in his efforts to deal with the colonies of immorality which crowd the district around his church in Lambeth. He had come to the conclusion that it is better to send girls one gets hold of to such well-organised Homes than to attempt to start something special of one's own. But in view of the awful extension of this evil he felt more and more deeply the need for larger support to this and similar societies, so that more might be done in the way of helping the tempted and rescuing the fallen and wretched. A very telling reference to the recent saturnalia of vice, described in these pages, at Geneva lent peculiar point to these words. Should our present opportunities be neglected, we may yet witness some such frenzied outburst of the vileness of vested interests in the ruin of our sisters and daughters.

Rev. Dr. O'BRIEN spoke warmly, maintaining that Christians are not sufficiently awake to the character of the cancer which is in our midst, and claiming that for our sons' sake, if for no higher motive, all should fling themselves zealously into such efforts as these for the salvation of the lost, and holding back of those who are likely to slip down the treacherous glissade that ends in ruin, shame, and woe. A few words were added by Messrs. Theodore Barnes and J. J. Drysdale.

Italian Church Reform Association.

THE British friends of the work of Count Campello and his helpers in the Catholic National Church of Italy are not so numerous as the sterling worth of the Count and the remarkable promise of his undertaking deserve. Accordingly, the attendance at the annual meeting of British auxiliary—the Italian Church Reform Association—held on Friday afternoon last in the Church House, Westminster, was only small. Those who assembled, however, were many of them fast friends of the work, acquainted with its courageous leaders, and desirous to promote its greater success.

The meeting was presided over by the Archbishop of Dublin, who has for ten years given time and influence in aid of the movement. He spoke with sorrow of the limitations imposed on the work by the lack of funds. Miss Frere, the hon. sec., having read a report of last year's operations, Canon Pennington, Archdeacon Sinclair, and Rev. H. J. R. Marston delivered stirring addresses, in which a true Protestant note was sounded. Captain Petrie, who recently visited the Count, followed, appealing for more liberal support. After a few hearty words by Sir George Stokes, the Archbishop was enabled to announce cheering progress in the effort to provide a hospital at Arrone.

Palestine Nurses' Mission.

THE annual meeting of the Palestine and Baaleen-Lebanon Nurses' Mission was held in the Parlour, Exeter Hall, on Wednesday, the 6th inst., at 3 p.m. Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston took the chair, and the speakers were Revs. B. Douglas (clerical sec.), J. Grundy, and Miss Lloyd (hon. sec.).

Mr. Douglas read a most interesting and encouraging report of the work done during the past year amongst the Druses and Maronites. The influence of the Gospel begins to be felt more and more, and its gentle and civilizing effects are traceable in those very excitable and quarrelsome people. The hostility between the Druses and Turks never abates. There has been fierce fighting in the Hauran, near Damascus, this past year, but the attendance at the meetings and Bible-classes of the above Mission went on uninterrupted during the greatest time of the unrest, and when the provinces of Asia Minor were devastated by fire and sword, their mountains were at peace and their household felt no fear. Thus the realisation of the promise, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on Thee." During the past year over 2000 people were relieved at the dispensary, and now it is found essential to take in-patients. Funds are needed to make part of the Mission House into a Cottage Hospital, and friends are asked to subscribe and support this Christlike work.

The Church Association.

LAST week's meetings were full of enthusiasm and spirit; much encouragement being expressed in the large number of the younger clergy taking sympathetic part.

Captain Cobham, in his opening address as chairman, maintained that the work of the Association is telling, whilst even recent attacks on the colporteur and van movements have proved most helpful in awakening wider interest.

The annual report lamented that three vans are lying idle by reason of lack of funds. Good work was reported in the various mission centres. The "Luther Homes," long conducted by Misses Fox and Corke, have been taken over by the Association. Stirring addresses followed by Messrs. H. S. Foster, M.P., Henry Kimber, M.P., Col. Savile, and Archdeacon Taylor, Revs. J. N. Worsfold, and H. Lindsay Young.

The Archdeacon, who spoke with all his old fire and enthusiasm, asked special attention to that part of the report which dealt with the spread of sacerdotalism in the Church of England, and to the countenance which had been given to the movement by the bishops and others in authority. He showed that sacerdotalism has no legal place in the Church of England, and proved this by the testimony of both friends and foes of Protestantism. He laid special stress on the contrast between the ordination service of the Church of Rome and that of the Reformed Church of England. He next noticed some articles on "Anglican Orders" which recently appeared in The Tablet, showing an intimate acquaintance with both Romanism and Protestantism, and utterly uprooting the claims of the sacerdotalists to a legal place in the Church of England.

Miss Weston's Work.

TESTIMONY to the prosperous work carried on by Miss Weston amongst our brave and hardy sons in the Royal Navy and Royal Marines was furnished in Exeter Hall on Wednesday week, when a sympathetic audience gathered to hear an account of the past year's work. Miss Weston, who presided, stated that in our Navy there is not a ship that carries the British ensign which does not carry believers in the Lord Jesus Christ. The two publications issued in connection with the work, Monthly Letters, and Ashore and Afloat, had been circulated to the number of 971,384 copies. A branch of the Royal Naval Temperance Society was now existing in every ship belonging to the Navy. In that part of the fleet lying at Portsmouth and Devonport alone the temperance pledges taken had numbered 6021. As to the funds, the receipts during the past year for building purposes had amounted to £10,202; for Gospel and temperance work, £5917; for Ashore and Afloat, £1204. After mentioning that she was anxious to secure one thousand additional subscribers of five shillings to the funds, Miss Weston spoke of one or two new departures in connection with the work. One was the starting of the Children's Royal Sailors' Rest Brigade, in the interests of children of the upper classes. These young people do what they can in collecting funds for the support of the work, and prizes are given to those who bring in the largest sums.

Miss Wintz followed with an address on the work in the Rests at Devonport and Portsmouth, in which she stated that during the past ten months the sleepers at the Sailors' Rests had numbered 162,965.

Postal and Telegraph Christian Association.

THE general annual conference of the senior branch was held at the City Temple Lower Hall on Tuesday and Wednesday last week, when, notwithstanding the many other May Meetings being simultaneously held, there was a very fair attendance of members, workers, and friends. Delegates from Bath, Brighton, Bristol, Bournemouth, Bromley, Ipswich, Leicester, Lewes, Northampton, Portsmouth, Ramsgate, Sheffield, and Southampton, as well as from all parts of London and the suburbs, were present, and took part in the proceedings. It was encouraging to hear many telling of earnest, active interest in the Association work, though there is still room for more consecration and concentration of effort amongst the members. The work is spreading at home and abroad, and commands the interest and prayers of all Christian friends. The meetings were addressed by Mrs. Penn-Lewis, Miss Brabazon, Revs. Darlow Sarjeant and Thos. Cook, Mr. and Mrs. Head, and Mr. Walter Sloan.

Livingstone College.

AN interesting meeting was held on Wednesday, last week, in the Council Chamber, Exeter Hall, in connection with Livingstone College, which was founded three years ago for the purpose of giving an elementary training in medical and surgical subjects to foreign missionaries. Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, foreign secretary of the London Missionary Society, presided.

Dr. HARFORD-BATTERSBY, the principal, explained briefly the two main objects for which the College had been founded—that (1) missionaries might know how to care for their own health when in isolated stations; and (2) that, in the absence of higher skill, they might be enabled to do something to relieve the sufferings of the natives. He also spoke of the Medical Mission which is carried on in connection with the College in one of the poorest parts of the East End, but mentioned that its usefulness had been sadly crippled from lack of funds, and that the College also needed financial help to avert a deficiency this year. He read to the meeting extracts from letters received from old students in India, China, and Africa, showing the great benefit they had derived from the knowledge gained at the College, and how they had been able to put it to practical account.

The CHAIRMAN, in a hearty address, referred to the College as one of the most useful developments of missionary training that we have had for some time past. He explained how for many years the L.M.S. had been in great need of such an institution, as they had been sorely perplexed to know how their students going to Africa, Madagascar, and the South Seas could obtain the medical and surgical knowledge which was so necessary.

Mr. HENRY SOLTAR, L.R.C.S., of the London Medical Mission, gave some very practical, stirring incidents which had come in his experience in Upper Burma, in which patients had been brought to him suffering from various diseases, and, though he had at that time no medical training, he was expected to heal them. He fervently wished that at that time he had had the advantage of the Livingstone course, for as it was he was often obliged to turn them away.

Mr. EUGENE STOCK (C.M.S.), Mr. G. L. PINKINGTON (Uganda), and Mr. R. CORY also spoke, heartily commending the College and its work.

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

THE seventh anniversary of the Barbican Mission to the Jews was celebrated on Monday evening by a hearty meeting in the hall of the Mission House, 33, Finsbury-square, E.C., the president, Archdeacon Sinclair, in the chair. As is general on occasions of special joy or solemnity in connection with Jewish work, the attendance included representatives of several sister missions and agencies. Knowing the peculiar difficulties of their work, these friends co-operate to a degree that is not altogether apparent to such as are unfamiliar with them and their movements; and the fact that they thus share each other's trials and are interested in each other's encouragements is in more ways than one helpful to effective testimony and work all round.

The director of the Mission, Prediger LIPSHYTZ, was enabled to report a good year of work. Anxieties such as attend all mission effort, alike on a large or a small scale, have been his in full measure. The total receipts were £942, an advance upon the previous year, but less than the expenditure by £72; a welcome legacy has since wiped out this deficit. The evangelistic services on Saturdays and Sundays have been well attended, and, after careful instruction, several converts have been baptized. The Bible Class, Sunday-school, and Mothers' Meeting have been helpful to many; while the Converts' Home, for the temporary shelter and care of those who are forsaken by friends, on account of their devotion to Christ or desire to learn the truth of Christianity, has continued its beneficent work. During the year twenty-seven inmates enjoyed its advantages, making a total of 122 since this adjunct was opened.

Several hearty addresses were delivered. The ARCHDEACON, whose interest in the evangelization of Israel is well known, counselled kindly methods, and maintained that in view of past folly and cruelty, generous solicitude for the Jews is a duty devolving upon the Christian Church. Rev. Dr. BARLOW spoke in high terms of the work and the principles by which it is regulated. Mr. G. E. MORGAN dwelt upon the difficulties and encouragements attending such efforts. Rev. A. R. BUCK-

LAND emphasized the need for Jewish Missions, and said a kind word for small agencies. On the first point, he spoke from personal knowledge, having in years gone by laboured in the midst of Jews in East London. As to small missions, he showed that they give opportunity for effort on special lines and by distinctive methods. Finally, Rev. ISAAC LEVINSONH urged that, in face of Christian duty, cases of failure should not cause discouragement, but rather provoke unto greater care and energy in effort, inspired by loving obedience to the Divine command to preach the Gospel to Jews as well as Gentiles.

South American Missionary Society.

THIS society held its annual meeting on Thursday afternoon. Rev. R. J. Simpson (secretary) recounted some special causes for thankfulness—the success of the Paraguayan Chaco Mission, and the very favourable conditions under which the mission to the Indians of Araucania had been launched.

The Bishop of Honduras, who presided, referred to the history of the society, and said it was one of very great interest. His own diocese was 3000 miles in area, including Honduras and Columbia. He had visited the nine missions on the Isthmus of Panama. Prebendary Whittington said the society was doing good and important work, its chief objects were—(1) evangelisation of heathens, (2) spiritual services to English residents, and (3) furthering of the work among sailors of all countries. Rev. H. E. Fox wished the society all success. Mr. W. F. Archibald asked why so little had been done among the pagans of South America, since we have known the country for 300 years? Mr. Henry Morris (chairman of the committee) also spoke on the importance of mission work in the vast continent of South America.

Protestant Reformation Society.

THE sixty-ninth annual meeting of this Society was held in Lower Exeter Hall on Monday evening. The meeting was well attended by supporters of the movement. Colonel Sandys, M.P., occupied the chair. In his opening remarks he said that this is no time for apathy. We have to face an enemy of our civil and religious welfare, and our Society must work on the aggressive with increased force. Colonel Sandys also spoke of the danger from within in the Church of England.

Canon McCORMICK followed, with a strong speech on behalf of the Society, in which he denounced Ritualism. Addresses were also given by Sir C. Robert Leighton, Bart., and Dr. Kane, of Belfast. The latter speaker, deploring the action of Lord Halifax and the Ritualists, said that he thought it almost necessary to form another society to teach erring clergy of the Church of England the elementary principles of morality, so that they may recognise the solemnity of an oath. Many of them are acting entirely contrary to what they have sworn to do.

Moravian Missions.

MINISTERS of various denominations assembled on the platform and spoke at the annual meeting of this association, held at Exeter Hall on Monday afternoon. The hall was crowded with sympathisers of the society.

Lord KINNARD, who occupied the chair, said the report of the work for the past year was most encouraging, and urged his hearers to support the missions of the Moravian Church, which are carried on with economy and largely through the self-denial of the members.

Extracts from the report read by Rev. H. WETTON Cox showed that the Moravian Church had now 150 mission stations, 400 missionaries, 234 day-schools, over 22,000 scholars, 110 Sunday-schools, and the converts number over 93,000, three times as many as the parent church.

Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE spoke of the work of the Moravians from personal knowledge, and praised the self-denial of the members of that Church, and of the truly evangelical efforts put forth by the Moravians to win souls for Christ. Rev. J. MARSHALL drew attention to the steadfast adherence to the Apostolic simplicity and doctrine shown by the Moravian Church, and although the Church had only 600 members in 1722, within ten years from that time they had started missions in various parts of the world. Rev. THOMAS SPURGEON said it filled him with joy to learn of the great and successful work of the Moravian Church, which was so true to the teachings of Jesus Christ, and urged the audience to support this "working Church" which had done so much to bring the heathen to the light of truth.

Flower Girls' Christian Mission.

THE friends of this ever-growing work were reminded at the annual meeting which took place at Foresters' Hall, Clerkenwell-road, on Monday evening, that thirty years of active service have been completed. Mr. F. A. BEVAN presided. The summary of the year's work, as given in the report, shows that 500 Gospel services have been held on behalf of humble flower and watercress sellers, the aggregate attendance not being less than 30,000 persons. In the Homes at Clacton 112 orphan and waif girls are educated and trained, the majority being rescued from terrible surroundings. Cripple girls, as well as those who are too physically weak for ordinary work, have an industrial training which enables them to earn their own livelihood. Friendless girls exposed to temptation are removed from the streets. A cottage hospital for sick children and a babies' villa for the rearing of motherless and abandoned infants have been provided. The Sunday-schools, Bands of Hope, and Bible-classes have more than 2000 children connected with them. Nearly a thousand women and girls are registered members of the Mission at its various branches.

The Chairman expressed his thankfulness for the work carried on. The object of the Mission was to seek out the lost, and he thanked Mr. Groom and his helpers for all of their self-denial. Mr. E. H. ROBINSON said that the minds and bodies of the children were developed to the best advantage, and he recognised the great worth of the Mission. Such an agency was necessary, and it was the duty of the people, while it served their own interests, to save such children.

Mr. JOHN A. GROOM, the secretary and superintendent, made a statement, in course of which it was shown that through the extension of the work, there are now ten branches in different parts of London. The club and early breakfast room at Covent Garden continue to be a rare boon to the girls and women; whilst the Emily Fund, established in memory of the late Countess of Shaftesbury, makes money loans free of interest to needy female street traders who want capital. Reference was made to the seaside holiday homes for blind, deaf and dumb, and cripple children now in course of erection at Clacton.

The distribution of prizes to young servants and others who have passed through the Homes, was undertaken by Miss Bevan. Addresses followed by Rev. J. H. Rose, vicar of Clerkenwell, Rev. J. Thomas, and Mr. W. J. Taylor.

The Ragged School Union.

THE Queen's Hall, Langham-place, was filled on Monday evening by the friends, workers, and supporters of this great Home Mission organisation. The real spirit and tone animating these, the intense longing felt for the salvation of the children became manifest in a little prayer meeting held in a side-room, just prior to the great meeting, in which for an hour earnest men and women poured out their souls in prayer that God would bless the work among the street children to the winning of many to Christ.

H.R.H. the Duchess of Teck again showed her deep interest in work of this kind by kindly undertaking the distribution of the "faithful service" prizes. Her real pleasure in the proceeding was marked by her remaining an attentive listener to the end.

The Earl COMPTON, who presided, said that the past year had been one of great activity. In fact, the work of the R.S.U. seemed without limit, save the inadequacy of funds. But it has a right to support, for it helps the children, helps their parents, and helps the State. The children are tamed, taught, and Christianised; the parents are reached, touched, and won; the State gains by the turning of such children into loyal, law-abiding, conscientious citizens. The marked feature of the past year has been the extraordinary development among cripples. There are now between six and seven thousand home cripples being cared for, taught, and tended by voluntary visitors. For these, more loving helpers and more funds are sorely needed. After mentioning other important branches, the chairman urged that Christ is being preached by the Ragged School workers in the most dismal districts of London, and in this all must rejoice.

The report, presented by the secretary (Mr. John Kirk), deals with a host of ameliorative agencies, brought to bear on the street child and the other denizens of slumdom. One of the most remarkable developments of the year has been that among cripples, of whom 6000 are now under the care of the Ragged School Union, while a new Home is being built for such at Southend. Among other branches mention is made of the seven Holiday Homes, the Day in the Country, the Clothing and Barefoot Fund, and the Magic Lantern Mission, together with work among gipsies in Battersea and drift children in Bethnal Green.

The general operations of the Union include the aid and support of 192 separate local Mission Centres or Ragged School Missions, with 50,105 children in attendance at the Sunday-schools. Interesting details are given of varied and far-reaching work among old and young, in the way of social, recreative, moral, temperance, and Christian helpfulness. All this is carried on by an army of 4887 voluntary teachers, besides a large number of special workers.

The Archdeacon of LONDON maintained that the work appeals imperatively to all Christians as well as lovers of their country. Glancing over the report he showed how the operations were penetrating darkest corners and meeting the deepest need of the poor children, and touched with emphasis and tenderness on the great and growing work among the cripples.

The succeeding speakers included Rev. Dr. R. F. HORTON, who made a pathetic and glowing plea for the Ragged Schools (in which he himself first learned how to work for Christ) as reaching and saving the young who, but for such effort, would grow up a burden to the nation; and Messrs. R. Stone and Henry Wood.

Lock Hospital and Rescue Home.

THE annual meeting was held last week at the Male Hospital, Dean-street, Soho. Mr. E. PARKER Young presided. The secretary (Mr. A. W. CRUIKSHANK) read the report, which stated that patients come from all parts of the United Kingdom. The purpose of the Hospital is to ameliorate the bodily suffering of erring women, and also to raise them morally and spiritually. The cases of women and children suffering through no fault of their own are admitted, as the Board consider they have special claims on the charity, and no urgent cases are ever refused if there be the accommodation to receive them. No patients are re-admitted who have returned to their former sinful life. Two wards, containing about forty beds, have been unoccupied for some years, and a great many are thus shut out from the benefits of the charity; the opening of these would entail an additional expenditure of about £1500 per annum. 709 patients passed into the Hospital during the year; sixty-six inmates were admitted into the Rescue Home during 1895. Help is needed in order to carry on the present work, as also to open the two closed wards.

Rev. J. McNeill at Scarborough.

ALTHOUGH conducting his evangelistic campaign mainly in the great centres of population in the North, Rev. J. McNeill is visiting some of the smaller towns towards the close of the winter's work. Accordingly, meetings have been held in Scarborough for eleven days (April 26 to May 7). When it became known that there was a possibility of securing a visit of "the Scottish Spurgeon," the Christians in Scarborough bestirred themselves, and a broad united committee was formed, comprising representatives of all the Evangelical Churches of the town, and the invitation they forwarded on this basis was accepted. The week previous to the mission services, prayer meetings were held in the Bar Church Schoolroom and in Holy Trinity Parish Room.

The mission proper commenced in the circus—which has seating accommodation for 2000 people, and a large promenade besides—but this was all too small for the crowds who came. On Sunday, May 3, the services were held in the beautiful New Exhibition Building, on the Foreshore-road, but, though larger than the circus, this place, too, was overtaxed. The week-night gatherings were also very large, and at the afternoon services fine congregations assembled.

Mr. McNeill's preaching has made a great impression on all classes of the community. In the second week of the mission, after meetings were held in a quiet and tactful manner, and the confessions of Christ which followed by the raising of the hand showed that souls had been guided to the Saviour by the truth. Believers rejoice that at these gatherings the sword of the Spirit has been faithfully and powerfully wielded. Telling blows have been struck against the sins and evils of the day—drink, gambling, lust, and mammon. Slaves to sin have been released, believers quickened in their spiritual life, and a great stimulus given to the religious work of the town.

More Missionary Martyrs.

MANY will have heard with sorrow of the massacre near Tunis of a medical missionary family. The secretary of the North Africa Mission writes:—

The public papers have already recorded the painful fact that Dr. C. S. Leach, of the North Africa Mission, with his wife and a little boy of about five years, have been murdered near Sfax, in Tunisia. The little girl of eighteen months was spared, and is now under the care of the British Consul's wife. Mr. George Mitchell, one of the N.A.M. missionaries in Tunis, has gone off to the place at once.

At present we have only brief telegrams, giving us but little detail, and so cannot be sure of many points. It appears that Dr. Leach, with his wife and son, were found murdered in the garden of his house, which is about 1½ mile outside the town. They were buried on Friday, May 8. It is impossible at present to say what motive can have led to this crime.

Dr. Leach and his wife, who had previously been labouring in Algeria in connection with some American friends, joined the North Africa Mission early in 1891. In the summer of that year they removed to Tunis, and after a time of Arabic study, with the assistance of other missionaries, began a medical mission there. This has been largely attended, and many thousands have thus come under the sound of the Gospel. One convert from Mohammedanism of special interest was brought under the influence of the Gospel through this agency. In the summer of 1894 Dr. Leach and his wife returned to this country for their health. They stayed most of the time at Rothsay, N.B., near Mrs. Leach's relatives. In April, 1895, they returned to Tunis, where for a time Dr. Churcher had filled his place. A few months since he requested the council of the Mission to be permitted to open a new medical mission station at Sfax, which is the second largest city in the country, and situated on the coast about 200 miles further south. He moved there with his family about the middle of March, and has been mainly occupied since then in getting the house and station into order. He wrote on April 27 that people were asking when he would open the medical mission, and that he hoped in a short time to do so. God has permitted this plan to be set aside, and has called them up to the joys of his glorious presence.

God works in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform.

Mrs. Leach, whose maiden name was Kean, was for several years before her marriage in charge of the Sailors' Rest in Marseilles. They rest from their labours, and their works do follow them. May God raise up many to carry forward the works they have begun.

EDWARD H. GLENNY,

Hon. Secretary North Africa Mission.

Home for the Fatherless.

ISSUING the new report, Mr. Henry Toye, son of the founder, says:—Since the issuing of the last report, fourteen months ago, my dear father has been called home, and although he will be greatly missed, yet I hope by God's blessing still to carry on the work of caring for the young and destitute upon the same principle as my dear father did for so many years, of simple dependence upon the Living God for all supplies.

One of the special objects of the work is to train the children so as to enable them to lead a useful life after leaving the Home. To this end they are taught housework, to qualify them for servants; they are also taught to make and mend their own clothes, knit their stockings, washing, laundry-work, etc. Instruction is also given in reading, writing, arithmetic, grammar, geography, English history, and they are taught the great truths of the Bible—that without faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, there cannot be eternal life. The Lord has not allowed us to labour in vain; many of the dear children have given their hearts to the Lord.

The acting superintendent is Mr. Henry Toye, 64-76, Lewisham-road, S.E.

Australian Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

REV. JOHN MACNEIL, evangelist for the Presbyterian Church of Victoria, is still at work. Some weeks ago I dropped across one of his meetings in a provincial town, and found a hall packed with people, many of whom had given earnest heed to the Gospel message.

On Saturday, March 28, the Ministering Children's League in Victoria held a thanksgiving service in the Melbourne Town Hall. The purpose was to give thanks for the cottage-by-the-sea for sick children. Lord and Lady Brassey have shown a kindly interest in this happy society.

Melbourne has had a short visit from Mr. C. H. Yatman, evangelist from New York. For a week a number of meetings were held in the Athenæum. These were Bible readings and evangelistic services, and were well attended throughout, at several of the later meetings a number of persons professing to have found the Lord.

Throughout March Mr. Henry Varley held Sunday services in the Hawthorn Baptist Church, Melbourne. Those who have listened to Mr. Varley's addresses on the Levitical offerings can form an idea of the interest which has been evoked by his discourses on similar subjects at Hawthorn. He has begun a series of Sunday afternoon lectures on popular subjects at the Hawthorn Town Hall.

These Colonies have passed through a serious time recently. The harvest, in many parts, was a failure, the crops being in many instances hardly worth reaping. Notwithstanding this, there were strips of country in which unusually heavy crops were secured. It was all a matter of rain or no rain. Cattle and sheep perished in large numbers in the more northern districts, while in Victoria the dairy industry, which has within the past few years assumed large dimensions, was considerably crippled. Rains have been fairly general during the past few months, and there seems a brighter prospect for the ensuing season. Wool has been steadily rising in price in the London market, and this is an indication of returning prosperity.

The Servants' Mission.

THIS Mission, carried on so successfully for the last twenty-nine years by Mr. and Mrs. Goodchild, is compelled, through the extensive rebuilding operations in Chelsea, to seek fresh headquarters, as the present premises are coming down. The superintendent writes:—Two houses, side by side, in Eaton-terrace are offered on reasonable terms. To secure the leases for 24½ years, enlarge one, and adapt it for our purposes, we require immediately £600. Then we shall have two good houses for our united work (Men's and Women's Homes), under the management of my wife and myself, at a rent of £75 for the one, and £60 for the other, which will be £26 a year less than the rent of the two houses we have had for so many years. If all who are interested in this work will do what they can, this sum will soon be forthcoming, and a great need will thereby be supplied.

Since our Mission began in January, 1867, hundreds have been brought to a knowledge of God through its means, and the two homes have been the new birth-place of scores of men and women. Some of these are now foreign missionaries, others are in home mission work, while many are fulfilling their domestic duties for the glory of God. Besides liberally giving their money for this, their own mission, they also support a native evangelist in China. Address, Mr. James Goodchild, 14, Sloane-terrace, Chelsea, S.W.

The Burdwan Mission.—A strong plea for this populous agricultural district, close to Calcutta, is made by Miss E. F. Mulvany. Missions were started here in 1816, and splendid work has since been done by the C.M.S., while later on the ladies of the C.E.Z.M. have rendered valuable service. There is, however, great need for extension in the villages. This need is set forth by Miss Mulvany in an interesting pamphlet, to be had (1d.) of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society, 9, Salisbury-square.

Requests for Prayer.—That much blessing may be given at the Tent Missions from May 17, and through June, in the Bradford districts, conducted by Mr. J. Neech.—For blessing on a fortnight's Mission, from May 10, in Kincardine-on-Forth, by Mr. Burnside.—For two mothers greatly addicted to intemperance.—For Mr. Thos. L. Johnston, who has again been laid aside from evangelistic work by reason of ill-health. For special meetings at Churchfield Hall, Acton, conducted by Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker, Monday, May 18.—For special services by Mr. Albinson, at Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth-road.

International S.S. Lessons.

May 23.

JESUS TEACHING IN THE TEMPLE.—Luke xx. 9-19.

GOLDEN TEXT (verse 17).

THE first word of this lesson, "Then" (9), connects the parable with the preceding incident. The question of the chief priests and scribes (1, 2) was not sincere. It implied that if they knew that Jesus had Divine authority they would receive Him. The Lord replied by another question (3, 4), which, like a lightning flash, revealed their hypocrisy. They stood condemned of rejecting the authority of God, both in John the Baptist and in Jesus.

Though addressed to the people (9), the parable applied particularly to the rulers, who saw its application to themselves (19).

Verse 9.—The Vineyard is the nation of Israel, which had often been compared to a vine (Psa. lxxx., Isa. v.). No nation had been so highly privileged (Deut. iv. 7, 8). Everything needed for its fruitfulness had been done (Isa. v. 4). The husbandmen were the rulers of the people, and especially their religious teachers. Upon their faithful service depended, in a large measure, the fruitfulness which God desired. During the whole period preceding Pentecost they were being tested. Don't lose the application to ourselves. Wherever God gives great privileges He expects an adequate return. The fruit He desires is our gratitude, love, trust, obedience. Are we giving Him these?

Verses 10-12.—The servants are the prophets, whom God sent again and again to remind the people of God's claims. The ill-treatment of these servants shows an increasing wickedness on the part of the husbandmen. (For the historical narrative see 1 Kings xxii. 26, 27; 2 Chron. xxiv. 21, 22. Also Matt. xxiii. 30-37; and Heb. xi. 36, 37.) This conduct of the husbandmen reveals two things:—(1) The patience and long-suffering of God. After the first servant had been so cruelly treated, might He not justly have punished the offenders? Very slight provocation exhausts the patience of men. But "God is love," and love is not "easily provoked." (2) The guilt of abusing such long-suffering. Why does God withhold punishment when men's sins call loudly for it? (See 2 Pet. iii. 9.) The aim of his goodness is to lead men to repentance (Rom. ii. 4). Yet they abuse it, and find in it an additional reason for sin (Eccl. viii. 11.). Again, let the application be personal. What use do we make of God's long-suffering to us? It either subdues us, or hardens us—which?

Verses 13-15. The question, "What shall I do?" is intended to impress upon them, and upon us, that the sending of the Son was the result of earnest deliberation. What a different answer might have been given to this question! The answer He gives shows that He desires, not vengeance, but the repentance of the wrong-doers. And in order to win men He is willing to part with his "beloved," his "one Son" (Mark). There is something exquisitely touching in the statement, "They will reverence Him when they see Him." God has a right to expect reverence and trust and obedience for his Son. There are faults to be urged against the servants; but who has ever found fault in Him? To see Him, and yet reject Him is the crowning sin of men. The priests and scribes were now in the presence of the Son. They had already begun to plot against Him, and had determined to destroy Him (xix. 47). Now they hear their crime described before it is committed. This is their last opportunity. It is not yet too late to retract. The very announcement of their guilt is a loving call to repent. Will they heed it? or will they rush on to their own ruin?

Verses 16-18.—See Matt. xxi. 41, where the people themselves pronounce their own doom. Here Jesus repeats it with such solemn emphasis that they start with horror from it. "God forbid," they say (16), as though it were possible to deliberately disobey God, and offer Him the cruellest treatment, then expect God to prevent the just punishment. Judgment and sin are connected, as effect and cause. Their judgment took place at the destruction of Jerusalem forty years later, one of the most fearful massacres the world has ever seen. Let us not suppose that God cannot be angry. Even the Lamb can be wroth, and unhappy are they who are called to endure it (Rev. vi. 16, 17)!

In the quotation from Psa. cxviii., the metaphor changes, and the illustration seems to be drawn from one of the stones, "quarried, hewn, and marked, away from the site of the temple (1 Kings vi. 7), which the builders, ignorant of the head architect's plans, had put on one side, as having no place in the building, but which was found afterwards to be that on which the completeness of the structure depended. It was the chief corner-stone, on which two walls met and were bonded together." Christ is this stone. What is He to us? A foundation, or a stone of stumbling?

THE BOOK WORLD.

Practical Reflections on the Minor Prophets. By a Clergyman. (4s. 6d. Longmans & Co.) Neither a commentary nor a criticism, but a series of practical thoughts applying to every-day Christian life the warnings and entreaties of the twelve prophets. It is so good and useful generally, that the reader will be vexed by occasional hints at extreme teachings, such as "Knit us to Thy true abiding Altar, where the food of immortality is dispensed."

Which House?—A Missionary Study. By Lucy E. Guinness. These pages give a large amount of missionary information, supported by striking diagrams. The animation of style compels the reader to face humiliating facts and figures, showing Christian indifference to the world's need and neglect of the Lord's great command. As emphasising the depth of human need, and giving some idea of efforts made to meet it, this is a very valuable publication. The title is taken from the words of the prophet Haggai—"Is it time for you to dwell in ceiled houses, and this house (of the Lord) lie waste?" and the pathetic story of that rebuke is the starting point of the study. These pages have already had many readers; they deserve thousands more. (7½d. post free. Harley House, Bow, E.; and from Partridge & Co.)

Matelda and the Cloister of Helfde: Extracts from the Book of Matilda of Magdeburg. Selected and translated by Frances E. Bevan. (2s. 6d. Nisbet.) In the judgment of many, the German Béguine, of whom this charming book treats, is the original of the Matelda who conducted Dante into "the Terrestrial Paradise." The book has spiritual features in common with others which Mrs. Bevan has written and compiled; the pages lead us, in fact, to "visions and revelations of the Lord." In these days when material things exercise such a tyranny over the children of God, it is refreshing to study the life and love of mediæval saints, and to see so many evidences that the darkness by which they were surrounded did not extinguish the light of God within them. Those who read Mrs. Bevan's "Trees Planted by the River" will want to read this beautiful appreciation of one of whose personality too little is known.

The Sister Martyrs of Kucheng; Memoirs and Letters of Eleanor and Elizabeth Saunders ("Nellie" and "Topsy") of Melbourne. By D. M. Berry, M.A., Canon of Melbourne. (5s. Nisbet.) This volume, with excellent portraits and illustrations, tells the story of scarcely more than a year and a half in China. Nellie and Topsy were the children of a Melbourne merchant, who died while they were young; and they engaged with much heartiness in missionary work under the auspices of C.M.S. The letters were for the most part written by the sisters to their mother in Australia, and they tell the story of loving devotion to work for Christ, down to the time of the "Vegetarian" massacres, in the course of which they were murdered with Rev. R. W. Stewart and family and several lady missionaries. The sad story is still fresh in the memory of our readers. These pages will have a pathetic interest to students of missions in China.

Hugh Miller. By W. Keith Leask. (1s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) The "Famous Scots Series," which has already given us Carlyle and Allan Ramsay, has a wide field before it, and plenty of available material. The present memoir of the mason who made such a deep mark on history as a scientist, and made it because he had learned how to trace the footsteps of the Creator in rocks and fossils, ought to be on every Scotchman's, and, indeed, every working-man's table. Brief as the sketch is, it is well done. Here we see a young man in his lonely lodging, after a hard day's toil, pursuing far into the night his favourite study, and plunging into theological and ecclesiastical discussion, proving himself the right man to edit and carry on the famous Witness. The remarkable service he rendered in this direction was, however, overshadowed by his "Footsteps of the Creator," "The Testimony of the Rocks," and other scientific works, which won him a European reputation, and will stand to all time as solid contributions to Christian science.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE friends of the Greenock Y.M.C.A. have held a bazaar for the purpose of paying off a debt of £1000 on their building.

The quarterly meeting of the council of the North-Eastern District Union was held at Stockton-on-Tees on Saturday last, when twenty members attended from several towns in the district.

The South Wales District Union Conference, held at Abergavenny on Thursday, April 30, was very successful. The reports that were presented by the delegates were exceptionally interesting, and told of unprecedentedly good work.

The Perth Y.M.C.A. has concluded a very successful winter's work. The attendance at the evangelistic services, held on Thursday and Sabbath evenings, have been very good, and many young men and women have received blessing.

Upton Park and East Ham Y.M.C.A. held its second annual meeting in the Public Hall last Thursday; chairman, Mr. H. Conder, president of the Bombay Y.M.C.A. Addresses were delivered by Rev. W. H. Langhorne and Mr. F. L. Porter. Mr. J. K. Meers, hon. sec., presented an encouraging report of the year's work.

The twenty-sixth Scottish National Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations and Fellowship Unions is to be held this year in Perth, Sept. 20-24. A number of eminent gentlemen have agreed to take part, and it promises to be a great success. The first Scottish Conference in connection with this world-wide organisation was held in Perth in September, 1868.

The average attendance at the Leeds Sunday Bible-class for 1895 was 125, as against eighty for 1894. From January 1 to the present date the average has been 173. There were forty anxious inquirers one afternoon at the ordinary class, and a number of individual cases have been dealt with since. The members of the Association are evincing a deep interest in the work.

The annual district conference for the Ayr district has been held at Irvine. There was a good attendance, and a large number took part in the discussion of the subject, viz., "The best methods of studying the Bible." The annual conference for the Glasgow district was held in the Evangelistic Institute, Rutherglen, on May 2, Provost Mitchell, Rutherglen, presiding. The subject of conference was "The Fellowship Meeting; its Organisation, Influence on the Members, and the Bible its best text-book." It was introduced by Mr. T. Dick, jun., Glasgow; Mr. J. Lindsay Laidlaw, Helensburgh; and Mr. Mathews, of the Bible Training Institute, Glasgow. There was a very large attendance.

The monthly meeting of the National Council was held on Friday week at Exeter Hall, under the presidency of Sir George Williams. After the presentation of the travelling secretaries' reports, which recorded many encouraging developments in various parts of the country, farewell was taken of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas A. Bailey, who are shortly leaving England en route for India, and hearty welcome was extended to M. Em. Sautter, secretary of the French National Executive, who is on a visit to this country. The appointment was confirmed of a Welsh-speaking travelling secretary by the two district unions of the Principality; and final arrangements were made for the sending of a second secretary to India in the person of Mr. Frank Anderson, who is to take up work among native students in the colleges and universities of the Bombay Presidency.

The twelfth annual meeting of the Hackney Association was recently held in the Town Hall, which was crowded with an enthusiastic audience; Mr. J. Compton Rickett, M.P., occupied the chair. The secretary, in the course of his report, stated that the work of the past year had been most encouraging. He especially called attention to the services held in neighbouring churches on behalf of the Association, to the number who had been introduced to church fellowship, and to the fact that eleven religious meetings are held weekly, that an average of 150 young men and youths are present on Sunday afternoons, and seventy at the Wednesday evening Bible-classes. A fifteen days' mission, by Dr. Harry Guinness, had been a means of blessing to many, the closing meeting, for men only, being held in the great Congress Hall, 4000 men being present. Two members went out as missionaries during the year to the Congo and to Bulawayo, making eight for the past four years. Three others expect to leave for the field this year. Another member has entered Harley House for training. Three of the members were ordained to the ministry during the twelve months. Good work was done by the Village Mission in visiting the outlying villages in the home counties. Valuable help was rendered to neighbouring mission halls and institutions, and to weaker Associations in the district. Open-air services were held during the year without a break. Mission services were conducted by the several parties in the various towns and villages visited. Sufficient money was raised to send forty poor children for a fortnight's holiday to the seaside. The junior section had done capital work—many lads won for the Lord Jesus Christ during the year.

The Y.W.C.A.

MRS. SHARP has been appointed president of the Inverary branch, in the room of Lady Victoria Campbell.

Miss Crowther gave, the other day, an interesting account of life and work in China at the meeting of the Rothesay Y.W.C.A.

Mr. C. T. Studd was the speaker at the lectures on the "Deepening of Spiritual Life," held at Blackburn on the 20th ult.

Rev. Mr. Lindsay presided over the half-yearly meeting of the Stirling Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., and in a forcible address urged the importance of systematic study of the Bible.

The Countess of Chichester presided over the opening meeting of the secretaries of the Y.W.C.A. on the 23rd ult., and gave an address. Miss Wingfield Digby discussed somewhat adversely the position of the "Girl of nineteen years ago versus the girl of to-day," while her defence was undertaken by the Hon. Emily Kinnaird. Mrs. Oatts, of Glasgow, also read a paper.

The annual report of the Bournemouth branch states that the work is steadily progressing. The receipts of the two Institute Homes amounted to £2268. The total number of members is 570, one-third of whom are total abstainers. Over 11,000 attendances are recorded at the meetings during the year. A sum of £8000, however, still remains to be paid off to secure the freehold of the Digby Institute.

Christian Endeavour.

In Rochdale the first C.E. convention has been successfully held.

The Derby Union reports thirteen societies affiliated in the district.

The first annual convention of the Rochester District Union was held last week in Chatham, Mr. F. F. Belsey presiding.

A convention was held on Saturday week in Sunderland, when special attention was given to the growing work among juniors.

For three months the Gospel has been preached and sung every Monday afternoon in Cooper Union, New York, to crowds of people, by Rev. A. C. Dixon. More than 300 persons, mostly men, have confessed Jesus Christ as their Saviour.

The Golden Link reports a little Endeavour society in Victoria, Australia, that started to hold Sunday evening services. No service had previously been held in that place. As the result of a fortnight's work, fourteen converts were reported.

A C.E. society has been organised at Kusaie, Caroline Islands, with a membership of nineteen. It is especially cheering that the organisation is in a school for the training of preachers and teachers. The Society in the native language is called "Army Remon Drer, Dri Kajeonwe Kraist," which means, literally translated, "People of good size, imitators of Christ." This is the nearest that the translators could come to the name, Christian Endeavour Society.

A representative gathering of C.E. societies was held at St. John's Wood on Saturday, May 2, when Revs. P. J. MacLagan and H. L. Mackenzie gave interesting descriptions of missions in China. Miss Hancock (a Stoke Newington Endeavourer) read a paper on "How Best to Arouse Missionary Enthusiasm regarding Mission Work in China," and a committee was immediately appointed to carry forward this new "endeavour." There is a hope expressed that during next autumn a worker may be sent out as the pioneer C.E. representative.

Dunmow.—For six years, services have been held in the Town Hall, every Sunday, conducted by preachers from the Evangelization Society, and have resulted in much blessing. On Wednesday, April 29, the anniversary was conducted by local friends, and a most happy and profitable evening was spent. The hearty co-operation of Christian friends connected with the work, besides much kind help from others, greatly cheered those responsible.

Christian Lifeboat Crew.—As the months come and go, the interest shown in the musters of the Christian Lifeboat crew, at Miss Child's Welcome Home, seems to increase. The last was largely attended by sailors of many nationalities. The text given out by Miss Child, "Praying always" was heartily taken up by a number of those present, and expounded in various ways. Miss Child gave an encouraging account of the past month's work.

Oxford Notes.

[BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE Bishop of Oxford held his visitation in the Cathedral on May 5. He spoke of the prevalent unbelief, and dealt very fully with the question of divorce and remarriage.

Rev. R. L. Ottley, M.A., Principal of the Pusey House, has been elected Bampton lecturer for next year. He has great influence in Oxford, both spiritually and intellectually, and his lectures will be looked forward to with great interest.

The Inter-collegiate Christian Union are holding open-air meetings on Saturday afternoons, in the villages round Oxford. They go out together on bicycles, and their errand seems to cause astonishment. They have visited Woodstock and Dorchester.

The University Missionary Union have arranged a good programme for the term. Rev. H. S. Phillips has given an account of God's work in China, and Rev. W. N. Lawrence, who is connected with the London Missionary Society, of work in the South Sea Islands. The meetings have been well attended.

Irish Notes.

THE Irish Church Colportage Mission is doing a good work in the fairs, markets, and rural districts of Ireland. Last year the agents sold 17,763 books.

There are at present in connection with the Irish Presbyterian Church 1005 Sunday-schools, with 9904 teachers and officers and 85,115 scholars in average attendance. The premiums last year numbered 42,865, while 9465 Bibles and 4,464 Testaments were sold.

It is now certain that Irish Methodism will report a substantial increase in church-membership this year. Full reports have not yet been published, but so far as these go they point in the direction indicated. Thus, Belfast district reports a net increase of 204 members; Portadown district an increase of forty-eight; Dublin an increase of fifty-six, Clones an increase of nine, and Derry an increase of sixty-four. Cork reports a decrease of nineteen, and Enniskillen a decrease of forty-four. Waterford, Limerick, and Sligo have not yet reported, but, should these only hold their own, the net increase for the whole of Ireland will be between three and four hundred members, which, considering a decreasing population, is by no means discouraging.

Scottish Notes.

REV. JAMES SLATER, assistant pastor of Holburn Established Church, Aberdeen, has been appointed a missionary to Blantyre, in Africa.

The death is reported, at the age of sixty-five, of Rev. John Thomson, U.P. minister, Campbelltown. He was a preacher of power, and active in all public work.

Wesleyans in Scotland have been holding their annual sessions in Dundee. They have forty-three ministers. One of the speakers said he regarded some churches as "hotbeds of spiritual selfishness."

The Synod meetings in Edinburgh of the U.P. Church were not marked by any very stirring incident. It was reported that ninety-five students were in attendance at the Divinity Hall. The Home Mission meeting was full of live and practical interest. The Young Men's and Women's Guild has a membership of about 8500, with 123 affiliated societies. The report on the evangelistic effort of the year showed a considerable enlargement of effort. Mention was made of the appointment as Synod Evangelist of Rev. W. Baird, Cambuslang.

The Reformed Presbyterian Church, which has been holding its annual gathering, is the smallest of all the branches of the Presbyterian Church in Scotland. It represents the remnant who refused to enter into the Union of the majority of their brethren with the Free Church about twenty years ago, and it has now dwindled down to two Presbyteries. That which names itself the Presbytery of Edinburgh has no church, and no ministers in Edinburgh, and only two ministers elsewhere—one at Wishaw and the other at Airdrie; the other Presbytery, that of Glasgow, has five settled charges in it—Glasgow, Greenock, Paisley, Penpont, and Stranraer.

Caution.—Letters purporting to come from or on behalf of William Noble, are only genuine if headed from (and to be answered to) Hoxton Hall, or 9, Darent-road, Stamford-hill, N.

St. Luke's Gospel Medical Mission.—The report shows constant and steady work in poor St. Luke's. Last year, 6171 attendances are reported. While the doctor is dealing with bodily ailments, some ladies seek to witness of Jesus, and that with good results. The report, which may be had of the secretary, Mr. G. M. Gillett, 314, Camden-road, N., contains many interesting incidents.

Obituary.

JAMES N. RICHARDSON.

ULSTER lost, on the 4th inst., one of her merchant princes and honourable men by the death of James Nicholson Richardson, of Lissue, Lisburn, at the ripe age of seventy-nine years. He was a member of a family that has exercised a high moral and commercial influence on their native land, and although during later years he was less active, when in his vigour he took a leading position in the firms that bear the Richardson name. But it was as a Christian minister and moral reformer that probably the greatest influence of our friend was exercised. He was in hearty sympathy with evangelical religion and temperance reform, and could always be relied upon to support any wise effort for the uplifting of men. Christian hospitality and true benevolence characterised him, and his end was indeed peace. Thus another of the venerable fathers and ancient landmarks has been removed, and the "poor and those that have no helper" will feel their loss. But Dublin yearly meeting in general, and Ulster Friends in particular, will keenly miss one of their number, who has been to the forefront in all good things for so many years.

MISS ANNE DOVE.

It is with deep regret that we have to record the death, on the 3rd inst., of this lady, so well known for her labours of love in connection with the Bible Flower Mission, 110, Cannon-street, E.C., of which she had been hon. superintendent for more than twenty years. Miss Dove was in her sixty-ninth year, and until July last had been indefatigable in her daily attendance at the above address, as well as in visiting the sick in various hospitals of this great metropolis, where she was greatly blessed of God in turning many to righteousness, and where her presence was ever hailed with pleasure and gratitude. Only the great hereafter can disclose the full measure of the results of her faithful and unwearied ministrations, but some idea of the magnitude of the work involved may be obtained from the fact that in 1895 the total distribution of God's Word by means of the Bible Flower Mission amounted to 427,684, as many as 11,772 bouquets, with texts attached, having been sent out in a single week. Miss Dove now rests from her labours, and has entered into the joy of the Lord and Saviour whom she lived to serve, but her work on earth remains, and will be continued as usual. The hon. secretary, Mrs. W. W. Turton, who has been associated with the late Miss Dove for over eighteen years, will be thankful for help, both in money and still more in personal service, at the dépôt.

DR. MOXEY.

Many will learn with regret of the death of Dr. Moxey, which occurred on Friday, in Paris. Dr. Moxey had recently been on a visit to Palestine, and had had a cruise in the Mediterranean. While at Paris he was taken seriously ill, and news of his death was received in Edinburgh on Saturday. Dr. Moxey was a native of Edinburgh. He graduated in medicine at the University of Edinburgh, and was in practice for some time in the south of England. He early developed exceptional gifts as an elocutionist, and became connected with the dramatic profession. For many years, under the cognomen of "Leo Ross," he came prominently before the public as a popular reciter. In recent years, however, Dr. Moxey's name has been more associated with religious work. Some eighteen years ago he was led to serious thoughts of a religious nature, and from that time devoted his life to Christian effort. When he threw himself into the Christian life he took a very decided stand, and this at no small sacrifice to himself. For a number of years after this the preaching and addresses of Dr. Moxey produced a deep impression in many parts of the country, and he was instrumental in leading many into a life of Christian usefulness. Dr. Moxey was well known in America, where he was a general favourite. On several occasions he attended the great Northfield Conventions connected with Mr. D. L. Moody, and he was a warm friend of many prominent American Christians and evangelists. The deceased was professor of elocution to the students of the Free Church and U.P. Colleges, and, as regards pulpit style and delivery, many ministers of the younger generation, no doubt, owe much of their success to the deceased. He was one of the trustees in whom the premises of Carrubbers Close Mission, Edinburgh, are vested, and for many years he has been a director of the mission.

In our recent notice of the departure of Mr. Rivolta, the name was given by mistake as "Joseph," instead of "John."

Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen.—Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Albany has graciously consented to be present at the annual meeting of this mission at Exeter Hall on May 19.

Personalia.

Rev. W. S. Foggitt, who edited the thrilling story lately issued by the Countess Schimmelmann, has resigned his pastorate in Hamburg, intending to settle down at home.

Mr. A. E. Charles has resigned his position as one of the secretaries of the Homes for Little Boys, owing to ill-health, and the committee have felt compelled to accept his resignation. Mr. W. Robson continues to act as secretary. The offices are at 25, Holborn Viaduct, E.C.

Evangelistic Notes.

Channel Islands.—Mr. William Forbes closed his services in St. Helier's, Jersey, on Sunday, by preaching in the Presbyterian Church morning and evening, and in the Congregational Chapel in the afternoon.

Belfast.—During the past fortnight a most successful series of Gospel meetings has been in progress in Westbourne Church. Mr. J. Bennett Anderson has been the preacher, and night after night he has presented the simple story of the Gospel to a large congregation with earnestness and power.

Glasgow.—Messrs. Kemp and McRostie have concluded a three weeks' mission in the Port Dundas Mission, in connection with Hillhead Baptist Church. The attendance at open-air gatherings and in the hall were good, and there is much reason to praise God for the conversion of sinners and quickening of believers.

Mr. E. Payson Hammond has been holding meetings in Danville, Canada. All the churches have united, and there has been a rich blessing. He has now gone to Montreal, where he has held two series of meetings in years gone by, when hundreds (some say thousands) have been brought to Christ.

Danville, Quebec.

E. J. C.

Brighton.—A ten days' Mission has been concluded at Rev. J. B. Figgis' church, Brighton, by Dr. Barnes, of Folkestone. The power of the Holy Spirit was manifested from the first in the conviction and conversion of sinners. At every succeeding service many were dealt with individually who were inquiring the way of salvation. At a children's service, held on the last Sunday, several professed to receive blessing. We leave the result with Him in whose hands are the issues of life and death. B.

Belfast.—Mr. W. R. Lane has conducted a week's Gospel mission in Mountpottinger Presbyterian Church, Belfast. The attendances were most encouraging, and the addresses delivered were all of the evangelist's usual high character. He delivered his effective lecture on John Bunyan and his "Pilgrim's Progress," illustrated by limelight views, on the Saturday evening, which attracted a considerable crowd, and greatly delighted the audience. The general effect of the meetings was particularly good, and they have left lasting impressions. W. J. M.

Greenock, N.B.—A month's special services have been conducted in the Christian Mission, by Mr. H. Powers, of Hull, aided by his wife and daughter, who sang the Gospel. The services were well attended, and a number decided for Christ. The Corporation Hall was taken for two Sabbaths, and on each occasion there must have been about 3000 present. The efforts of this Mission have been largely owned of God for the past sixteen years, as quite a number of the workers are reclaimed Roman Catholics. Mr. Robt. McLean, evangelist, has begun a two months' mission. The services are largely attended, and fruit has been gathered in. W. H. F.

Weaver Brothers.—On Friday night these evangelists finished a fortnight's mission in the Wynd Free Church, Glasgow. There was a large attendance and very deep impression. Their mission in this church has been both largely attended and successful, cases of decision being reported every night. The evangelists have heartily approved themselves to all connected with the work, who have found in them hearty and loyal fellow-workers. Mr. Frank Weaver has a voice of great compass, and he sings the Gospel with great effect. Mr. Bewley F. Weaver is an evangelist of great power. They began at Kerpochhill last Sabbath forenoon.—N.B. Royal Naval Scripture Readers' Society.

—The Bishop of Marlborough presided over the thirty-sixth annual meeting of this society at the Royal United Service Institution, Whitehall, on Monday afternoon. The report set forth that while the value of the work was undeniable, the falling-off in income had necessitated the reduction of the number of readers from fourteen to twelve; and seeing that there were 90,000 men scattered over "England's world-wide empire," the staff was lamentably inadequate. At the beginning of the year, when the political world was in a very unsettled state, the greatest enthusiasm was manifested in the Navy, yet when an appeal was made by the Society on behalf of the sailors and marines there was only a faint response.

Temperance Notes.

LADY BATTERSEA has been elected president of the Beds Band of Hope Union.

A new temperance organisation recently established at Bethesda, Carnarvonshire, called "Cymru Sobr," is extending its operations throughout the whole of North Wales.

The first case recorded in which fishermen have been prosecuted for exchanging fish for brandy and tobacco in the North Sea was heard on Thursday at Lowestoft. The skipper and mate of a smack were fined £4 and £2 respectively.

The drunkenness of Liverpool is the subject of much discussion in that city. Dr. Whitford, a local justice, declares, in reply to official statements made by the police to the effect that arrests for drunkenness have become fewer in recent years, that drunken persons are allowed to remain at large. By neglecting to arrest the "dangerous drunks" the number of cases of assault has doubled within five years.

The annual meetings of the National B.W.T.A. will be held the first week in June. The National Council meetings on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, will take place in Westminster Chapel, James-street, Westminster. The public meeting, in Queen's Hall, Langham-place, on Monday evening, June 1, at 7 p.m., will be addressed by Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Frances E. Willard, Canon Wilberforce, and Miss Agnes Weston; Mrs. Katharine Fiske (Chicago, U.S.A.) will sing.

The Anglo-Indian Temperance Association held its annual meeting at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street. The report, read by Mr. W. S. Caine, stated that during the past year twelve new societies had joined the parent Association, which was in direct touch with 324 active and aggressive temperance societies in British India, composing 200,000 total abstainers. The branches, composed of members of the army in India, were flourishing, and exerted a great influence over the health and well-being of the soldiers.

There are women's public-house clubs at Walsall, said to be far worse than the slate clubs of Grimsby and the public-house "sick and annuals" of Nottingham. The principal object of several of these clubs is to provide for funerals, but a special rule provides that the members must drink. Those who do not attend have to pay all the same, and the beer is served. Therefore those who are present drink not only their own share, but the share of the absent members. This naturally leads to a great deal of drunkenness among these women.

Special Sunday Closing Prayer-meetings under the auspices of the Women's Total Abstinence Union were held on Wednesday, May 6, at Exeter Hall, and 186, Aldersgate-street. Mrs. W. S. Caine presided at Exeter Hall, and Canon Barker and Rev. F. B. Meyer took part. At Aldersgate-street, Mrs. Lynn presided at 12, and Mrs. Donald-Campbell at 1 o'clock. Mrs. Hind Smith, Mrs. G. A. Pash, Revs. Patrick Watson, R. F. Horton, D.D., Mr. Hodder, and others took part. A spirit of great earnestness prevailed, together with a strong determination to work for the passage of the English Sunday Closing Bill.

A case, very seriously affecting all who take upon them to object to licences, has been decided in the Queen's Bench Division. Mr. Boulter, of Dover, opposed a renewal of the licence of "The Duke of Cambridge," and it was refused. The owners appealed to Quarter Sessions, which court reversed the decision, and made an order against Mr. Boulter (who had not appeared or made himself a party to the appeal) to pay the costs. This seemed so extraordinary, that he appealed to the Higher Court, and has lost the day; the law apparently permitting this rank injustice. Probably the case will be carried to the Court of Appeal.

The temperance party have issued a statement of some of the points on which evidence is required for submission to the Royal Commission on the Licensing Laws. They deal generally with the granting and the transfer of licences, the sale of intoxicants to children and improper persons, the service of barmaids, the congregating of bookmakers, the difficulty of obtaining victuals, the inspection by police, the special temptation to domestic drunkenness afforded by grocers' licences, bond-fide traveller fictions, the effect of Saturday opening on wages, the abuse of special licences for canteens, and the effect of opening on election days.

Open-air Work in Finsbury Park.—The Finsbury Park Auxiliary of the Open-air Mission will recommence its Sunday evening service in the park on Whit-Sunday, May 24, at 6 o'clock, just above the band stand. This is a most important effort, and needs a very strong body of Christian workers to support the singing and preaching. Mr. Frank Cockrem, Secretary of the Mission, 11, Adam-street, Strand, will be thankful to hear from any who can attend.

In a charming volume on the Christian life, by Rev. C. Silvester Horne, of Kensington, entitled "The Life that is Easy," stress is laid on the fact that the truest life is not difficult, but when once honestly and earnestly started, natural and easy. When Browning writes, "I find it hard to be a Christian," he means that it is hard to become a Christian, not to remain one. The yoke that Jesus asks us to accept is an easy one, and the burden He would fain impose is light. The more of the Christian life we live, the easier we find it, the more natural it will become, the more abiding the victory it ensures us. "A life of great consecration is sustained with less difficulty than a life of inferior consecration." Those who feel the struggle, and come to find failure, are those who try to combine incompatible ideals, and attempt to serve God and mammon. If a man is but whole-hearted, he will find that the path of life is pleasantness, and that all its ways are peace.

In his "Ecclesiastical Expansion of England," Bishop Barry deals with our national missionary responsibilities from a new point of view, the book being in outline based on Sir John Seeley's "Expansion of England." The author points out that early Christians in the Roman Empire passed through three stages of enlargement. First came the conversion of the Empire itself; then the conversion of the tribes absorbed into it as time went on, and finally the conversion of the outlying dependencies, subdued, but never quite conquered. He shows with great force and wealth of illustration the parallel of our own case. In our home work, our colonial work, and our missionary work proper, we have a task allotted to us similar to that entrusted to the early Church. So far we have not entered with any real mental grasp into the splendid scope of the work. Our conception has been fractional, denominational, spasmodic. What is wanted is a great federation of all missionary societies, so that the isolation and waste of machinery may be minimised, and the spiritually imperial aspect of all Christian effort be realised in its grandeur—"the world for Christ!"

The Apostle's description of God's Church as a people "zealous of good works" contains a principle that is by many Christians "honoured more in the breach than the observance." This phrase is a special warning to such as complain that their opportunities of service are few. That is because they wait for their opportunities to come to them. They have need to remember Richard Baxter's comment on the above passage:—"Do not only take occasions of doing good when they are thrust upon thee, but study to do all the good thou canst. Zeal of good works will make thee plot and contrive for them, consult and ask advice for them." Anyone with such a spirit will not need to go far to find chances of doing good. There is no lot so barren but has many open doors to a busy life for Christ. We fail more because of our self-absorption than for lack of openings.

This is specially so in the suburbs of large towns, where the classes are separated so widely that the inhabitants seldom see anyone not belonging to their own station in life. Many of these suburbs are refuges for the spiritually indolent. They are full of men and women who in earlier life were filled with zeal for their Master, and did loyal service in his cause, but who, when success in life came to them, gave themselves over to a kind of religious self-indulgence which pampers their own souls and leaves other fields of Christian effort overgrown with weeds for lack of husbandmen. In leaving the regions in which their religious activity was fully exercised they exchanged splendid service for ignoble ease. There are few practical problems more imperative than that which rises from this modern development of social life. It will never be solved till our suburban Christians feel the call of the city in which their money is earned which makes their ease possible. The "inner ring" of London and other large centres is growing more and more spiritually barren through the depletion of workers to the "outer ring." It can only be revitalised by the renewal of a missionary enthusiasm in the suburbs.

Missions Ancient and Modern.—I.

WHEN the Holy Spirit was given at Pentecost, He came as "tongues parting asunder, like as of fire"—a sign that the message was to be for all people. To the mixed crowd from every nation under heaven the apostles spake as if familiar with every man's language. The Gospel was a missionary Gospel. How far the inhabitants of Jerusalem were affected by it we cannot tell, but certainly there were multitudes to be evangelised when some of the Christians started out on their journeys homewards, taking the joyful news with them. Plenty remained unevangelised when the persecution broke out, which scattered the Christians everywhere, and sent them forth as the second band of missionaries. The Gospel must be diffused. It was not to be detained in capital cities until all the people there should be saved, and then sent to villages and hamlets. The business of Christians was and is to proclaim it, and the responsibility of accepting or rejecting it is with those who hear.

On this method has missionary effort been conducted from the beginning until now. Our Lord never tarried in one place to the neglect of other places. His disciples have imitated his example. The treaty seaports of China were good for an opening to that vast empire, but chiefly as an opening. As soon as the interior cities and villages could be assailed, Christian workers advanced to the attack.

The converts of the apostles were made, in the first instance, among the strongest peoples of the ancient world—the Jews, the Greeks, and the Romans. Although not many rich, or wise, or noble were called, all were of the strongest, and were the best able to stand alone. Self-government in their Christian fellowships became easy to them. It was easy to find teachers and guides among them. The case of the original evangelist or apostle by whom they had believed could early be dispensed with. Signs enough of imperfections, of irregularities, of sins are to be seen in them, but they were, for all that, able to withstand the pressure of persecution and the seductions of pleasure.

With many modern converts it is very different. They are all taken from the backward races, even the most highly civilised among them. India when Christianity came to it was weak and divided, unable to govern itself; China was a nation slumbering among the things of centuries past; the islands of the seas were inhabited by dwindling tribes. Africa was the abode of savages. Churches gathered from among such peoples, could not be expected to have the qualities of the church at Jerusalem, or the church at Ephesus, or the church at Philippi. Even the churches founded among the hardy, adventurous, and self-reliant tribes of Northern and Western Europe, though these tribes were utterly heathen, had a better chance of standing alone, than the churches of Samoa or Fiji. They quickly assimilated the learning of their conquerors, founded their own schools, and sent forth their own missionaries.

When the gospel came to the South Seas, it seemed as if the people must die out; and no doubt their own wars and vices, with the vices and oppression of the white man super-added, would soon have swept them off the face of the earth. Christianity has greatly checked that tendency, if it has not turned it the other way. The difficulty in many of these lovely islands is not so much with the ancient heathenism—for that has quite disappeared—as with the influence of unprincipled traders and troublesome proselytisers. In small islands where the influence of the missionary has been concentrated on a manageable number of people, the effects have been marvellous. In countries, too, like Bechuanaland, where the will of the ruler is supreme, if he be a man of the stamp of Khama, there is less open sin than in any part of England; property is safer, and life is purer.

Great cities may be the first to welcome the Gospel, because there is more freedom of thought in them than among village communities, and also because out of so large a number of persons it is always possible to find at least a few with specially receptive minds, but they also are the last to be thoroughly permeated. The resistant forces are more securely entrenched in them. It is the cities, not the villages of our land which are now England's gravest danger. Perhaps one of the most hopeful things for the millions of India is that they mostly dwell in villages, because when once the Gospel has won the villages of India, Bombay, Calcutta, and Madras will count for very little.

It was easier to carry the Gospel to the Jews and the Gentiles in the days of the apostles than it was a hundred years ago to carry it to India and China. An evangelist might easily travel on foot from Jerusalem to any city of Asia Minor; it was no great thing to cross over from there to the European shore, and make his way all over the Roman Empire. The language difficulty also was smaller then than now. The cost, again, was more practicable. Moreover, the evangelist was moving about among civilised people, not as in Africa and New Guinea, and, until lately, in Madagascar, among savages.
